THE INTRODUCTION.

THOUGH I am far from being a Friend to long Prefaces, as having uſually in them more of the Author's Vanity, than any neceſſary Inſtruction to the Reader; yet I think myſelf concern'd, at this Time, to acquaint the Publick, upon what Preſumption I undertook this Work, and in what Manner I have endeavoured to perform it.

THE World, I am very well aware, is ſuppoſed to be ſtored ſufficiently with Books of this Kind already. The Number of the Syſtematical Writers in the Latin Tongue is very large; and the Benefit, which a cautious Reader may gather from thence, is not altogether to be deſpiſed: But then ſome of them are ſo imperfect, and moſt of them ſo very voluminous, ſo loaded with Controverſies, ſo perplexed with Diſtinctions, and ſo full of Opinions, that are not truly Orthodox; that it requires more Sagacity, as well as Induſtry, than uſually falls to a common Reader's Share, to direct his Judgment in this Particular.

IN the Engliſh Tongue, if we take the Expoſitions of our Catechiſm (which ſome have thought a compleat Syſtem) into the Number, we have Bodies of Divinity almoſt innumerable; but, among ſuch as properly come under the Denomination, that of Dr Edwards, and that of Dr Fiddes (Men of very different Sentiments, and quite different Ways of Writing) are the beſt known, and moſt in uſe.

Dr EDWARDS was a very Learned Man, and his Theologia Reformata is a Magazine of Knowledge: But then his Matter lies in ſo much Diſorder, that he ſeems a little too negligent of Method. His Diction is ſtrong and nervous, but it is generally very harſh, and his Periods interrupted; the Diſplay of his Learning, in the frequent Interſperſion of Latin and Greek Quotations, as well as Marginal Notes; his taking too large a Compaſs in ſome Arguments, and affecting to ſay ſo much upon every one, as many times betrays him into needleſs Repetitions (to paſs by his Principles, which are purely Calviniſtical) have ſwelled his Work into three large Volumes, which, to his own Reputation, as well as the Reader's Eaſe and Satisfaction, might very commodiouſly have been comprized in one.

Dr FIDDES was a polite, rather than a Learned Man, and his want of Books, and other proper Encouragements, put him under the Neceſſity of entertaining us with a fine Style, and Manner of Expreſſion, (whereof he was certainly a very great Maſter) when he knew himſelf inſufficient to go to the Bottom of his Argument. It is a melancholy Reflection, that a Perſon of his Genius ſhould be ſo far neglected by the World, as to live in want of any thing; but while we lament his Misfortune in this reſpect, we cannot, but, at the ſame time, in ſome meaſure, condole with his Reader, who (in the latter Part of his Work more eſpecially) to his great Joy, will meet with abundance of excellent Words, but as he reads over a Page or two, to his great Surprize and Diſappointment, will meet with Words only.

It was upon the Conſideration of ſuch frequent Deficiencies in Theological Compoſitions, eſpecially as to that Part of Divinity, which we call poſitive, that * a very learned and judicious Author has, ſo many Years ago, ſuggeſted this Thought,---namely, that, if the choice and beſt Obſervations, which have been made diſperſedly in our Engliſh Sermons (leaving out the Largeneſs of Exhortations and Applications thereupon) were ſet down in a Continuance, it would be the beſt Work in Divinity, that has been writ ſince the Apoſtles Times.

Upon this Suggeſtion, I was induced to think, that, if in the time when Learning was juſt breaking out of the Cloud of Ignorance, which had ſo long beſet it, a Deſign of this Nature was thought feaſible; it might much more effectually be executed now, after a long Succeſſion of able Divines, who have examined into the difficult Points of Theology with more Accuracy, have improved our Tongue, and brought the ſacred Oratory of the Pulpit to a much higher Pitch of Perfection than formerly.

In the Time, when our Author wrote, few or none of our Divines (as a † Reverend Hiſtorian tells us) had emancipated themſelves from a ſervile Imitation of their Forefathers. Their Sermons, in particular, were ſadly over-run with Pedantry and mixed Quotations, with Points of Controverſy, and different Expoſitions, with Puns, Quibbles, and other little Witticiſms, to ſay nothing of their Style, which was either very flat or dull, or ſwelled up to a falſe Sublime: But, in Proceſs of Time (eſpecially when a Spirit of Learning came in with the Reſtoration) this low and childiſh Method was laid aſide, and a more maſculine, as well as more rational Form of Writing introduced. Cudworth and Whichcote, Wilkins and Moor, &c. were the firſt that made the Reformation; and ‖ a very wicked Book, under a very odd Title, publiſhed at that Time, put them upon examining and vindicating vindicating the Principles of Religion and Morality, on clear and philoſophical Grounds. Barrow and Tillotſon, Stillingfleet and Patrick, &c. improved upon their Scheme, and have left it to thoſe of the preſent Generation to complete.

THE Foundation of a Lecture by the Honourable Mr Boyle has occaſioned the Principles of Natural and Revealed Religion to be more accurately ſtated, and the Foundation of another by the Lady Moyer has ſupplied us with a clearer Vindication of ſome leading Articles of our moſt Holy Faith, than ever perhaps we had before. The Treatiſes, that are written upon Subjects of this Nature, proceed in a fair and argumentative Way, and the very Oppoſition, which comes (with great Vigour) from the contrary Side, has eventually done the Service to Chriſtianity of detecting Error, and elucidating Truth. The Commentaries and Annotations we have upon the Scriptures, both from our own Countrymen, and from Foreigners, have of late Years, been very judicious; and the Diſſertations on particular Texts and Paſſages, extremely learned and ingenious. What has appeared in the ſpeculative Way, has a Sublimity of Thought; and what in the practical, a Clearneſs of Method and Diction, that few of our Anceſtors of a Century or two ago were, in any Degree, acquainted with; ſo that it muſt be allowed, that, in the preſent Age, there is no want of proper Materials, from whence to extract A COMPLEAT BODY OF DIVINITY.

HOW I have executed this Deſign, I muſt leave to my Readers to examine; but hope to eſcape the Rigour of their Cenſure, when they come to perceive, what a vaſt Track of Reading I have been forced to run through, and perhaps under ſome Diſcouragements, which I am rather inclinable to conceal. I have taken, in ſhort, all the Pains I was able, and omitted no Helps, that either my Bookſellers could acquire, or my Knowledge of Foreign Languages enabled me to read.

IN the Speculative Part of Divinity (wherein the Great Myſteries of Godlineſs are treated of) I have endeavoured to accommodate myſelf, as much as poſſible to the meaneſt Capacity; and, for that Reaſon, have put under the Page all Arguments of a metaphyſical Nature, as well as Expoſitions of Scripture, that depend on any Part of Critical Learning. All the great Controverſies in Divinity, I have fairly ſtated; and producing, in full Force, their Arguments on both Sides, have left them to the Judgment of the Reader, according as he finds the Matter in Evidence, except where the Prevalence of Reaſon was ſo manifeſt, that it would have looked like a ſecret Enmity to Truth, not to have declared for it. All the Practical Points of Chriſtianity, as they were chiefly borrowed from the beſt of our Sermons, fell naturally into that Method; and though I (who am leſs than the leaſt of that ſacred Order) am far from pretending to inſtruct my Brethren in any Thing, yet I thought it not improper to continue them in that Form, if haply they might convey any Thoughts or Obſervations to ſuch, as have have not the Opportunity of conſulting, upon every Subject, ſuch a Variety of Books, as I have done.

THE Hiſtorical and Philological Part of the Work (which indeed has coſt me the greateſt Pains) I have extracted from the beſt and moſt polite Authors, I could meet with; but chiefly from thoſe of a Foreign Growth, becauſe we have not many of our own Countrymen (beſides the Learned Dr Prideaux) that have endeavoured to excel in that Kind of Writing. Without blaming others for their Omiſſion, I thought it, in ſome Meaſure, eſſential to a Body of Divinity, as well as no unuſeful Entertainment to my Reader, to ſet before him the moſt memorable Tranſactions, from the beginning of the World to the Coming of our Saviour CHRIST, and, now and then, to detain him a little with a ſhort Diſſertation upon ſuch Subjects, as are moſt remarkable, and moſt curious; that ſo he might, not only be better acquainted with the Series of ſacred Hiſtory, but, in ſome meaſure, able to give a Reaſon for the Faith that is in him, and to ſtop the Mouths of Gain-ſayers, who lie in wait to enſnare the ignorant, and think it a kind of Triumph, when they find them at a Loſs to account for the wonderful Things, that are recorded in the Book of God.

MY Reader therefore will not, I hope, be offended, that I have deviated from the common Road of Syſtematical Writers; when he finds, that, by this Means, I have introduced Subjects almoſt innumerable, that never fell under their Conſideration. If, in juſtifying the Ways of Providence, I have given him a rational Commentary upon ſeveral difficult Paſſages in Scripture, and have haply done this, in a plain Method, eaſy Style, and clear Diction, ſo as both to profit and pleaſe, both to entertain and improve at the ſame time, Quæſitam meritis ſumo ſuperbiam. Hor. Car. L. 3.

THIS is what I had to ſay concerning the Execution of the Work: And if it proves of any Service (as I hope it will) to the Inſtruction or Edification of others, the Failings or Obſcurity of its Author, I hope, will not be laid in Counter-Balance to the Laudableneſs of his Deſign.

CHAP. I.

Of RELIGION in general.

RELIGION, in the general Notion of it, [a] is the Obligation of rational Creatures, to render unto God (for I beg to suppose at present that there is a God) such Acts of Worship, Homage, and Obedience, as are suitable to the Excellence of his Nature, and the Manner of our Dependence on him: For it is upon the Consideration of our own Nature and his, and the mutual Relation, that is between them, that all our Service of this Kind is unalterably founded. If we turn our Eyes upon ourselves, we can certainly never imagine that we were our own Creators: Since Nothing can produce itself, and since the Effect is always inferior to the Cause, we must necessarily have recourse to something above us, and (be the Gradations never so many) come at last to a supreme Being, from whom, not only our Existence, but all the Blessings and Comforts we enjoy, originally do proceed. And here making a Stand, to consider and contemplate him, [b] as our Creator and Parent, the Author of our Nature, and of all the Faculties belonging to it; and ourselves, as his Creatures, the Issue of his Power, and the Workmanship of his Hands; him, as our Protector, Governor, and Master; and ourselves, as his Dependents, Subjects, and Servants; him, as our Benefactor, and the Author of our Happiness; and ourselves, as obliged and indebted to him for every Thing we enjoy; we cannot but perceive, that not only all the Acts of outward Worship, such as Adoration to him, in Respect of his Greatness, as he is our Creator; Invocation of him, in Respect of his Power, as he is our Protector; and Thankfulness to him, in Respect of his Goodness, as he is our Benefactor; but all those inward Acts of Religion likewise, such as Faith and Hope, Trust and Reliance, Love, Fear, and Obedience, and whatever else results from a due Exercise of our Reason, and a full Consideration of his Attributes, become our necessary and indispensable Duty.

Religion what; and that it arises,

1. From the Relation between God and us.

[a] Scot's Christian Life, Vol. II.

[b] Gastrel's Certainty and Necessity of Religion.

2. From the natural Diſpoſitions of our Minds.

AND indeed, if we look into the Frame and Diſpoſition of our Minds, we ſhall ſoon perceive, that God has implanted in us ſuch Inclinations and Propenſions to the general Offices of Religion, as move us in a Manner mechanically, and without any previous Deliberation. [c] Thus, upon the Receipt of any conſiderable Kindneſs, we preſently find our Souls diſpoſed to all the Acts of Love and Eſteem, and to all the outward Expreſſions of Gratitude, we are capable of, without ever conſidering, that this is the likelieſt Way to procure the good Opinion of thoſe that behold us. And, in like Manner, when, by any viſible Indications of Power, we are induced to believe, that ſuch and ſuch a Being is able, at his Pleaſure, to contribute very much to our Happineſs or Miſery, we are immediately conſcious of all the different Sentiments of Hope, Fear, and Reverence; and are under a Diſpoſition to do what we think moſt agreeable to the Will of ſuch a Being, without any expreſs Conſideration, that we ſhall thereby recommend ourſelves to him, and engage his Power in our Favour. Theſe Sentiments, I ſay, which have a manifeſt Tendency to the Duties of Religion, are not the Reſult of our Reaſon, but produced in us whether we will or no: And from hence we cannot but infer, [d] that Religion is eſſential to Man, and the Thing indeed, which differences and diſtinguiſhes him from other Animals as much, nay more, than his Reaſon does. For, whereas ſome Footſteps of obſcure Reaſon are to be obſerv'd in many Creatures, beſides Man; in none, except him, is there found any Diſpoſition towards Religion, or any Thing that looks like it. This ſeems to be the [e] Prerogative of Mankind; and yet it is a Prerogative, wherein all do communicate, ſince no People were ever yet found ſo ſavage and barbarous, as to be deſtitute of all Senſe, and Form of Religion.

3. From the Nature and Reaſon of Things.

BUT beſides that Part of Religion, which conſiſts in the Worſhip and Service of God, and whoſe Obligation ariſes from the Nature and Conſtitution of Man, there is another Part of it, which we commonly call Morality, conſiſting in a right Conduct, with Relation to God, ourſelves, and our Neighbours; and this is founded in the Nature and Reaſon of Things. For, that there are natural Notions of Good and Evil, Right and Wrong, or certain Diſtinctions, reſulting from the Natures and Relations of Things, which cannot be alter'd, or deſtroy'd by any arbitrary Agreement or Inſtitution whatever; and that, [f] from theſe Diſtinctions, there neceſſarily ariſe certain moral Obligations, which are of themſelves incumbent on all rational Creatures, antecedent to any poſitive Command, is, what not only the greateſt and wiſeſt Part of Mankind has acknowledg'd, but common Experience ſufficiently verified; ſince no Man willingly and deliberately tranſgreſſes theſe Obligations, in any great and conſiderable Inſtance, who acts not contrary to the Judgment and Reaſon of his own Mind, and ſecretly reproaches himſelf for ſo doing; and no Man obſerves and obeys them ſteadily, (eſpecially in Caſes of Difficulty and Temptation, when it interferes with any preſent Intereſt, Pleaſure, or Paſſion) but his own Mind commends, and applauds him for executing what his Conſcience cou'd not forbear giving its Aſſent to, as juſt and right: And in this Senſe the Words of the Apoſtle are to be underſtood; [g] when the Gentiles, which have not the Law, do by Nature the Things contained in the Law, theſe, having not the Law, are a Law unto themſelves; which ſhew the Work of the Law, written in their Hearts, their Conſcience alſo bearing witneſs, and their Thoughts, the mean while, accuſing, or elſe excuſing one another.

An Objection.

" BUT after all, it ſeems no improbable Thing (may the Unbeliever ſay) to find " out another Original for what you call Religion. Whoever has made it his " Obſervation, cannot but perceive, [h] that there is in Mankind, by Reaſon of " his Natural Imbecillity, a perpetual Anxiety, or Fear concerning future Events; " which, join'd with their Natural Ignorance, makes them apt (like Children in the " dark) to fancy Spectres and Apparitions, i. e. the Being of a God, and a future " State of Rewards and Puniſhments, &c. which are no where to be found, but " in their own Imaginations. Which Weakneſs of human Nature, ſome great " Prince, or Miniſter of State, taking the Advantage of, might, ſome Time or other, " (moſt probably towards the Beginning of the World, if it had a Beginning) very " commodiouſly introduce the Belief of Religion; and that, upon Experiment, be- " ing found to be an excellent State-Engine, or Politick Device, to keep the poor " ignorant

" ignorant People in Awe, might, by the Strength of Cuſtom and Education, after" wards, be eaſily continued in the World to this Day."

Anſwer'd, by ſhewing that Religion aroſe not from Fear,

NOW, in Anſwer to this, it muſt be obſerv'd, that as the Objection allows [1] that Religion conduces very much to the Support of Government, and Order in the World, and conſequently is very beneficial to Mankind in general; ſo, to every Man in particular, where its Duties and Obligations are duly obſerv'd, it gives ſuch a Peace and Tranquillity of Mind, and ſuch a Firmneſs and Reſolution of Heart, as is utterly inconſiſtent with that groundleſs and unreaſonable Fear, which is here ſuppos'd to be the Parent of it. Fear indeed is a ſtrong and prevalent Paſſion in human Nature; but when a Fear is vain and fantaſtical, (as it is here ſuppoſed to be) and yet made uſe of to curb and reſtrain our natural Propenſions and Paſſions, (as the Deſign of all Religion is) it can hardly be imagin'd, but that ſenſual Appetites, Habits of indulging them, preſent Enjoyments, or near Proſpects of Pleaſure, would, at one Time or other, have had a much ſtronger and more powerful Influence upon the Judgments of Men, than any Impreſſions of a vain Fear, that contradicted theſe; eſpecially when Reaſon was on their Side, as the Patrons of Infidelity (ſuppoſing Religion to be a Cheat) are concern'd to maintain.

nor from Cuſtom,

EDUCATION, we own, and the Prevalence of Cuſtom are great; but then they muſt be ſuch, as ſtrike in with our corrupt Paſſions and Affections; and not ſuch as endeavour to reſtrain and controul them. What goes againſt the Grain can never laſt long; and therefore we may ſuppoſe, that Religion, which gives ſuch a Check to our deprav'd Appetites, had long ſince been exterminated the World, had it not laid ſuch faſt hold upon our Natures, that there is no ſhaking it off.

nor from Politicks, which is prov'd from Reaſon,

LET us then (for Argument's Sake) ſuppoſe, that there were an Inſtance or two in Hiſtory of ſome great and politick Men, who introduced Religion in Confirmation of their Government; and that this might poſſibly be, towards the Beginning of the World: Yet ſince theſe Men have been ſo long laid in their Graves, how comes it to paſs, that the Effect of their Policy ſtill remains all the World over? Every Age, we know, is apt to condemn the Wiſdom of thoſe that preceded it; and (whether we ſtand upon our Forefathers Shoulders or no) we certainly think that we ſee farther. 'Tis wonderful therefore, that, in ſo many Ages, as have paſſed, ſince theſe deep Politicians liv'd, no other Perſons have been able to make ſuch a Diſcovery of the Artifice of Religion, as to free Mankind from its pretended Slavery. [k] It cannot be ſaid, that there were none to attempt it, becauſe Efforts of this Kind have been but too frequent, tho' always ſucceſsleſs, and redounding to the greater Confirmation of Religion. It cannot be ſaid, that there were none ready to join in ſuch a Deſign; for all bad Men (whoſe Number is not ſmall) wiſh for no Kind of Religion at all, and what they wiſh for, they are willing to effect, if they could. How comes it then, after all, that Religion ſtill prevail'd, and the Terrors of a Deity could not be ſhaken off, no not by the greateſt Politicians themſelves, who thought they underſtood all the Arts of Government as well as any that went before them? If the Principles of Religion had been firſt introduced merely by a State-Policy, [l] the Politicians and Governors of the World, one would think, ſhould be likely to have known ſomething of it; at leaſt, ſo much as to be leſs ſubject to the Anxieties of Conſcience, which the deſpiſing of ſuch Principles, and living in Oppoſition to them, generally creates: Whereas we find, on the contrary, that, in all Ages, the greateſt of Men, who have had nothing to fear from human Power, have been as much affrighted by the ſecret Terrors of Religion, and have undergone as great Agonies of Mind, as the meaneſt Mortals.

and from Antiquity.

AND as the Reaſon of the Thing is ſufficient to convince us, that Religion at firſt was no State-Juggle; ſo, if we look into the Records of Antiquity, we ſhall eaſily perceive, that the farther we go backwards, the ſtronger is our Evidence againſt this Suggeſtion. [m] The moſt ancient Writings, that are in the World, without all Controverſy, are thoſe of the holy Scriptures; and, among theſe, the Book of Job is deſervedly accounted one of the earlieſt: And yet we may obſerve therein, not only the Senſe of the Duties of Religion, wherewith the People were poſſeſs'd in thoſe Days, but even how cuſtomary it was to appeal to the Tradition of former Times concerning theſe Matters: [n] Enquire, I pray thee, of the former Age (ſays one of Job's Friends) and prepare thyſelf to the Search of their Fathers; for we are but of yeſterday, and know nothing. But what is it for, that he thus appeals to [1] Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. I. [k] Stilling fleet's Sermons. [l] Leng's Sermons. [m] Stilling fleet, ibid.

[n] Job viii. 8, &c.

to the Obſervation of former Ages? Even to evince the bad Condition of all, that are not ſincere in their Religion; for as the Ruſh, ſays he, without Mire, and the Flag without Water, wither before other Herbs; ſo are the Paths of all, that forget God, and the Hypocrite's Hope ſhall periſh. From whence it is apparent, that, in the earlieſt Times we can read of, Men had the ſame Senſe of Religion, and the ſame Notions of God's Indignation againſt Impiety, that we now have: And therefore conſidering, that no Time or Place can be aſſigned, to give any reaſonable Ground for ſuppoſing, that the firſt Principles of Religion were any human Contrivance, we may, without farther Arguments, conclude, that they were from the Beginning, or (as [o] Tully expreſſes it) that it was not any Conference, Compact, or Agreement of Men, which made them, nor was the Perſuaſion or Belief of them founded, or eſtabliſh'd in any Inſtitution, or Law; but that the Conſent of all Nations in them is to be eſteemed the Law of Nature.

The Inference. WHAT then we may infer from the whole Matter is this—[p] That if Religion had been a Trick and Contrivance of ſo long a Date, as is pretended, it muſt neceſſarily have been found out at one Time, or other, and, in Conſequence of that, baniſh'd out of the World long before now: But, Thanks be to God, the Credit of it is not yet extinct; which can be owing to nothing, but the invincible Reaſons, whereon it ſtands. In every Age, there has not been wanting the Wit and Malice of profane Perſons, to undermine and blow it up; but the Foundations, whereon it is built, are ſo firm and ſtable, and have endur'd the violent Shocks, and ſecret Attempts of ſo many Ages, that, as long as Reaſon and good Order prevail in the World, we have no Occaſion to doubt, but that Religion will not fail. Only the Magiſtrate is to be reminded, how [q] much his Concern is, to protect, from all rude and violent Aſſaults, the Honour of that, which does not only tend to every Man's future Happineſs, but is the beſt Inſtrument of Civil Government, and of the temporal Proſperity of a Nation: For which Reaſon, [r] even Atheiſtical Politicians adviſe their Princes to take ſpecial Care of Religion, and to ſee it rooted, as firmly, as poſſible, in the Hearts of their People, how ſlender an Hold ſoever it may have of their own.

The Diviſion of Religion. SUCH is the Nature, and Origin of Religion in general: And, if we conſider it under its primary Diviſion, 'tis partly Natural, and partly Revealed. The Natural Part of it is that, which we come to the Knowledge of by the Principles of Reaſon, in the Contemplation of the Works, the Nature, and the Providence of God: The Revealed is that, which, in ſome Points, we could not have known at all; and, in all, not near ſo clearly, had it not been God's Pleaſure to diſcover it to us. In the former, is required a due Exerciſe of our intellectual Faculties; in the latter, a due Dependence on the Authority of God: And 'tis to the former of theſe, that we now apply ourſelves.

CHAP. II.

Of the Exiſtence of GOD.

HE that cometh to God (as the Apoſtle [s] argues) muſt believe that he is, and that he is a Rewarder of all them, that diligently ſeek him. To come to God, [t] according to the Nature of the Jewiſh Language, is to make Profeſſion of Religion; but 'tis in vain for us to make Profeſſion of that, unleſs we are firſt firmly perſuaded of this Foundation, the Being and Attributes of God. Now by the Word GOD, we mean [u] a Being of infinite Wiſdom, Goodneſs, and Power, the Creator and Governor of all Things, to whom the great Attributes of Eternity and Independency, Omniſcience and Immenſity, perfect Holineſs and Purity, perfect Juſtice and Veracity, complete Happineſs, glorious Majeſty, and ſupreme Right of Dominion, belong; and to whom the higheſt Veneration, and moſt profound Submiſſion and Obedience are due. That there is really ſuch ſuch a Being in the World, deſerving ſuch Homage, and inveſted with ſuch Characters, a ſhort Survey of this beautiful Syſtem of Things, which are before us, and ſome few Conſiderations of their Production and Conſervation, their Order and Uſefulneſs, and wiſe Direction to their proper Ends, will be enough to convince us: And I make uſe of this Argument the rather, not only becauſe it ſtands clear of ſuch Objections, as are made to others of a more abſtracted Nature, but becauſe it is adapted to every one's Capacity, brings God down to our Senſes, as it were, and carries its own Conviction along with it, and is therefore the Proof, which the great Apoſtle of the Gentiles remits us to: [x] For the inviſible Things of him, from the Creation of the World, are clearly ſeen, ſays he, being underſtood by the Things that are made, even his eternal Power and Godhead. The Being of God prov'd, from the Frame and Order of the World.

[y] COULD we ſuppoſe a Number of Perſons to have lived in ſome Cavern of the Earth, (as Tully brings in Ariſtotle ſpeaking) with all the Enjoyments, that make Life eaſy, only had never been abroad upon the Surface of it, nor heard any Thing, but a very obſcure Report of an infinite Power and Being; could we ſuppoſe that, upon ſome caſual Opening of this Cavern, theſe Perſons ſhould come out into the World, and ſuddenly behold the Earth, the Sea, and the Heavens, the Vaſtneſs of the Clouds, and the Violence of the Winds, the Largeneſs, and Beauty, and Influence of the Sun, and how every Day depends upon its Preſence; could we ſuppoſe (that upon the Sun's withdrawing) they ſhould view the Face of the Heavens again, the Order and Ornament of the Moon and Stars, their Riſing and Setting, and their fix'd and determinate Courſes; we can hardly imagine that they could refrain from believing that there is a Deity, and that theſe were the Effects of his Power; for it is not the natural Dictate of Mens Minds, but a ſtrong Biaſs upon their Paſſions and Affections, that draws them into the contrary Sentiment.

1. LET us then caſt our Eyes up to the Firmament, where the Handy-Work of God preſents itſelf to our View, and aſk ourſelves ſome ſuch Queſtions as theſe. [x] Rom. i. 20. [y] Stillingfleet's Orig. Sacræ. [z] Fenelon's Demonſtration of the Exiſtence of a God.

† The Words of a late learned Author, upon this Subject, are ſo very lofty and elegant, that, tho', in ſome Meaſure, they fall in with my Manner of treating it, I cannot forbear tranſcribing ſome of them. His Propoſition is ——That the Frame and Conſtitution of the World, the aſtoniſhing Magnificence of it, the various Phænomena, and Kinds of Beings, the Uniformity obſerv'd in their Production, and the Uſes and Ends for which they ſerve, &c. do plainly ſhew, that there is ſome almighty Deſigner, an infinite Wiſdom and Power at the Top of all theſe Things. "For, in Order to prove to "any one the Grandneſs of the Fabrick of the World, one need only bid him conſider the Sun, with that inſupport- "able Glory and Luſtre that ſurrounds it: To demonſtrate the vaſt Diſtance, Magnitude, and Heat of it: To repre- "ſent to him the Chorus of Planets moving periodically, by uniform Laws, in their ſeveral Orbits about it, affording "a regular Variety of Aſpects; guarded ſome of them by Secondary Planets, and, as it were, emulating the State of "the Sun; and probably all poſſeſs'd by proper Inhabitants: To remind him of thoſe ſurprizing Viſits the Comets make "us; the large Trains, or uncommon Splendor that attends them; the far Country they come from; and the Curi- "oſity and Horror they excite, not only among us, but in the Inhabitants of other Planets, who alſo may be up to ſee "the Entry and Progreſs of theſe Miniſters of Fate: To direct his Eye and Contemplation through thoſe Azure Fields, "and vaſt Regions above him, up to the fixt Stars, that radiant numberleſs Hoſt of Heaven; and to make him under- "ſtand, how unlikely a Thing it is, that they ſhould be placed there only to adorn and beſpangle a Canopy over our "Heads: To convince him, that they are rather ſo many other Suns, with their ſeveral Regions and Sets of Planets "about them: To ſhew him, by the Help of Glaſſes, ſtill more and more of theſe fixt Lights, and to beget in him an "Apprehenſion of their unaccountable Numbers, and of thoſe immenſe Spaces, that lie retir'd beyond our utmoſt "Reach, and even Imagination: I ſay, one needs but do this, and explain to him ſuch Things, as are now known almoſt "to every Body; and by it to ſhew him, that, if the World be not Infinite, it is Infinito ſimilis, and therefore ſure a "magnificent Structure, and the Work of an infinite Architect: And, in like Manner, who can obſerve the Vapours to "aſcend, eſpecially from the Sea, meet above in Clouds, and fall again, after Condenſation, and not underſtand this to "be a Kind of Diſtillation, in Order to clear the Water of its groſſer Salts, and then, by Rains and Dews, to ſupply "the Fountains and Rivers with freſh and wholeſome Liquor; to nouriſh the Vegetables below by Showers, which de- "ſcend in Drops, as from a Watering-Pot, upon a Garden: Who can view the Structure of a Plant, or Animal; the "indefinite Number of their Fibres and fine Veſſels, the Formation of larger Veſſels, and the ſeveral Members out of "them, and the apt Diſpoſition of all theſe; the Way laid out for the Reception and Diſtribution of Nutriment; the "Effect this Nutriment has in extending the Veſſels, bringing the Vegetable or Animal to its true Growth and Ex- "panſion, continuing the Motion of the ſeveral Fluids, repairing the Decays of the Body, and preſerving Life: Who "can take Notice of the ſeveral Faculties of Animals, their Arts of ſaving and providing for themſelves, or the Ways, "in which they are provided for; the Uſes of Plants to Animals, and of ſome Animals to others, particularly to Man- "kind; the Care taken that the ſeveral Species ſhould be propagated out of their proper Seeds, the ſtrong Inclinations "implanted in Animals for that Purpoſe, their Love of their Young, and the like: I ſay, who can do this, and not "ſee a Deſign in ſuch regular Pieces, ſo nicely wrought, and ſo preſerv'd? Since then we cannot ſuppoſe, that the "Parts of Matter at firſt contriv'd this wonderful Form of a World among themſelves, and then, by Agreement, took "their reſpective Poſts, and purſued conſtant Ends by certain Methods and Meaſures concerted, (becauſe theſe are "Acts, of which they are not capable) there muſt be ſome other Being, whoſe Wiſdom and Power are equal to ſuch "a mighty Work, as is the Structure and Preſervation of the World. There muſt be ſome Almighty Mind, who mo- "dels and adorns it; lays the Cauſes of Things ſo deep; preſcribes them ſuch uniform and ſteady Laws; deſtines and "adapts them to certain Purpoſes; and makes one Thing to fit and anſwer to another." Woolaſton's Religion of Nature delineated, Sect. 5.

ferent Stars, new Suns, new Moons, new Worlds, in Compariſon of which, this Earth of ours is but a Point, all regular in their Motions, and ſwimming in the liquid Æther? Who painted the Clouds with ſuch a Variety of Colours, and in ſuch a Diverſity of Shapes and Figures, as is not in the Power of the fineſt Pencil to come up to? Who formed the Sun of ſuch a determinate Magnitude, and placed it at ſuch a convenient Diſtance, as not to annoy, but only refreſh us, and nouriſh the Ground with its kindly Warmth? If it were larger, it would ſet the Earth on Fire; if leſs, it would leave it frozen; if it were nearer us, we ſhould be ſcorch'd to Death; if farther from us, we ſhould not be able to live for Want of Heat; Who then hath made it ſo commodious [a] a Tabernacle (I ſpeak with the Scriptures, and according to the common Notion) out of which it cometh forth, every Morning, like a Bridegroom out of his Chamber, and rejoiceth, as a Giant, to run its Courſe? For ſo many Ages paſt it has never failed riſing at its appointed Time, nor once miſs'd ſending out the Dawn to proclaim its Approach: But at whoſe Voice does it ariſe, and by whoſe Hand is it directed in its daily and annual Courſe, to give us the bleſſed Viciſſitudes of Day and Night, and the regular Succeſſion of different Seaſons? That it ſhould always proceed in the ſame ſtrait Path, and never once be known to ſtep aſide; that it ſhould turn at a certain determinate Point, and not go forward in a Space, where there is nothing to obſtruct it; that it ſhould traverſe the ſame Path back again in the ſame conſtant and regular Pace, to bring on the Seaſons by gradual Advances: That the Moon ſhould ſupply the Office of the Sun, and appear, at ſet Times, with all the other Stars, to give us a vicarious Light, when its Brother is gone to carry the Day to the other Hemiſphere: In a Word, that all the innumerable Hoſt of heavenly Bodies ſhould perform their Revolutions with ſo much Certainty and Exactneſs, as never once to fail; but, for almoſt this ſix Thouland Years, come conſtantly about to the ſame Periods to the hundredth Part of a Minute: This is ſuch a clear and inconteſtable Proof of one original Being, the Divine Architect and Ruler of the Univerſe, as made the Roman Philoſopher, with good Reaſon, conclude, "That [b] whoever thinks, that the wonderful Order and incredible "Conſtancy of the heavenly Bodies and their Motions, (whereupon the Preſer- "vation and Welfare of all Things do depend) is not governed by an Intelli- "gent Being, himſelf is to be accounted void of all Underſtanding. For ſhall "we, when we ſee an Artificial Engine, a Sphere, a Dial, or any ſuch Thing, "acknowledge, at firſt Sight, that it is the Work of Art and Underſtanding; and "yet, when we behold the Heavens, moved and whirl'd about with a wonderful "Celerity, conſtantly finiſhing their anniverſary Viciſſitudes, make any Doubt, that "theſe are the Performances, not only of Reaſon, but of a certain excellent and "Divine Reaſon?"

Tully's Sentiments.

AND [c] if Tully, from the imperfect Knowledge of Aſtronomy, which his Times afforded, could be ſo confident, that the heavenly Bodies were framed and moved by a wiſe and underſtanding Mind, as to declare, That, in his Opinion, whoever aſſerted the Contrary, was himſelf deſtitute of Underſtanding; what would he have ſaid, if he had known the modern Diſcoveries in Aſtronomy; the immenſe Greatneſs of the World, that Part of it, I mean, that falls under our Obſervation; the exquiſite Regularity of all the Planets Motions, without any Deviation or Confuſion; the inexpreſſible Nicety of the Adjuſtment of the primary Velocity of the Earth's Annual Motion; the wonderful Proportion of its Diurnal Motion about its own Center, for the Diſtinction of Light and Darkneſs; the exact Accommodation of the Denſities of the Planets to their Diſtances from the Sun; the admirable Order, Number, and Uſefulneſs of the ſeveral Satellites, that move about their reſpective Planets; the Motion of the Comets, which are now found to be as regular and periodical, as that of other Planetary Bodies; and laſtly, the Preſervation of the ſeveral Syſtems, and of the ſeveral Planets and Comets in the ſame Syſtem, from falling upon each other: What, I ſay, would Tully, that great Maſter of Reaſon, have thought and ſaid, if theſe, and other newly-diſcovered Inſtances of the inexpreſſible Accuracy and Wiſdom of the Works of God, had been found out and known in his Time? Certainly Atheiſm, which even then was unable to withſtand the Arguments drawn from this Topick, muſt now, upon the additional Strength of theſe later Obſervations, which are ſo many unanſwerable ſwerable Proofs of the Creator's Power and Wiſdom, be utterly aſhamed to ſhew its Head.

2. BUT it is Time now to deſcend from Heaven, and take a ſhort Survey of the Globe we live upon. And here, in our Way, what a glorious Proof of a Divine Exiſtence is [d] the Expanſion of the Air in this intermediate Space? The Air we ſee is a Body ſo pure, ſo ſubtile, ſo tranſparent, that the Rays of the Stars, though placed at an immenſe Diſtance from us, pierce through it without any Difficulty, and in a Moment ſtrike our Eyes: And yet it has Strength and Subſtance enough to ſupport the winged Tribe, that are appointed to move therein. Had it been leſs ſubtile, it would have intercepted, at leaſt obſtructed the Light of the Day; had it been more rarified, it would not have ſuſtained its Inhabitants, nor afforded Moiſture for our Lungs: What exquiſite Wiſdom was it then, that tempered it ſo nicely, as, at one and the ſame Time, to ſupport Clouds for Rain, to afford Winds for Health and Traffick, to be proper for the Breath of Animals by its Spring, for cauſing Sound by its Motion, and for conveying Light by its Tranſparency? [e] What Power has made ſo thin and fluid an Element the ſafe Repoſitory of Thunder, Lightning, and moſt dreadful Tempeſts? By whoſe Command are theſe Meteors ſent out to purify the Air, and conſume the Vapours which would otherwiſe annoy us? And by what ſkilful Hand is the Water, which is drawn from the Sea, curiouſly diſtilled and bottled up in Clouds, to be ſent upon the Wings of the Wind, and ſcattered over the Face of the Earth in gentle Showers? [f] He, that in the leaſt reflects on this neceſſary Appendage of the Terraqueous Globe, the Atmoſphere, and the many great Ends and Purpoſes that it is known to ſerve, muſt be forced to reſolve all into the Work and Contrivance of Almighty God. The Air.

3. IF we come down upon the Earth, (without ever conſidering who laid the Foundations thereof) what a pleaſant Scene preſents itſelf to our View! Here the Vallies are cloathed with Graſs, there Plains are loaded with Corn; here the Hills riſe like an Amphitheatre, and are covered with Vineyards and Fruit-Trees, and there mighty Mountains, rearing their Heads to the Clouds, by ſending down Rains, and Rivers, and Fountains, give Fruitfulneſs to the Grounds below. [g] Herbs and Plants to nouriſh our Bodies, and remedy their Diſeaſes, fragrant Flowers of exquiſite Colour and Shape, to delight our Smell, and gratify our Sight, we find in every Field: But who has divided the ſeveral Kinds of them, and formed them into ſuch beautiful Order? [h] Who placed the ſeminal Plant in the Seed, as the Young is in the Womb of Animals, in ſuch elegant Complications, as afford at once both a pleaſing and aſtoniſhing Spectacle? Who conveys a prolifick Warmth into the Bowels of the Earth, and cauſes the Grain, which the Soil has putrefied, to revive and fructify? [i] Who painted and perfumed the Flowers? How comes it to paſs, that the ſame Water dyes them with various Colours, the Scarlet, the Purple, the Carnation? And whence have they thoſe ſweet Odours, which they breathe with inſenſible Subtilty, and diffuſe in the Air for our Delight? Theſe admirable Works of Nature ſurpaſs the Imitation and Comprehenſion of Men, and muſt therefore proceed from a Cauſe infinitely their Superior. The Earth.

4. IF we caſt our Eye upon the Water, we ſee that it is a liquid and tranſparent Body, and cannot but perceive, that, had it been more or leſs rarefied, it would not have been ſo proper for the Uſes of Man. But who gave it that juſt Configuration of Parts, and exact Degree of Motion, as to make it both ſo fluent, and, at the ſame Time, ſo ſtrong, as to carry and waft away the moſt unwieldy Burthens? Who taught the Rivers to run in winding Streams, through vaſt Tracts of Land, in Order to water them more plentifully; then throw themſelves into the Ocean, to make it the common Center of Commerce; and ſo, by ſecret and imperceptible Channels, return to their Fountain-Head in one perpetual Circulation? The great and wide Sea is a very awful and ſtupendous Work of God, and the Flux and Reflux of its Waters are not the eaſieſt Phænomena in Nature. [k] What we know of certainty is this, That the Tide carries, or brings us back to certain Places at preciſe Hours; but who is it, that makes it ſtop, and then return with ſuch Regularity? A little more or leſs Motion in this fluid Maſs would diſorder all Nature, and a ſmall Incitement upon a Tide drown whole Kingdoms: Who was ſo Waters.

wiſe then, as to take ſuch exact Meaſures in immenſe Bodies, and ſo ſtrong, as to rule the Rage of that proud Element at Diſcretion? [l] Even he, that hath placed the Sand for the Bound thereof, by a perpetual Decree, that it cannot paſs; and tho' the Waves thereof toſs themſelves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not paſs over.

Animals. 5. IF we look again upon the Earth, and the Water, and Sea, we ſhall find them all inhabited and furniſhed with great Store of living Creatures, wonderfully made in the Frame of their Bodies, and adapted to the Offices, for which they were deſigned. Some walk, ſome creep, ſome fly, ſome ſwim, but every one has Members and Organs fitted for their peculiar Motions. [m] The Wings of Birds, for Inſtance, and the Fins of Fiſhes, are like Oars, that cut the Air or Water, and, at the ſame Time, ſteer their floating Bodies, whoſe Structure is not much unlike that of a Ship. The Pride of a Horſe, and the Feathers of the Peacock, the Largeneſs of the Camel, and the Smalneſs of the Inſect, are equal Indications of the Almighty Hand that formed them. Nay, the ſmaller the Creature is, the more amazing is the Workmanſhip; and when, in a little Mite we do, by the Help of Glaſſes, ſee Limbs perfectly well organiz'd, an Head, a Body, Legs, and Feet, as diſtinct, and well-proportion'd for their Size, as thoſe of the vaſteſt Elephant; and conſider withal, that in every Part of this living Atom there are Muſcles and Nerves, Veins, Arteries, and Blood; in that Blood, ramous Particles and Humours; and in thoſe Humours, ſome Drops, that are compoſed of other minute Particles: When we conſider all this, I ſay, how can we help being loſt in Wonder and Aſtoniſhment, and forc'd to cry out with the Apoſtle, [n] Oh! the Depth of the Riches, both of the Wiſdom and Knowledge of God! How unſearchable are his Works, and his Ways of Creation and Providence paſt finding out!

Their Inſtinct. 6. THERE is another Thing in Animals, no leſs wonderful than their Frame, and that is their natural Inſtinct: I call it Inſtinct in Compliance with the common Forms of Speech, but in Reality it is the providential Direction of them by an all-wiſe and all-powerful Mind. For what elſe has [o] infus'd into Birds the Art of building their Neſts, either hard or ſoft, according to the Conſtitution of their Young? What elſe makes them keep ſo conſtant in their Neſts, while they are hatching their Young, as if they knew the Philoſophy of their own Warmth, and its Aptneſs for Animation? What elſe moves the Swallows, upon the Approach of Winter, to fly to a more temperate Clime, as if they underſtood the Celeſtial Signs, the Influence of the Stars, and the Change of Seaſons? In a Word, [p] can we behold the Spider's Nets, or the Silkworm's Webs, the Bee's Cloſets, or the Ant's Granaries, without acknowledging a Superior Being, that has impreſs'd ſuch a Genius in them, and directs their unerring Motions? Thus every Creature is ſtampt with the Divine Signature, and loudly proclaims the Being of God; Man is the only one, that ſeems to gainſay the general Atteſtation: Let us therefore examine his Frame and Compoſition a little, in Order to ſee whether the Finger of God is not equally viſible in him.

The Texture of Man's Body. AND here (without troubling ourſelves to enquire after what we ſhall never be able thoroughly to find out, viz. in what Manner the Plaſtick Power of God has faſhion'd this wonderful Creature in the Womb) [q] What a prodigious Thing is it but barely to conſider, that, out of the ſame ſimple and indiſtinct Matter, ſuch a Variety of Parts of different Subſtance, Figure, and Qualities, ſhould ariſe; hard and dry for the Bones; liquid for the Humours; moiſt and ſoft for the Fleſh; tenacious for the Nerves; perforated for the Arteries and Veins; hot for the Liver and Heart; cold for the Brain; and tranſparent for the Eyes? How ſhould it raiſe our Wonder, I ſay, that that Matter, which in itſelf is ſimple, and all alike, ſhould, in the Hands of God, be capable of ſuch a Diverſity, and ſuch admirable Art, but that the conſtant Sight of living Productions cauſes our Neglect of them, and deprives him of his Honour? Let us then conſider Man, as he ſtands before us, in his full Proportion and Maturity. Had his Stature been conſiderably leſs, he muſt have been a Prey to moſt other Animals; had it been vaſtly larger, he muſt have become a Burthen to himſelf; and other Creatures, which are now made uſe of for that Purpoſe, would not have been able to have carried him: So that the wiſe Contrivance of God is viſible in this firſt Step, in regulating the Size of Man to ſo juſt a Standard, and proportioning that of other living Creatures exactly exactly to it. [1] The Figure of his Body (wherein he differs from all other Animals) is erect, which not only gives him a Nobleneſs and Majeſty, even as to his outward Appearance, ſuperior to them, but a Facility likewiſe of contemplating the Heavens, (his native Seat) and, upon every View, of loving and admiring their Divine Creator. His Body is covered with a Skin all over full of Holes, like a Sieve, to admit of Perſpiration; but not ſo large as to let out the Blood; thick enough to defend the Nerves and Fibres, that are underneath it, and yet ſo tranſparent, as to give that lively, ſweet Colour to the Face, which Painters admire, but can but very imperfectly imitate. Under the Skin are an infinite Number of Veins and Arteries, all ſpread over the Body, to carry the Blood from the Heart, and to moiſten the Fleſh, as Springs and Rivers water the Earth: And the Blood, after it has gone its Round, returns to its Fountain again, there to be impregnated with freſh Spirits, in order to circulate without ceaſing.

THE Foot is, as it were, the Baſis of the Body, and therefore faſhioned in ſuch a Shape, and compoſed of ſuch Nerves, Tendons, and little Bones, as enable it to bear the Weight; and yet ſo ſubtilly joined together, as to make it a chief Inſtrument in all the Motions thereof. The Legs and Thighs are like two Pillars of different Orders, erected upon this Baſis, to ſupport the whole Fabrick. Their inward Part conſiſts of two Bones, joined together by proper Ligaments, and moving in each other, by the Help of a mucilaginous Unction, with the greateſt Facility. The Body of the Structure is proportion'd to the Height of the Pillars, and, becauſe it contains the moſt vital Parts, is placed in the Center, and ſecured by a Row of Ribs, [2] which come arching out from the Back-bone, like Branches from a Tree, but grow only ſo far, as to give Room for the free Dilatation of the Stomach and Entrails. Within this Encloſure of Ribs are placed all the great Organs, that ſerve for Reſpiration and Concoction. The Lungs are of a ſpungy Nature, eaſily dilating or contracting themſelves; and, as they inceſſantly take in, and blow out a great Quantity of Air, (which is the Nutriment of Life) they form a kind of Bellows, that are in perpetual Motion. The Stomach is made in the Figure of a Bagpipe, where our Aliments are ſoon diſſolved by a quick Digeſtion; and, while the purer Juice paſſes into Veſſels, deſign'd for the Preparation of the Blood, the groſſer Parts are ſeparated, as Bran is from Flour by a Sieve, and ſo thrown down, to eaſe the Body of them, through hidden Paſſages, that are moſt remote from the ſenſitive Organs, leſt they ſhould offend them.

FROM the Top of this Fabrick hang two Arms of equal Symmetry, knit to the Shoulders in ſuch a Manner, that they have a free Motion in that Joint, and are divided at the Elbow and Wriſt, to make them turn, and bend, and fold the quicker. Theſe Arms terminate in two Hands, which are a Contexture of Nerves and little Bones, ſet one within another in ſuch a curious Order, that they have both all the Strength, and all the Pliableneſs neceſſary for their ſeveral Uſes. [1] The Fingers (beſides their little Bones) are furniſhed with ſeveral Muſcles and Tendons, like ſo many Pullies to bend them forward, and, by the Variety and Delicacy of their Motions, are qualified to exerciſe the moſt curious Arts. Nay, the very Nails are not ſuperfluous: For, beſides their Beauty and Ornament, they are a Defence to the Points of the Fingers, and give Strength, and a quicker Senſe of Feeling to them. Above the Body riſes the Neck, which is either firm or flexible at Pleaſure; and, by the Help of its Vertebræ, can turn the Head to either Side, according as it directs. The Head, which is joined to the upper Part of it, is fortified, on all Sides, with very ſtrong Bones, to ſecure the Treaſure that it contains, and covered with Hair on the back Part, both to protect it againſt the Injuries of the Air, and to give Grace and Luſtre to the Face. The Face (which is the fore Part of the Head, where the principal Senſations meet and center) is a Compoſition of the fineſt Order and Proportion, unleſs ſome unhappy Accident has impair'd the Regularity of its Features. The Eye is ſo artfully contriv'd, and ſo commodiouſly ſituated, that nothing can be imagined like it, either for Uſe, Ornament, or Security. It is a Kind of Looking-glaſs, wherein all the Objects in the World are painted by Turns, and without Confuſion; and God Almighty, who formed it, has kindled a certain celeſtial Flame and Brightneſs in it, that is not to be found in all the other Works of Nature. The Forehead gives Majeſty and Gracefulneſs to the Face, and helps to heighten all the Features. The Noſe is placed contiguous to the Mouth, and ſerves at once both for Reſpiration and Smell. The Lips not only vary the Sounds that form our Speech, but, by their lively Colour, render the Face more beautiful. The Mouth takes in the Aliments, which the Teeth grind, like a Mill, in order to prepare them for Digeſtion; and (to mention but one Member more) the Tongue, which is a Compoſition of ſmall Muſcles and Nerves, is ſo nimble and pliant in its Motions, that by the Help of a Pipe, which comes from the Breaſt, it can do more, than what either the Fingers, or the Bow of the moſt excellent Maſter of Muſick can do upon the beſt Inſtrument. 'In a Word, 'the Texture of our Body is ſo curiouſly wrought, and every Part of it ſo full of Miracle, that Galen (who was otherwiſe backward enough to believe a God) when he had anatomiz'd Man's Body, and carefully ſurveyed the Frame of it, viewed the Fitneſs and Uſefulneſs of every Part, and the many ſeveral Intentions of every little Vein, and Bone, and Muſcle, and the beautiful Compoſition of the whole, fell into a Pang of Devotion, and wrote an Hymn to his Creator's Praiſe. [u] And if he, ſo many Ages ſince, could find, in the Conſtruction and Conſtitution of human Bodies, ſuch undeniable Marks of Contrivance and Deſign, as forced him then to acknowledge and admire the Wiſdom of its Author, what would he have ſaid, had he known the late Diſcoveries in Anatomy and Phyſick; the Circulation of the Blood, the exact Structure of the Heart and Brain, the Uſes of numberleſs Glands and Valves, for the Secretion and Motion of the Juices in the Body; beſides ſeveral Veins, and other Veſſels and Receptacles, not at all known, or ſo much as imagined to have had any Exiſtence in his Days, but which are now diſcovered to ſerve the wiſeſt and moſt exquiſite Ends? Had he lived in our Days, I ſay, and under the Diſpenſation of ſo much better Light and Knowledge, he would have admired the divine Operations more abundantly, and improv'd his Hymn with that grateful Recognition of the Pſalmiſt, [x] I will praiſe thee, O Lord, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made, and that my Soul knoweth right well. My Subſtance was not hid from thee, when I was made in ſecret, thine Eye did ſee it while it was imperfect, and in the Book of thy vaſt and comprehenſive Mind were all my Members written.

Galen's Admiration of it.

And the Nature of his Soul.

8. BUT we have ſtill a nearer Proof and Conviction, than either the Make of the World, or the Frame of our Bodies, of the Being and Exiſtence of a God; and that is, the Nature of our rational and immortal Souls: For which Reaſon we may obſerve, that in the Deſcription which is given us of God, he not only [y] ſtretcheth out the Heavens, and lays the Foundation of the Earth, but formeth likewiſe the Spirit of Man within him; [z] which plainly intimates, that not only the viſible and natural World, but the ſpiritual and indiviſible Soul of Man is likewiſe a Declaration of a Deity.

Its Exiſtence.

1. THAT there is Something [a] in our Compoſition, that thinks, and apprehends, and reflects, and deliberates; that determines, and doubts, and conſents, and denies; that wills, and demurs, and reſolves, and chuſes, and rejects; that receives various Senſations and Impreſſions from outward Objects, and produces voluntary Motions in ſeveral Parts of the Body; this every one is conſcious of, neither can any be ſo ſceptical, as to doubt or deny it. In the next Place, it is ſelf-evident, that theſe Faculties and Operations of thinking, and willing, and perceiving, muſt proceed from ſomething or other, as their efficient Cauſe (mere Nothing being never able to produce any Thing at all); ſo that, if theſe Powers are not inherent in the Matter, we carry about with us (and Matter of itſelf can never be the Subject of Cogitation) it neceſſarily follows, that they ariſe from ſome thinking Subſtance, ſome incorporeal Inhabitant within us, which we call Spirit or Soul: And if there be ſuch an incorporeal Spirit within us, the Queſtion is, Whence did it proceed, or how came it into Being? It did not exiſt from all Eternity; [b] that the Account of our Age, which infers our Nativities, and they, our Conceptions, (before which we had no Being) plainly denies; nor did it produce itſelf, ſince Nothing can be the Effect and the Cauſe at the ſame Time. Something therefore muſt have created our Souls out of Nothing; and that ſomething muſt neceſſarily have in it all the Perfections, that it has given them: For it is ridiculous to think, that we were made by any Thing, that is of an inferior Nature to ourſelves. There is then an immaterial and intelligent Being, which created our Souls; and this Being was either Eternal itſelf, or created immediately, or ultimately, by ſome other Eternal, who has not only all the Perfections we we find in ourſelves, but is likewiſe the Source and Original of all the Powers and Faculties, both of Body and Mind, which lie diſperſedly among the Children of Men.

Its Union with the Body.

2. THUS from the Nature of our Souls, and the Conſideration of their Exiſtence, we are led to the Knowledge of the Being of God: And if we proceed to obſerve further, how theſe ſpiritual Beings are joined to Subſtances of a quite different Nature, how they combine and operate together, and mutually partake in each other's Happineſs or Woe, we cannot but be forc'd to make the ſame Concluſion. For, let us but aſk ourſelves, how comes it to paſs, that Beings ſo vaſtly unlike are ſo intimately joined together; that certain Motions in the Body ſo ſuddenly, and ſo infallibly raiſe certain Thoughts in the Soul; and that the Thoughts of the Soul, in like Manner, occaſion certain Motions in the Body? Whence proceeds ſo regular a Concord and Society for this forty, fifty, or threeſcore Years perhaps, without Interruption? And what Hand had Skill enough, out of ſuch jarring Principles, to make up ſo compleat a Compound, that ſome have been tempted to think them both but one? 'Tis certain, they did not come together by mutual Conſent: For Matter, having in itſelf neither Thought nor Will to make Terms, was in no Capacity to enter into an Agreement with the Mind, and the Mind does not remember that it ever made an Agreement with Matter. Since then it is plain there is ſuch an Agreement, which both are ſubjected to, whether they will or no, there muſt neceſſarily be ſome Hand, equally powerful over both, that has brought them under the ſame Yoke, and united them thus cloſely together, without the Mind's Aſſent, or ſo much as its knowing in what Manner that Union was effected: And that Hand could only be his, who created them both; who knew their Conſtitutions beſt, and had an abſolute Right to put them under what Reſtraint and Limitations he pleaſed.

Its Underſtanding.

3. IF we look into our Souls a little nearer, and conſider what [c] Quickneſs and Vivacity there is in their intellectual Faculties above corporeal Motion; with what Facility the Mind turns itſelf from one Object to another; how ſuddenly it rangeth the whole World; how it trips over Mountains, croſſes the Ocean, mounts the Skies, aſcends the Empyrean Heaven, and all in the Twinkling of an intellectual Eye; we muſt needs be perſuaded that a moſt wiſe and powerful Spirit is the Author of theſe noble Faculties; that it is abſurd to imagine, an intelligent Being (as the Soul is) could be produced by one, that is not ſo itſelf; and that the Exiſtence of God conſequently is demonſtrable from the Operations of our Minds. For, what Power, leſs than infinite, could have form'd ſuch excellent Beings? "Among material and "earthly Things, ſays Tully, there is nothing, that has the Power of Memory, of "Underſtanding, and of Thought; that retains Things paſt, foreſees and provides "for Things future, and comprehends and conſiders Things preſent; ſo that the "Nature and Faculties of the Soul are of a peculiar and ſingular Kind, different "from all thoſe Natures, which we are acquainted with in this World; and therefore, "whatever is endowed with ſuch Vigour and Activity, as the Soul of Man, is of "heavenly and divine Original."

The Power and Blindneſs of its Will.

4. THERE is another Power in the Mind, which ought to be conſidered, and that is, the full and abſolute Command it has over the Body; inſomuch [d] that, upon the bare Dictate of the Will, all our Nerves are immediately diſtended, every Spring haſtens to concur in the Work, and the whole Machine obeys, as if it heard ſome ſupreme and omnipotent Voice. But the Power that is thus ſupreme and abſolute, we perceive, is blind at the ſame Time, and even, while it moves the Body, utterly ignorant of the Make and Situation of its Parts. The Mind of a Peaſant, for Inſtance, commands his Nerves, Muſcles, and Tendons, (Things that he never heard of) as well as the Philoſopher, that is ſkill'd in Anatomy. He finds them, without knowing where they lie, without knowing how to diſtinguiſh them, and employs ſuch, as he has Occaſion for, without ever miſtaking one for another. Now, what a Wonder and Prodigy is this! The Mind commands what it does not know, what it cannot ſee, nay, what neither has, nor is capable of any Knowledge to follow its Directions, and yet it is infallibly obeyed. How much Blindneſs, and how much Power at once do we find in this! The Blindneſs is entirely ours; but to whom can we aſcribe the Power, unleſs it be to him, that ſees what Man does not, and performs in him what ſurpaſſes our Underſtanding?

Its Conſcience.

5. IF we look into our Souls again, we ſhall find a ſtronger Teſtimony of the Being of a God, and that is, the Force and Dictates of Conſcience, and thoſe boading Fears and Dreads, which are made connatural to Guilt. [e] Conſcience, indeed, in the

the Breaſt of Man, ſeems to have an uncontroulable Power, and to act like God's Vice-gerent here below. It admoniſhes every one of his Duty, and the indiſpenſable Neceſſity of performing it: It applauds the good Man, and gives him a Peace and Serenity of Mind, which the Frowns of the World, and the Storms of adverſe Fortune cannot impair: It tortures the Soul of a Sinner with a thouſand bitter Reflections; ſets his Crimes before his Face with all their aggravating Horrors and Deformities; and thunders in his Ears that dreadful Sentence, which awaits his Impiety, and makes him tremble at the Apprehenſions of his impending Doom. Now, that theſe Dreads and Anxieties are not occaſioned by the Fear of Men is plain, becauſe they have frequently been obſerved to be the Conſequences of Crimes, that were concealed from publick Light, and the Inmates of Perſons, who were ſet above the Reach of all human Laws: And that they do not proceed from the mere Judgment of our own Breaſt, upon the moral Turpitude of our Actions, we have this plain Argument to evince, [f] that, as no good Man hopes from himſelf, i. e. no good Man hopes, that he ſhall, at any Time hereafter, be at the Diſcretion of rewarding himſelf; ſo no ill Man fears from himſelf, that he ſhall, at any Time hereafter, come into the Mind of puniſhing himſelf. And therefore the ſimple Verdict of our Minds, upon good or evil Actions, would never be able to produce Hope or Fear, Joy or Grief in us, were it not for this farther Apprehenſion, that there is a God, who knows all, as well as we, and will take Care ſome Time or other, to make Retributions accordingly: And from hence it is, that every Operation of Conſcience is always found to terminate upon ſome Divine Attribute or other; [g] its Approbations evidence the Goodneſs; its Accuſations, the Holineſs; and its Comminations, the Juſtice of Almighty God.

AND as every Man's Conſcience is the Declaration of a God, ſo it is to be obſerved farther, that it is a Faculty independent on our Wills, that we cannot extinguiſh, would we never ſo fain; and will therefore, at one Time or other, infallibly exert itſelf, to the full Conviction of what the boldeſt Infidel ſeems now to deny. [h] Let Caligula then profeſs himſelf an Atheiſt, and, with that Profeſſion, hide his Head, or run under his Bed, when the Thunder ſtrikes his Ears, and the Lightning flaſhes in his Eyes. Theſe terrible Works of Nature put him in Mind of the Power, and his own guilty Conſcience, of the Juſtice of God, whom, while, in his wilful Opinion, he weakly denies, in his involuntary Action he ſtrongly aſſerts. So that the Belief of a Deity muſt either be granted, or it will be extorted from us: Only unhappy is the Man, that denies him to himſelf, and proves him to others, and will not acknowledge his Exiſtence, at the ſame Time that he trembles at his Power.

Its Deſires. 6. IF we look into our Souls once more, we ſhall find another Quality in them, that properly remits us to God; and that is, the immenſe Deſire of Happineſs, which nothing here below can content or ſatisfy. That there is ſuch an Appetite implanted in our Minds is very manifeſt from the reſtleſs Purſuits, we find ourſelves engag'd in, whenever we chance to place it upon wrong and undeſerving Objects; and that all the Acquiſitions in Life are not ſufficient to anſwer its Demands, our own Hearts will tell us, whenever we think on the Emptineſs of all worldly Delights, and how, by Reaſon either of their offenſive Mixtures, ſhort Continuance, or neceſſary Decays, they leave our Souls lean, and pining in the very Midſt of their Enjoyments. And indeed 'tis no ſmall Inſtance of the wiſe Diſpenſation of Providence, that he has given us ſuch Inclinations, and, at the ſame Time, not given us Objects fitted to content them; that he has decreed, that all worldly Things ſhould be vain and unſatisfying, and not anſwerable to that importunate Deſire of Happineſs, which he hath made connatural to us, on purpoſe to make us look up unto him, who is the only Source of ſolid Refreſhment, of ſincere and laſting Delectation, and ſuch as is adequate to the Meaſure of the Longings of our Soul. Now, if our Minds have ſuch Longings as theſe, who was it that firſt infus'd them? Or, how came they to underſtand, that there is ſomething ſtill wanting to make their Happineſs compleat, if they had not a Notion of a Being, more perfect, than what they meet with here below, and ſuch as is capable to fill their Capacities, and anſwer all their Wiſhes?

THE Exiſtence of the Deſire therefore muſt neceſſarily imply the Reality of the Object, [i] otherwiſe Mankind, of all the Works of the Creation, whereof they pretend [f] Young's Sermons, Vol. I. [g] Charnock on the Exiſtence of God. [h] Pearſon on the Creed.

[i] Charnock's Exiſtence of a God.

pretend to be chief, are certainly moſt miſerable: And, while the Earth drinks up the Rain, that comes into its Boſom, and other Creatures are fed with the Products of the Earth, they only are left to pine under the Torment of an impatient Appetite, and the Impoſſibility of Enjoyment. But now, upon the Suppoſition that there is a God, the Soul of Man has its Object, and its Deſires are ſatisfied: It ſees him in its Meditations; it taſtes him in its Ordinances; it feels him in the Comforts of well-doing, while it continues here; and when it is tranſlated hence, obtains its perfect Conſummation and Bliſs, in the beatifick Viſion and Fruition of him to all Eternity.

THUS we have run through ſome of the Works of Nature, and upon the whole, cannot but perceive, [k] that whether we look up to Heaven, or down upon the Earth, whether upon ourſelves, or into ourſelves, whether upon the Things within us, or round about us, which Way ſoever we turn our Eyes, we meet with plain Evidences of an Almighty Cauſe; and that, from the brighteſt Star in the Firmament, to the meaneſt Pebble we tread on; from the talleſt Cedar, to the loweſt Shrub; from the Eagle, to the Inſect; from the Camel, to the Ant; every thing is ſtamp'd with the Divine Signature, and loudly proclaims the Being of a God.

Other Arguments briefly ſumm'd up.

WE might now purſue this Argument farther, [l] from the natural Inſtinct of all Creatures, both ſenſitive and vegetative, and their wiſe Direction to their proper Ends; [m] from the natural Notions we have of God, which always remain with us, until they are forcibly extinguiſhed; [n] and from the univerſal Conſent of Mankind; [o] ſince there is no Age ſo diſtant, no Country ſo remote, no People ſo barbarous, but what give Teſtimony to this Truth. We might farther illuſtrate this Doctrine from the Predictions of future Events, which nothing but a Divine Omniſcience could foreſee, and a Divine Power fulfil; [p] from the ſtrange and wonderful Occurrences in the World, which nothing but that Almighty Arm, that rules and controuls the Courſe of Nature, could effect; and from remarkable Judgments upon the Wicked, and as remarkable Preſervations of the Righteous, in all Ages, which nothing but the ſovereign Hand of Providence could diſpenſe. We might yet further evince this Truth, [q] from the bleſſed Work of the Holy Ghoſt upon the Minds of the Regenerate; from the inward Senſe and Feeling of Religion on their Conſciences; from the Teſtimony of Divine Goodneſs on their Spirits; from the Power and Energy of a lively Faith; and from the bleſſed Influences and Operations of heavenly Grace, which, to the Good and Godly, are more forcible and convincing Arguments, (becauſe experimental) than all that has gone before. But what has been ſaid is enough to convince us, that the Folly and Wickedneſs of thoſe muſt needs be very groſs, muſt needs be very daring, who exclude God from the World, and ſet up, in his ſtead, a blind and unthinking Principle of their own.

The great Folly and Danger of Atheiſm.

" [r] THAT Matter exiſted from Eternity, and all the Parts of it were in Mo" tion; which, after innumerable Trials, ſo hamper'd themſelves together at laſt,
" as to fall into the happy Order wherein we ſee Things now: That Men firſt
" ſprung up, like Muſhrooms, out of the Mud and Slime of the Earth; that all
" their Thoughts, and the whole of what they call Soul are only the various Actions " and Repercuſſions of ſmall Particles of Matter; that the whole Syſtem of the " World, in ſhort, and every Being therein is nothing but Matter and Motion;
" Matter dividing itſelf into Particles of ſuch and ſuch a Figure; and Motion direct" ing itſelf into ſuch Tracts, and Turnings, and Deviations: That they dance and " friſk about, as they think fit, and yet keep every Thing in due Regularity, while " the drowzy God ſits ſleeping in Heaven, never once concerning himſelf with the " Matter:" Theſe are ſome of the wild extravagant Opinions of atheiſtical Spirits, which the bare mentioning of is enough to confute. [s] For, ſhall any one tell me, that the great and curious Frame of the World was made by Accident? As well may he pretend to ſay, that, once upon a Time, a certain Quantity of Stone, and Timber, and Iron, and Lead, and other Materials, met happily together by Chance at Weſtminſter, and then fell to Work; the Stones carved themſelves, the Timber hew'd itſelf, and the Iron and Lead got into their proper Places, and ſo finiſhed the famous Cathedral, without the Help of any Architect: For, alas! what Compariſon is there between the largeſt and moſt curious Building, and the immenſe Fabrick of the Univerſe? " Beyond all Credulity therefore (as a late Divine expreſſes it) is the Credu-

" WERE the Belief of a God a Matter of meer Speculation indeed, a Man might trifle with it, and ſport himſelf with his Motion and Atoms, as long as he pleaſed; but ſince it is made a fundamental Point of his Salvation, he ſeems to run too great an Hazard, for the bare Gratification of a fooliſh Singularity, who adventures to deny it. For, beſides that he throws away the main Comfort of his Life, reſigns the Satisfaction of a good Conſcience, and quits the Hope of a bleſſed Eternity, he runs the Riſque of being eternally wretched in the World to come, and expoſes himſelf naked to the unquenchable Wrath of an everlaſting God. And for what End? Only to enjoy the Pleaſures of a riotous and tumultuary Life for a Moment; and then, if, when he comes to conclude the Scene, he finds himſelf miſtaken in his atheiſtical Confidence, and all Things otherwiſe, than what he had ſtated and determined them in this World; inſtead of his beloved Sleep and Inſenſibility, finds his Soul ſtill ſubſiſting after his Body, only remov'd into a new and ſtrange Place, amidſt a World of Spirits, and entered upon an everlaſting and unchangeable State; finds himſelf ſummoned to the Tribunal of that God, whoſe Being and Authority he had ſo peremptorily denied and affronted, and thence tranſmitted to a diſmal Eternity, there to languiſh out an endleſs Exiſtence in unpitied Woes and fruitleſs Lamentations; how ſadly will the Man be diſappointed, and ſurprized with Terrors on every Side, to find himſelf, I ſay, thus unexpectedly and irrecoverably plung'd into a State of Ruin and Deſperation!

AND thus it may happen, for any Thing he knows: For, as we cannot fancy Things into Being, ſo neither can we make them vaniſh into Nothing, by the ſtubborn Confidence of our Imagination. What is it then that makes him thus foolhardy, and tempts him to this deſperate Riſque? 'Tis to ſet the World free from the Prejudices of vulgar Errors, he'll tell you, and the Slavery of that Bug-bear, Conſcience. Ah wretched Freedom! which, to deliver us from one imaginary Evil, brings upon us a Thouſand real Miſchiefs, which degrades the Dignity of human Nature, ſaps the Foundation of all Societies, opens a Sluice to all Kind of Wickedneſs, and takes away from Man his only Comfort in Time of Diſtreſs. For, ſince of himſelf he is infinitely inſufficient for his own Happineſs; is [x] liable to many Evils and Miſeries, which he can neither prevent nor redreſs; is full of Wants, which he cannot ſupply; ſurrounded with Infirmities, which he cannot remove; and obnoxious to Dangers, which he can no way eſcape; where can he turn himſelf without a God, or where repoſe his anxious Thoughts, but in his Divine Providence? In the Day of Adverſity eſpecially, when all other Friends are apt to forſake him, how dark and gloomy muſt every thing about him look without God! An unhappy Mortal, deep ſunk in Miſeries and Misfortunes, and ſtruggling with innumerable Hardſhips here upon Earth, and at the ſame Time deſtitute of a Protector and Patron in Heaven, is a Condition, not to be imagin'd without Horror. [y] But now, even in theſe Circumſtances, when he lifts up his Eyes to him, he will find vaſt and inconceivable

† They, who content themſelves with Words, may aſcribe the Formation of the World to Fate, or Nature, rather than Chance. Chance ſeems only to be a Term, by which we expreſs our Ignorance of the Cauſe of any Thing. For when we ſay a Thing comes by Chance we do not mean, that it had no other Cauſe, but only that we do not know the true Cauſe, which produced it, or interpoſed in ſuch a Manner as to make that fall out which was not expected. Chance can never produce any Thing of itſelf: Whatever Events or Effects there are, they muſt proceed from ſome Agent or Cauſe, which is either free, or not free, i. e. neceſſary. If it be free, it wills what it produces: And therefore that, which is produced, is produced with Deſign, and not by Chance. If it acts neceſſarily, the Event muſt neceſſarily be, and therefore it is not by Accident. As for Fate, it is nothing but a Series of Events, conſider'd as neceſſarily following in ſome certain Order. Now a Series of Events is the ſame with Events happening ſeriatim, which Words declare nothing concerning the Cauſe of that Concatenation of Events, or why it is. Time, Place, Manner, Neceſſity, are but Circumſtances of Things, that come to paſs, not the Cauſes of their Exiſtence. On the contrary, ſome external and ſuperior Cauſe muſt be ſuppos'd to put the Series in Motion, to project the Order, to connect the Cauſes and Effects, and to impoſe the Neceſſity; for which Reaſon, we find Seneca declaring, that in this Series God is prima omnium Cauſa, ex qua cæteræ pendent. And, laſtly, as for Nature: If it be uſed for the intrinſick Manner of exiſting, or that Conſtitution, Make, or Diſpoſition, with which any Thing is produced, or born; to ſay that, in this Senſe, Nature form'd any thing, is to ſay, that it form'd itſelf, or that the Effect is the Efficient. If it ſignifies the Laws of Nature, which ſeem to be follow'd, with a good deal of Uniformity, in the Conduct of Things; all Laws muſt neceſſarily ſuppoſe ſome Legiſlator, and are conſequently poſterior to that which conſtituted them; or if it denotes natural or ſecond Cauſes, ſecond Cauſes are nothing elſe, but either the inanimate Motions of ſenſeleſs Matter, or the voluntary Motions of dependent Creatures; one, the direct Operation, and the other, only the free Permiſſion of him that ruleth over all. Woolaſton's Religion of Nature, Sect. 5. and Clarke's Sermons, Vol. I.

inconceivable Comforts flowing in upon him; while he conſiders that Omnipotence, directed by unerring Wiſdom, and incited by infinite Goodneſs, is engag'd in his Favour, and under Covenant to ſuccour and relieve him; and under this Perſuaſion he can patiently ſuffer all Things, with chearful Submiſſion and Reſignation to the Divine Will, having a ſecret Spring of ſpiritual Joy, and the continual Feaſt of a good Conſcience within, that forbid him to be miſerable. For 'tis God, [z] our Maker, (as one of the Speakers in Job expreſſes it) who giveth Songs in the Night, in the Night of Affliction, and in the Gloomineſs of human Deſpair.

Praiſe and Admiration due to God.

WHAT has been ſaid may be of farther Uſe, to make us acknowledge, and admire, and praiſe, and adore the Deity, and thoſe Perfections, that are conſpicuous in his Works; and this the rather, becauſe, of all ſublunary Beings, we only are qualified to do it. Other Creatures indeed are called upon in Scripture to praiſe the Lord; but they are no otherwiſe capable of doing it, than by affording us the Matter and Subject of our Celebrations: And therefore, when the [a] Pſalmiſt invokes the Sun, Moon, and Stars, to praiſe God, [b] he, in Effect, calls upon Men, and Angels, and other rational Beings, to conſider theſe great Effects of Divine Wiſdom, their vaſt Dimenſions, their regular Motions and Periods, their admirable Diſpoſition and Order, their eminent Ends and Uſes, and to give him the Glory of his Power in making ſuch great and illuſtrious Bodies, in placing them in ſuch Regularity, and in giving them Virtues, ſo beneficial to the Uſe of Men. And in like Manner, when the Elements and all Meteors, the Trees, and other Vegetables, the Beaſts, and other Animals are incited to praiſe God; the Meaning is, that Man ſhould obſerve and take Notice of their curious Structures, Ends, and Uſes, and give God the Praiſe of his Wiſdom, and other great Attributes that are manifeſt therein. And indeed, for this very Reaſon it was, [c] that our wiſe Creator united theſe two diſtinct Natures in Man, and placed him on this Theatre of his Magnificence, that, by the Help of his Senſes, he might perceive the external Parts of the Creation, and, by his Reaſon, diſcover (what is moſt worthy to be known) the admirable Order, which diſtinguiſhes and unites ſo many and ſo different Natures, and guides all their Motions in ſuch a Manner, as ſhews their Dependence on one Principle, without knowing it, and their Tendency to one End, without willing it; that ſo, by gradual Advances, he might aſcend from Nature to God, and with deliberate Admiration, magnify him for the Operations of his Hands. And as this, in a great Meaſure, is the Buſineſs of our preſent State, ſo it ſeems to be no improbable Opinion, that ſome Part of our Employment, in the Regions of Bliſs, will be, to contemplate the Works of God, as well as his eternal Eſſence, and to give him the Praiſe and Adoration, that reſult from both: According to that known Form of the heavenly Doxology: [d] And the four and twenty Elders fell down before him, that ſat on the Throne, and worſhipped him, that liveth for ever and ever, and caſt their Crowns before the Throne, ſaying, Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive Glory, and Honour, and Power; for thou haſt created all Things, and for thy Pleaſure they are, and were created.

Love and Obedience.

WE can hardly quit this Argument of the Exiſtence of God from the Works of Creation, without reflecting upon ourſelves in particular, and upon the Love and Obedience which are due unto him upon that Account. [e] 'Tis a good Similitude that of St Auſtin: If a Sculptor, after having faſhioned a Piece of Marble into the Figure of a Man, could inſpire it with Life and Senſe, and give it Motion, and Speech, and Underſtanding, can it be imagin'd, but that its firſt Act would be to proſtrate itſelf at the Feet of the Maker, in Subjection and Thankfulneſs, and to offer all it is, and all it can do, in Homage and Obedience to him? Now this, and much more, has our gracious God done for us: He has not only formed our Bodies curiouſly, and breathed into them rational Souls, capable of knowing, loving, and enjoying him; but has ſurrounded us likewiſe on every Side with Bleſſings innumerable, inſomuch, [f] that though it may be carrying the Compliment to human Nature too far, to ſay, that the whole Syſtem of the World was created for Man's Uſe, yet ſo much of it is certainly ſubjected to him, as is enough to make his Wonder and Aſtoniſhment break out, upon the leaſt Reflection: [g] Lord, what is Man, that thou art ſo mindful of him, and the Son of Man, that thou viſiteſt him! Thou madeſt him a little lower than the Angels, and haſt crowned him with Glory and Honour; thou madeſt him to have Dominion over the Works of thine Hands, and haſt put all Things under his Feet. The Advice, which the [h] Moraliſt gives, as the beſt Expedient Expedient to make Men grateful, is to encompaſs them ſo with Benefits, that, wherever they turn, ſomething may recal their Memories, and make their Benefactor viſible to them. The limited Condition of Man will not allow him to be ſo diffuſe in his Favours: [i] But where'er we turn our Eyes, or fix our Thoughts, whether on our Perſons, or our Comforts, on our preſent, or our future State, (for God has given Eternity to our Duration) we find ourſelves incircled with his innumerable and inеſtimable Benefits. Let us every Day therefore, upon the Conſideration of theſe, renew the Senſe of our Obligations, and, by intenſe Thoughts, kindle the Affections of Love and Reverence, of Praiſe and Thankfulneſs; that in them (as Flames aſcending from an Altar) we may offer up ourſelves, our Souls, and Bodies, an holy, and living Sacrifice unto God, which is our reaſonable Service.

CHAP. III.

Of DIVINE REVELATION.

THE Foundation of Religion (which conſiſts in the Being and Attributes of a God) we have ſufficiently demonſtrated from the Works of Nature, in the foregoing Chapter; and come now to enquire into the Rule of Religion, contained in the holy Scriptures, which are ſaid to be a Revelation of the Divine Will. But, before we enter upon that, it will be neceſſary to premiſe ſomething concerning the Poſſibility, Expedience, and Neceſſity of God's making ſuch a Revelation to Mankind.

A Revelation, what.

BY a Revelation, we underſtand a ſupernatural Diſcovery, or Manifeſtation of any Thing to us, either immediately by God himſelf, or by the Mediation of Angels, as moſt, if not all, the Revelations of the Old Teſtament were: And that God can, if he pleaſes, make ſuch a Manifeſtation of himſelf, and his Will to Mankind, no one, that is really perſuaded of his Exiſtence, can have any Room to doubt: For what cannot he do, who has made the World, and is infinite in Wiſdom and Power?

The ſeveral Kinds of it.

THE ſeveral Kinds of Revelation taken Notice of by the Jews, are, Viſion, Dreams, Prophecy, Oracle, Inſpiration, what they call Bath-Kol, and what Gradus Moſaicus. [a] Maimonides, who treats of this Subject, has made many curious Obſervations about the Difference of theſe ſeveral Kinds of Revelation: As, that ſome of them were by direct Impreſſion upon the Underſtanding; others, upon the Imagination only; and others, upon the outward Senſes, &c. But the moſt ſimple and obvious Difference between them (ſo far as there is any Ground in Scripture to diſtinguiſh them) ſeems to be this:—That Viſion was the Repreſentation of ſomething to Men, when they were awake, in Oppoſition to Dreams, which were Repreſentations made to them in their Sleep; that Prophecy was either by Way of Dream or Viſion, only it carried a fuller Aſſurance along with it, foretold generally ſome Event of Moment to others, and was always attended with a ſtrong Extaſy and Tranſport of Mind; that Oracle was rendering Anſwers [b] from above the Mercy-Seat; from between the two Cherubims, which were upon the Ark of the Teſtimony; that Inſpiration was an inward Excitement of the Spirit, attended with Calmneſs and Serenity of Mind, wherewith David and other Prophets (as they tell us) wrote their Books; [c] that Bath-Kol, (which was the loweſt Kind of Revelation) was a Voice heard to deſcend from Heaven, directing Men what to do in any Matter or Concern whatever; and that the Gradus Moſaicus (which was the higheſt Kind of it) was a [d] particular Vouchſafement to Moſes, a more immediate, and perfect, and familiar Communion with God, (without any Awe upon his Spirits, or diſturbing Impreſſion on his Imagination) than ever Prophet had, except our Lord Jeſus, who was the only begotten Son of God, and had the Fulneſs of the Spirit always abiding in him without Meaſure.

THESE

[d] Exod. xxxiii. 11. Numb. xii. 6. Deut. xxxiv. 10.

THESE are the ſeveral Sorts and Degrees of Revelation, which have commonly been aſcribed to God: And what do we ſee in any of them, that he cannot, when he pleaſes, make uſe of? [a] Cannot he, by ſome viſible Appearances, convince Men of his immediate Preſence, beyond the Poſſibility of Doubt? Cannot he, either with, or without ſuch viſible Appearances, talk as familiarly to them, as one Man converſes with another? Cannot he, who formed our Minds, and knows all the Springs of our Thoughts, draw ſuch clear and bright Scenes and Pictures of Things on our Fancy and Imagination, whether ſleeping or waking, as ſhall need no other Proof of their Divinity, but themſelves; even as Light is known by itſelf, and the firſt Principles of Reaſon by their own Evidence? [f] We find ourſelves capable of communicating our Thoughts to one another, either by Means of a Sound of Words, which ſtrikes the Ear, or by Writing, or other Signatures of our Intentions, which affect the Eye: And why cannot God make uſe of the like Means, to impreſs what Ideas he thinks fit on our Minds, or to give ſuch Motions to the Brain, as may occaſionally excite whatever Thoughts he would produce in us? Or rather indeed, why may not he, without any intermediate or occaſional Cauſe at all, enlighten the Mind by a direct and naked View of ſuch Truths, as he is deſirous it ſhould know? [g] For he that planteth the Ear, and he that formeth the Eye, ſhall not he have Acceſs to them? And ſhall not he have Power of communicating his Thoughts, that teacheth Man Underſtanding? The Poſſibility of a divine Revelation.

THERE is no Queſtion then, but that God can, if he pleaſes, inſpire Men with the Knowledge of his Will, either by Dreams and Viſions, by an audible Voice, and familiar Converſation, or by an immediate Impreſſion upon the higher Faculties of their Reaſon: And that he can accompany his own Revelations with ſuch a clear and overpowering Light, as ſhall diſcover the Divinity of them, and convince us of their Reality, no one can doubt, that conſiders the vaſt Power and Influence which he, that made the Soul of Man, and perfectly knows its Frame, muſt needs have upon the Mind and Underſtanding of Man.

SINCE then we muſt acknowledge, that it is poſſible for God to reveal his Will to Mankind in any of the Ways, that we have mentioned, let us now conſider which is moſt probable, which is moſt agreeable to the Notions we have of him, whether he ſhould, or ſhould not, make ſuch a Revelation. Now, [h] if we may judge of this by the general Senſe of Mankind, we ſhall hardly find any one, that believed the Exiſtence of a God, who did not believe likewiſe ſome Kind of Commerce and Communication between God and Men. This was the Foundation of all the religious Rites and Ceremonies, which every Nation pretended to receive from their Gods; and, what gave Birth to all their ſuperſtitious Arts of Divination, was the Perſuaſion, that their Gods had a perpetual Intercourſe with Men, and, by various Means, gave them Intelligence of Things to come. The Expediency of it.

AND indeed, 'tis hardly to be imagined, that God ſhould make reaſonable Creatures on purpoſe to know him, and to be happy in the Knowledge, and Love, and Admiration of him, and yet withdraw himſelf from them, without giving them any viſible Token of his Preſence, or any other View of his Glory, but what they might perceive in the Reflection of his Works. Had Man preſerved the Innocence and Purity of his Nature, he had been fit for the Preſence and Converſation of God, even as Angels, and the Spirits of juſt Men made perfect, are; and in that State, there can be no Doubt, but that God would have ſhewn himſelf and his Glory to him, in ſome Meaſure and Proportion, as he does to Angels in Heaven, and did formerly to Adam in Paradiſe: So that Man was originally made (if I may ſpeak it with Reverence) for the Converſation of God; which pious and devout Souls recover, in ſome Meaſure, on Earth, and which we all hope to enjoy in Heaven.

SIN indeed has made a vaſt Diſtance between God and Man: But if we muſt live in the other World, and be happy or miſerable there; if God ſtill exerciſes any Care and Providence over Mankind; or if he has any Regard to his own Honour and Worſhip; it ſeems abſolutely neceſſary that he ſhould give ſome ſenſible Tokens of his Being and Preſence, and inſtruct them more perfectly in his Nature and Will, than what any Reaſoning of their own Minds, without a divine Aſſiſtance and Direction, can poſſibly teach them. And, for our farther Conviction in this Matter, let us look a little into the State of the World, while it lay in Darkneſs, and under the Deſtitution of a divine Revelation. The Neceſſity of it.

From the wicked Condition the World lay in.

[l] 'TIS hardly poſſible to read the firſt Chapter of the Epiſtle to the Romans, without Amazement, and many mortifying Reflections, to ſee rational Creatures capable of ſo wretched a Degeneracy, that no Object was ſo deſpicable, as not to be thought worthy of divine Honours, no Vice ſo deteſtable or brutiſh, as not only to obtain in common Converſation, but even to be admitted into their Rituals of Religion, and moſt ſolemn Acts of publick Worſhip. How Man became thus prone to all Kinds of Evil, we only know by Revelation; and therefore thoſe who reject all Revelation, muſt ſuppoſe, that he was at firſt created in this State of Sin and Miſery, which is a grievous Imputation upon the Goodneſs and Juſtice of God; and yet, to ſuppoſe him placed in this Condition without all Help or Remedy, is to charge God ſtill more fooliſhly. 'Tis, in ſhort, to deny his ſacred Attributes, to repreſent him as an unwiſe, unmerciful, and unholy Being, or at leaſt ſuch an one, as takes no Cognizance of human Affairs. For, how can we believe that a Being, of infinite Perfection, when he ſaw Mankind under the Deception of Sin, and the Deluſions of Satan, ſhould take no Care to rectify their Miſtakes, and reform their Manners? [k] Can we ſuppoſe it conſiſtent with infinite Truth, inſtead of manifeſting itſelf to the World, to ſuffer all Nations to be expoſed to the wicked Deſigns of ſeducing and apoſtate Spirits, without offering them ſufficient Means to undeceive and reſcue themſelves? Can we imagine, that a God of infinite Majeſty and Power, who is a jealous God, and will not give his Honour to another, ſhould allow the World to be guilty of Idolatry; to make themſelves Gods of Wood and Stone; nay, to offer their Sons and Daughters unto Devils, without concerning himſelf to vindicate his own Honour, and putting a Stop to ſuch abominable Practices? We have no true Notion of God, if we do not believe him to be infinite in Power, and Knowledge, and Holineſs, and Mercy, and Truth; and yet we may as well believe there is no God at all, as imagine that a God of infinite Knowledge ſhould take no Notice of what is done here below; that infinite Power ſhould ſuffer itſelf to be inſulted and deſpiſed, without requiring any Satisfaction; that infinite Holineſs ſhould behold the whole World overſpread with Wickedneſs, and find out no Way to remedy it; and that Superſtition, and Idolatry, and all the Tyranny of Sin and Satan, for ſo long a Time, ſhould enſlave and torment the Bodies and Souls of Men, and there ſhould be no Compaſſion in infinite Mercy, nor any Care over a deluded World in a God of Truth.

WE have not this Conception of a wiſe and good Father, that he will ſuffer his Children to run on in all Manner of Folly and Extravagance, without taking any Care to reclaim them: And much leſs can we ſuppoſe it in God, whom we cannot but repreſent to ourſelves, as beholding our forlorn Condition with all the Compaſſion of the tendereſt Parent, and without the Weakneſs and Infirmities that accompany human Nature.

SINCE the greateſt Part of Mankind then was under the Deception of the Devil, and led captive by him at his Will; "What ſhould the Creator of the Univerſe "(ſays St Cyril) do in this Caſe? Should he leave all Men under the Power of im- "pure Demons, and ſuffer the Devil's Malice to diſappoint his own Deſigns? Should "he not ſtretch forth his ſaving Hand to thoſe that were down? Should he not re- "claim thoſe that were enſlav'd to the groſſeſt Wickedneſs? Should he not call back "thoſe that were gone aſtray? How then could he be good, if when, without the "leaſt Trouble, he could effectually do all this, he had taken no Care of us? Why "did he at firſt bring Men into Being and give them Life, if he would extend no "Mercy to them, in this State of Miſery and Defection?"

And the Inability of Philoſophers to reform it.

THE Corruption of human Nature was not however ſo univerſal, but that ſome great Men rais'd themſelves above the common Level: [l] They lamented, and deſpiſed the Stupidity and Credulity of the Vulgar: But it muſt be obſerv'd, that as the Number of theſe was but very ſmall, ſo the Knowledge, which diſcover'd the Folly of others, was not able to attain Wiſdom itſelf; and the Effect of it ſeems to have been perpetual Scepticiſm, a Floating between all Opinions and Principles, diſcarding that, which was manifeſtly wrong, but not being able to ſettle their Minds in that, which was good and right. Beſides [m] their total Ignorance of the Cauſe of the Depravation of human Nature, of the Origin of Evil, and of the proper Manner of ſerving and worſhipping God acceptably; their Diſputes and Differences were infinite about his Being and Providence; about his Inſpection of human Actions; and being being pleaſed or diſpleaſed at them; about the Immortality of the Soul, and its final Condition after Death; Points, of the higheſt Concern for Men to know, and without which it is impoſſible for them to pleaſe God.

IN Matters too of moral Good and Evil, though ſome of the Rules and Reflections, they have left us, are at once Matter of Wonder and Reproach to many Chriſtians, who neglect the Improvement of much clearer Light; yet even here they, who advanced fartheſt, ſtopp'd a great Way ſhort, [n] and allow'd of many Actions, that were manifeſtly vicious and immoral, ſuch as Revenge and Self-Murther, Popularity and vain Glory, expoſing their own Children, and committing Fornication, and unnatural Luſt. The Truth is, the Nature and Obliquity of ſeveral Vices, the proper Ends of moral Actions in general, the Method of regaining the Favour of God when offended, the Certainty of a future State, the Reſurrection of the Dead, and the ſolemn Account to be render'd of all their Actions, (ſuch as now are, or ought to be, the governing Principles of every Chriſtian's Behaviour) were what they underſtood but little of, and conſequently what they could not much be influenc'd by: And this produc'd, both in their Diſcourſes ſuch Uncertainty, and in their Lives ſuch monſtrous Inconſiſtence, that one can hardly ſay, which is more ſurprizing, that they ſhould come ſo near Truth, and yet miſs it at laſt; that their Examples ſhould ſpeak them almoſt more than Men in ſome Actions, and yet little, if at all, better than Brutes in others: And, for the Confirmation of all this, we need only alledge the Judgment of Cicero, who was a Man, as able to paſs a Judgment in theſe Matters, as ever liv'd. "[o] Do you think, ſays he, that theſe Things (meaning the Precepts "of Morality) had any Influence upon theſe Men (except only a very few of them) "that thought, and wrote, and diſputed about them? No; Who is there of all the "Philoſophers, whoſe Mind, and Life, and Manners were conformable to right "Reaſon? Who ever made his Philoſophy the Law and Rule of his Life, and not "a mere Boaſt and Shew of his Wit and Parts? Who obſerv'd his own Inſtruc-"tions, and liv'd in Obedience to his own Precepts? On the Contrary, many of "them were Slaves to filthy Luſts; many to Pride; many to Covetouſneſs; and "the like."

[p] NAY, even the Things, which they certainly knew, and were fully perſuaded of, the moſt obvious and neceſſary Duties of Life, they had not Authority enough to enforce, and inculcate upon Men's Minds, with ſo ſtrong an Impreſſion, as to influence and govern their Conduct. The Truths, which they prov'd by ſpeculative Reaſon, were deſtitute of ſome more ſenſible Authority to back them, and to give them more Force and Energy in Practice; and the Precepts, which they laid down, (how reaſonable ſoever they were in themſelves) ſeem'd ſtill to want Weight, and to be no more than the Precepts of Men. And hence it came to paſs, that none of the Philoſophers were ever able to work any remarkable Change in the Minds and Lives of their Hearers; nor does it appear in Hiſtory, that any Number, even of Socrates's Followers (himſelf, I think, is the only Martyr of that Kind, that we have upon Record) were ſo convinced of the Excellency of true Virtue, and the Certainty of its final Reward, as to be willing to lay down their Lives for its Sake, as innumerable Diſciples of Chriſt were known to do.

THE Truth is, the Philoſophers themſelves were ſenſible of the Defect of their own Rules in this particular. They complain very much of the Darkneſs of Men's Underſtandings, the Prevalence of their Paſſions, and the Perverſeneſs of their Wills: They confeſs that human Nature was ſtrangely corrupted, and acknowledge that this Corruption was a Diſeaſe, whoſe Cauſe they knew not, and for which they could not find out a ſufficient Remedy. [q] So that the great Duties of Religion were laid down by them as Matters of Speculation, rather than Rules of Practice, and not ſo much urg'd upon the Lives and Hearts of Men, as propos'd to their Theory and Admiration.

THIS, to any one that will look into it, was apparently the Condition of Mankind without a Revelation: And, to recover them out of ſuch Corruption and Degeneracy into a State ſuitable to the original Excellence of their Nature, there was plainly a ſupernatural Diſcovery of their Duty wanting. For if (as has been related before) the Generality of the World was ſo very ignorant and corrupt; ſo over-run with Idolatry and Licentiouſneſs; if the beſt of the Philoſophers themſelves were not exempt from the general Infection, and far from certain in the Doctrines, they pretended tended to advance; if the Points, wherein they were certain, they were not able to prove clearly enough to vulgar Underſtandings, and thoſe, they were able to prove, they had not ſufficient Authority to enforce: In a Word, if there was ſo much Inconſiſtency in themſelves, as to give Scandal to others, and ſo much Depravity in others as to make them deſpair of ever reforming them; then was there plainly a Want of ſome Divine Revelation to ſupply theſe Defects. There was wanting a Revelation, to diſcover in what Manner, and with what Kind of external Service, God might acceptably be worſhipped: There was wanting a Revelation, to diſcover what Expiation he would be pleaſed to accept for Sin, when his Honour and Authority were affronted: There was wanting a Revelation, to give Man Aſſurance of the great Motives of Religion, the Rewards and Puniſhments of a future State: In Fine, there was wanting ſome particular Revelation, to make the whole Doctrine of Religion clear and obvious to all Capacities, to add Weight and Authority to the plaineſt Precepts, and to furniſh Men with extraordinary Aſſiſtances, to enable them to overcome the Corruptions of their Nature: And without the Aſſiſtance of ſuch a Revelation, their wiſeſt Men were always of this Opinion, that the World could never be reformed. "Ye may e'en give over, [r] ſays Socrates, all Hopes of amend-"ing Men's Manners for the future, unleſs God be pleaſed to ſend you ſome other "Perſon to inſtruct you; [s] for whatſoever is ſet right, ſays Plato, in the preſent ill "State of the World, can only be done by the Interpoſition of God."

SINCE therefore there was confeſſedly wanting a Divine Revelation, to relieve the Neceſſities of Men in their natural Eſtate; and ſince none can preſume to ſay, that it is inconſiſtent with any of the Attributes of God, or unbecoming the Wiſdom of the Creator of all Things, to ſupply that Want: Nay, ſince, on the Contrary, it ſeems much more ſuitable to our natural Notions of the Goodneſs and Mercy of God, to ſuppoſe that he ſhould do all this, rather than that he ſhould not; it undeniably follows, that we have ſufficient Reaſon to believe that his Goodneſs was all along inclinable to make ſuch a Revelation, whenever his infinite Wiſdom ſhould think fit.

Why a Revelation was made no ſooner.

"BUT if a Revelation was ſo mightily wanted, as is pretended, Why did not "God vouchſafe one ſooner? Why did he ſuffer the World to lie ſo long in Ig-"norance and Corruption, eſpecially when it was ſo eaſy for his Power, and ſo "agreeable to his Goodneſs, to have corrected the Diſorder?" This is an Objection, that ſeems to meet us: And though it does not become weak Mortals to enquire into [t] the Times or the Seaſons, that God hath put in his own Power; though the Declaration of his Will to Mankind was an Act of free Grace, which he was entirely at Liberty to do, at what Time, or in what Manner he pleas'd, yet it may not be amiſs to conſider,

1. THAT the Succeſſion and Continuance of Time is not, to an eternal Mind, what we compute it. [u] One Day with the Lord is as a thouſand Years, and a thouſand Years as one Day, is a Poſition, which the Apoſtle deſires ſome People not to be ignorant of, when they ſeemed to be uneaſy at Chriſt's delaying his coming to Judgment: And, in like Manner, though the Compaſs of two thouſand Years and upwards, from the Time of Adam, to the Promulgation of the Law, be a prodigious Space to our Imagination, yet to him, who has all Eternity under one ſingle Intuition [x] a thouſand Years are but as Yeſterday, ſeeing they paſs away with him as a Watch in the Night.

HAD there indeed been no Proviſion made for Man's Information, during this Space of Time, but the bare Light of Nature, which ſoon came to be obſcur'd, ſome Imputations might then fall upon God's providential Care, which would not ſo eaſily be remov'd: But ſince he all along made ſuch Declarations of himſelf to the Patriarchs, both before and after the Flood, as they were obliged to tranſmit to their Poſterity, there cannot be any Want of a ſufficient Supply of Knowledge chargeable upon God; nor was there that Neceſſity for a ſtanding Revelation then, when the Longevity of Mankind (for Adam himſelf lived 950 Years, with whom Methuſelah, was contemporary 243, and with him Noah 600, and Shem 100 Years) gave a better Sanction and Authority to Tradition.

[y] AFTER the Flood, Noah (who lived till within two Years of the Birth of Abraham) and Shem (who lived till Iſaac was fifty Years old) had freſh Revelations given given them; and the Religion of thoſe Times was a Mixture of natural and revealed Precepts and their Sanctions. Upon his Call, Abraham became the great Reviver and Reſtorer both of Natural and Revealed Religion, by himſelf, and his Iſſue, and by his Nephew Lot, and his Iſſue, which, in Proceſs of Time, grew up to many, and great Nations. During this Period, the holy Penman records two Perſons of the Gentile World, Job, and Melchiſedech, (and perhaps his own Father-in-Law Jethro may be reckoned a third) as Men of Renown for their Knowledge, and Worſhip of the true God.

UPON giving of the Law, the Jews † became as it were a burning and ſhining Light to the reſt of the World; and, by the Providence of God in all his Diſpenſations to that People, effectual Care was taken, that all the neceſſary Points of Religion, which concerned Mankind in general, ſhould by them be communicated to the reſt of the World. In the Time of Joſhua, and ſome Time after the Wars of Canaan carried in them ſuch viſible Marks of a divine Power, on the Side of Iſrael, as ſerved to ſpread the Fame of the true God in all the Nations round about. In the Time of David, the Jews grew a powerful People, and the Atchievements of their King were crowned with an uncommon Succeſs, (as himſelf tells us) [z] to declare the Glory of God among the Heathen, and his Wonders among all People. In the Time of Solomon, the Fame of the true God was ſo diffuſed all around, that we find, not only the [a] Queen of Sheba, who came from the Eaſt to hear the Wiſdom of Solomon, but Hiram King of Tyre, likewiſe [b] bleſſing the Lord God of Iſrael who made Heaven and Earth. Upon the Diviſion of the ten Tribes, and the Erection of the Kingdom of Iſrael, diſtinct from that of Judah, the many Leagues and Wars, which theſe two Kingdoms had with the Kings of Egypt, Syria, Babylon, and other Nations, could not but exceedingly conduce to the Propagation of the true Religion, and give the Prophets an Opportunity of working their Miracles among the Heathen: The Captivity of the Jews for ſeventy Years in Babylon, made their Religion almoſt as well known there, as in Jeruſalem itſelf; and for this Reaſon, we find it recommended by ſeveral publick Edicts, and all the People, under that large Empire, commanded [c] to tremble and fear before the God of Daniel, for he is the only living God, and ſteadfaſt for ever. The Reſtoration of the Jews by Cyrus, (who had been ſo long before appointed, and named by God himſelf for the Work) and his peculiar Favour to them (which raiſed their Repute among other Nations) was ordained for this very End [d] that they might know, from the riſing of the Sun, and from the Weſt, that there is no God, beſides him, who created all Things.

LOWER than this I might deſcend, and obſerve, how the Scriptures were tranſlated into a Language generally underſtood; how Proſelytes flowed in to them, in prodigious Numbers, every where; and how they, and their God, and their Religion came to be known in the Grecian and Roman, though not in ſo conſpicuous a Manner, as before in the Egyptian, Babylonian, and Perſian Empires. But what I have ſaid is ſufficient to ſatisfy every ſober Enquirer, that, in every Age, from the Beginning of Time, to the Commencement of Chriſtianity, Men were not left to mere natural Light, but had frequent Opportunities, (by one providential Means or other) of coming to the Knowledge of God's true Religion and Virtue.

BUT ſuppoſe this not to be the Caſe, but that inſtead of ſuch ample Diſcoveries all along, a thick Cloud of Darkneſs in a manner totally overſpread the heathen World; yet,

2. THE Scriptures have given us another Reaſon, why God ſhould [e] wink at theſe Times of Ignorance, and ſuffer all Nations to walk in their own Ways, without the Interpoſition of a ſtanding Revelation, in calling Chriſt the [f] Mediator of the New Covenant, and the Lamb that was ſlain from the Foundation of the World: For this intimates to us, that there was all along a Covenant between the Son of God and his Father, concerning the Redemption of Mankind; that, upon the Foreknowledge of

† To this purpoſe Theodoret obſerves, "That God ordain'd the Nation of the Jews to be a Guide to all Nations in "divine Knowledge. For, like as he appointed ſometimes Moſes, and at other times Joſhua, and then Samuel, and "afterwards one or other of the Prophets, to take the Charge of the People, and by a ſingle Man of approved Wiſdom, "benefited the whole Brotherhood; ſo by the ſingle Nation of Iſrael did God vouchſafe to call all Nations, Partakers "of one common Nature, to become Partners alſo in the ſame common Religion." Vide Dr Waterland's Charge, p. 52.

their Tranſgreſſion, Chriſt undertook to be their Mediator, and engaged, as their Proxy, to come down upon the Earth, to aſſume human Nature, to fulfil the Law, which they ſhould violate, and to ſatisfy God's Juſtice, by offering his Blood a Sacrifice for their Sins; that, until the Time ſhould come for Chriſt to execute this Engagement, all theſe Things ſhould be look'd upon as actually done; his Humiliation effected, his Blood ſhed, God's Juſtice ſatisfied, and Man in a State of Reconciliation with him: Conſequently, that there was a Saviour of the World, even before the World began, a conſtant Mediator between God and Man, a ſtanding Propitiation for Sin, and a daily Interceſſor at God's Right-Hand, whoſe Merits were available, and Righteouſneſs imputable, to all the Race of Adam, though they, in their ſeveral Generations, might not have the Happineſs to know it. And if this be the Import of the Words, (as undoubtedly it is) then will it follow, that Mankind, in the earlieſt Ages of the World, were under the ſame Diſpenſation, in effect, that we now are; had the ſame Admiſſion to the Throne of Grace, the ſame Aſſiſtance (though not in Degree) to live virtuouſly; and if [g] any Man ſinned, the ſame Advocate with the Father, even Jeſus Chriſt the Righteous, who is the eternal Propitiation for Sin. The only Difference is, that what was originally engaged for is ſince actually fulfilled; and the Bleſſings, which they had, but were not acquainted with, we are ſince poſitively aſſur'd of by an expreſs Revelation from God: But all this while, they were under the ſame Covenant, and in the ſame State of Salvation with us; for in every Age, [h] and every Nation, he that feared God, and worked Righteouſneſs, was accepted with him; and 'tis injuring the Goodneſs, and Juſtice, and other ſacred Attributes of God, to ſay, that he either is, or ever was, a Reſpecter of Perſons.

PUTTING all this together then, that the World was, from the Beginning, through the Mediation of his moſt bleſſed Son, in a State of Acceptance with God; that the Patriarchs, by their great Progenitor, were inſtructed in the true Religion, which the Length of their Lives enabled them to tranſmit to their Poſterity; that, in After-Ages, God made particular Revelations to ſome, though not in ſo full a Manner, and raiſed up others of diſtinguiſhed Merit and Abilities, to inſtruct and reform Mankind; and that in all Ages whatever, he never expected to reap where he did not ſow, nor to gather Grapes from Thiſtles; it will follow, that it was no Unkindneſs in God, to ſuffer Things to abide in this Condition for ſo many Ages, conſidering, what a momentary Duration two thouſand Years, or more, are to him; what wiſe Ends of his Providence ſo long a Continuance of Sin in the World might ſerve, and that there was not an abſolute Neceſſity for a ſtanding Revelation, until Mens Lives grew ſhort, and Tradition, by that Means, came to loſe its Credit.

How to diſtinguiſh a true from a falſe Revelation.

" BUT admitting it both reaſonable and neceſſary for God to reveal his Will to " Mankind, at one Time or other; yet how ſhall we know when he actually does " ſo? Falſe Prophets are innumerable, and a Revelation from God is the old ſtale " Trick, that every Impoſtor is known to ſet up with. Your Politicians, your " Law-givers, your Tyrants, and every one, that wanted to eſtabliſh his Deſigns, " or give Sanction to his Impoſitions, always pretended to a certain Familiarity with " Heaven; how then ſhall we diſtinguiſh the real from the falſe Revelation? Or by " what Characters can we be ſatisfied of the Truth and Veracity of thoſe, that pre- " tend to be ſent unto us from Almighty God?" This is a Queſtion of very great Importance to ſettle every Chriſtian's Faith upon a firm Foundation; and therefore we ſhall firſt enquire into the neceſſary Marks and Proofs of a Revelation's coming from God, and then apply them to the Subject that we are now upon.

NOW, in conſidering the Merit of a pretended Revelation, it ſeems reaſonable to examine,

I. INTO the perſonal Qualities and Behaviour of him that comes to us.
II. INTO the Nature and Tendency of the Doctrine he offers us.
III. INTO the Signs and Tokens he gives of his divine Commiſſion. And,
IV. INTO the Succeſs and Effects of what he affirms to be revealed.

I. TIS a ſtrong Preſumption then that a Revelation is true, when he that declares it, upon Examination, is found to be a Perſon of real Goodneſs and Integrity; virtuous without Noiſe, and without Affectation pious; cool and conſiderate enough not to

to be impoſed on himſelf, and too wiſe and honeſt to think of impoſing upon others: When it appears, that he is a Perſon of no Trick or crafty Deſign, has no ſecular Ends to ſerve, no Vanity or Ambition to gratify; diſclaims all worldly Greatneſs and Emoluments, and intends nothing, but the Good of Mankind, and the Glory of that God, who ſent him: When it appears that himſelf is in earneſt, and really believes his own Commiſſion; is conſequently, deterred by no Threats, diſcouraged by no Oppoſition, but goes on with undaunted Courage, ſtill perſiſting in the ſame Aſſertions, and ready to lay down his Life in Confirmation of what he ſays.

II. 'TIS a ſtrong Preſumption that a Revelation is true, when its Rules are agreeable to the Notions, we have of the Wiſdom, and Juſtice, and Holineſs of God; when it holds forth ſuch ſublime Doctrines, as exceed human Comprehenſion, and are not ſo grateful to its natural Pride and Haughtineſs; and when, inſtead of adapting its Maxims to the vicious Inclinations of Men, it enjoins ſtrict Virtue and Morality, Chaſtity in their Thoughts, and Temperance in their moſt lawful Enjoyments; for the Man gives us good Reaſon to believe that himſelf is perſuaded of the Reality of what he labours to advance, when he offers to the World a Religion, ſo repugnant to its darling Luſts and Paſſions, and which nothing, but a full Aſſurance of its Veracity, could engage him to atteſt.

III. 'TIS a ſtrong Proof that a Revelation is true, when the Perſon who atteſts it, foretels Events of a very uncertain Contingency, and performs Works of a very ſupernatural Kind, in Confirmation of it. For, ſince Miracles and Propheſies require a divine Power, and are always looked upon as an authentick Evidence of a divine Miſſion, the Man that does them, and does them fairly before our Eyes, without any Fraud or Colluſion, muſt certainly be a Prophet ſent from God; otherwiſe, we muſt be reduc'd to the Neceſſity of allowing that God may ſometimes employ his Power [j] for the Confirmation of a Falſhood, and ſet the Broad-Seal of Heaven, as it were, to a Lye: Which is confounding the Notions we have of him, and inverting all his Attributes.

IV. 'TIS a ſtrong Proof that a Revelation is true, when it is attended with Succeſs, and ſoon comes to make a conſiderable Figure in the World. Not that Succeſs does neceſſarily infer the Truth of any Profeſſion, or the Juſtice of any Cauſe; [k] but when we ſee it acquir'd, in ſpite of all the Power and Oppoſition of the World, without any Force, or Violence, or Craft, and Policy, by Means ſeemingly improper, and very incompetent Inſtruments, we muſt then be conſtrained to impute it to the Bleſſing and manifeſt Interpoſition of him, who [l] knows how to confound the wiſe and mighty Things of the World, with thoſe that are weak and fooliſh; and, by the Things that are not, i. e. have no natural Efficacy towards their End, brings to nought the Things that are, that no Fleſh ſhould glory in his Preſence.

THESE are ſome of the Ways of diſtinguiſhing a true Revelation, and of diſcovering the Perſons, who pretend to be ſent to us from God: And we come now to apply all this to the Subject, that is under our preſent Conſideration.

SECT. I.

The MOSAICK REVELATION.

An Account of Moſes, and his Education.

1. THAT there really was ſuch a Perſon as Moſes, is atteſted by many of the Heathen Writers, who ſpeak of him as an extraordinary Man, and the Founder of the Jewiſh Laws and Religion. The Egyptians accounted him one of their Prieſts, as appears by the Teſtimonies produced out of Cheremon and Manetho by [m] Joſephus. [n] Diodorus Siculus mentions him, with great Reſpect, among the famous Legiſlators; and ſo does [o] Strabo, when he ſpeaks in Commendation of the Religion he eſtabliſhed. [p] Juſtin Martyr, Euſebius, and Cyril quote many Pagan Authors, who give a great Character of him. The Teſtimony of Juvenal, Numenius, and Longinus is ſufficiently known; and the Tranſlation of the Septuagint (which is of older Date than theſe Authorities) takes it all along for granted, not only that there was ſuch a Perſon, but that he was really the Compoſer of the Hiſtory and Laws, which went under his Name.

THAT

[j] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. App. Lib. I. [k] Barrow on the Creed. [l] 1 Cor. i. 27, &c. [m] Joſ. cont.
[n] Diod. Lib. i. [o] Strabo, Geogr. Lib. xvi. [p] Vid. Grot. de Veritate, Chap. 2.

THAT this Moſes pretended to have all theſe Laws from God, and, whatever he wrote or delivered to the People, to receive from him by immediate Revelation, is plain to any one, who looks into his Writings: But that his Pretenſions in this Reſpect were real; that he actually received what he delivered from the Mouth or Inſpiration of God; that he was neither capable of being deceived himſelf, nor deſirous to impoſe on others; this, (according to the Rules we have laid down) will appear, from the Evidence we have of his Wiſdom and Veracity; from the Nature and Tendency of his Precepts and Doctrines; and from the publick Demonſtrations, he gave of his divine Commiſſion. In order to which, it will be neceſſary for us to look a little into the holy Scriptures; deſiring however no more Aſſent to be given them as yet, than what is uſually given to Plutarch's Lives, or any other Relation of the Actions of Perſons, who liv'd in former Ages.

[q] THEY acquaint us then, that, at the Time when Moſes was born, Pharaoh had publiſhed a cruel Edict, that all the male Children of the Hebrews ſhould be put to death: That, for fear of this Law, his Parents concealed him for three Months; but, deſpairing to do it any longer, committed him to the Providence of God, and expos'd him in an Ark of Bulruſhes upon the River Nile: That Pharaoh's Daughter (whom Joſephus calls Thermuſis) walking by the River-ſide, ſaw him, and had Compaſſion on him; and, ſuppoſing him to be one of the Hebrew Children, called for a Nurſe of that Nation, who happened to be his own Mother, and order'd her to take care of him: That as he grew up, Pharaoh's Daughter adopted him for her Son; and her Father (as Joſephus tells us) having no Son of his own, deſign'd to make him the Heir of his Kingdom; and that, purſuant to this Deſign, he [r] was brought up in Pharaoh's Court, was educated in all princely Qualities, and ſkill'd in all the Learning of the Egyptians.

† WHAT the [s] Learning of the Egyptians was, we need not here recount: If we will believe Macrobius, who makes Egypt ([t] in one Place) the Mother of all Arts, and the Egyptians ([u] in another) the Fathers of all Philoſophick Sciences, there was no Nation under the Sun that could compare with them. The Truth is, the Grecian Philoſophers, who made ſuch a Noiſe and Figure in the World, borrowed all their Diſcoveries from them, and, Age after Age, went down into Egypt, to pick up ſome Scraps of that Learning, which Moſes's Rank and Authority in the Nation enabled him to have in what Quantity he pleaſed.

His Capacity. [x] HOW can we then imagine, that ſuch a Perſon as Moſes, bred up in all the polite Literature of Egypt, and converſant among the wiſeſt Perſons of Pharaoh's Court, ſhould not be able to paſs a Judgment between an Impoſture and a Truth, nor diſtinguiſh between a familiar Converſe with God, and a Deception of his Senſes? Can we think that a Perſon, who had ſuch Opportunities of raiſing himſelf to the brighteſt Pitch of Honour, ſhould willingly forſake all his preſent Pleaſure, and future Advantages, but that he was fully perſuaded of the certain and undoubted Truth of the Matters, which he recorded? Is it poſſible, that a Man of common Senſe and Prudence ſhould ever venture himſelf upon an Affair ſo hazardous, and unlikely to ſucceed, as that which he undertook; had it not been by the Inſtigation of that God, who appeared to him, and promiſed him the Aſſiſtance of his Power to enable him to accompliſh his Deſign? And what tolerable Ground can we have to imagine, that a Perſon, who verily believed the Truth of what God had revealed to him, ſhould dare to write otherwiſe, than as it was revealed?

To

† The Tillage of the Ground made the Study of Aſtronomy a neceſſary Part of Learning among the Egyptians, that, from the Stars in the Firmament, they might know the proper Times, and Seaſons, for ſeveral Parts of Agriculture. The certain Influence, which they ſuppos'd theſe Luminaries in Heaven had upon all earthly Bodies, and more eſpecially over the Conditions and Complexions of Mankind made them run into Aſtrology, from whence the Tranſition was natural into the Art of Divination; and, as they ſuppos'd, that theſe Celeſtial Bodies were inform'd by ſome ſuperior Being, whom they thought worthy of their Invocation, they thereupon betook themſelves to Magical Incantations, for which the Egyptians were famous in the Time of Moſes. The Nature of their Country, and the annual Overflowing of their River Nile, made it of continual Uſe to them to ſtudy Geometry or Land-meaſuring; and, as this cou'd not well be done without the help of Numbers, 'tis very likely, that they were not unacquainted with ſome of the moſt uſeful Rules of Arithmetick. The Skill of Surgery and Phyſick was of ancient Date among the Egyptians; we read of Men of both Profeſſions, as early as Joſeph, Gen. l. 2. and the Invention of Muſick is aſcribed to their famous Mercury. Philo ſuggeſts, that Moſes was not only well acquainted with all the Kind of Hieroglyphical Learning, but highly ſkill'd in the Knowledge of War, and a great Proficient likewiſe in the Art of Writing, whether in Proſe or Verſe; but, when he tells us, that Greek Profeſſors were ſent for into Egypt to inſtruct him in the Liberal Sciences, he certainly labours under a great Miſtake, becauſe the Greeks had no Learning among them 'till after the Time of Moſes, and what they afterwards acquir'd, they manifeſtly borrow'd from other Nations. Shuckford's Connection, Vol. II. Integrity.

TO extol himself, or aggrandize his Nation, may be thought a probable Inducement: But so far is he from magnifying himself, that he omits no Opportunity of recording his own [y] Failings and Miscarriages; passes over in Silence his own personal [z] Qualities and [a] Atchievements; and opens the Account of his Ministry with the Relation of a [b] Fact (the Murther of an Egyptian) that nothing, but the Presumption of his having acted by a Divine Authority, can justify or excuse. Now had it been any Part of his Aim to have raised his Reputation into a superstitious Veneration among the Jews, or to have established his Family in any high Degree of Honour and Authority, how easily might he have done it! 'Twas but concealing what might seem to depress the one, and using the Power he had to advance the other. But, instead of that, we find him very secure and careless in both these Respects; relating his own Faults without Disguise or Extenuation; [c] conferring both the Civil and Ecclesiastical Power upon other Families, and leaving his own in the meanest Sort of Attendance upon the Tabernacle. And so far is he from aggrandizing his Nation, that he sets forth the lesser Faults, as well as grosser Enormities of all its first Progenitors; that he spares not the Stock of his own Family Levi, but records very punctually his, and Simeon's Inhumanity to the Shechemites; and, in the whole Course of his History, [d] (which is wrote in a plain Stile, without any Disguise of Rhetorick, and in a majestick Brevity, which seems to demand Belief) looks, as if he were describing the Obstinacy, and Unbelief, and Unthankfulness, and Disobedience of a Nation towards a gracious God, rather than any Way inhancing their Reputation in the World: For in this Manner he is perpetually reminding them: [e] The Lord did not set his Love on thee, and chuse thee, because thou art more in Number than other People, or because of the Righteousness and Uprightness of thine Heart; for thou art the fewest, and the most rebellious. Remember how thou provokedst him to Wrath, in the Wilderness, in Horeb, and in several other Places: From the Day that thou departedst out of the Land of Egypt, until ye came into this Place, ye have been disobedient against the Lord: Words, that are far from implying any Design of flattering his Nation, or any Desire of Popularity in his own Breast.

The Excellence and Truth of his History.

HITHERTO it appears that Moses acted like a sincere and upright Man, free from all private Ends, and worldly Considerations; let us,

2. IN the next Place, make some Inspection into the Revelation he brings us, and see whether his Doctrines have the Marks of Divinity impress'd on them, or no.

1. As an Historian then, what could he deliver to the World more becoming the Majesty of God to impart, and the Necessities of Men to know, than the Origin of the Universe, and the first Beginning of all Things; than the Formation of Man, his State of Innocence at first, his Fall, and the consequential Evils of it, his Redemption, and the glorious Hopes and Expectances of the new Covenant; than the Propagation of Mankind, the general Defection, the universal Deluge, the Confusion of Tongues, and thereupon the Plantation of Families, and Origin of Kingdoms; than the Selection of one particular Family (of which Christ was to come in the Flesh) from the rest of Mankind, and the many wonderful Works, God did to redeem them from Bondage, and conduct them through the Wilderness, until he had settled them in the promised Land, and given them Laws and Ordinances, whereby they were to live? These are some of the great Subjects, that Moses had treated of in the Pentateuch: And 'tis no small Confirmation of their Truth and Reality, that we find the same Things related, much in the same Manner, by the antientest Authors.

[f] WHAT Moses has said of the Origin of the World is recorded in the old Histories of the Phœnicians and Egyptians. The Formation of Man according to the Image of God, and his Dominion over other Creatures are described by Ovid, who had them from the Greeks. That all Things were created by the Word of God, and enliven'd by his Spirit, and that Man, in particular, was made out of the Dust of the Earth, is what Epicharmus, Hesiod, Homer, and (from the Greeks) Virgil has related. The History of Adam and Eve, the Tree of Knowledge, and the tempting Serpent, was found formerly among the Indians, as Maimonides tells us, and is still among the Brachmans, and the Inhabitants of Siam, as later Voyagers report. History of the Deluge, of the Ark, and of thoſe that were ſaved therein, is recorded by Beroſus, by Plutarch, and Lucian: Nay Abydenus, (as he is cited by Euſebius) makes mention of the very Dove, which was ſent out to explore the Waters. The Building of the Tower of Babel, and the Giants attempting to reach the Height of Heaven, is the common Tale of every Poet. The Burning of Sodom is related by Diodorus Siculus, Pliny, and Tacitus. The Uſe of Circumciſion is confirm'd by Herodotus, Strabo, and Philo-Biblius. The Hiſtory of Abraham Iſaac, Jacob, and Joſeph, (in the ſame Manner as Moſes relates it) was found in ſeveral antient Hiſtorians quoted by Euſebius, and is ſtill extant in Juſtin from Trogus Pompeius. The Actions of Moſes himſelf, how he led the People of Iſrael out of Egypt, received the two Tables of the Law from the Hand of God, and inſtituted ſeveral Rites and religious Obſervances, are to be found in moſt of the ſame Authors, but more eſpecially in the Verſes, that are aſcribed to Orpheus, and in the Hiſtories which treat of the Affairs of Egypt.

THUS conſonant to the Greatneſs and Majeſty of God, and the received Opinion in the earlieſt Ages of the World, are the hiſtorick Facts, which Moſes relates: And to conſider him,

Of his Laws. 2. As a Legiſlator: What can be more agreeable to the Notions we have of God, than the Prohibition of Idolatry and Polytheiſm, and the Inſtitution of his true Religion and Worſhip; than the Prohibition of Perjury and vain Swearing, of Theft, of Murder, of Adultery, of Covetouſneſs of all Kinds, and the Injunction of the contrary Virtues, of Juſtice and Mercy, of Chaſtity and Charity, together with all due Reverence to Parents, both in a natural and civil Capacity? What can be more becoming the Character of a Divine Legiſlator, than [g] his often inculcating upon the People (as we find almoſt in every Page Moſes does) the many Obligations they had to God, and the innumerable Favours, they had received from him; his frequent and pathetick Exhortations to Obedience, and living anſwerably to the ſingular Mercies, which were conferr'd upon them; his conſtant reminding them of their former Miſcarriages, their Murmurings and Rebellions againſt Heaven, and all their unworthy Deportment towards their matchleſs Benefactor; his compaſſionate forewarning them of the Judgment of God, and of the various Plagues and Puniſhments, which would certainly be the Conſequence of their perſiſting in their Sins; and, laſtly, his affectionate encouraging them to Obedience, from the Conſideration of the endearing Promiſes, which God had made to them, and which he would aſſuredly fulfil, if they did not fruſtrate his Deſigns of Mercy to them by their wilful Obſtinacy?

NAY, the very ceremonial Precepts, which he enjoined to diſcriminate them from other Nations, are a ſufficient Indication that he received them from God; ſince, had they been of his own Invention, he would have conſulted the People's Eaſe, and his own Popularity more; and not impoſed ſo many laborious and expenſive Ordinances, ſo many Sacrifices, both ſtated and occaſional, ſo painful an Inſtitution, as that of Circumciſion, and ſuch annual and weekly Ceſſations from Labour, as were apparently againſt the [h] Intereſt of a Nation, whoſe great Subſiſtence was upon Paſturage and Agriculture. Nor can we conceive how any People could have ſubmitted to ſuch arbitrary Injunctions, but that they were fully convinced, they came originally from God, and were only delivered to them by the Hand of his Servant Moſes. And for their farther Conviction in this, they had all the Evidence that could be required, the Prediction of Events, which none but God could foreknow, and the Demonſtration of Miracles, which none but God could perform.

His Predictions. 3. IT would be too much to inſtance in all the Prophecies, contained in the Pentateuch; I ſhall only make mention of two or three, that Moſes himſelf foretold the People of Iſrael, and accordingly came to paſs. [i] In the xxxivth Chapter of Exodus he foretold them, that, after forty Years, they ſhould take Poſſeſſion of the Land of Promiſe, prove victorious over their Enemies, and that their Country (by the divine Care and Protection) ſhould be preſerved in Safety, while they went up to Jeruſalem to worſhip thrice every Year. Here is a Prediction many Years before the Thing happen'd, [k] that all their Males ſhould appear before the Lord God, the God of Iſrael, thrice every Year: And that they did accordingly go up to Jeruſalem, to ſolemnize their three great Feſtivals every Year, after their Eſtabliſhment in [l] Canaan, is is plain from their known and undeniable Practice. In the xivth Chapter of Numbers, Moſes (by God's expreſs Command) denounces his Judgment upon the murmuring Iſraelites, viz. that all of them ſhould die in the Wilderneſs, and, except two, who had given a good Report of the promiſed Land, not one be allowed to enter into it; which accordingly came to paſs: For, at the End of forty Years, (which was the prefixt Time of their Wandering) there was not a Man of the old Generation left, [m] ſave Caleb, the Son of Jephunneh, and Joſhua, the Son of Nun. He foretold to them all in general, that they ſhould have miraculous Succeſs againſt the Canaanites, ſhould poſſeſs their Land, and ſet Kings over them; that they ſhould have a peculiar Place of Worſhip to reſort unto, divine Oracles in their Cuſtody, and a Succeſſion of Prophets, to direct them in Matters of great Importance; and Joſhua, in his laſt Speech, appeals to their Experience, whether all theſe Things were not punctually fulfilled, as far as his Time. [n] Ye know, in all your Hearts, and in all your Souls, ſaith he, that not one Thing hath failed of all the good Things, which the Lord your God ſpake concerning you. To mention but one Prediction more: Many Years, before the Inſtitution of regal Power among the Jews, Moſes foretold the Judgments, which would befal them for their obſtinate Perſeverance in Iniquity; [o] that the King, whom they ſhould ſet over them, ſhould be carried into Captivity; [p] that their Cities ſhould be laid waſte, their Sanctuary become a Deſolation, and themſelves be reduced to the ſad Extremity [q] of eating the Fleſh of their Sons and of their Daughters; which monſtrous and dreadful Thing twice happened in Jeruſalem; firſt, when it was beſieged by Nebuchadnezzar; and again, [r] when it was quite deſtroyed by the Romans under Titus. Now theſe are Events, attended with ſuch uncommon Circumſtances, as could never have been told ſo long before, but by a divine Preſcience: And if a divine Preſcience was aſſiſting to Moſes herein, what can be deſired more to prove his divine Legation, and that he acted nothing, but in Purſuance to the Commiſſion, which he had given him; eſpecially if he produced the other Part of his Credentials, which is the Performance of Miracles?

His Miracles.

AND here, not to inſiſt on many Particulars, the whole Method of conducting the People of Iſrael out of Egypt was, both in its Progreſs, and in its Execution, miraculous. [s] Nothing but a continued Series of Wonders, ſurprizing in their Nature, and dreadful in their Effects, could have prevailed with Pharaoh to let the People go; and nothing but a divine Power, which went out before the People, and viſibly conducted them, could have given them a free Paſſage, and the Egyptians a total Overthrow in the Red-Sea. The wonderful Support of ſo great a Multitude, in a vaſt and barren Wilderneſs, when neither their Raiment decayed, nor their Bread and Water failed, and the Victories, they afterwards gained in their Way to the promiſed Land, were both Convictions of the Almighty's Power, and Confirmations of the Truth of the Moſaick Revelation; ſince it would be impious to ſuppoſe, that Providence would, in the Sight of the Heathen, have favoured Iſrael with ſuch wonderful Succeſſes, under the Conduct of a Leader, who only pretended to act and make Laws by an Authority, which he was not really inveſted with.

THE Whole therefore turns upon the Veracity of God: And the conſtant Apprehenſions, which both Reaſon and Religion give us of him, forbid us to imagine, that he will employ his Power to deceive his Creatures. [t] Of all the divine Attributes, we know none ſhine brighter, or more amiable to our Eyes, than Truth and Goodneſs; the former cannot atteſt to a Lye, nor the latter ſeduce Men into dangerous and deſtructive Miſtakes; and yet, if God ſhould communicate any Part of his Power to an Impoſtor, to enable him to work Miracles in Confirmation of his Pretences, what would become of theſe two ſacred Attributes? To ſuſpect, I ſay, that Almighty God is capable of employing his infinite Power, and of diſturbing the Courſe of Nature, with a Deſign to miſlead and delude Mankind, in what relates to their eternal Concerns, is to deſtroy and ſubvert his Attributes, and leave ourſelves no Notion at all of ſuch a Being. Nay, for him to permit the ſame Evidences to be produced for Errors, as for Truth, is, in effect, to cancel his own Credentials, and make Miracles of no Significance at all.

" BUT may not Miracles be done by thoſe, who have no Commiſſion and Autho" rity from God? Nay, by thoſe, who are themſelves Impoſtors, and pretend to a " Commiſſion, which they have not? Did not the Egyptian Magicians work Mi" racles,

" racles, when they turned their Rods into Serpents, the Rivers into Blood, and when " they brought Frogs upon the Face of the Earth, as well as Moſes? And yet this " was done directly in Oppoſition to a divine Teſtimony. How then ſhall we judge " in this Caſe? And by what Tokens ſhall we diſtinguiſh the Finger of God, from " the Deception of the Devil?"

How to diſtinguiſh falſe from true Miracles.

How far God may permit the Devil, or his Agents, to proceed in Matters of this Nature, we cannot comprehend: We have his divine Attributes however engaged for our Security, [u] that he will not ſuffer us to be deluded by falſe Miracles, wrought under a Pretence of his own Authority, without any Poſſibility of diſcovering the Impoſture. And though, for wiſe Ends, he may ſuffer wicked Men to perform ſome Things, that ſeem very wonderful, yet he always takes care to put a Note of Diſtinction between what is done for the Atteſtation of a Lye, and the Confirmation of Truth. Thus, in the Caſe that is now before us, [x] the Magicians of Egypt were allowed to proceed to the utmoſt of their Art, and held on with Moſes, as long as poſſibly they could, which made the Victory of Moſes (confirmed by their own Confeſſion,) much more illuſtrious, than if they had never entered into Competition with him.

THE great Difference between them ſeem'd to have conſiſted in this——That the Miracles of Moſes were done immediately, and with great Facility; thoſe of the Magicians, by the Intervention of certain Charms and Incantations: [y] Had not Moſes however been preſent to over-rule them by a ſuperior Power, 'tis very reaſonable to believe, that (whatever they might have done by Virtue of any magical or diabolical Arts) God would not have permitted them to perform ſuch Things, as had, at leaſt, the Appearance of true Miracles, and were ſufficient to deceive all indifferent Standers-by.

[z] IF there ariſe among you a Prophet, or a Dreamer of Dreams, (as Moſes himſelf gives the Caution) that giveth thee a Sign, or a Wonder, ſaying, Let us go after other Gods, ye ſhall not hearken to the Words of that Prophet, but ſhall walk after the Lord, and keep his Commandments, and obey his Voice: So that, if Miracles be wrought to introduce the Worſhip of other Gods, beſides him, whom Reaſon, as well as Scripture, aſſures us to be the only true God; if they be done to ſeduce Men to immoral Doctrines and Practices; if they be performed to contradict a Religion, already eſtabliſhed by ſuch Miracles, as are inconteſtably true: If never ſuch aſtoniſhing Miracles, I ſay, be wrought for ſuch ill Deſigns as theſe, they are not to be regarded, but rejected with that Conſtancy, which becomes a Man, acting according to the Principles of natural Reaſon and Religion. There are therefore certain Notes of Diſtinction, either reſpecting, firſt, the Works themſelves, and their Manner of being done; or, ſecondly, the Perſons themſelves, and the Ends for which they do them, which make an eſſential Difference between real Miracles, and lying Wonders.

FIRST, [a] in relation to the Works themſelves, it is required that they be poſſible, becauſe no Power whatever can effect that which is ſtrictly impoſſible; that they be probable, becauſe the Divine Power will hardly concern itſelf with what ſavours of Fable and Romance; that they be not below the Majeſty of God, as he is the Ruler and Governor of the World; nor inconſiſtent with his Character, as he is a good and gracious Being; that they be done openly, before a ſufficient Number of competent Witneſſes; readily, without any previous Forms or Ceremonies, which may make them look like Incantation; and upon all proper and important Occaſions, to denote that Permanency of the divine Power by which they are done.

SECONDLY, In relation to the Perſon, pretending to a divine Miſſion, it is requiſite, that he be a Man of good Report for his unblamable Converſation; in the perfect Exerciſe of his Reaſon and Senſes; conſtant and uniform in the Meſſage, he delivers; and that the Doctrine, which he endeavours to eſtabliſh by his Miracles, be conſiſtent with the Principles of true Reaſon and Natural Religion; conſiſtent with right Notions and Worſhip of God; conſiſtent with the former Revelations, he hath made of his Will; of a Tendency to deſtroy the Devil's Power in the World, to recover Men from their Ignorance, to reform them from their Vices, to lead them into the Practice of Virtue and true Godlineſs by proper Motives and Arguments; and, in ſhort, to advance the general Welfare of Societies, as well as every Man's particular Happineſs in this Life, and in his Preparation for a better. By theſe Rules any Man of ſober Conſideration may be able to diſcern between true and falſe Miracles, racles, becauſe we are ſure (ſo far as God's Attributes avail, we are ſure) that he will not ſuffer the ſame Degree of Evidence to concur to the Confirmation of both, without the Poſſibility of diſtinguiſhing them.

UPON a Review then of what has been ſaid in relation to Moſes, that he was a Perſon of great Wiſdom and Integrity, unlikely to be impos'd upon himſelf, and unwilling to impoſe upon others, upon any private Deſigns of Popularity, or Self-Exaltation, in what he did; that, as an Hiſtorian, he related Facts, neceſſary for Man to know, and becoming the Nature and Majeſty of God to reveal; as a Legiſlator, gave Laws and Ordinances, that had a manifeſt Stamp of divine Authority; as a Prophet, foretold ſuch Things, as none but God, who has all Events under his Intuition, could know; and, as a Worker of Miracles, did ſuch Things, as had all imaginable Evidence of an Almighty Power's aſſiſting him; it will follow, that, as ſure as God is true, and cannot be an Abettor of Falſhood, what he did, was by the Order and Appointment; what he delivered, was expreſly the Will; and what he wrote (for the Books that go under his Name, we ſhall hereafter prove to be his) was infallibly the Word of God.

SECT. II.

The PROPHETICK REVELATION.

THAT there was to be a Succeſſion of Prophets after Moſes is very plain, not only from the Rules, which God has [b] preſcribed for the Trial of them, whether they were divinely inſpir'd or no; but from that expreſs Promiſe, which Moſes made to the People, a Prophet will the Lord God raiſe up to thee of thy Brethren, like unto me, unto him ſhalt thou hearken: [c] For, though the Words, in their full and compleat Senſe, relate unto Chriſt, who is the great Prophet of the Church; yet, whoever attends to the main Scope of them, will eaſily perceive, that their immediate Aſpect is towards an Order of Prophets, which ſhould ſucceed Moſes, to explain the ſpiritual Senſe, and enforce the true Obligation of the Law; to comfort the People in their Calamities with a Proſpect of Deliverance; to deter them from their Impieties by the Denunciation of Judgments; and to make ſuch farther Declarations of the Almighty's Will, as he, from Time to Time, ſhould give them Commiſſion and Authority to do. The Inſtitution of Prophets.

How well qualified the Prophets were for the Diſcharge of their Function, will beſt appear by a ſhort View of the Method of their Education. To this Purpoſe we may obſerve, that God, having eſtabliſhed a Religion by Signs and mighty Wonders, appointed an Order of Men for the Interpretation of it, and out of this Order moſt commonly made choice of ſuch, as he employed in the prophetick Office. [d] † The firſt Schools of the Prophets, among the Jews, were in the Cities of the Levites, which, for the Conveniency of inſtructing the People, were diſperſed up and down in the ſeveral Tribes of Iſrael; God having thereby turned that into a Bleſſing, which was pronounced as a Curſe upon Levi by his Father, [e] that he ſhould be divided in Jacob, and ſcattered in Iſrael. The firſt Inſtitution of theſe Schools ſeems to have been about Samuel's Time, when the Prieſthood was become very degenerate, and Men thereby eſtranged from the Worſhip of God; ſo that there ſeemed to be a Neceſſity for appointing ſuch publick Places, for the better Education of thoſe, who were deſigned for the ſacred Miniſtry: And 'tis not improbable, that, over one of theſe Colleges, Samuel himſelf was ordained [f] Preſident, and had the Care of the Education of ſuch, as were to be trained up to the prophetick Office. Their Education.

H Now

[b] Deut. xviii. 21, 22. [c] Stilling fleet's Orig. Sacræ. [d] Ibid.

† Some modern Jews pretend to carry the firſt Inſtitution of theſe Schools to an immoderate Degree of Antiquity, to the Days of Abraham, of Noah, of Seth, and even as high as Adam himſelf: But the firſt Place, that we meet with any Mention of them, is in the tenth Chapter of the firſt Book of Samuel, where Saul is ſaid to have met, and join'd himſelf with a Company of Prophets, at the Hill of God, as they came down from the high Place with Muſick before them, ver. 5. where by the Hill of God is moſt probably meant ſome Eminence near Gibeah of Benjamin, the Place were Saul's Father dwelt, and might be ſo call'd, upon Account of the Sacrifices, which the People, at that Time, were wont to offer in ſuch high Places. The next Notice that we have of them is in the nineteenth Chapter of the ſame Book, where we read of a like Company of Prophets at Naioh in Ramah, propheſying with Samuel, who ſtood as appointed over them, ver. 20. After this, in the ſecond Book of Kings, we read of ſeveral ſuch Schools, in the Days of Elijah, and his Succeſſor Eliſha, viz. of one at Bethel; and another at Jericho, chap. ii. 3, 5. of one at Gilgal, chap. iv. 38. and another on Mount Ephraim, chap. v. 22. nor does it ſeem impoſſible, that there might be one in Jeruſalem, where the Propheteſs is ſaid to have dwelt, chap. xxii. 14. though it muſt be own'd, that the greateſt Part of theſe Colleges were ſet up in the Land of Iſrael, where Providence ſeems to have placed them, in order to preſerve the Purity of God's Worſhip during the Defection of the ten Tribes. Wheatly's School of the Prophets.

Their Office and Employment.

NOW the proper Exercise and Employment of such, as were admitted into these Colleges were their constant Study of the Law, their Celebration of the Praises of God, their Composition of divine Hymns for that Purpose, and whatever else had a Tendency to advance Piety, to suppress all irregular Motions and Appetites, and so fit and prepare them for any Part of the prophetick Office. The Jews have a Proverb, that the Spirit of God seldom rests upon a gloomy and melancholy Temper, and therefore we find the Sons of the Prophets devoting themselves so much to Psalmody and Musick, and, while they chanted out the Praises of God, playing upon [g] the Psaltery, and Tabret, and Pipe, and Harp; because by this Means they kept themselves in such a Temper of Mind, as might qualify them for the divine Breathings of the prophetick Spirit, which being of a mild and gentle Nature, would associate with melancholy and turbulent Passions, but chose always the calm and chearful Disposition to reside in. But the chief Business, without Doubt, of these junior Prophets, was, to study the Law, and to exercise themselves therein both Day and Night, in order to teach and explain it to others. For, because that after Jeroboam had expelled the Priests, and set up his Calves at Bethel and Dan, the only Ministers of God's Word, whom such Persons, as chose to adhere to their antient Religion, had to resort to in Israel, were the Prophets. Nor were they only employed in the Study and Exposition of the Law, but very frequently dispatch'd upon the most momentous Messages, as we find one of them sent to [h] anoint Jehu, the Son of Jehoshaphat, to be King over Israel, and another to declare the Judgments of God against Ahab, for his untimely Releasement of [i] Benhadad. The short is, when any momentous Admonitions were to be given, any publick Blessings promised, any fearful Comminations denounc'd, or any extraordinary Events foretold, the Messenger was usually chosen from these Schools, and a certain Man of the Sons of the Prophets, either immediately by God himself, or by the Principal and Governor of the College, was deputed to that Office.

OUT of these Seminaries God usually made choice of Persons to be employ'd in the prophetick Office, though he did not absolutely tye himself up to this Method, but sometimes called one from the Court, as he did Isaiah, and sometimes one from the Herds, as he did Amos, and bade them go, and prophesy to the House of Israel: And whenever he made choice of any one, he gave him such a full Conviction both of the Reality of his own Inspiration, and the Importance of the Message, he sent him about, as made it impossible for him to resist the Impulse; for so Ezekiel tells us of [k] himself: The Spirit lifted me up, and took me away, and I went in Bitterness, and in the Heat of my Spirit, for the Hand of the Lord was strong upon me.

[l] HOW the Prophets behaved, when they were sent upon such Errands, is evident from the bold and undaunted Freedom and Authority, wherewith they reprov'd Vice and Iniquity, even in Persons of the highest Character and Distinction: And this Plain-Dealing, (such as became Men, who spake and acted by a divine Impulse) sometimes commanded the Reverence of Princes, and such too, as were not the easiest to be persuaded, as might be proved by [m] several Instances. The Truth is, Prophets, in those Days, were far from being a Company of mad Enthusiasts, strolling about the Country: They were Persons of a sober Education, of a strict Course of Life, and of such Honour and Estimation among the People, that even the Tombs of those, that suffer'd Martyrdom for the Attestation of the Truth, were held in a Kind of religious Veneration. Their Office was not to be invaded by every pragmatical Genius; [n] nay, the greatest Kings, and the most learned Sages durst not assume that Honour to themselves, without a particular Designation: [o] For the Prophet, that shall presume to speak a Word in my Name, saith the Lord, which I have not commanded him to speak, even that Prophet shall surely die.

[p] 'TIS hardly to be supposed, therefore, that the Prophets, Men of sober Sense, and most of them of very liberal Education, would have ventured upon so hazardous an Employ, where Persecution was sure to be their Lot, and where the Laws were so very severe, in case of an Imposture, had they not been urged to it by an immediate and irresistible Call from Heaven. The Apostle has given us a very dolorous Description of the many Calamities, which their Profession brought upon them. [q] They had Trial of cruel Mockings and Scourgings, yea, moreover of Bonds and Imprisonment. They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the the Sword; they wandered about in Sheep-Skins and Goat-Skins, being deſtitute, afflicted, tormented; they wandered in Deſarts, and in Mountains, and in Dens, and Caves of the Earth. And what Men in their Senſes would have expoſed themſelves to all theſe Hazards, and Difficulties, in the Execution of an Office, had they not been perſuaded of the Truth of their Vocation, and laid under an indiſpenſable Neceſſity to purſue it, whatever Penalties ſtood in their Way?

Their Doctrine.

NOTHING then can be more evident, than that the Prophets (if we will allow them to be Men of common Senſe) were Men of Integrity likewiſe, far from pretending to a Commiſſion, which they had not; ſince, in Acceſſion to all that has been ſaid, the Doctrines they taught, the Predictions they gave, and the Miracles they did, loudly proclaimed them to be ſent from God. For, what can be more ſuitable to the Nature of God, than thoſe Exprobrations of Superſtition and Idolatry, and thoſe many Exhortations to inward Purity and real Holineſs, ſo frequently, ſo kindly occurring in the Prophets? Wherewithal ſhall I come before the Lord, and bow myſelf before the moſt High God? Shall I give my Firſt-born for my Tranſgreſſion, the Fruit of my Body for the Sin of my Soul? No; God requireth nothing of thee, but to do juſtly, and to love Mercy, and to walk humbly with him. What can be more agreeable to the Divine Mercy and Goodneſs, than thoſe earneſt Calls and Invitations to Repentance? Turn ye, turn ye from your evil Ways, for why will ye die, O Houſe of Iſrael? For as I live ſaith the Lord, I have no Pleaſure in the Death of the Wicked. What is more conducive to the Honour and Glory of God, than thoſe rapturous Songs of Praiſe, wherewith the Royal Pſalmiſt tunes his Harp; and thoſe tender Strains of Grief, wherewith the mournful Prophet wets his Bed? Oh that my Head were Waters, and mine Eyes a Fountain of Tears, that I might weep Day and Night for the Slain of the Daughter of my People! Theſe, and many more Inſtances, that might be produced, were it not endleſs to proceed, where every Line, we meet with, has ſome Divine Signature in it, ſeem to be above the Reach of human Invention, and, by the very Elegance and Tenderneſs of their Compoſition, do manifeſtly diſcover the infinite Wiſdom and Loving-Kindneſs, from whence they were derived.

Their Prophecies.

THAT the Prophets ſhould be able to foretel Things ſo many Ages before they came to paſs; [u] that he, who went from Judah to denounce God's Judgments againſt the Altar of Bethel, and againſt Jeroboam, for ſetting it up, ſhould make mention of the very Name of Joſiah (who was to be God's Inſtrument in executing them) Three hundred and ſixty-one Years before the Event happened: [x] That Elijah ſhould denounce all the Puniſhments, which God would bring upon Ahab for his great Impiety; how his Family ſhould be totally extirpated, and the Dogs ſhould eat his Wife Jezebel by the Wall of Jezreel, ſome Years before the Things came to paſs: That Iſaiah ſhould propheſy of Cyrus by Name, [y] Two hundred and ten Years before the Accompliſhment of his Prophecy; [z] foretel his rebuilding the Temple, One hundred and forty Years before it was demoliſhed, and deſcribe his Conqueſts, in ſuch full and expreſſive Terms, that the Hiſtory of Cyrus by Xenophon has hardly done it better: And (to mention but one Prophet more) [a] that Daniel ſhould ſpeak of the Profanation of the Temple, and Sanctuary by Antiochus Epiphanes, declare the Manner of his Death, and delineate the very Temper and Countenance of the Man, [b] Four hundred and Eighty Years before the Accompliſhment: Theſe and many more Prophecies, that might be nam'd, can be aſcribed to nothing elſe, but the Inſpiration of God, which made the ſame ſtrong Impreſſions upon the Minds of the Prophets, and guided their Tongues to the ſame Words and Expreſſions, as if they had been actually preſented before their Eyes. Nay, the Fates of the four Monarchies are ſo exactly ſet down by Daniel, that ſome are of Opinion, it gave Encouragement to Alexander the Great to undertake his Expedition, and made Porphyry, (after he had compared the Greek Hiſtorians and the Prophecies together) flee at laſt to this Evaſion, that the Book of Daniel was certainly written after the Events: [c] A Propoſition as abſurd, as if any one ſhould deny that the Works of Virgil were wrote in the Reign of Auguſtus, ſince the Writings of the Prophets were as well known, and as univerſally received among the Jews, as thoſe of the Poet were among the Romans.

Their Miracles. THE Prophets indeed wrought not many wondrous Works, becauſe there was not that Occaſion for them: The Law of Moſes, which they were ſent to enforce, and not invalidate, had been ſufficiently confirmed by Miracles before: And, as they were a ſtanding Order of Men, whom the People were well accuſtomed to, the People were inclinable enough to believe them without a Divine Atteſtation. When they were employed however upon great and important Meſſages, to People, that either believed not in the God of Iſrael, or had revolted from his Service; God was never wanting to accompany them with a Power of working Miracles, to be the Credentials of their Commiſſion. Thus upon the Defection of the ten Tribes, and when Calves were ſet up in Dan and Bethel, in Oppoſition to the Worſhip at Jeruſalem, the Prophet, who was ſent to denounce God's Anger againſt ſuch Procedure, was enabled, by a Word's ſpeaking, [d] to rend the Altar, and both to wither, and reſtore again Jeroboam's Hand: In the famous Controverſy between the Prieſts of Baal, and Elijah, the Prophet was [e] impowered to call Fire down from Heaven, which conſumed his Sacrifice, and gained him a Victory over his Adverſaries; and, to convince Naaman, the Syrian, of the true God's being in Iſrael, Eliſha was directed to cure him of his [f] Leproſy by the ſimple Preſcription of dipping himſelf in the River Jordan. Upon theſe and the like Occaſions, when the Honour of God, or the Truth of the Prophet ſeemed to be called in Queſtion, a Power of working Miracles was communicated to him, as an evident Demonſtration of God's abetting him, and atteſting the Truth of what he pretended to reveal.

PUTTING all this together, then, that the Prophets were Men of Sobriety and good Senſe, brought up in all Knowledge and Underſtanding, but void of all Craft and Diſſimulation; that they expoſed themſelves to infinite Hazards and Difficulties in the Execution of their Office; that they taught Doctrines conformable to the divine Nature, and the ſtricteſt Virtue; foretold Events, which none but God could know; and performed Works, which none but God could do; gave all imaginable Evidence of the Truth of their Commiſſion, and ſealed it, very often, with the Teſtimony of their Blood; it will follow, that we have all the Reaſon, we can deſire (all indeed, that the Nature of the Thing will bear) to believe, that they were Meſſengers ſent from God, to ſupply the intermediate Space between Moſes and Chriſt; and conſequently, that the Revelation of God's Will in the Old Teſtament, (ſo far as they were concerned in declaring it) is indubitably true.

SECT. III.

The CHRISTIAN REVELATION.

THAT, in the Reign of Tiberius, there lived ſuch a Perſon as Jeſus Chriſt, and ſuffered Death under Pontius Pilate, the Roman Governor in Judea, is what Chriſtians in all Countries profeſs; what Jews of all Ages have acknowledged; and what even Heathen Authors (ſuch as [g] Suetonius, Tacitus, and Pliny Junior) have recorded.

That Jeſus was a good Man. THAT this Jeſus was a very good Man, and conſequently could be no Impoſtor, appears from the whole Tenor of his Actions, as they are recorded by the Evangeliſts, whom we ſhall prove hereafter to be true Hiſtorians. Now, can any one believe, that ſo good a Perſon, as he is repreſented, who all his Life long made it his Buſineſs to do good, to inform Men of their Duty, and to teach them the exacteſt Rules of Virtue; who executed his miraculous Power, not for Oſtentation, and the aggrandizing his Fame, but for the Relief both of Mens Souls and Bodies; who deſpiſed all proffer'd Honours, and ſhew'd a wonderful Contempt of the World; who was ſo kind and obliging, ſo meek and patient in his Converſation; who prayed for his Perſecutors, and laid down his Life for his Enemies: Can any one believe, I ſay, that a Perſon of ſuch wonderful Goodneſs ſhould uſurp a Character, which belonged not to him, and falſely pretend to a Commiſſion from Heaven? Or, admit he did pretend to ſuch a Commiſſion, can we imagine, that Heaven would have abetted him in it, and God given Sanction, in the Manner that we find he did, to an abominable Lye?

1. IT

1. IT muſt be granted, that, whoever has the Power of Prophecy, or Knowledge to predict future Events, muſt have the Power of God; becauſe none, but God, can foretel Things of a contingent Nature: So that when a Perſon pretends to found a new Religion, and predicts future Events in Confirmation of it, God muſt be ſuppoſed to aſſiſt him in his Predictions, and conſequently to bear Teſtimony to the Truth of his Pretenſions.

THE firſt Thing therefore that we have to do, in order to ſatisfy ourſelves of the Truth of the Chriſtian Revelation, is to enquire whether Chriſt, the firſt Founder of it, did really predict any ſuch future Events, as were out of the Power of Mankind to foretel: And of this the Evangeliſts have furniſhed us with ſeveral Inſtances.

His Predictions.

HE foretold the Treachery of Judas, and knew, from the Beginning, who it was that ſhould betray him. He foretold the Denial of St. Peter, juſt before it happened, and when the Apoſtle thought it impoſſible for him to be guilty of ſo much Baſeneſs. He foretold the Nature of his own Sufferings, and that the Manner of his Death ſhould be Crucifixion. He foretold his Reſurrection from the Dead, the third Day after his Sufferings; that immediately after his Departure, the Holy Ghoſt ſhould be ſent from Heaven; that his Religion ſhould extend itſelf over the Face of the Earth, and be preached to every Nation; that falſe Prophets ſhould ariſe, and Hereſies, in the very Beginning of Chriſtianity, infeſt the Church; that dreadful Perſecutions ſhould befal his Followers; but that they ſhould be inſpired with divine Knowledge, to enable them to make Anſwer to their Adverſaries, and, upon all Occaſions, have it put in their Minds what they were to ſay. Theſe are ſome of his Predictions, which occur in the Courſe of his Hiſtory; and when we have certain Information that theſe things were foretold, and are ſure, at the ſame Time, that they did certainly come to paſs, we cannot but acknowledge the Power of God co-operating with him, both in predicting theſe Events, and procuring their Completion.

Of the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem particularly.

BUT, of all Events, the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Romans is ſo minutely foretold, even to the leaſt Circumſtance, that it deſerves a particular Conſideration. [h] The Evangeliſt has thus recorded it: The Day ſhall come (as he brings in our Lord ſpeaking with Tears in his Eyes) the Day ſhall come, that thine Enemies ſhall caſt a Trench about thee, and compaſs thee round on every Side. They ſhall lay thee even with the Ground, and thy Children within thee, and they ſhall not leave in thee one Stone upon another; (the [i] ſame that is predicted of the Temple likewiſe) becauſe thou knoweſt not the Time of thy Viſitation. Now how ſhould any one, without the divine Foreknowledge, come to think of ſuch an Improbability as this? The Jews, at that Time, under the Roman Protection, enjoyed perfect Peace and Tranquillity; and were ſo far from fearing the Deſtruction of their City, that they beheld it every Day enlarged, and beautified by the Munificence of the Herodian Family. No one could think, that that City could be deſtroyed by any other Power, whilſt it was under the Protection of the Romans, or that the Romans themſelves would deſtroy it without a Rebellion, which was incredible to imagine, ſuch an Handful of Men (as the Jews) ſhould ever dare to enterprize againſt the prodigious Force of that mighty Empire; and yet [k] the Writer of their own Story tells us at large, That all theſe Things were punctually accompliſhed; and that, when the Romans had taken the City, (which they did by a formal Siege) Cæſar gave Orders to lay it waſte to the Ground, except three of the ſtrongeſt Towers, which were left for a Monument of the Roman Courage; but all the reſt was ſo levelled, that no one could believe it had ever been inhabited.

THE Magnificence, if not the Sanctity of the Place, ſhould have ſaved the Temple, one would think, from the Victor's Violence; and it muſt be owned, that Titus uſed his beſt Endeavours to preſerve it [l]. But ſuch was the Fury of the Action, or rather the Force of our Saviour's Prediction, that his Orders were diſobeyed, and (as the Roman Hiſtorian tells us) [m] Turnus Rufus, with a Plowſhare, tore up the Foundations of that ſtately Pile, and left not the very Part of it that was under Ground undemoliſh'd.

I MIGHT inſtance in ſeveral Circumſtances, both preceding, and ſubſequent to this ſad Cataſtrophe of the Jewiſh Nation; the Prodigies, and Signs, and Wonders, both in Heaven and Earth; the many Calamities both of Peſtilence, Famine, and the Sword; and the Eſcape of the Chriſtians to Pella, upon the ſudden Subduction of the Roman Army by Ceſtius Gallus: But the bare Suggeſtion of theſe, together with what has been ſaid, is enough to convince us, that a Prediction of this Kind, about Things ſo various, ſo diſtant, and ſo improbable, is far beyond the Power of Chance or Conjecture; intirely owing to the divine Preſcience; and conſequently, that the Perſon, who partook of that Preſcience, had the Doctrines, which he taught the World, confirmed by God.

His Miracles. 2. IT cannot be denied, but that the Power of working Miracles is from God, and that no Man can do Things, above the Reach of natural Cauſes, without Aſſiſtance from Heaven. In our bleſſed Saviour then, what leſs than a divine Power could cure all Kind of Diſeaſes, in an Inſtant, at a Diſtance, with a Touch, with a Word's ſpeaking; could ſtill the Raging of the Winds and Waves with a Rebuke; could raiſe the Dead, and caſt out Devils, and compel them to acknowledge him to be the Son of God? And therefore, it is with good Reaſon that he appeals to his Miracles, as Evidences of his divine Commiſſion: If I had not done the Works among them, which no Man elſe did, they had not had Sin, nor had they been ſo culpable in diſbelieving me. Moſes fed them indeed with Bread from Heaven, but he, upon Earth, multiplied ſome few Loaves and Fiſhes, to the Suſtenance of many [n] Thouſands. Elias raiſed one from the Dead; but he raiſed three, the Widow's Son of Naim, the Daughter of Jairus, and Lazarus, who had been four Days in the Grave. The Nature of them. [o] The antient Prophets prov'd their Commiſſion by Acts of divine Vengeance; but (what was a peculiar Character in our Saviour's Miracles) they were all beneficial to Mankind; inſomuch that, in the whole Courſe of his Miniſtry, we have not one Inſtance, where he manifeſted his Power in doing the leaſt Harm to his bittereſt Enemies. The Law was enacted with great Terror and Pomp, ſuitable to a Diſpenſation of Servitude and great Severity; but the Goſpel is a Covenant of Reconciliation and Peace, and intended not ſo much to ſtrike an Awe upon Men's Minds, as to charm and win them over with all the endearing Methods of Gentleneſs and Love; and therefore the Wonders, which bore Teſtimony to its Truth, were Works of Mercy and Pity; and the kind Relief, they brought to the Bodies, reſembled the infinite Compaſſion, which the great Worker of them expreſs'd for the Souls of Men. [p] The Eyes of the Blind ſhall be opened, and the Ears of the Deaf ſhall be unſtopped; the Lame ſhall leap as an Hart, and the Tongue of the Dumb ſhall ſing, is a Prophecy concerning the Nature of the Miracles, which the Meſſiah was to work; and when John ſent his Diſciples to ſatisfy themſelves about Chriſt, our Saviour bids them tell him, [q] the Blind receive their Sight, the Lame walk, the Lepers are cleanſed, and the Dead are raiſed up, as though the mentioning of theſe Miracles was enough to convince the World who he was, and by whoſe Commiſſion he acted.

A Proof of his Divine Miſſion. THESE Miracles then, being wrought in the Manner, that the Evangeliſts relate, are the Atteſtation of God himſelf, deſign'd to evidence the Truth, and authorize the Doctrine of Chriſt. [r] For, as well may we ſuppoſe, that a Prince would permit an Uſurper, in his own Preſence, to make Uſe of his Royal Seal, to invite his Subjects to rebel againſt him, as that God ſhould ſuffer a Deceiver to work Miracles, and thereby obtain Divine Honour from Men, which is the incommunicable Right of the Deity. 'Tis inconſiſtent with his Verity, to give Sanction to a Lye: His Wiſdom and Goodneſs will not permit him to ſuffer ſo many well-meaning Men to be deluded; much leſs will it allow himſelf to make the Deluſion ſo ſtrong, by the Concurrence of his Power, that the moſt ſincere Enquirer would be in great Danger to be overcome by it. And therefore the Apoſtle urges it, as an uncontroulable Argument of our Saviour's Divine Miſſion, [s] that he was a Man approved of God by Miracles, and Wonders, and Signs, which God did by him; for theſe were Proofs of the greateſt Force to induce the World to believe that he came from God, to make known his Counſel, for the Recovery of loſt undone Mankind.

His Doctrine, its Excellency. 3. IT muſt be allowed farther, that the Excellency of any Doctrine is an Argument of a Divine Miſſion, when the Perſon, who publiſhes it, has produced his Credentials, and exhibited other Qualities comporting therewith. Now, were we deſtitute of the foregoing Proofs of our Saviour's Divine Authority, yet this one Conſideration, that he has delivered to us the beſt Religion, that ever appeared in the World, is enough to engage us to give both him, and it, a favourable Reception. For [n] Stilling fleet's Orig. Sacræ. [o] Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels. [p] Iſaiah xxxv. 5, 6.

[q] Matth. xi. 5. [r] Bates's Chriſtian Religion. [s] Acts ii. 22.

For if the Truths, which he has taught, and the Rules, that he has given us, were nothing elſe but the Reſult of natural Reaſoning, why ſhould not other Religions in the World, and other Syſtems of Morality, be as good as this? How came the Doctrines of Jeſus Chriſt to excel thoſe of all the famous Philoſophers and Legiſlators in the World? How came an obſcure Perſon in Judea to draw up ſuch an admirable Scheme of Morality, as far ſurpaſſes all that ever the Lycurgus's, the Numas, the Platos, and the Ariſtotles have laid down? How ſhould he, in one or two Years Preaching, nay, in one ſhort Sermon on the Mount, advance the Ethick Doctrines to a greater Height and Perfection, than ever they were brought to by any Sect of Philoſophers, though they had made it their Buſineſs to ſtudy them for many Ages? Moſt certainly, unleſs God had been aſſiſting in the Contrivance of this new Model of Morality, it is impoſſible that it ſhould ever have equalled, much leſs exceeded, that of the Grecian Schools, which had all the human Advantages, that were wanting in our bleſſed Saviour. Some Reaſon muſt be aſſigned, why his Doctrine ſhould be better than that of any other Philoſopher or Legiſlator. Now no natural Reaſon can be given for it; and therefore we muſt ſay, that it is owing to the ſupreme Wiſdom of God, which aſſiſted in drawing up the Rules of the Chriſtian, while the Heathen Philoſophy was only the Product of human Reaſoning. This Conſequence is undeniable: And we have only now to ſhew, that the Doctrines and Precepts of Chriſtianity are as excellent, as is pretended.

Both in its ſpeculative

1. TAKE but a View then of the more ſpeculative Parts of the Chriſtian Doctrine, and you will find nothing comparable to them in any Book of Philoſophy, ever yet extant in the World. [t] For (to deſcend a little to Particulars) how come we, in the Chriſtian Syſtem, to have the Origin of the Univerſe delivered to us more ſatisfactorily, than is to be found elſewhere? How comes our Inſtitution ſo rationally to aſſert, that the World was created in Time, by the Power and Wiſdom of God, when ſo many learned Heathen Sages have run into the fooliſh and paradoxical Notions of a blind Chance, or eternal Fate? Why ſhould this Religion alone teach the great Cataſtrophes of the World, firſt by a Deluge, and at laſt by a Conflagration? What Reaſon can be given, why it affords ſuch demonſtrative Arguments for a Divine Providence, when ſo many learned Philoſophers avowed either a ſleepy and unobſerving Deity, or ſubjected all Things to a rigid Fatality? How comes this Revelation to aſſert the Unity of the Deity, when all other Religions (except the Jewiſh, from whence this ſprung) taught the Worſhip of a Plurality of Gods? How come the ſacred Attributes of the Godhead, his Omnipotence, his Juſtice, his Mercy, &c. to be taught more truly, and explained more juſtly herein, than in all the Lectures of the moſt thinking and ſublime Philoſophers? What Reaſon can be given, why Chriſtianity ſhould exhibit ſuch a competent Account of the Corruption of human Nature, by its Deſcent from a depraved Original, when the greateſt Part of the learned World either overlooked his Truth, or gave us very lame and pitiful Explanations of it? Is it not a wonderful Thing, that it ſhould give us ſuch a rational Scheme of the Redemption of a wicked and depraved World, whereby the Honour of God's Juſtice is ſecured by an infinite Satisfaction, and his Mercy likewiſe extended to the forfeited Souls of his offending Creatures? Had we never heard of theſe great Truths before, and ſhould only come to read them in a Book by chance, moſt certainly we ſhould conclude, that they owed their Original to the wiſeſt Philoſopher in the World, who, in Doctrines and Diſquiſitions of this Kind, had outdone all that ever went before him: But when we conſider, that theſe Truths were either firſt taught, or elſe wiſely adopted into his Religion by ſuch an obſcure Perſon, as Jeſus Chriſt appeared to be, and who choſe for his Scholars (to be inſtructed in theſe Truths, in order that they might inſtruct others) only a few poor Fiſhermen; we cannot but acknowledge, that all this was above the Invention of ſuch ordinary Men, and that it was the Work of a Divine Inſpiration alone, which enlightened their Minds, and raiſed their Thoughts above the Degree and Capacity of the greateſt Philoſophers. And, for a Confirmation of this,

And practical Points.

2. TAKE we a farther View of the practical Doctrines, which our Saviour hath taught us, and what an amazing Conſideration muſt it be, that a Perſon of his Obſcurity, and Want of human Learning, ſhould give us a Syſtem of this Kind, which exceeds all the moral Precepts, even of the Stoicks themſelves, as much as the

the Light of the Sun does the Twinkling of the Stars. [x] What ſhall we ſay, when we find him teaching (what all Philoſophy was ignorant of before) the true Method of approaching God, with pure Hearts, and chaſte Deſires, and all the Affections of dutiful Children, through the Mediation of a divine, co-equal, and co-eternal Mediator? What can we think, when we find him the firſt Teacher, that ever recommended that admirable Virtue of Humility, which ſweetens the haughty Temper of Men, and gives them an obliging Air, while all the Writings of other Philoſophers are only calculated to inſpire Pride, and Arrogance, and a ſcornful Contempt of others? How came he to lay down ſuch excellent Rules for the Peace and Quiet of Mankind; for bearing with one another's Faults; for forgiving Injuries; for patient ſuffering of Affronts; for loving Enemies; and for imitating God in all Manner of Goodneſs? How came he to be the only Legiſlator, that ever endeavour'd to obviate the Inconveniencies of Polygamy and Divorce; and the firſt Inventor of that one Precept, which is of more Avail in the Commerce of Life, than all the Lectures of Heathen Moraliſts, Whatſoever ye would that Men ſhould do unto you, even that ſhall ye do unto them? Where do we find the true Uſe and Government of our Paſſions, and Deſires, and Affections ſo juſtly ſtated; where the great Leſſons of Patience and Contentedneſs ſo fully taught; where a generous Contempt of the World, and ardent Aſpirations after Heaven, ſo powerfully infus'd, as in the Chriſtian Philoſophy? In a Word, our Saviour has done more toward the Reformation of the World, the Extinction of Sin, and the Eſtabliſhment of true Holineſs; more to inſpire Mens Minds with a great and magnanimous Virtue, and to give them an abſolute Conqueſt over all their Appetites; to enlarge their Underſtandings, and emancipate their Wills, and repair in them the decayed Image of God, than the beſt Philoſophers have owned their Inſtructions were ever able to do. Add to this, that the Motives, whereby our Saviour enforces the Practice of his Laws, viz. the Promiſe of divine and ſupernatural Aſſiſtance, to help our Impotence; of Pardon upon true Repentance, to cure our Deſpondency; and of an everlaſting Recompence of Reward, to encourage our Endeavours; are ſuch, as the Wit of Man never thought on, though highly becoming the excellent Wiſdom of God, and the natural Expectations of our Conſciences: And then, let any impartial Perſon judge, whether a Revelation of this Character has not in it an intrinſick and very powerful Evidence of its being ſent from God; whether a Revelation, I ſay, that recommends to our Practice whatſoever Things are true, whatſoever Things are honeſt, whatſoever Things are juſt, whatſoever Things are pure, whatſoever Things are lovely, whatſoever Things are of good Report, is not worthy of all Acceptation, as exhibiting the plaineſt Marks of a Divine Original.

A Proof of his Divine Miſſion.

The wonderful Propagation of it.

4. IT muſt be owned farther, that the ſpeedy Propagation of any Doctrine, eſpecially when it is diſagreeable in itſelf, and ſupported by incompetent Means, is a great Proof of its Divine Origin. [y] Now if we conſider the apparent Cauſes and Inſtruments of the wonderful Succeſs of the Chriſtian Religion, which were chiefly twelve Men, of obſcure Birth and Parentage; of the plaineſt and ſimpleſt Underſtanding; unpoliſhed by Learning and Eloquence; unimproved by Experience and Converſe; Men of no Subtlety, no Art, no Addreſs, and who had no Manner of Authority, Intereſt, or Repute in the World: If we conſider the Doctrine, which they undertook to preach, the moſt unwelcome to the Fleſh and Blood that could be, the moſt repugnant to Mens natural Deſires and Inclinations, to their ſettled Habits, and inveterate Prejudices, and entirely contrary to the eſtabliſhed Rites and Religions of all Countries, and in all Ages of the World: And if we conſider that, notwithſtanding theſe Clogs and Impediments, this Religion ſprung forth, and, in one of the moſt inquiſitive and diſcerning Ages that ever was, made its Way into the World by a ſwift and incredible Progreſs; we muſt needs conclude, that a divine, inviſible Power went along with it, and that its Increaſe was ſupernatural and miraculous.

UPON the Aſcent of our bleſſed Saviour, the little Flock, which he had gathered, conſiſted but of an hundred and twenty Diſciples: Theſe received a mighty Addition to their Number, upon the Day of Pentecoſt, when three thouſand Souls were brought over to the Faith by a Sermon of St Peter's. After this, the Number of Diſciples multiplied in Jeruſalem; and from thence the Doctrine was ſoon carried into all the remoter Regions of the Earth: Inſomuch that the Book of the Apoſtles Acts contains an Account of the ſpreading of the Goſpel, forwards, through many Eaſtern Countries, [x] Clarke's Demonſtration [y] Biſhop Atterbury's Sermons, Vol. I.

Countries, and, backwards, through a great Part of the Weſt; of its piercing, on the one Side, into all the civilized, and ſome of the barbarous Provinces of Aſia; and, on the other, as far as the great Metropolis of Europe, Rome itſelf; [z] ſo mightily grew the Word of God and prevailed!

HAD the Apoſtles been the wiſeſt and moſt learned Men in the World indeed, this Succeſs had not been ſo wonderful; for then the Strength of their Parts, and the Advantages of their Studies might have borne down weaker People's Underſtandings, and managed them as they pleaſed: [a] But it amazes one to think, that ſuch mean, illiterate Perſons, as never had the Advantage of their own Country Learning, ſhould confound the Philoſophy of the more refined Parts of the World; and that, whereas the moſt celebrated Sects of Philoſophers had continued many Ages, and yet gained but a ſmall Number of Diſciples (notwithſtanding the Greatneſs of their Parts, and the Depth of their Learning) theſe poor Men ſhould proſelyte the whole World, as it were, and make Men Diſciples to the Chriſtian Philoſophy wherever they came. The whole World.

FOR, in leſs than forty Years after Chriſt, the Writers of the Church do with one Conſent agree, that Scythia, India, Gaul, and Egypt, all the moſt diſtant Parts of the World then known, had the Doctrine of the Goſpel conveyed unto them: And with what quick Succeſs it afterwards ſpread over the Face of the Earth, we may learn from the antient Apologiſts, who, (ere two Centuries were yet run out) pleaded for Chriſtianity, an Account of its vaſt and incredible Numbers; repreſented to the Heathen Emperors, that their Camps, their Courts, their Cities, their Provinces, were all full of them; and that it was impoſſible to extirpate them, without deſtroying the far greater Part of their Subjects.

[b] NOR was it only the weak and ignorant Sort of People that thus became Proſelytes, but even Men of the greateſt Learning and Sagacity of their Age quitted their beloved Sentiments, and heartily embraced the Evangelical Doctrine. Luke the Phyſician, and [c] Lenas an Advocate of the Civil Law, together with a great Number of learned Men in [d] Epheſus, who were Profeſſors of curious Arts, and, after their Converſion, burnt their Books, were ſome of the earlieſt Converts of Diſtinction. [e] Dionyſius the Areopagite, i. e. a learned Philoſopher, and celebrated Judge of the higheſt Court of Judicature at Athens, was brought to the Profeſſion of Chriſtianity by St Paul's Preaching, and afterwards made the firſt Biſhop of that Place. The famous Polycarp bid adieu to his Pagan Rites, and admitted himſelf a Diſciple under St John, and by him was appointed Biſhop of Smyrna, The great Ignatius embraced the Doctrine of the Crucified Jeſus, and was afterwards conſtituted Biſhop of Antioch; and, with him, we may reckon Clement the Roman, who became a Convert to the Chriſtian Faith, and manfully undertook the Defence of it. The moſt learned Part of it converted.

WHO hath not heard of Irenæus, that moſt eminent and noted Enquirer after Truth? of Ariſtides, that eloquent Philoſopher, who preſented an Apology for Chriſtianity to the Emperor Adrian; of Athenagoras, that excellent Critick in all human Literature; of Theophilus, a famous Philoſopher of Antioch; of Clement, another of Alexandria, and firm Defender of the Chriſtian Cauſe; and of Juſtin, who, having run through all Sects of Philoſophy, found Chriſtianity the beſt at laſt, and, in Teſtimony thereof, ſuffered Death, and thereby purchaſed the Sirname of Martyr?

THESE, and many more, which might be mentioned in the firſt Ages of the Church, Men of great Endowments, vaſt Learning, and ſtrong Prejudices, who became Converts to a new Profeſſion, and, after a due Examination, left their old Principles, and yielded themſelves Captives to the Power of its Conviction, are an unqueſtionable Proof of the Efficacy and wonderful Virtue, and withal of the Divine Authority of the Chriſtian Diſpenſation. For if ever there was an Intervention of Divine Power in human Affairs, it was here, when Ignorance and Simplicity, not only had the Advantage, but triumphed over all the Wit and Learning in the World: And, if any Thing may be reckoned an authentick Proof of the Divine Miſſion of any Lawgiver, the ſpeedy Propagation of the Religion, which Chriſt founded, and God approved by giving it ſuch Succeſs, is certainly an Atteſtation of our Saviour's being ſent from God. This a Proof of Chriſt's divine Miſſion.

5. ONCE more, it muſt be owned, that a Religion, which, as ſoon as publiſhed, makes a remarkable Alteration in the World for the better, muſt be from Heaven, and the Author and firſt Publiſher of it a Perſon appointed by God; becauſe we cannot ſuppoſe, that any evil Power would contribute to ſo good an End. Diſtance of Time, 'tis not eaſy to conceive, how great Bleſſings the Chriſtian Religion brought to Mankind, in that Reformation, which it ſoon introduced into the World. The Chriſtians are all along repreſented, as an innocent, devout, and charitable Sort of Men, by [g] Pliny, Lucian, and Julian the Apoſtate; and the Apologiſts for the Chriſtian Cauſe inſiſt on this Argument with no ſmall Triumph,——that the Converts to their Inſtitution immediately became quite other Men, and practiſed all Kinds of Virtue with incredible Zeal, though they had been never ſo vicious and profligate before. "Give me a Man, ſays Lactantius [h], as paſſionate and abuſive, "as lewd and laſcivious, as can be imagined; and, with a few Inſtructions of God, "I'll make him as meek and innocent as a Lamb: Could ever any of the Philoſo-"phers do this?" 'Tis Chriſtianity alone, that makes the Righteous ſhine like ſo many Lights in the World, to guide and direct others in the Ways of Virtue, and makes the Vicious neither ſo bad, nor ſo numerous, as they were in the Ages that preceded it.

[i] WHERE, but in the Chriſtian Religion, do we find any true Devotion, excluſive of Superſtition and idolatrous Ceremonies? Where, any Acts of real Charity, ſuch as cloathing the Naked, and feeding the Hungry, and founding Hoſpitals for the Poor? Where, Perſons of the higheſt Rank condeſcending to the loweſt Acts of Humility; Kings and Emperors, with their own Hands, feeding the Needy; and Queens and Empreſſes adminiſtring to the Sick? In what other Inſtitution, I ſay, can we find ſuch a generous Contempt of the World, as to under-value Riches, and Honours, amidſt an Affluence of them? Where, ſuch Abſtinence and Moderation in the moſt lawful Enjoyments, as was univerſal in the primitive Times? Where, that undaunted Courage and Patience under Sufferings, as could be diſmayed at no Terrors, but ran with Eagerneſs to Racks and Lyons, rejoiced upon Gridirons, and ſung in the midſt of the Flames?

THESE Virtues were diſplayed in a conſpicuous Manner, in the earlieſt Ages of the Church: Nor were its Profeſſors the only Perſons, whom this heavenly Religion reformed, and raiſed to ſuch a ſublime Pitch of Virtue and Godlineſs; but even the Heathen World (though obſtinate and unconverted) received ſeveral Advantages from the Force and Influence of its Doctrine. [k] Morality was taught by the Philoſophers, in much greater Perfection, than ever it had been before: Their idolatrous Worſhip became ſuch a Reproach to them, that they ſought out all Arts to refine and excuſe it: The Vices, which made up ſo great a Part of their ſacred Myſteries, appeared too abominable to paſs any longer for Religion: The Oracles ceaſed; and the ſeducing Spirits confeſſed, that they were hindered from giving out their Anſwers by the Power of Chriſt: And (what was as groſs an Abuſe as any) the Adoration of Beaſts, and the Oblation of human Sacrifices were intermitted, when once Chriſtianity began to appear in its full Power and Efficacy in the World. So true, ſo literally true, is that comfortable Expreſſion of the beloved [l] Apoſtle, that for this Purpoſe, the Son of God was manifeſted, that he might deſtroy the Works of the Devil.

UPON a Review of what has been ſaid then, with Relation to our bleſſed Saviour, viz. that he was a Perſon of apparent Simplicity and Integrity of Life, devoid of Self-intereſt, and averſe to every Method of Ambition and Popularity: That he declined all Overtures of Power, when offer'd him, and was far from making his Religion a Step to raiſe him to Honour and Dominion: That he had all the Tokens of a true Ambaſſador ſent from Heaven; predicted ſuch Events, as nothing but God's Omniſcience could communicate to him; and performed ſuch Wonders, as nothing but his Omnipotence could enable him to do: That the Doctrine, he taught, was worthy of God, and, both in its ſpeculative and practical View, far exceeding the Rules of all the Philoſophers, and wiſe Lawgivers that ever went before him; and that God publickly teſtified his Approbation of it, by giving it ſuch miraculous Succeſs and Effects in the World: It muſt be allowed, that we have all the Evidence we can deſire, or the Nature of the Thing will bear, that Jeſus Chriſt was an extraordinary Perſon, ſent from God, to make the Light of his glorious Goſpel ſhine into the Hearts of its Believers, and to bring good Tidings of Salvation to ſuch, as ſat in Darkneſs, and in the Shadow of Death.

SECT.

SECT. IV.

The APOSTOLICK REVELATION.

THAT our Bleſſed Saviour had, from the firſt, a Succeſſion of Men to publiſh his Doctrines, and to teſtify to the World the Hiſtory of his Life and Actions, is evident, not only from many ſacred and profane Records, but from the preſent Eſtabliſhment of his Religion among us, which could not have deſcended to us without a Succeſſion of proper Perſons to tranſmit it: And that theſe Perſons, viz. his Apoſtles and Evangeliſts, were credible and authentick Relaters, both of their own and his Tranſactions, will appear from an Examination of their Character and Conduct; wherein we ought to be more ſcrupulous and inquiſitive, becauſe the Confirmation of all, we have ſaid in Relation to him, and indeed the whole Truth of the Chriſtian Syſtem depends upon it.

The Requiſites in a valid Evidence.

Now, if a Man were to lay his Thoughts together, and conſider what he would deſire in order to his Satisfaction, that the Witneſſes of Matters of Facts, ſo long ago tranſacted, ſpake Truth, we can hardly conceive, how he could well require more than this;—— [m] That the Men, who reported theſe Things, were Perſons of ſuch Honour and Honeſty, that they would not tell a ſolemn Untruth; that they were Men of ſufficient Underſtanding to know the full Purport of what they related; that they had not Cunning or Policy enough to frame an intricate Impoſture; that they were too many in Number to be deceived themſelves, and too punctual and uniform in their Account to deceive others; that they could receive no Advantage, but expoſe themſelves to manifeſt Danger by their Relation; and, laſtly, that they ſhould conſtantly perſiſt in what they ſaid, ſo as to be willing to ſuffer, and die for the Truth of it. A Man would be very unreaſonable, that ſhould deſire half theſe Qualifications for every Teſtimony that he aſſents to; but where they all concur, he muſt be a Sceptick indeed, that does not give his Aſſent to a Matter thus fully atteſted. Now the Apoſtles have all theſe Qualifications, and more, in the Teſtimony, they give us of our Saviour's Doctrine and Tranſactions.

The Apoſtles were honeſt and impartial Men.

THEY appear to be Men of too much Honour and Honeſty willingly to teſtify a Lye: Their main Deſign ſeems to be to teach Men to live good and holy Lives; to perſwade them to ſerve the only true God in Spirit and in Truth; and not to place their Holineſs ſo much in Ceremonies, as in Acts of Charity and Piety. In the whole Courſe of their Lives, they were never taxed with any remarkable Wickedneſs, but, on the contrary, were noted for their Devotion, Meekneſs, and Self-denial. All Lying, they held, in their Writings, to be an abominable Sin, inconſiſtent with the Terms of Salvation, and, in the Hiſtory they have given us, ſeem to have all imaginable Tokens of Impartiality. [n] For, as they tell us the Wonderfulneſs of Chriſt's Birth, the many Miracles that he wrought, the Deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon him, the Voice from Heaven declaring him the Son of God, the Splendor of his Transfiguration, the Glories of his Reſurrection, and the Triumph of his Aſcenſion; ſo they ſtick not to relate the Obſcurity of his Birth and Parentage, the low Condition of his Life, and the Shame and Ignominy of his Death: Nay (what is a ſingular Inſtance of their Truth and Ingenuity) their own mean Extraction and Employments, their Ignorance and Miſtakes, their ambitious Contentions, cowardly Deſertions, and baſe Denials of their Maſter, in the Time of greateſt Exigence, they themſelves have left upon Record, for all ſucceeding Ages to peruſe and cenſure.

Now when Perſons are ſo forward to lay open their own Faults and Failings, merely for the Sake of Truth, 'tis a ſtrong Preſumption that they have no Diſpoſition to relate Falſhoods; if ſo be, they are but competent Judges of what they report, and capable to form right Apprehenſions of it. And herein the Apoſtles could not poſſibly be defective, becauſe every one, that has his Senſes, is as good a Judge of what he hears, and ſees, and feels, as the greateſt Philoſopher living [o]. They ſaw dead Men raiſed to Life, blind Men have their Eyes, and lame Men their Limbs reſtored to them; they, ſeveral times, ſaw and handled Chriſt after his Reſurrection, had familiar Converſations with him, and beheld him with fixed Eyes, when he was caught up into Heaven. Now in theſe Things there could be no Deception, unleſs unleſs we can ſuppoſe that the Men were in a Dream for the whole three Years and upwards, that the Lord Jeſus went in and out among them.

Uniform in their Story.

TWO or three might poſſibly be deceived indeed, or lay their Heads together to atteſt a Falſhood: With a little Thought and Conſultation, they might contrive it ſo, as to make its Parts pretty well hang together, and, with ſome good Management, make it paſs upon the World; but, in the preſent Caſe, the Suppoſition is abſurd. For, beſides our Saviour's twelve choſen Diſciples, who preached the Goſpel through all the World in the ſame uniform Manner, [p] delivering their Doctrine with the greateſt Plainneſs and Simplicity of Speech, with the greateſt Openneſs and Freedom of Spirit, and giving their Account of Things with the greateſt Particularity, as to all Circumſtances, on Purpoſe, as it were, to invite Enquirers to examine into the Truth: Beſides theſe, I ſay, there were five Hundred Men at once, who ſaw him after his Crucifixion, and many Thouſands more, that had both heard him preach, and ſeen his Miracles when alive, who were converted afterwards, and became Witneſſes of the Truth of the Goſpel. And how can we conceive [q] that ſuch Numbers of Perſons ſhould either be deceived themſelves, or combine in a Cheat to impoſe upon the World? Or if they did ſo combine, how can it be poſſible, but that they ſhould be detected?

Unable to frame an Impoſture.

MEN of Parts and Learning indeed, may invent ſeveral Things to deceive the Vulgar, and may make a Fiction of their own Brains paſs for a Reality: But the Apoſtles ſeem to be a Set of plain, honeſt Men, that had neither Ingenuity enough to contrive, nor Art and Dexterity enough to carry on ſuch an intricate Impoſture. To frame ſuch an excellent Syſtem of Morality, as is contained in the Doctrine of Chriſt; to give ſuch an extraordinary Account of the Satisfaction for Sin, and of the Nature and Office of a Mediator; to feign the Life and Actions of a Meſſiah, which ſhould agree ſo exactly with the Predictions of the Prophets, and the Types and Prefigurations of the Moſaick Law; and to make the Rewards and Puniſhments of another Life ſo agreeable to Reaſon, and ſo worthy of God; this was a Scheme, which theſe poor, illiterate Men were no more able to invent, than they were to create a World. The Actions of our bleſſed Lord, in particular, are ſo various, and ſo depending one upon another; there is ſuch a Correſpondence between his Prophetick, Royal, and Sacerdotal Office; and the Operations of his Divine and humane Nature, whether ſeparate or conjunct, are ſo wonderful and ſublime; that it is not in the Power of the Wit and Learning of Man, to draw up ſuch a rational Syſtem of a Mediatorſhip, much leſs could it be done by thoſe ignorant, and undeſigning Men, who firſt divulged it, how ſtrenuouſly ſoever they might preach and atteſt it.

Void of Intereſt,

INTEREST, we know, indeed, will make Men do much, and a Proſpect of Honour and worldly Advantages carries them on to bold Undertakings; but what Profit could they promiſe themſelves by preaching a crucified Saviour, who to the Jews was a Stumbling-block, and to the Greeks Fooliſhneſs? On the contrary, [r] they foreſaw, and knew, and perſwaded themſelves of this before-hand, that their Teſtimony would expoſe them to great Dangers and Hazards, to Poverty and Want; and that Bonds, and Impriſonment, and Death itſelf awaited them; and yet (notwithſtanding this) they reſolved to preach the Goſpel, and to follow their Maſter, whatever befel them.

And Ambition.

[s] AMBITION, and a Deſire of Fame, ſeldom happen to Men of obſcure Birth, and mean Education; but that it ſhould befal ſo many at once, without any Ground or Reaſon to expect it, when, in all human Conſideration, they had a Proſpect of nothing (had their Teſtimony been falſe) but Infamy after Death, as well as Diſgrace and Want, and Torments, during their Lives, is a Thing incredible. [t] Vanity perhaps might prompt them to tell a ſtrange Tale of a Man, that roſe from the Dead, and aſcended into Heaven; and, as they ſaw the People pleaſed with it, might make them humour the Story, as much as they could; but this would not laſt long: The firſt Time they were called before the Sanhedrim (where all religious Impoſtures were puniſhable with Death) the Banter would be ſpoiled, and the Cheat diſcovered; [u] whereas the Apoſtles Behaviour before that Council is the ſureſt Argument of the Truth, and Reality of what they atteſted. [x] Whether it be right, in the Sight of God, ſay they, to hearken unto you, more than unto God, judge ye: For we cannot but ſpeak the Things, which we have ſeen, and heard: And though they were ſtraitly [y] charged not not to ſpeak, or teach any more in the Name of Jeſus, and heavily threatened in caſe of Diſobedience, [z] yet none of theſe Things moved them, neither did they count their Lives dear unto themſelves, ſo that they might finiſh their Courſe with Joy, and the Miniſtry, which they had received of the Lord Jeſus, to teſtify the Goſpel of the Grace of God.

THESE are ſome Proofs of the Truth and Fidelity of the Apoſtles, and firſt Relaters of our Saviour's Doctrine and Tranſactions: And if we receive the Teſtimony of Men (as who can refuſe receiving it, when it comes thus circumſtantiated?) the Teſtimony of God is greater, and the viſible Declaration he made in their Favour, [a] by Signs and Wonders, and by diverſe Miracles and Gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, puts their Probity beyond all Queſtion. For, who could poſſibly doubt of it [b], when, at the ſame Time, that they witneſſed the Miracles, which their Maſter had done, they gave the World Aſſurance of the Truth of their Teſtimony, by doing the like Miracles themſelves; and, at the ſame Time, that they preached the Goſpel to all Nations and Languages, according to their Commiſſion, they plainly demonſtrated, both that they had ſuch a Commiſſion from God, and that it was the Truth of God which they preached, by ſpeaking to every Man, of every Nation, in his own Tongue. Wrought Miracles themſelves.

NAY, what (if poſſible) is ſtill a greater Proof of their Veracity, the Apoſtles not only wrought the like Miracles, that their Maſter had done, but conveyed to others the ſame Power of working them, which Power continued to them, and their Succeſſors, for ſome Ages, in the Church. Thus when St Peter was ſent for to Cornelius, [c] the Holy Ghoſt fell on all thoſe, that heard him, who ſpeaking with Tongues, magnified God; and when St. Paul, at Epheſus, laid his Hands on ſeveral, they ſpake likewiſe with Tongues, and propheſied. And as theſe Gifts were neceſſary, not only for the Atteſtation of the Apoſtles Truth, but for the ſpeedier Propagation of the Goſpel; ſo they continued in the Church, until it had ſpread itſelf over the Face of the then known World. The Gift of Tongues, ſo fit an Inſtrument in ſo difficult a Work, remained for above a whole Century, as ſeveral of the primitive Writers witneſs [d]: The Gift of Propheſy was in the Time of Juſtin Martyr, of Iræneus, of Origen, and of St Cyprian, as they themſelves relate: And [e] that the Power of working Miracles, and caſting out Devils, was of equal, if no longer Continuance, is manifeſt from the publick Challenge, which Tertullian (among other Apologiſts) makes the Heathens: "Let any Man, that is apparently acted by any "one of your Gods, ſays he, be brought before your own Tribunals, and, if that "ſuppoſed God, being commanded by any Chriſtian to ſpeak, do not own the "Power of Chriſt, and confeſs himſelf to be a Devil, then ſhall that Chriſtian be "content to be ſacrificed upon the Spot." Empowered others to do the ſame.

AFTER the Teſtimony of God, (if any farther Arguments were allowable in Confirmation of the Apoſtles Truth) I might produce the profeſſed Enemies of Chriſtianity, both Jews and Pagans, that have, in a great Meaſure, aſſerted the very ſame Things, which are recorded in the Evangelical Writings. [f] The Coming of a King out of the Eaſt, who ſhould do great and mighty Actions, was a conſtant Report, (founded upon the Sibylline Propheſies) which prevailed about the Time of our Saviour's Birth, and Tacitus (as a great Politician and Stateſman) will needs have it fulfilled in Veſpaſian and Titus, becauſe they were called, out of Judea, to the Empire of Rome. The Appearance of a wonderful Star, at the Time of his Nativity, is mentioned by Pliny, in his [g] Natural Hiſtory, under the Name of a Bright Comet. The Murther of the Babes of Bethlehem is mentioned by Dion, in the Life of Octavius Cæſar; and [h] Macrobius (who relates the Thing more at large) tells us, that Herod, upon the Account of the ſame Jealouſy, ordered his own Son to be ſlain. The Miracles that Jeſus did, when he entered upon his Miniſtry; the Title he laid claim to of being Meſſias, or a divine Perſon ſent from Heaven to redeem Mankind; and the Doctrines he preached, as they are recorded in the Goſpels, are acknowledged and confeſſed by Celſus, Julian, and Porphyry, as ſeveral of the [i] antient Fathers aſſure us. The Death of our bleſſed Saviour, and the Manner of his Sufferings, under Pontius Pilate, and in the Reign of Tiberius, is mentioned both by Tacitus and Lucian. The univerſal Eclipſe, which Their Truth confirmed by the Teſtimony of Enemies.

happened at the Time of his Paſſion, is mentioned by [k] Dionyſius, before he was converted to the Faith; and proved by [l] Origen, out of Phlegon Trallianus, whoſe Words are theſe, That, in the fourth Year of the 202d Olympiad, there happened a great Defection of the Sun, ſuch as was never known before, &c. The terrible Earthquake, which was at the ſame Time, is related by Pliny, Dion, and Suetonius; and the Rending of the Veil of the Temple, mentioned by three Evangeliſts, is teſtified by the [m] Jewiſh Hiſtorian, who (among other Paſſages) has given us this memorable one, concerning our bleſſed Saviour. "At this Time, ſays he, there was one "Jeſus, a wiſe Man, (if I may call him a Man) for he did moſt wonderful Works, "and was a Teacher of thoſe, that received the Truth with Delight. He brought "many to his Perſuaſion, both of the Jews and Gentiles. This was Chriſt: And "though he was, by the Inſtigation of ſome of our Nation, and by Pilate's Sen-"tence, hung on the Croſs; yet thoſe, who loved him at firſt, did not ceaſe to "do ſo; for he came to Life again the third Day, and appeared to them; the "Divine Prophets having foretold theſe, and infinite other Wonders of him: And "to this Day remains that Sort of Men, who have from him the Name of Chri-"ſtians." A Paſſage, which (as a [n] French Author has proved) is far from being an Interpolation.

UPON Conſideration of what has been ſaid then, with Relation to the Apoſtles, viz. that they were honeſt and impartial Men, competent Judges of what they related, and no Way qualified to contrive an Impoſture; that they delivered Things plainly, and without artificial Inſinuations; that they all agreed in their Teſtimony, and were conſtant to themſelves in what they reported; that there was no viſible Intereſt, in the leaſt, to ſway them againſt their Knowledge; that they were ſo far from gaining any Thing by their Teſtimony, that they ran themſelves upon the greateſt Hazards and Diſadvantages; (and what is the higheſt Evidence, that this World can give of any Man's Sincerity) ventured their Lives for it, and ſealed it at laſt with their own Blood; that God himſelf confirmed their Teſtimony, by enabling them to work Miracles, and to confer the ſame Power upon their Succeſſors, for ſome conſiderable Time; and that their greateſt Enemies have, (in their own Writings) as to the moſt material Points of their Narration, either aſſerted, or acknowledged the ſame: It muſt needs follow, that we have the greateſt Security imaginable of their Veracity; and conſequently, that the Commiſſion, given them to teach all Nations, was of divine Authority, and that their Speech, and their Preaching (as [o] the Apoſtle words it) was not with enticing Words of Man's Wiſdom, but in the Demonſtration of the Spirit, and of Power, that our Faith might not ſtand in the Wiſdom of Men, but in the Power of God.

The Reſult of the whole is Thankfulneſs, and Obedience to God.

AND now to obſerve from the whole. Since God was pleaſed, by Moſes and the Prophets, and by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, to make a Revelation of his Will to Mankind, when the Light of Nature and the Improvements of Reaſon were found defective; we are certainly bound to expreſs all the Duty, and all the Thankfulneſs imaginable, for ſuch his ineſtimable Benefit. It may be pretended indeed, that there is no Neceſſity for ſuch a Revelation, and that Philoſophy and right Reaſon are ſufficient to inſtruct Men in the Knowledge and Practice of their Duty. [p] But, beſides what has been ſaid before concerning the Ignorance and Corruption of the Heathen World, and the Confeſſion of the wiſeſt Philoſophers about their Inſufficiency to reform Mankind; we may fairly appeal to the Men of theſe Sentiments, whether in Countries, bleſſed with a divine Revelation, the Generality, even of the meaner Sort of People, have not truer and more worthy Notions of God and his Attributes, a deeper Senſe of moral Good and Evil, a greater Regard to all divine and ſocial Duties, and a more certain Expectation of future Rewards and Puniſhments, than ever was known in any Heathen Country, among any conſiderable Number of Men.

NOW indeed, when Religion has made our Duty obvious to us, 'tis no Wonder, that the Clearneſs of moral Reaſonings ſhould be improved; but had we lived in thoſe Days of Ignorance, our finding out our Duty, and all the great Motives of it, had been like groping for an unknown Way in an obſcure Twilight. Had we been deſtitute of the glorious Light of the Goſpel, I ſay, what Preſumption have we to think, that we ſhould have been wiſer, than thoſe learned Names in Antiquity, Socrates, and Plato, and Cicero? Had our Lot been among the Vulgar, how can can we be ſure, that we ſhould not have been involved in that Idolatry and Superſtition, that over-ſpread the whole World? Had we adjoined ourſelves to the Philoſophers, what Sect could we have followed, or what Book could we have reſolved upon, for the adequate Rule of our Lives, which is not palpably faulty? Or had we ſet up for ourſelves, how can we be certain, that we ſhould have been ſkilful enough to deduce the ſeveral Branches of our Duty, and to apply them to the ſeveral Caſes of Life, by the Strength of our Reaſon and Argumentation? 'Tis one Thing to ſee our Duty, when it is plainly laid down to our Hands, and another, to find it out of ourſelves; and we build too much upon our own Confidence, if we ſhould promiſe ourſelves better Succeſs in the Enquiry, than thoſe, who went before us, ever yet met with.

INSTEAD of boaſting of our Abilities therefore, it would much better become us to be thankful to God, the Fountain of all Wiſdom, that he has been pleaſed to communicate his Will, and the Knowledge of our Duty to us; that he has reſerved us to the beſt of Diſpenſations, and vouchſafed us the cleareſt Evidences of the moſt excellent Religion, that ever yet appeared in the World[q]: A Religion, that is in itſelf reaſonable, and every Way adapted to our rectified Faculties, and enlightened Mind; a Religion, that has the moſt lively Principles to actuate and inform us; the moſt perfect Rules to guide and direct us; and the moſt powerful Helps to advance us to all Virtue and Godlineſs of Living; a Religion, that holds forth the moſt dreadful Puniſhments, to deter us from Wickedneſs, and aſſures us of the higheſt Rewards, to animate us in the Courſe of Righteouſneſs: In ſhort, a Religion, that comprehends in it all the excellent Things, which the moſt improved Philoſophers talked of, and innumerable more, which all their Diſquiſitions could never reach, ſo much as in Thought, or Imagination; always remembering, that our Obligation to Holineſs riſes in Proportion to the Revelation we live under; that our Manners ſhould ſpeak the Tranſcendency of the Goſpel above Philoſophy; our Righteouſneſs exceed the Righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees; and that, if the Word ſpoken by Angels was ſtedfaſt, and every Tranſgreſſion and Diſobedience received a juſt Recompence of Reward; how ſhall we eſcape, if we neglect ſo great Salvation, which at the firſt began to be ſpoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?

CHAP. IV.

Of the HOLY SCRIPTURES.

BEFORE we proceed to an Examination of the Truth and Authority, the Perfection and Excellency, the Stile, Method, Perſpicuity, and other Attributes of the Holy Scriptures, ſufficient to make them an adequate Rule of our Faith and Practice; it will not be improper to inquire a little, for what Reaſons, by what Means, and by what Perſons, the ſeveral Revelations above ſpecified came to be recorded in Writing.

Why the Word of God was committed to Writing.

I. 'TIS the Opinion of ſome [a] learned Men, that Writing was an Art, co-eval with Mankind, and the Invention of Adam himſelf. Joſephus indeed informs us, That it was in Uſe before the Flood: And from thence ſome have conjectured, that the Hiſtory of the Creation, and the reſt of the Book of Geneſis was, for the Subſtance of it, delivered down to Moſes in Verſe, (which was the moſt ancient Way of Writing) and that from thence he compiled his Book. This however can hardly be a probable Conjecture, becauſe it is ſcarce conceivable, how Men could have loſt the Senſe of Religion ſo totally, (as we find they did) had there been any ſtanding Records of it at that Time. The more probable Opinion is, that it was the long experienced Inſufficiency of oral Tradition (the only Way of Conveyance then in Uſe) that gave Occaſion to the general Corruption; while ſome forgot, and others perverted the Doctrines delivered to them by their Anceſtors; and, in Compliance to their Luſts, brought themſelves, by Degrees, firſt to believe a Lye, and then to propagate it, having no written Rule of Truth, wherewith to confront their Error.

[a] Jenkins's Reaſonableneſs, Vol. I.

[b] IT

[b] IT can hardly be doubted, but that God vouchſafed frequent Revelations to the Patriarchs, before the Law, and ſufficiently inſtructed them in his Will; nor can we queſtion, but that theſe holy Men uſed their beſt Endeavours to propagate the Doctrine they received, and to reform the Manners of thoſe, at leaſt, that depended on them: And (what was a great Advantage to them in that Reſpect) both their Lives were very long, and the Principles of their Religion extremely few. [c] Two Perſons might have conveyed it down from Adam to Abraham: Methuſelah (as we took Notice before) lived above three hundred Years, while Adam was yet alive; Shem was almoſt an hundred, when Methuſelah died; and when Shem died, Abraham was above an hundred, according to the Hebrew Computation. Here is a great Period of Time filled up by two or three Perſons: And yet, in this Time, the Tradition of thoſe very few Things (wherein Religion was then comprehended) was ſo totally corrupted, that Idolatry was generally practiſed, and God was obliged to make a new and immediate Revelation to the Patriarch Abraham.

The Old Teſtament.

THE Promulgation of the Law on Mount Sinai was one of the moſt amazing Things that ever happened: And, as the Circumſtances of the whole Solemnity were very ſurpriſing, the Commandments, then delivered, but few, the People all of one Language, ſeparate from the reſt of Mankind, and obliged to a conſtant Commerce among themſelves; ſo there ſeems to be, in this Caſe, all imaginable Advantages in Favour of Tradition: And yet notwithſtanding theſe, God would not truſt his Precepts to this uncertain Way of Conveyance, but [d] himſelf, with his own Finger, twice wrote them upon two Tables of Stone. Nay, even the ceremonial Part of the Law (though not intended to be of perpetual Obligation) was not referred to this traditionary Method, but was wrote by Moſes in a Book, as God commanded, and repoſited with the Prieſts. And therefore we have leſs Reaſon to wonder, that, in Things, which were to come to paſs in future Ages, (ſuch as the Predictions of the Prophets were) and whereon the Fate of Nations, as well as Divine Veracity, did depend, we always find God giving them Injunctions of this Kind, [e] to write their Inſpirations before the People in a Table, and to note them in a Book, that they might be for the Time to come, for ever and ever.

The New.

[f] FOR what Reaſon the holy Evangeliſts committed their Goſpels to Writing, St Chryſoſtome tells us in theſe Words: [g] "Becauſe, in Proceſs of Time, Men were "in Danger of ſtumbling, ſome in their Opinions, and others in their Lives and "Actions, 'twas neceſſary to have them admoniſhed by Writing: So that the "Goſpel, which had been preached, ſays [h] Irenæus, was, by the Will of God, put "in Writing, that it might be the Foundation and Pillar of our Faith." St Matthew (as [i] Euſebius tells us) being about to leave the Hebrews, among whom he had preached, gave them his Goſpel in Writing, to ſupply the Want of his Preſence. St Mark, upon the earneſt Requeſt of the Romans, who were not ſatisfied with hearing the Word only, left them his Goſpel in Writing, to be a Monument (as Clement of Alexandria ſays) of that Doctrine, which St Peter had delivered to them by Word of Mouth. St Luke acquaints us, that the [k] Reaſon, inducing him to write his Goſpel, was, to give Theophilus, and every one that anſwers his Name, a greater Certainty of thoſe Things, wherein they had been inſtructed: And as for St John's Goſpel, he himſelf has likewiſe given us an Account of the Reaſon, that induced him to write it: [l] Theſe Things are written, that ye might believe, that Jeſus is the Chriſt, the Son of God; and that, believing, ye might have Life through his Name.

[m] St JOHN lived the longeſt of all the Apoſtles, and therefore ſaw how little Tradition was to be truſted, ſince it was already corrupted by Cerinthus and his Followers, in ſo weighty a Point, as the Divinity of Chriſt; and therefore he took Occaſion from hence to write his Divine Goſpel, in order to clear this fundamental Article of the Chriſtian Faith. And obſerving withal, that the other Evangeliſts inſiſted chiefly on the Actions of Chriſt for one Year, viz. after John's Impriſonment to our Lord's Crucifixion, he re-aſſumes the whole Matter, and adds thoſe Things, which were omitted by the reſt; that ſo the Church might be furniſhed with a full Relation of all, that was neceſſary to compleat, and eſtabliſh the Faith of Chriſtians.

THE firſt Epiſtle that we read of in the Chriſtian Church (and probably the firſt Writing in the New Teſtament) was the decretal Epiſtle of the Council of Jeruſalem, [b] Bennet againſt Popery. [c] Burnet on the Articles. [d] Exod. xxxi. 18. [e] Iſa. xxx. 8.

Jeruſalem, [n] to ſettle the Minds of the Gentiles, and to releaſe them from the Obligation of Circumciſion. The Epiſtle to the Romans was written by St Paul, on Purpoſe to clear ſome main Points of the Chriſtian Doctrine, which were then warmly diſputed, about Juſtification, Rejection of the Jews, and the Difference of Meats. Thoſe to the Corinthians were written, not only to reprove their Factions and Diſorders, but, among other weighty Matters, to direct and eſtabliſh the Belief of the Reſurrection, which was then conteſted among them. That to the Galatians was occaſioned by one of the greateſt Points of Controverſy then on Foot, viz. the Uſe and Obligation of the Law of Moſes; and That to the Epheſians (among other Subjects) was intended to evince the Call and Salvation of the Gentiles, which, not long before, had been a Matter of ſome Doubt and Diſputation.

THE Philippians were aſſaulted by a violent and headſtrong Faction of Judaizers; and therefore the Apoſtle writes this Epiſtle, to warn them againſt their Practices, and to exhort them to [o] ſtand faſt in one Spirit, with one Mind, ſtriving together for the Faith of the Goſpel. The Theſſalonians were threatened with a great Defection from the Chriſtian Faith, and, upon this Occaſion, St Paul adviſes them, in his ſecond Epiſtle [p], to ſtand faſt, and to retain what they had been taught, whether by Word, or his Epiſtle. In both his Epiſtles, he advertiſes Timothy [q] of the perilous Times, which were coming upon the Church, and thereupon admoniſhes him, to continue in the Things, which he had learned, and to attend to the Scriptures, which were able to make him wiſe unto Salvation. And (to name no more) the Coloſſians had ſome among them, who were for refining the Chriſtian Syſtem, at leaſt for making it more paſſable in the World, by the Introduction of ſome Jewiſh Rites, and ſome Auſterities of the Gentiles; and therefore he writes them this Epiſtle, to convince them, that the Doctrines of Chriſtianity alone were far beyond any Mixtures of the Fancies or Traditions of Men; and thereupon gives them this wholeſome Advice: [r] As ye have received Chriſt Jeſus the Lord, ſo walk ye in him, rooted and built up in him, and ſtabliſhed in the Faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with Thankſgiving.

THUS you ſee, that the whole Revelation of God's Will (for we might run through it all, if there wanted any farther Illuſtration) was committed to Writing, that we might not be left to the Dubiouſneſs and Uncertainties of Tradition, which all the World had found to be ſo liable to Corruptions; but might be provided, through all the Ages, with a ſtanding Rule of Faith and Manners, whereunto we might, on all Occaſions, reſort. And ſo we proceed to

II. OUR next general Enquiry, by what Means and Aſſiſtance the Holy Scriptures were wrote. 'Twas the received Opinion of the Jews, [s] that the Books, which conſtituted their Canon of Scripture, were compoſed by Prophets divinely inſpired. The Law of Moſes was accounted the Law of God himſelf, and the Pentateuch eſteemed the Foundation of their Religion. The familiar Converſe he had with God, the Wonders and Miracles which he wrought, and the Divine Wiſdom, and Gift of Propheſy, which reſided in him, put it beyond all Diſpute, that the Books, which he left behind him, were penned by the Inſpiration of the Spirit of God, whereof he was full. Wrote by the Aſſiſtance of the Holy Ghoſt.

THE other canonical Books, which were collected into a Body, in the Time of Ezra, they held in the like Veneration, as being prophetical, and inſpired by God; inſomuch that (as Joſephus tells us) they were accuſtomed, from their Infancy, to call them the Doctrines of God, and were ready, at any Time, to lay down their Lives in Vindication of them.

THAT theſe Books were of Divine Inſpiration, no Chriſtian can doubt, that believes the Teſtimony of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, who frequently quote them as ſuch, under the Name of the Holy Scripture, which comprehends the Law, the Prophets, and the Pſalms. 'Tis upon the Evidence of theſe Books, that our Bleſſed Saviour proves himſelf to be the Meſſiah; 'tis by them that he confutes the Jews; and to them that he appeals, both in the Proof of his own Doctrine, and in all his Diſputations with them: And therefore we need not wonder that we find both the Apoſtle of the Gentiles aſſuring us, [t] that all Scripture is given by the Inſpiration of God; and the Apoſtle of the Jews aſſerting the ſame Thing, viz. [u] that no Propheſy of the Scripture is of any private Interpretation; for the Propheſy came not in old

Time, by the Will of Man, but holy Men of God ſpake, as they were moved by the Holy Ghoſt.

* THE primitive Church, inſtructed by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, had not only the ſame Reſpect for the Writings of Moſes and the Prophets, that the Jews themſelves had; but received likewiſe, by univerſal Conſent, the Goſpels, and Epiſtles of the Apoſtles, as compoſed, in like Manner, by the Direction and Inſpi rtion of God's bleſſed Spirit. That the Holy Ghoſt, in theſe firſt Times of Chriſtianity, did aſſiſt, in an extraordinary Manner, the Apoſtles of our Saviour Chriſt, both in their Preaching, and in their Vindications of themſelves, is in a Manner demonſtrable from the Promiſe he makes them; [y] When they bring you into the Synagogues, ſays he, and unto Magiſtrates, and Powers, take ye no Thought how, and what Thing ye ſhall anſwer; for the Holy Ghoſt ſhall teach you, in the ſame Hour, what ye ſhall ſay. Now if the Preaching of the Apoſtles was inſpired, we have the ſame, and much greater Reaſon to perſuade ourſelves, that their Writings were ſo too; becauſe their Writings were to remain, as the perpetual Monuments of the Doctrines of Jeſus Chriſt, and as a ſtanding Rule of Faith to all Chriſtians. But now, upon a Suppoſition, that their Writings are fallible, and of no better Authority, than Compoſitions purely human, what ſhall Chriſtians do, when any Controverſies, either in Doctrine or Practice, happen to ariſe among them? Tradition on both Sides may be pretended; but Tradition at beſt is but an uncertain Guide: The Infallibility of Popes and Councils is not allowed of by all Parties, and yet that very Infallibility (were it admitted) always ſuppoſes an inſpired Scripture for them to interpret. So that, upon a Contingency of this Nature, if the Scriptures were defective in this Particular, we ſhould have nothing elſe to do, but to wrangle on to the World's End, without any Poſſibility of coming to an Agreement. It ſeems highly conſiſtent with the Wiſdom and Goodneſs of God therefore, that the Writings, which he foreſaw all Poſterity would appeal to, as the Touchſtone of their Orthodoxy, ſhould be ſecured from Error, and that his Holy Spirit ſhould, in their Compoſition, aſſiſt with ſuch an infallible Veracity, as would be of ſufficient Authority to ſilence all Differences that might ariſe.

THE primitive Chriſtians therefore always looked upon them as Oracles, to decide all Differences in Matters of Religion, and every Sentence in them was thought a Divine Axiom, beyond which there could be no Appeal, and no Diſpute. Nay, not only the Orthodox, but even the rankeſt Hereticks, who deny the moſt conſiderable Articles of the Chriſtian Faith, never queſtion the Divinity of the Scriptures: And though they cavil now and then with the Authority of ſome particular Texts, yet they freely own the Inſpiration of the reſt; argue from it in the ſame Manner, as the Orthodox do, and are not a little proud, when they think they have got it on their Side.

FROM theſe Reaſons then it appears, that the Holy Scripture is, in Reality, what it is called, the Word of God, as being of Divine Inſpiration; and that the ſacred Writers (as [z] an antient Author elegantly expreſſes it) "had not need of any Art to "compoſe their Works; all that was required on their Part was, that they ſhould "have a purified Mind, wherein to receive the Operation of the Holy Ghoſt, who "deſcending from Heaven, as a muſical Bow, all divine, made uſe of upright Men, "as of a muſical Inſtrument, to reveal to us the Knowledge of celeſtial and divine "Things:" Which carries us on to a farther Enquiry, viz. how far the Operation of the Holy Ghoſt, in the Compoſition of the Scripture, did extend, and whether it directed the Writers to the very Words and Expreſſions, or only directed the Senſe, and Subject-Matter of what they wrote.

How far it was inſpired.

NOW, though it be certain, that the ordinary Operation of the Spirit of God upon Men's Minds, which uſually leaves them to the free Exerciſe of their Faculties, be no Rule to direct our Judgment in this Caſe; yet it muſt be acknowledged, that the great Diverſity of the Stile and Diction, in the ſeveral Books of Scripture, according to the different Tempers and Education of its Writers, is a Sort of Indication, that they themſelves had ſome Share in the Compoſition, and that the Holy Ghoſt was not the Author of every Word and Expreſſion. For, if this had been the Caſe, the Stile of every Book had been alike and uniform; at leaſt there had not been that apparent Difference in it, which we now ſee, and which (taking in the holy Penmen for a Share in the Compoſition) may not unfitly be aſcribed to natural Cauſes. [a] If the Holy Ghoſt had dictated every Word, I ſay, why why ſhould Iſaiah, who was bred in a Court, be more florid, and magnificent in his Expreſſion, than Amos, who had his Education among the Herds? Why ſhould St Luke, who had a polite Education, write his Books in better Language, and more agreeable to the Greek and Latin Hiſtories, than St John? Why ſhould St Paul, who was brought up at the Feet of Gamaliel, ſhew more of Jewiſh Learning, and Rabbinical Reaſoning, than the other Apoſtles? Why ſhould St John, above all the others, diſcover, in his Writings, ſo much Sweetneſs and Humanity, ſo much Love and Tenderneſs, if it was not, in ſome Meaſure, owing to his natural Temper? Theſe ſeem to be plain Proofs, that the holy Penmen were not entirely excluded; that their Temper and Education (as other Men's do) entered, in ſome Meaſure, into their Compoſitions; and that they were uſually left at Liberty to vary their Expreſſions, if not model their Thoughts, according to theſe Qualifications.

THEIR Thoughts indeed, as to the Subſtance of them, were under the more immediate Direction of God: And though it be an impoſſible, as well as needleſs Thing, for us to define, how far his bleſſed Spirit was engaged in the Inſpiration of theſe holy Men; yet we have abundant Reaſon to ſuppoſe, that he afforded them ſufficient Aſſiſtance to make their Writings infallible, and that the Meaſure of this Aſſiſtance was, in Proportion to the Nature of the Subject, which they treated. Thus, when the holy Apoſtles, for inſtance, wrote hiſtorically of Matters of Fact, which either they themſelves knew, or had been reported to them by credible Witneſſes, there was no Reaſon that the Subſtance of their Hiſtory ſhould be revealed to them again; all that ſeems requiſite is, that their Memories ſhould be refreſhed, (as our Saviour promiſed them) and that the Holy Ghoſt ſhould ſo far inſpect them, as to prevent any Error in the Relation. In like Manner, when they delivered any moral Precepts, or argued from any revealed Truths, he ſuffered them to uſe their reaſoning Faculties, as far as the Arguments were ſuitable and ſolid; and at the ſame Time quickened their Invention, cleared their Underſtanding, and hindered them from writing any Thing impertinent. But when they were to predict any future Events, or to declare any Divine Truths, which were not taught them by Chriſt while he was upon Earth, there it is neceſſary to aſſert, that the Whole of theſe was immediately inſpired into their Minds by the Holy Ghoſt; becauſe they could be the Reſult neither of their Underſtanding, nor Memory, and conſequently could come into their Minds no other Way, but by immediate Inſpiration. And, on Occaſions like theſe, when ſome great and fundamental Articles of the Chriſtian Faith came to be propounded or explained, 'tis not to be doubted, but that the Holy Spirit dictated the very Words and Forms of Expreſſion; as might be proved from ſome ſeemingly-accidental Hints in Scripture, now of great Uſe for the Confutation of Error, which could not have been put in by human Foreſight, and ſome Paſſages, of a ſingular Significance, which could not have carried all that Strength and Emphaſis, had they been of human Compoſition.

FROM the whole then it is reaſonable to think, that the Meaſure of Divine Inſpiration varied, according to the Dignity of the Subject, and the Exigencies of the Penmen that did record it: That, for the main, they purſued their own Method and Manner of Expreſſion, but, on ſome important Occaſions, had the very Words dictated to them; that in ſome Subjects they had their Memory refreſhed, in others their Underſtandings enlightened, and in all their Wills directed to the Diſcovery and Declaration of the Truth; and, even in the leaſt Matter they wrote, were never ſo far left to their own Diſcretion, as not to have the Holy Spirit preſiding over them, and keeping them from expreſſing any Thing contrary to the Divine Mind, or the Dignity of the Sacred Subject. And ſo we go on to.

III. OUR laſt general Enquiry, who the Perſons were, by whom theſe inſpired Records were wrote: And the Anſwer to this is ſhort and obvious; † they were wrote By what Perſons it was wrote.

† Mr Le Clerc makes great Exceptions to the common received Authors of the Canon of the Old Teſtament, and, from the Names of ſome Perſons and Places, as well as ſome Events and Tranſactions, that were later than the Time, wherein the Authors lived, endeavours to bring down the Date of moſt of them, as low as the Captivity; but for this there is no Occaſion. Since moſt of the Learned agree, that, upon his Return from Captivity, Ezra compiled all the Books of the Old Teſtament, that were then extant, and, having changed the antient for more modern Names, and here and there inſerted ſome Paſſages to make the Hiſtory more intelligible to the common Readers, he publiſhed a new Edition of it in that Form; and by this Suppoſition, all the ſeeming Incongruities in the Text may be reconciled. Sentimens de quelques Theologiens, and Huetii Demonſt. Evangel.

wrote by the Perſons, whoſe Names they bear, at leaſt by Perſons divinely aſſiſted in their Compoſitions. For we have the ſame moral Evidence (and moral Evidence is all we can have in this Caſe) for aſcertaining the Books of the Old and New Teſtament, that we have for aſcribing any other Books to their reſpective Authors; inſomuch that if we believe that Homer and Herodotus, Virgil and Livy were the Authors of the Writings that go under their Names, we have the ſame Reaſon to ſuppoſe the ſame Thing of the inſpired Penmen, becauſe univerſal Conſent (which is the Claim they both make) is equally ſtrong on their Side.

[b] THAT Moſes was the Author of the Pentateuch is plain from many Paſſages in the Holy Scriptures, from the Authority of Jeſus Chriſt, and the Teſtimony of ſeveral Heathen Authors. The Book of Joſhua (as well as ſome others) is ſo called, not ſo much to denote its Author, as to ſhew its Subject-Matter; becauſe it contains the Hiſtory of the Wars, and other Affairs, which happened under the Adminiſtration of that great Captain: But ſince the Author of the Book of Eccleſiaſticus gives him this Character, [c] that he was the Succeſſor of Moſes in the Propheſies, i. e. (in the Language of the Jews) the next Writer of inſpired Scripture after Moſes, we have no Reaſon to oppoſe the Judgment of the Jewiſh Church, which always aſcribed it to him.

THE Book of Judges is very antient, as appears from a Paſſage in a Pſalm of David, made upon a Removal of the Ark: When thou wenteſt forth before the People, when thou marchedſt through the Wilderneſs, the Earth ſhook, the Heavens alſo dropped at the Preſence of God; which Words are an exact Imitation of theſe in Judges: [d] Lord, when thou wenteſt out of Seir, when thou marchedſt out of the Field of Edom, the Earth trembled, the Heavens dropped, the Clouds alſo dropped Water; and that it was wrote by Samuel, as well as the Book of Ruth, (which is an Hiſtory of ſome particular Tranſactions, which happened in the Time of the Judges) the Doctors of the Talmud agree; though others attribute it to Hezekiah, and many to Ezra. The Books of Samuel have likewiſe evident Marks of their Antiquity: And though it be not abſolutely certain who their Author was, yet the Generality of the Jews do, with Probability, aſſert, that the four and twenty firſt Chapters were written by Samuel himſelf, and the reſt by the Prophets Nathan and Gad; which Aſſertion they found upon this Paſſage in the Chronicles: [e] Now the Acts of David the King, firſt and laſt, behold they are written in the Book of Samuel the Seer, and in the Book of Nathan the Prophet, and in the Book of Gad the Seer.

THE Books of Kings and the Chronicles, which contain the Hiſtory of the Jewiſh Monarchy, down to the Deſtruction of Iſrael and the Captivity of Judah, were compiled out of antient Records, which Records were wrote by Men of a prophetick Spirit; and all that Ezra, or whoever their Compiler was, added of his own, was ſome genealogical Obſervations, at the Beginning of the Chronicles, and ſome other Paſſages of ſmall Moment, relating to the Times after the Captivity.

THE Book of Ezra (all but the ſix firſt Chapters) was compoſed by him; for theſe ſix Chapters contain an Account of the firſt Return of the Jews from Babylon, upon the Decree of Cyrus; whereas Ezra did not return until the Time of Artaxerxes. 'Tis of this ſecond Return therefore that he writes the Account; and, adding it to the other, which he found ready compoſed to his Hand, he made it a complete Hiſtory of the Jewiſh Reſtoration.

NEHEMIAH, who was the Son of Hilkiah, of the Tribe of Levi, was advanced, in Babylon, to be Cup-bearer, or Page, to King Artaxerxes; and from him he obtained Leave to return to Judea, for twelve Years, in order to rebuild the City of Jeruſalem. He continues the Hiſtory of Ezra, from the twentieth Year of Artaxerxes, to the Reign of Darius Nothus, and is, by the Writer of the Books of [f] Maccabees, atteſted to be the Author of that Work.

[g] THE Hiſtory of Eſther, which contains an Account of the Jews wonderful Deliverance from Haman's intended Maſſacre, by ſome is ſuppoſed to have been written by Ezra; but the more probable Opinion of the Talmudiſts is, that the great Synagogue (to perpetuate the Memory of that remarkable Event, and to account for the Original of the Feaſt of Purim) ordered this Book to be compoſed, and afterwards approved, and admitted it into the ſacred Canon.

WHO

[b] Du Pin's Canon, Vol. I. [c] Ecclus. xlvi. 1. [d] Judges v. 4. [e] 1 Chron. xxix. 29.
[f] 2 Mac. ii. 13. [g] Du Pin, ibid.

WHO the Author of the Book of Job was, is indeed uncertain; 'tis very probable however, † that he was a Perſon of great Antiquity, and lived before the Promulgation of the Jewiſh Law, becauſe there are no Traces of it to be found in the whole Compaſs of the Book. The moſt general Opinion is, that it was written by Moſes, during his Abode in Egypt, or in his Flight into the Land of Midian, with an Intent to encourage the Jews, under the Severities of the Egyptian Bondage, by ſhewing the gracious Deſigns of God's Providence, and that he often lays the ſharpeſt Afflictions upon his moſt faithful Servants.

'TIS certain, that, in antient Times, both before and after the Flood, holy Men were accuſtomed to ſing the Praiſes of God, for his manifold Mercies unto them, in Hymns; that theſe Hymns were compoſed by Men of a prophetic Spirit, and not only learnt by pious People, as Helps to their Devotion, but committed to the Cuſtody of the Levites, who laid them up among the Archives of the Temple, and uſed to chuſe out of them whatever they thought proper to have ſung, upon any ſolemn Occaſion. This Form of Worſhip, during the Captivity, had been almoſt totally neglected; but when Ezra was returned Home, and made a Reviſe of the Canon of Scripture, he collected the hundred and fifty Pſalms, which we have at preſent, being all he could find, I ſuppoſe, of undoubted Authority. Thoſe, that go under the Name of David, are agreed on all Hands to be of divine Inſpiration; and the whole Collection, indeed, is ſo far from being any modern Compoſition, that it is juſtly thought to contain ſome of the moſt valuable, and moſt unqueſtionable Pieces of Antiquity.

THAT the Books of Proverbs, Eccleſiaſtes and Canticles, were written by King Solomon, is the general Opinion of the Jewiſh Doctors, who pretend to tell us, that he wrote the Canticles in his Youth, the Proverbs in his Manhood, and Eccleſiaſtes at the latter End of his Life. [h] There are, however, but twenty-four Chapters in the Beginning of the firſt, which are reputed the original Collection of Solomon, and Part of a great Work, which was deſtroyed, with the Temple, at the Captivity. The reſt were collected by other Hands, only the laſt Chapter (which bears the Name of Lemuel) is ſuppoſed to have been wrote by him under a borrowed Title; and ſeems to be made up of ſome wiſe Inſtructions, which his Mother Bathſheba had taught him, when he was a Child.

THE Song of Songs, though it may relate to Solomon's Marriage with the Daughter of the King of Egypt, and is ſo far hiſtorical; yet the Pious, in all Ages, have ever eſteemed it as an allegorical Dialogue between Chriſt and his Church: And though in Eccleſiaſtes ſome Paſſages ſeem to carry an Epicurean Notion of Providence; yet it is to be remembered, that the Author (in an academick Way) diſputes indeed on both Sides, but, in the Concluſion, determines for that, which is right, viz. to fear God, and keep his Commandments, for that is the whole Duty of Man; for God, ſays he, will bring every Work to Judgment, and every ſecret Thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.

THAT the Books both of the greater and leſſer Prophets (for we have no need to conſider them ſeparately) have been always thought to belong to the Perſons, whoſe Names and Inſcriptions they bear, we have the univerſal Conſent of the Jewiſh Church, ſeveral Paſſages from Joſephus, and a very remarkable Teſtimony in the Book of Eccleſiaſticus, to convince us; where, after many Praiſes beſtowed upon Ezekiel, and other Prophets and Worthies of Iſrael, there are theſe Words: [i] And of the twelve Prophets, let the Memorial be bleſſed, let their Bones flouriſh again out of their Place, for they comforted Jacob, and delivered them by aſſured Hope.

† The Author of the Divine Legation of Moſes (Part II. Lib. vi.) endeavours to prove, from its Stile, Sentiments, and Manner of Compoſition, that the Book of Job is wholly Dramatical; that, from the Cuſtoms and hiſtorical Paſſages alluded to in it, it was wrote under the Moſaick Oeconomy, and not long after the People's Return from the Babyloniſh Captivity; that under the Perſon of Job is repreſented the Body of the Jews reſtored indeed to their native Country, but ſadly harraſs'd and annoy'd by their Enemies round about them; by Job's Wife, thoſe idolatrous Women, whom they had married, but were now enjoined to put away; by his three pretended Friends, the three profeſſed Enemies of the Jews, Sanballet, Tobiah, and Geſhem, who ſo much obſtructed their rebuilding of Jeruſalem and the Temple; by Satan, that malicious Tempter, which inſtigated them to be ſo inveterate againſt the People of God; by Elihu, the Prophets, that were then alive, viz. Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, who reproved the People in a friendly Manner, and exhorted them not to be diſcouraged: And that, in ſhort, the Author of this Book was no other than Ezra himſelf, that ready Scribe of the Law of the Lord, who prepared his Heart to teach Iſrael Statutes and Judgments, and wrote this Book in this poetical and entertaining Way, to encourage the Jews, labouring under Difficulties from their malicious Enemies, to a Perſeverance in their Duty, by the aſſured Care and Protection of Providence. Whether this fine-laid Scheme will abide the Teſt or no, we will not pretend to determine; but ſhall only take Notice, that Grotius was of the ſame Opinion, viz. That the Author of the Book of Job lived after the Time of David and Solomon, becauſe there are ſeveral Paſſages in their Writings, which he ſeems to imitate, and that the Phraſeology in Job is not unlike what we meet with in Ezra, Daniel, and the Chaldee Paraphraſe. Sentimens de quelques Theologiens ſur l'Hiſtoire Critique, Page 183.

THUS it appears, that the Books of the Old Teſtament were either the Works of the Men, whoſe Names they bear, or at leaſt the Compoſitions of Perſons, aſſiſted by the Holy Ghoſt: [k] And it is no ſmall Satisfaction to us in our Belief, that the Books of the New Teſtament are the genuine Works of the Authors, to whom they are aſcribed; to find, that they were received not by a ſmall Party of Men, or ſome particular Churches, but by all Chriſtians, diſperſed in all Parts of the World; to find, that the Chriſtian Writers in all Ages cite them, as the genuine Works of the Apoſtles and Evangeliſts, and that, as well before the Canon of the New Teſtament was ſettled and declared in Councils, as ſince; to find, that they were never excepted againſt as ſpurious and counterfeit, in the earlieſt Ages, or by the bittereſt Enemies of the Chriſtian Faith, though they wanted neither Wit nor Malice to have made the Exception, had they deſerved it: On the contrary, that they were admitted as genuine, even by Julian himſelf, who expreſſly owns, that the Books received by Chriſtians, as the Books of Peter and Paul, Matthew, Mark, and Luke, were indiſputably theirs, when, (had it been poſſible to prove them otherwiſe) what a glorious Triumph had it been!

Books doubted of.

[l] SOME Books indeed were controverted by ſome particular Churches, and not immediately admitted into the Canon of the Scripture. The Epiſtle to the Hebrews and the Second of St Peter were at firſt ſcrupled, upon the Account of their Stile; the former being thought different from St Paul's, and the latter from St Peter's Manner of Writing. The Epiſtle of St Jude was likewiſe doubted of for this Reaſon, becauſe the Apocryphal Book of Enoch is cited in it: And, becauſe the Apocalypſe was wrote in a loftier Stile than ordinary, 'twas, ſome Time, a Queſtion whether St John was the Author of it, 'till Examination was made, and the Proofs appeared evident in Favour of this, as well as the other controverted Books. Now the Caution, that the Church uſed in theſe Inſtances, makes it manifeſt, that the Chriſtians of the firſt Ages were not ſo eaſy and credulous, (as ſome have repreſented them) nor did they ſwallow any Book for Divine Revelation, that contained a great many Miracles, mixed with ſome few Morals, without making due Enquiry concerning the Author, and Authority of it; which is a corroborating Proof to us, that the like Care was taken about the reſt, and that the Teſtimonies of their Genuineneſs were unexceptionable, otherwiſe they had met with the ſame Stop and Scrutiny, that the others did.

THE Truth is, it nearly concerned the Primitive Chriſtians to prevent their being impoſed upon in an Affair of this Nature. As they were the beſt able to judge of the Books, aſcribed to the Evangelical Writers, eſpecially if what [m] Tertullian reports be true, that, in his Time, there were Original Manuſcripts to be ſeen in ſeveral Churches; ſo they could not but apprehend it as a Matter of the laſt Conſequence to the Credit of their Religion, to make a right Judgment concerning them. Perſons, that were willing to ſuffer every Thing for the Truth of Chriſtianity, muſt needs be ſuppoſed jealous of being impoſed upon, and careful to preſerve, in every Reſpect, thoſe Monuments uncorrupt, whereby the Facts, upon which the Proofs of it depended, and the Doctrines, which it contained, might be atteſted, and tranſmitted to future Ages. And of this we ſhall have a farther Conviction, if we enquire, in the next Place, into the Number and Catalogue of Books, which, both in the Jewiſh and Chriſtian Church, were received into the ſacred Canon.

SECT. I.

Of the CANON of SCRIPTURE.

Of the Old Teſtament.

THE firſt Account we have of the Canon of the Jews is from Joſephus, in his Book againſt Appion. [n] "We have only two and twenty Books, ſays he, "which comprehend the Hiſtory of all Ages, and merit our Belief. Five belong "to Moſes, which contain what relates to the Original of Man, and the Tradi- "tion of the ſeveral Succeſſions and Generations down to his Death: This takes up "the Compaſs of about three thouſand Years. From the Death of Moſes to the "Reign [n] Vid. Du Pin's Hiſtory of the Canon of Scripture.

" Reign of Artaxerxes, who was King of Perſia after Xerxes, the Prophets, who ſuc" ceeded him, have in their Books written what happened in their Time. The other " four Books contain Hymns to the Praiſe of God, and Precepts for the Conduct of " human Life. What happened ſince the Time of Artaxerxes, down to our Days, " has likewiſe been recorded by the Writers thereof, but they have not met with " the like Credit, becauſe there has not been any certain Succeſſion of Prophets
" during that Time. And from hence it is manifeſt, what Reſpect and Eſtimation
" have been paid to the Books, that complete our Canon; ſince, in ſo long a Tract " of Time, no Man has ventured to add any Thing to them, or diminiſh, or alter
" any Thing in them."

ST Jerome has given us another Account of the Canonical Writings owned by the Jews, wherein the Number of Books is the ſame, though there be ſome Difference in the Diſtribution of them. " All the Books of the Old Teſtament, among the Jews,
" ſays he, are two and twenty; whereof five belong to Moſes, eight to the Prophets,
" and nine to the other holy Penmen; though ſome reckon four and twenty, by
" ſeparating Ruth from Judges, and the Lamentations from the Prophecy of Jere- " miah, and placing them in the Number of Sacred Writings. And from hence it " follows, that the Book of Wiſdom, (commonly aſcribed to Solomon) Eccleſiaſticus,
" (ſaid to be compoſed by Jeſus the Son of Sirach) Judith, Tobit, and the Paſtor, do " not belong to the Canon, any more than the two Books of the Maccabees, whereof
" the one was in Hebrew, and the other (as appears plainly by the Stile) was wrote
" in Greek." Thus accurately has St Jerome explained the Canon of Scripture received by the Jews, and differs from Joſephus in nothing but this, that he reckons, among the Canonical Books, That of Eſther, which Joſephus excludes, and places only eight in the ſecond, but nine in the third Claſs.

THE antient Catalogues of Canonical Books of the Old Teſtament, which are to be met with in Chriſtian Writers, are conformable to this Account of the Jews, and contain no other Books. [o] Mileto, Biſhop of Sardis, being deſired by Oneſimus to give him a perfect Catalogue of the Books of the Old Teſtament, took a Journey to the Eaſt, on Purpoſe to examine this Matter at the Fountain-Head; and having (as he ſaid) made an exact Enquiry, he ſent him the Names of them, juſt as we receive them, which, Euſebius tells us, he preſerved, as containing all the Books, that the Church at that Time owned.

ORIGEN, St Cyril, and St Athanaſius, have all given us the ſame Catalogue, according to the Tradition of the Jews, who divided the Old Teſtament into two and twenty Books, anſwerable to the Letters of their Alphabet; and, what is a farther Confirmation, the Council of Laodicea, which was afterwards confirmed by other General Councils, in an expreſs Canon, declares the Number of authentick Books, juſt as we do, and decrees, that they only ſhould be read in the Church. 'Tis true, this Part of the Canon came afterwards to be neglected, and ſeveral Apocryphal Books (as containing Matters of Jewiſh Hiſtory, and many moral and doctrinal Truths) were by Degrees admitted into the Service of the Church, and read for the Edification of the People; yet it were no hard Matter to ſhew, that ſeveral Writers, and thoſe the moſt learned of their Time, always denied their Canonical Authority. The Church indeed allowed them to be read, as St Jerome tells us, but ſhe did not receive them into the Canon of Scripture. [p] And, in like Manner, our Church declares concerning them, that ſhe doth read them for Example of Life, and Inſtruction of Manners, but does not apply them to eſtabliſh any Doctrine. For though they contain many excellent Rules of Life, and are very ſerviceable to inform us in our Duty, as to ſeveral weighty Things; yet being not dictated by the Holy Ghoſt, (as other Books of Scripture are) they are not the infallible Standard of Divine Doctrine, and therefore not to be applied, and made uſe of for that Purpoſe.

THE Canon of the New Teſtament, as compoſed of Books all written by Divine Inſpiration, is ſufficiently proved from the Teſtimony of Authors, who were neareſt the Times of the Apoſtles. [q] Papias, who converſed with the Diſciples of the Apoſtles, is cited by Euſebius, in Confirmation of St Matthew's Goſpel, which, he ſays, was wrote by him in Hebrew. Juſtin, Irenæus, and Clement of Alexandria quote ſeveral Places out of St Mark's Goſpel, and prove that he wrote it from St Peter's Preaching. St Ignatius, in his Epiſtle to the Epheſians, makes mention of St Luke's Goſpel, and applies unto him that Paſſage of St Paul, [r] we have alſo ſent with him Luke, Of the New.

Luke, whoſe Praiſe is in the Goſpel. Irenæus was acquainted with Polycarp, who was a Diſciple of St John, and he, among many others, has, with great Accuracy, proved the Authentickneſs of the Goſpel of that beloved Apoſtle.

THE Acts of the Apoſtles, compared with St Luke's Goſpel, ſhew, that they are the Work of one and the ſame Author; and accordingly are quoted by Juſtin Martyr, and Clement of Alexandria. Thirteen of St Paul's Epiſtles were never queſtioned, becauſe there were particular Churches and Perſons, to whom the Original was directed. That to the Hebrews was, for ſome Time, doubted of; but Clement of Alexandria ſuppoſes that St Paul wrote it originally in Hebrew, and ſome Apoſtolick Hand afterwards tranſlated it into Greek; and St Jerome aſſures us, that all the Churches in the Eaſt, and moſt of thoſe in the Weſt, did always receive it as Canonical. The Epiſtle of St James was likewiſe queſtioned; but Clement of Rome, Ignatius, and many others quote it, and Euſebius tells us, that it was read in moſt Chriſtian Churches. The Second of St Peter was, for ſome Time, excepted againſt; but Juſtin, Origen, and Clement of Alexandria, find ſo many Characters of Genuineneſs in it, as are an evident Proof of its being wrote by him. The two laſt Epiſtles of St John (about which there was ſome Diſpute) are cited by Irenæus, by Origen, and Tertullian: That of St Jude is mentioned by Clement of Alexandria, St Cyprian, and divers others; and St Jerome tells us, that, though ſeveral had rejected it, becauſe of the Quotation of the Book of Enoch, yet it was received, in his Time, by univerſal Conſent. There remains nothing more but the Apocalypſe, which, for its Stile and Matter, as well as the Title of Divine given to its Author, occaſioned ſome Queſtions; but Clement of Rome quotes it as a prophetick Book: Juſtin Martyr ſays it was wrote by St John: Irenæus calls it the Revelation of St John, the Diſciple of our Lord, wrote in the latter End of Domitian's Reign; ſo that, after ſome Diſputation, it was put in the Number of Canonical Books by the Council of Carthage, and, by the fourth Council of Toledo, decided to be written by St John.

THUS the Canon of the New Teſtament ſeems to be fully made out by the concurrent Evidence of ſeveral Authors, writing immediately after the Apoſtolick Age; And, if we conſider farther, that theſe Teſtimonies were ſo near the Fountain, that the original Copies themſelves were doubtleſs preſerved ſo long; that the Books were read in all Churches and Aſſemblies, ſo that this was a Point, wherein it was not eaſy for Men to be miſtaken; that both the Jews (as appears from Juſtin Martyr) and the Gentiles (as appears from Celſus) knew that theſe were the Books, in which the Faith of Chriſtians was comprized; and that St John himſelf (as a learned Author [u] earneſtly contends) lived to finiſh and ſettle the Canon of Scripture, as a Thing beſt becoming his Patriarchal Care; we muſt believe that the Number of Books, which our Church has received as Canonical, is all that was judged to be wrote by the Holy Ghoſt, at a Time, when it was moſt proper to make the Enquiry; and conſequently, that the Scriptures, in the Manner we now have them, are the very ſame, which the primitive Church received from the Apoſtles.

"BUT though we have received no more, than what are ſtrictly Canonical, yet, "how ſhall we ſatisfy ourſelves, that we have them all, or that we have them perfect "and entire; ſince ſo many are ſaid to be loſt, ſo many changed and altered, and "ſo many corrupted and depraved by the Management of thoſe, who had them in "their Cuſtody?"

SECT. II.

Of the PERFECTION of SCRIPTURE.

No Books loſt, that were Canonical.

SEVERAL Books, indeed, are cited in the Old, and ſome in the New Teſtament, which were never known to be either in the Jewiſh or Chriſtian Canon; but whether theſe Books were at any Time loſt, or are the ſame with what we ſtill have, only under different Denominations, (as the Book of the Covenant, mentioned in [x] Exodus, is ſuppoſed to be Part of [y] Deuteronomy, and that of [z] the Wars of the Lord the ſame with the Book of Judges, &c.) or, if ſuch Books were loſt, [a] whether they

they were wrote by Divine Inſpiration, or were of human Compoſition only, has been a Queſtion of no ſmall Debate, both among Jews and Chriſtians.

St CHRYSOSTOME is clearly of Opinion, that ſeveral Monuments of the old Prophets are loſt, and gives us three [b] probable Reaſons for it; viz. the Negligence of the Jews in not preſerving them; their Impiety and Profaneneſs in deſtroying them themſelves; and the Incurſions of their Enemies, the Ruin of their City, and their long Captivity under Pagan Princes, which might be a farther Means to deſtroy them: "[c] For Judea, having been ravaged by the Chaldeans, (as Eucherius " tells us) and by them the antient Library burnt, we have only now a ſmall Num- " ber of Books, which at preſent makes up the Scriptures, and were collected and " re-eſtabliſhed by the Care of Ezra.

IT would be an invidious Taſk, ſays [d] Origen, to make an Enquiry about thoſe Books, which are mentioned in the Holy Scriptures, but are not at preſent extant; whether the Holy Ghoſt thought fit to ſuppreſs them, becauſe they contained Matters, that were above vulgar Capacities, or whether they were of the Number of Apochryphal Books, containing ſeveral Interpolations, and Things contrary to Faith, and were therefore not admitted into the Canon, nor allowed to be authentick. And if not for him, it is certainly not for us to determine any Thing in ſo nice a Point; though there ſeems to be a great Probability in [e] St Auſtin's Opinion, " that " the Prophets did not, at all Times, write by the Inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt; " and though, in the Fundamentals of Religion, they were divinely aſſiſted, yet, " in other Matters, they only wrote as faithful Hiſtorians; that there was always " therefore a Diſtinction made between theſe two Kinds of Writing, by attributing " the one to them, as their own Work, and the other to God, as dictated by him, " and by accounting the one ſerviceable for the Illuſtration of Matters of Fact, and " the other neceſſary for the Eſtabliſhment of Religion."

ACCORDING to this Hypotheſis, the Maintainers of the Integrity of Scripture are of Opinion, that God Almighty muſt needs have ſo great a Concern for the Revelation of his Will, eſpecially in Things relating to our eternal Intereſt, as not to ſuffer any Books, containing ſuch Things, to periſh, and that, if any were loſt, in the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, or other ſad Calamities attending the Jewiſh Nation, they were ſuch hiſtorical Tracts, as did not concern the great Articles of Religion, were not indited by the Spirit of God, nor preſerved with the ſame Care, that others of an inſpired Character were: And thereupon they conclude, that, if any Books are wanting in the preſent Catalogue, they are either ſuch, as never had the Title of being Canonical; or ſuch as contained no Points eſſential to Man's Salvation; and ſuch, conſequently, as we may live ſafely ignorant of, without any Default in our Duty, and ſhall never be reſponſible for, in Point of Knowledge, at the Day of Judgment.

" BUT though we have all the Books in Poſſeſſion of the Church, that were " ever deemed Canonical, yet how ſhall we be ſatisfied, that they all along have " been preſerved free from impure Mixtures? 'Tis ſo long ago ſince the Originals " were wrote; they have paſſed through ſo many different Hands, and been ſub- " jected to ſo many Mens Deſigns and Tempers, that it is a thouſand to one, but " that they have been ſadly altered and corrupted." [g] 'Tis a long while indeed ſince the Holy Scriptures were publiſhed; and the Preſervation of Books of ſo great Antiquity, through ſo many Changes and Revolutions, againſt all the Injuries of Time and Ignorance, againſt the Violence of War, and the Malice of Adverſaries, muſt be thought a certain Indication (if the Thing be true) of a wonderful Providence concerning them: And to make it thought true, [h] we are to conſider, that in theſe Books is contained the Charter of Man's Salvation, and that, ſince it pleaſed God, of his infinite Goodneſs, to make a publick Declaration thereof, and by Perſons of his own Appointment to have it recorded in Writing; it ſeems to be left upon the ſame Attribute, to conſult the Preſervation of it, ſo as not to ſuffer any wicked Men, or malignant Spirits to corrupt, or alter any of thoſe eſſential Points, whereon our eternal Salvation depends.

Not corrupted in the Old.

AND to this Purpoſe we may obſerve, that, beſides his providential Care, which we may well ſuppoſe to go along with his Charter of Grace, we find God making all proper Proviſion for the Preſervation of it againſt all dangerous Corruptions, in the Old Teſtament; by inſerting a particular and ſtrict Prohibition in the Law itſelf, [i] that no one ſhould preſume to add unto, or diminiſh ought from it; by enjoining the People to make it their conſtant Study, [k] to bind it, as it were, for a Sign upon their Hands, and as Frontlets between their Eyes, and to write it upon the Poſts and Gates of their Houſes; by requiring them to read it diligently, both in private to their Families, and, after a more ſolemn Manner, in the publick Congregations: All which could not but make them competent Judges of the Law, and enable them to deſcry any Change or bold Innovation, that ſhould, at any Time, attempt to creep into it.

[l] TO ſecure the other inſpired Writings, a continued Succeſſion of Prophets was of great Service: And it ſeems next to impoſſible for any dangerous Alterations to have been made without Detection and Cenſure, ſo long as that Order of Men (whoſe Office and Zeal led them to correct any Error in Faith, as well as Corruption in Practice) was in being. Nor can we ſuppoſe it probable, that any Perſon would ever attempt ſuch Adulterations, where the Copies were in ſo many Hands, and ſo openly read and conſulted, that there was ſcarce any private Perſon, who might not have known (if any ſuch Thing had happened) when, and wherein, they had been corrupted.

[m] NAY, ſo far were the Jews from ſuffering Corruptions to creep into the Holy Scriptures, that, if but one Word happened to be altered in any Copy, it was to be laid aſide, as utterly uſeleſs, unleſs it was ſometimes given to a very poor Man to read to his Family, upon Condition, that he brought it not with him to the Synagogue, nor made any other Uſe it: And though the religious Factions among the Jews were many Times very violent, yet we no where find them accuſing one another of corrupting or falſifying Scripture. Nay, our Saviour himſelf (who ſo frequently reproves the Scribes and Phariſees for their Traditions and falſe Gloſſes) is never known to charge them with adulterating the Text itſelf; which he certainly would have done, had they been culpable in this Reſpect. On the contrary, both he and his Apoſtles appeal to it as true and authentick, and borrow their Proofs from it, in Confirmation of the Chriſtian Faith and Doctrine.

Or New Teſtament.

WE have an equal, at leaſt, if not a greater Aſſurance, that the Writings of the New Teſtament could never, in any dangerous Inſtances, be corrupted. For beſides that the Books of it were kept, from the Beginning, as a ſacred Treaſure, with great Care and Reverence; were conſtantly read in Chriſtian Aſſemblies, and ſoon tranſlated into moſt Languages: Beſides, that the primitive Chriſtians choſe to undergo all Manner of Torments, rather than deliver up theſe Books to be deſtroyed by their Perſecutors; and were no leſs ſollicitous to ſecure them againſt any Attempts of Hereticks: Beſides, that great Numbers of learned and inquiſitive Men ſoon ſprung up in the Church, whoſe greateſt Care it was to explain and vindicate theſe ſacred Writings, and to watch the Enemy, when he came to ſow Tares among the Wheat: Beſides all this, I ſay, there ſeems to be a providential Deſign in ſuffering ſo many Controverſies to ariſe in the very Infancy of Chriſtianity, which, however they might embroil the Peace of the Church, had certainly an happy Tendency to ſecure the Purity of thoſe Records, which compoſe the Canon of the New Teſtament.

THE Orthodox were Spies, as it were, upon the Hereticks, leſt they ſhould add or mutilate any Thing, to ſerve their Purpoſe, and countenance their Errors; and the Hereticks, on the other Hand, had a watchful Eye upon the Orthodox, leſt any of them, out of a miſtaken Zeal, ſhould make Uſe of a pious Fraud towards ſtrengthening their Cauſe. And thus, while both Parties were vigilant and attentive to each others Proceeding, it was impoſſible to make any material Alterations in the Word of God, without being detected and expoſed to the Cenſure of the World. Accordingly we may obſerve, that the Alterations, which have crept into the Holy Scriptures, are comparatively very few, and no more than what might be expected from the Negligence, and, in ſome Caſes, the Ignorance, and common Infirmities of Tranſcribers; and (which is a Matter of great Comfort to us Chriſtians) many of [n] the various Readings of the New Teſtament are either of no Moment, as lying in ſynonymous Words, and expletive Particles, or elſe are ſuch apparent Errata, as any common Reader may diſcern and correct. Nay, there is hardly one Text, which which concerns an Article of Faith, that has ſuch a different Reading, as is contrary to ſound Doctrine; or, if it be thought contrary, has not the ſame Doctrine taught in ſo many ſeveral Places of Scripture, that the different Reading of one or two Texts can be no Prejudice to the conſtant Tenor, and undoubted Reading of the other.

AMONG the many other Arguments then of the Truth and Authority of the Holy Scriptures, I can hardly account this the leaſt conſiderable, viz. that, whereas the Laws of the wiſeſt Legiſlators of the moſt powerful and flouriſhing Nations have ſeldom out-lived the Fate of the particular Kingdoms and States, for which they were contrived; the Holy Bible has continued ſo entire, under all Accidents and Revolutions of Affairs, and eſcaped with ſo inconſiderable Variations, in the many Copies and Verſions extant of it, in different Ages, and different Countries, in Compariſon of the Corruptions ſo frequent in human Writings, that it muſt be acknowledged a remarkable Inſtance of a ſignal Providence in the Preſervation of it, whereby it has plainly aſſerted its Authority, and declared it to be the genuine Word of God.

SECT. III.

Of the EXCELLENCY of SCRIPTURE.

As to its Matter in doctrinal Points.

HITHERTO we have only taken an outward View, as it were, of the Book of God; we come now to open it, and conſider its inward Excellencies, both as to the Matter, which it contains, and Manner, wherein it is compoſed.

° THAT there is one only living and true God, an immortal, independent, all-ſufficient, ſelf-ſubſiſtent Spirit; of infinite Power, Knowledge, and Wiſdom; of infinite Goodneſs, Juſtice, and Truth, and all other poſſible Perfections: That, though this Being was infinitely happy in his own immenſe and tranſcendent Excellencies, yet, to communicate of his Goodneſs to others, he was pleaſed to frame the World, with all the excellent Furniture, we behold in it: That the ſame Being, who created all Things by the Word of his Power, and upholds and preſerves them by his continual Concourſe, does, by his all-wiſe Providence, perpetually rule and direct the ſame, from the Beginning of the World, to its final Period: That, after the Formation of the Earth, he created Man, at firſt upright and innocent, and placed him in an happy State of Paradiſe, where he enjoyed Plenty of all good Things, without Labour or Sorrow: That Man, thus created, ſoon fell from his Rectitude, and miſerably defaced the Image of God upon his Soul, by liſtening to the Temptation of Satan, and wilfully diſobeying the divine Command: That, after the firſt Entrance of Sin into the World, Men by Degrees corrupted themſelves, 'till, in Puniſhment for their Incorrigibleneſs, God brought upon them a general Flood, which deſtroyed them all, except eight Perſons, left to repleniſh the World: That, after the Flood, God made particular Revelations of his Will to the Patriarchs, and gave expreſs Laws to the Nation of the Jews, conſiſting, in a great Meaſure, of Rites and Ceremonies, which were typical of a better Covenant, and pointed out the Tranſactions of the Meſſias: That, in the Fulneſs of Time, which his infinite Wiſdom had determined, God ſent his only begotten Son, to be this Meſſias and Saviour of the World, to take upon him our human Nature, in order to make a full Revelation of his Will, and offer a perfect Satisfaction for Sin, and ſo become a conſtant Mediator between God and Man: That, in Purſuance to this Miſſion, Chriſt preached this divine Doctrine for our Inſtruction, and wrought many Miracles in Atteſtation of it; lived for ſome Time a Life of Innocence for our Example, ſuffered a Death of Pain and Ignominy for our Redemption; and, after a ſhort Time, returned to Life again for our Juſtification; converſed forty Days upon Earth, for the Confirmation of our Faith; then viſibly aſcended into Heaven, for the Advancement of our Intereſt; and, not long after, ſent down his bleſſed Spirit, for the Comfort and Sanctification of his Servants in all Ages of the Church: That God has determined a Day, wherein he will judge the World in Righteouſneſs, by his Son our Saviour Chriſt, whom he hath appointed to that Office, in order to reward every Man according to his Works: That, previous to his Judgment, the Soul ſhall not only ſurvive the Body, and exiſt in a State of Separation; but even the

the Body itſelf ſhall be raiſed again, and have all its Parts, however diſperſed, reſtored to their proper Texture: And laſtly, that after the Reſurrection and general Judgment, every one ſhall receive a Sentence, according to his paſt Behaviour; they that have done well, to go into everlaſting Happineſs, and they that have done Evil, into everlaſting Burning: That the Righteous ſhall be caught up into the Clouds, and return triumphant with Chriſt into Heaven, while the Wicked are left behind to ſink into the general Conflagration, which immediately enſues, and which, as ſome imagine, is to be their Hell.

THESE are ſome of the great Principles of our Faith, and the fundamental Verities of our Religion; which are originally fetched from the Holy Bible, are eſtabliſhed and confirmed there by unanſwerable Arguments, and (what is not the leaſt Commendation of them) are Encouragements to all Virtue and Godlineſs of Living, being not deſigned to gratify Mens idle Curioſities, but to reſtore them to their primitive State, and to eſtabliſh, upon Earth, the Practice of univerſal Righteouſneſs, which would have been the Religion of Men (had they continued innocent) in Paradiſe; which now is the Religion of Angels, and hereafter will be the Religion of Saints in Heaven.

And practical. THE three great Things of more particular Concern for us to know, are the Nature of God, as it ſtands related to us; the Nature of our Duty in our ſeveral Capacities; and the Nature of the World, wherein we are to ſojourn: And of all theſe the Scripture has made a full Diſcovery, in order to teach us the Method of pleaſing him, the Method of comporting ourſelves dutifully, and of paſſing through our preſent State with Comfort and Delight.

The Knowledge of God. 1. THE Nature of God is certainly a Subject of vaſt Conſequence for us to know: And herein the Holy Scriptures have excelled all that was ever wrote, by giving us the cleareſt Manifeſtations of his Divine Attributes; by diſplaying his Juſtice in his ſevere Denunciations againſt Sin, and remarkable Judgments upon obſtinate Offenders; by declaring his Holineſs in the Rules of godly Living, and the exact Precepts of Morality that he has ſet us; and by magnifying his Mercy and Goodneſs in many Places, wherein he ſhews us, [p] with what Condeſcenſion he intreats, and with what Importunity he wooes Mens Souls to be reconciled to him; with what Favour he embraces, with what Tenderneſs he chaſtiſes, with what Bowels he pities thoſe, that have choſen him to be their God; with what Power he ſupports, with what Wiſdom he directs, with what Cordials he refreſhes the Souls of ſuch, as are dejected under a Senſe of his Diſpleaſure, and the Conſideration of their Sins: Above all, where he declares unto us that Miracle of Divine Philanthrophy, the ſending his Son into the World to ſave Sinners, and to procure their Pardon, their Peace, their Sanctification, Adoption, and Admiſſion into an Inheritance that fadeth not away, reſerved for them in the higheſt Heavens.

[q] NAY, the Holy Scriptures not only deſcribe theſe Attributes of God, but they exemplify them likewiſe by Inſtances of all Kinds. They give us abundant Proofs of his Severity and Vengeance againſt profligate Offenders, and as frequent Tokens and Aſſurances of his great Love and Kindneſs towards thoſe, that lead an holy and religious Life. They ſet before us the moſt conſpicuous Acts of his Providence, in Reference both to bad and good Men, that by the one we may be deterred from the Ways of Vice, and by the other encouraged to proceed in Virtue: And 'tis by them that we may obſerve and admire his wonderful Preſervation of his Servants in all Ages of the World, and take Notice, at the ſame Time, of the Variety of thoſe Evils and Calamities, which he inflicts upon ſuch as are contumacious and diſobedient to his Will: And therefore, if Acquaintance with God and his Dealings with Men, be a Thing deſireable to human Nature, we have all the Reaſon in the World to admire the Excellency, and adore the Fulneſs of the Scriptures, which give us ſo large and ſo compleat an Account of his Nature and Perfections.

Of ourſelves. 2. THE Knowledge of ourſelves, and of our Duty, is another Point of ſingular Importance for us to be acquainted with; and in this the Word of God is far from being defective. For it not only teaches us how vile we are in our original Duſt, but how much viler we made ourſelves by our Defection. [r] It diſcovers the true Cauſe of all that Diſorder and Diſcompoſure, which is in our Minds; the Nature and Working of that Corruption, which is in our Members; the Folly of our Imaginations, the Unrulineſs of our Paſſions, the Diſtempers of our Wills, and the Deceitfulneſs of our Hearts; and for each of theſe it preſcribes proper Duties, as Medicines dicines to recover us from the Bruiſes, we contracted by our Fall. For its Injunctions relate not only to our outward Actions, requiring us to be holy in all Manner of Converſation; ſober and temperate in the Conduct of ourſelves; and juſt and charitable; meek and affable in our Intercourſe with others; but they lay hold on our Tongue, expecting that our Words be not idle and vain, much leſs impious and profane, but ſeaſoned with Salt, and ſavouring of Piety, that they may miniſter Grace unto the Hearers. Nay, they extend themſelves to the very Heart, and, by the Evangelical Precepts of Love, Patience, and Self-denial, of Purity, Poverty, and Reſignation of Spirit, not only reſtrain the ſecret Thoughts and Purpoſes, but curb the Wiſhes and Deſires, and temper the inordinate Paſſions and Affections of our Minds.

NOR is it only in a private Capacity that the Scripture conſiders us, but, in what Relation ſoever we ſtand towards one another, whether as Huſbands and Wives, as Maſters and Servants, as Parents and Children, as Superiors, Equals, or Inferiors, it furniſhes us with Leſſons of Behaviour, and Inſtructions proper for our reſpective Conditions; "Inſomuch, that if Men would but apply their Minds to ſtudy the "Scripture, (as a Reverend Divine[t] expreſſes himſelf) and obſerve their own and "other Mens Courſe of Life, Experience would teach them, that there is no "Eſtate on Earth, or human Buſineſs in Chriſtendom, this Day on Foot, but what "has a ruled Caſe in Scripture for their Iſſue and Succeſs."

3. ONCE more, the Knowledge of the World, and the various Incidents we meet with in it, is another Subject of vaſt Importance for us to be well acquainted with, in order to make our Paſſage through it eaſy and delightful; and of this the Scriptures gives us a true Landſkip and Diſcovery. For they teach us, that many of the gay Things, which it preſents us with, are but empty Bubbles, and mere Conceits, and Caſtles in the Air: They teach us, that Proſperity is not always good; that Plenty of Riches, and worldly Abundance, is a Clog to a virtuous Mind, and Exceſs of Pleaſures a grievous Deſtruction to ſpiritual Joys. They inform us, that Croſſes and Afflictions are not evil in themſelves, but oftentimes medicinal to us, and conducive to our ſpiritual Health; that they are not the Puniſhments of an angry Judge, but the Chaſtiſements of a tender Father, which, patiently ſubmitted to, will be of ſingular Service to promote Holineſs in us now, and to prepare us for Happineſs hereafter. Of the World.

THUS the Holy Scriptures reconcile our Minds to the Miſeries and Calamities, which are our common Allotment in Life, and allay the Spirit of Diſcontent, which they are too apt to engender, by aſſuring us, that the Afflictions, which Heaven ſends upon us, are intended for our Good; are indeed Tokens of God's Favour, and (if rightly improved) of our Deſignation to eternal Bliſs: And thus moderating our Paſſions and peeviſh Reſentments, they make our Paſſage through this World quiet and eaſy; and preſenting us with the delightful Proſpect of another, make our Exit out of it full of Comfort and Immortality: Upon which Account the Word of God is not badly characterized by the Apoſtle, when he tells us, that [u] all Scripture is given by Inſpiration of God, and is profitable for Doctrine, for Reproof, for Correction, for Inſtruction in Righteouſneſs, that the Man of God, or the Man that deſigns to live godly, may be perfect, thoroughly furniſhed unto all good Works.

NAY farther, had I Leiſure to gratify the Curious, I might ſhew, that in theſe Sacred Volumes, we have not only the true Origin of the World, the Riſe of the ſeveral Nations upon the Earth, and the firſt Inſtitution of Civil Government; not only the earlieſt Account of all uſeful Callings and Employments; ſuch as Gardening, Huſbandry, Paſturage of Cattle, &c. But that all the politer Arts and Sciences likewiſe, ſuch as Poetry and Muſick, Hiſtory and Geography, Phyſick, Anatomy, and Philoſophy of all Kinds, the Arts of War, and Ornaments of Peace, are primarily to be found in this Book: That it is, in ſhort, not only a Record of all the moſt antient Learning, but a Magazine of all Learning whatever; and that he, who affects to appear in the Capacity of a Scholar, either as a Critick, a Chronologer, an Hiſtorian, a Poet, an Orator, a Diſputant, a Lawyer, a Stateſman, a Pleader, or a Preacher, muſt not be unacquainted with this inexhauſtible Fund. Of all other Parts of Learning.

BUT though the Scriptures be full and plenteous enough in the Matter, which they contain; yet do they deſerve the ſame Commendation for the Manner, where- As to its Manner of Compoſition.

[s] Edwards's Excellency of the Holy Scriptures. [t] Dr Jackſon, Vol. I. Lib. I. [u] 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17.

in they are wrote. "A Divine Compoſition, one would think, ſhould have every "Thing, that is great and noble in it; and yet the Bible (if we compare them) is "far from coming up to what the Eloquence of Rome and Athens has formerly pro- "duced. Where is that ready Flow and Copiouſneſs of Words, that Sublimity of "Thought, that Elegance of Figures, that Exactneſs of Method, that Propriety "and Perſpicuity of Expreſſion, ſo remarkable in the beſt Heathen Writers? No "Signs of theſe, but, on the contrary, ſomething flat, and low, and dark, and im- "methodical, ſeems to run through the Whole, which cannot give half that Plea- "ſure to a ſpirituous Reader, as thoſe exquiſite Compoſitions of Tully or Demoſthenes."

THIS is an Objection made by ſome, who ſeem not to deny the Divine Authority of the Holy Scriptures, yet are not ſo well acquainted with the Manner of their Compoſition: And therefore, to give a ſatisfactory Anſwer to it, we ſhall conſider it in the ſeveral Branches, wherein it ſeems to affect them.

SECT. IV.

Of the STILE and ELOQUENCE of the HOLY SCRIPTURES.

Miſtaken Notion of Eloquence.

1. WHATEVER Opinion we may have of Eloquence, or how entertaining ſoever its Charms may be, yet we widely miſtake the Matter, if we think it any Way eſſential in Divine Compoſitions. The Deſign of God, in recording his Laws, is to inform our Underſtandings, and cure our Paſſions, and rectify our Wills; and if this End be but attained, 'tis no great Matter in what Form of Language the Preſcription be given. [x] We never expect that a Phyſician's Recipe ſhould be wrote in a Ciceronian Stile; and, if a Lawyer has made us a firm Conveyance of an Eſtate, we never enquire what Elegancies there are in the Writing. When God intends therefore to do for us far greater Things than theſe; when he is delivering the Terms of our Salvation, and preſcribing the Rules of our Duty, why ſhould we expect him to inſiſt on the Niceties of Stile and Diction, and rather not account it a Diminution of his Authority to be elaborate in Trifles, when he has the momentous Iſſues of another Life, the Joys of Heaven, and the Torments of Hell, to command our Attention, and affect our Paſſions? Theſe are Matters wherein every one is concerned: And, as the Word of God was recorded for the general Benefit of Mankind, the greateſt Part of which is perfectly ignorant of Rhetorick; ſo, had it been dreſſed up with all the Embelliſhments of that Art, a few oratorical Ears muſt only have been gratified, while the Ignorant and Unlearned (which make up the Generality) had been quite rejected; and yet God himſelf has told us, [y] that not many wiſe after the Fleſh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; that he hath choſen the fooliſh and weak Things of the World to confound the ſtrong and mighty; and the baſe Things, and Things that are deſpiſed, has he choſen, yea, and Things that are not; to bring to nought Things that are, that no Fleſh ſhould glory in his Preſence.

2. WE run into another Miſtake, when we judge of the Compoſition of the Holy Scripture, from the Tranſlation we read it in, and not from its Original. For, beſides that in every Language there are certain peculiar Graces in the Contexture of the Words, and the Cadence of Periods, which are all loſt in the Tranſlation, like the Spirit of Eſſences by being poured out of one Veſſel into another: Beſides that, in antient Writings, ſuch as the Bible is, there are Alluſions to many Rites and Cuſtoms, which are now obſolete; and for this Reaſon muſt needs ſeem flat and jejune, though when they were in uſe, had a great deal of Spirit and Brightneſs in them: [z] Beſides that the Hebrew (wherein a great Part of the Old Teſtament, and ſome of the New was written) is a Language of a particular Caſt, and contains Expreſſions, whoſe Strength and Beauty can no more be tranſlated into another Language, than the Water of a Diamond can be painted, without detracting from the Original: Beſides all this, I ſay, the Tranſlators themſelves have not a little contributed to make the Stile of the ſacred Writings appear leſs advantageous, ſometimes by miſtaking the Senſe of a Word, that is of various Significations, and, at all Times, [x] Nicholls's Conference, Lib. II. [y] 1 Cor. i. 26, &c. [z] Boyle of the Stile of Scripture.

Times, by adhering too religiouſly to the Letter of the Text. For, whereas other Tranſlators have taken a Liberty to accommodate the Beauties of the Languages, whereinto they tranſlate, to the Idioms of that, wherein their Author wrote, theſe have thought themſelves reſtrained from uſing ſuch Freedom in a Divine Compoſition, and have therefore left ſeveral Hebraick, and other Foreigh Phraſes in their Verſion, which ſeem very uncouth, and give the Reader, who can look no farther, a very odd Notion of the Original: And yet we may obſerve, that the moſt elegant Piece of Oratory, that ever yet was framed, if we render it literally, and not give it the true Caſt of the Language, whereinto we are admitting it, will loſe all its Luſtre, and appear with the ſame Diſadvantage.

3. WE run into a farther Miſtake ſtill, when we confine Eloquence to any Nation, and make the Specimens, which Rome and Athens have given us, the Standard of it. [a] For, as every Nation is Miſtreſs of its own Words, to uſe or diſuſe them at Pleaſure; ſo may it, in Compoſition, diſpoſe of thoſe Words, and mould them into what Contexture it thinks proper; which Contexture, when uſed by Men of the beſt Parts and Learning, muſt certainly be accounted the current Eloquence of the Nation. We indeed, in theſe European Countries, whoſe Languages, in a great Meaſure, are derived from Greek and Latin, make them the Pattern for our Imitation, and account them the Standard of Perfection: But there is no Reaſon why the Eaſtern Nations, whoſe Languages have no Affinity with theirs, ſhould do the ſame; much leſs is it reaſonable, to expect it in Writers, who liv'd long before theſe Greek and Latin Authors, we ſo much admire, were born. 'Tis ſufficient for them, that they wrote according to the faſhionable, and eſteemed Eloquence of their own Times; but that the Holy Ghoſt ſhould inſpire them with Forms of Expreſſion, adapted to the modern Taſte, and ſuch as were utterly unknown in the Countries, where they lived, is a Thing that can never enter into any ſober Man's Conſideration. The Truth is, [b] ſince Moſes was bred up in all the refined Learning and Wiſdom of the Egyptians; ſince Solomon was excellent in all Kind of Knowledge, and, in a Manner, idolized by the Eaſtern World; and ſince Daniel's promiſing Youth was improved by the Learning of the Chaldean Sages; we have all the Reaſon imaginable to believe, that they wrote according to the Perfection of Stile, which was then in Uſe; that, though their Eloquence differs from ours, yet it is excellent in its Kind; and if we have other Notions of it, 'tis only becauſe we are unacquainted with thoſe bold Allegories, and figurative Ways of Diſcourſe, thoſe dark Sentences, ſurprizing Brevities, and inconnected Tranſitions, wherein the Nature of their true Sublime did conſiſt.

THESE Obſervations being premiſed, if we ſhould now conſider the Nature of Eloquence in general, (as [c] Ariſtotle has defined it, to be a Faculty of Perſuaſion, which Cicero makes to conſiſt in three Things, inſtructing, delighting, and moving our Reader or Hearer's Mind) we ſhall find the Holy Scriptures laying as fair a Claim to this Perfection, as any Heathen Compoſition whatever. For,

1. AS to the Matter of Inſtruction, where can we meet with ſuch a plain Repreſentation of Things, in Point of Hiſtory, and ſuch cogent Arguments in Point of Precept, as the Holy Scriptures furniſh us with? [d] Where is there an Hiſtory written more ſimply and naturally (unleſs it be the Goſpels) and at the ſame Time more nobly and loftily, than that of the Creation of the World? Where are the great Leſſons of Morality inculcated with ſuch Earneſtneſs and Perſpicuity, (except in the Sermons of Chriſt, and the Writings of his Apoſtles) as in the whole Book of Deuteronomy? [e] Where is the whole Myſtery of Devotion, in the ſeveral Forms of Confeſſion, Petition, Supplication, Thankſgiving, Vows, and Praiſes, ſo practically taught us as in the Book of the Pſalms? Where are the Rules of Wiſdom and Prudence ſo convincingly laid down, as in the Proverbs of Solomon, and the choice Sentences of his Eccleſiaſtes? Where is Vice and Impiety of all Kinds more juſtly diſplayed, and more fully confuted, than in the Threats and Admonitions of the Prophets? What Arguments, for Inſtance, can be urg'd more powerful againſt Idolatry, than thoſe, we meet with in their Writings; by ſhewing the Unity of God from his Creation of the Univerſe; by ſhewing his Jealouſy, and the Abhorrence he has to admit any a Partner in his Worſhip; and by ſhewing the Cruelty of Idol-Worſhip, which required them to give their Sons and their Daughters unto Devils? And where can we find a more lively Repreſentation tation of the Sottiſhneſs of Idol-Worſhip, than in that famous Paſſage of Iſaiah [f], where the ſame Carpenter, that hewed the Log, is ſo ſtupid as to worſhip it: He burneth Part of it in the Fire; with Part of it he eateth Fleſh; yea, he warmeth himſelf, and ſaith, Aha! I am warm, I have ſeen the Fire; and the Reſidue thereof he maketh a God, he falleth down, and prayeth unto it, ſaying, Deliver me, for thou art my God.

Entertaining. [g] 2. As to the Matter of pleaſing, this may be done, either by real Beauties, or by falſe Charms. A Diſcourſe pleaſes by its true Beauty, when every Thing is ſuitable to Perſons and Things; when there is nothing in it ſuperfluous, nothing defective, the Expreſſion high and noble, and the Deſign juſt and great. It pleaſes by falſe Charms, when it is accompanied with vain Flouriſhes, a borrow'd Luſtre, and Compariſons and Metaphors very much affected. The Holy Scripture indeed pretends not to theſe painted Ornaments, nor can we think it a Defect in Eloquence that it wants them, ſince it has a ſufficient Stock of native Beauty to recommend it. Its Hiſtory pleaſes by its Exactneſs; its Inſtructions delight, by reaſon of the lively Manner wherein they are propos'd; its Deſcriptions hit Nature, and are genuine; its Compariſons are ſometimes bold, (ſuch as Eaſtern Nations are accuſtom'd to) but always juſt and noble; and its whole Stile ſo beautified, and ſet off with eaſy and ſignificant Metaphors, as both give a Luſtre to the Expreſſion, and accommodate the Loftineſs of the Sentiment to the loweſt Capacity. [h] The Truth is, if to talk great and noble Things in plain familiar Language, be the Heighth of the Art of Eloquence, our Saviour's Skill, as well as Condeſcenſion, can never be ſufficiently admir'd, [i] who choſe to cloathe his divine Doctrines in Parables, and borrow'd moſt of his Alluſions from very vulgar Things, ſuch as were well known to his Hearers, that thereby he might work the more powerfully on them, and, by diſcourſing on obvious Matters, bring them to an affectionate Liking of the Things of God, and the great Concerns of Eternity.

Affecting. 3. As to the Matter of moving the Paſſions, if this be a Sign of true Eloquence, what Book in the World is better fitted to do it, than the Scriptures? For what do the little Warmths, which may be rais'd in the Fancy, by an artificial Compoſure and Vehemence of Stile, ſignify, to thoſe ſtrong Impulſes and Movements, which the Holy Scriptures make upon good Mens Souls, when they repreſent the frightful Juſtice of an angry God to ſtubborn Offenders, and the Bowels of his Compaſſion, and unſpeakable Kindneſs to true Penitents, and faithful Servants? What are thoſe ordinary Incitements, which profane Orators us'd, to compare with the Scripture-Motives of Heaven and Hell, which preſs ſo hard upon our Faculties, that, when duly attended to, there's no withſtanding them. Cicero, with all his Eloquence, would ſcarce have made ſo harden'd a Sinner as Felix tremble: And indeed there is ſomething of that maſculine Force and Energy in all St Paul's Speeches, and ſome of his Epiſtles, as tranſcends the common Rules of Art, and is inimitable; inſomuch, could Men be perſuaded to peruſe theſe, and other Portions of the Word of God, with the ſame critical Obſervation, that they do ſome profane Authors, I am apt to think, that moſt of the applauded Beauties would be found, the Juſtneſs of Expreſſion, and Cadence of Period, and Magnificence of Stile, equall'd, if not excell'd, in that ſacred Volume. And for a Proof of this, let us look a little into ſome of thoſe Figures and Deſcriptions, and other Ornaments of Speech, which (notwithſtanding the Diſadvantage of a Tranſlation) are obſervable almoſt in every Page.

Figurative. [k] It is look'd upon as a very florid Figure in Rhetorick, when all Members of a Period begin with the ſame Word. The Figure is called Anaphora: And yet, if I miſtake not, the fifteenth Pſalm affords us a very beautiful Paſſage of this Kind: Lord, who ſhall abide in thy Tabernacle? Who ſhall dwell in thy holy Hill? He that walketh uprightly; he that backbiteth not with his Tongue; he that honoureth them that fear the Lord,; he that ſweareth to his own Hurt, and changeth not; he that putteth not out his Money to Uſury, nor taketh Reward againſt the Innocent; he that does theſe Things, ſhall never be moved. The regular Gradation from one Thing to another, and the gradual Increaſe of the Senſe through every Member of the Period, which the Rhetoricians term their Climax, and Auxeſis, are juſtly eſteemed very beautiful Figures; and yet [l] knowing that Tribulation worketh Patience, and Patience Experience, and Experience Hope, and Hope maketh us not aſhamed, is no bad bad Specimen of the one; and that remarkable Paſſage in the Front of St John's firſt Epiſtle; That, which was from the Beginning, which we have heard, which we have ſeen with our Eyes, which we have looked upon, and our Hands have handled of the Word of Life, is a compleat Example of the other. Here is an exact Gradation thro' all the Degrees of Certainty; hearing, ſeeing, looking upon, and handling; and had this Sentence occurr'd in Cicero, it would not have paſſed without a curious Comment, tho' now it is overlooked, becauſe it is found in the Apoſtle.

THE old Orators take a great Pride in ranging finely their Antitheta: And I cannot ſee but that the ſacred Writers have manag'd theirs as well. [m] He that killeth an Ox, is, as if he ſlew a Man; he that ſacrificeth a Lamb, as if he cut off a Dog's Neck; he that offereth an Oblation, as if he offered Swine's Blood, &c. But, of all Figures, that, whereon the Poets and Orators love to dwell, and are luxuriant in, is the Hypotypoſis, or lively Deſcription; and yet we ſhall hardly find, in the beſt Claſſical Author, any Thing comparable, in this Regard, to the Egyptians Deſtruction in the Red-Sea, related in [n] the Song of Moſes and Miriam; to the Deſcription of the Leviathan in [o] Job; to the Deſcent of God, and a Storm at Sea in the [p] Pſalmiſt; to the Intreagues of an adulterous Woman in [q] Proverbs; to the Pride of the Jewiſh Ladies in [r] Iſaiah; and the Plague of Locuſts in [s] Joel, which are repreſented like the Ravaging of a Country, and ſtorming of a City by an Army: A Fire devoureth before them, and behind them a Flame burneth; the Land is as the Garden of Eden before them, and behind them a deſolate Wilderneſs, and nothing ſhall eſcape them. Before their Face People ſhall be pain'd, all Faces ſhall gather Blackneſs: They ſhall run like mighty Men; they ſhall climb the Wall like Men of War; they ſhall march every one in his Way, and they ſhall not break their Ranks. They ſhall run to and fro in the City; they ſhall run upon the Wall; they ſhall climb up upon the Houſes; they ſhall enter into the Windows like a Thief, &c. The Deſcription is more remarkable, becauſe the Analogy is carried quite through without ſtraining, and the whole Proceſs of a conquering Army, in the Manner of their March, deſtroying the Proviſion, and burning the Country; in the Horror of the People, the Scaling the Walls, breaking into Houſes, and running about the vanquiſh'd City, is ſet, as it were, before our Eyes.

THERE is nothing, wherein the Profeſſors of Stile endeavour to exert themſelves, and to ſhew the full Force of their Eloquence ſo much, as in the Repreſentation of a Battle or Combat: [t] And yet what Strains of Wit or Eloquence can draw ſuch an Idea of a glorious Combatant, as what we find in [u] Iſaiah, in the Deſcription he gives us of our Saviour's bloody, but victorious Conflict upon the Croſs? Who is he, who cometh from Edom, with dy'd Garments from Bozrah? This, that is glorious in his Apparel, travelling in the Greatneſs of his Strength? (Anſw.) I, that ſpeak in Righteouſneſs, mighty to ſave. (Queſt.) Wherefore art thou red in thy Apparel, and thy Garments like him, that treadeth in the Wine-Preſs? (Anſw.) I have trodden the Wine-Preſs alone, and of the People there was none with me: For I will tread them in mine Anger, and trample them in my Fury, and their Blood ſhall be ſprinkled upon my Garments, and I will ſtain all my Raiment. I looked, and there was none to help, and I wondered that there was none to uphold: Therefore mine own Arm wrought Salvation unto me, and my Fury it upheld me: And I will tread down the People in mine Anger, and make them drunk in my Fury, and I will bring down their Strength to the Earth. A nobler Image can hardly be formed of a Conqueror, beſmear'd with Blood, glutted with Revenge, and panting, and beſtriding his proſtrate Enemy, in the Sight of two Armies: The Character of Æneas (as it is drawn by Virgil) in his Combat with Turnus, is nothing comparable to the Life and Juſtneſs of this. Lofty.

TRANSLATIONS, as we ſaid before, are a great Detriment to the Turn of a Period, or the Majeſty of Stile; and yet we may venture to maintain, that, in St Paul's Writings (even according to our vulgar Tranſlation) there are ſeveral Paſſages, that have as much Magnificence and Sublimity of Expreſſion, and as true a Cadence of Period, even according to the niceſt Rules of Rhetorick, as in the moſt celebrated Compoſitions of the Heathens. To mention one for all, which is the Place, where the Apoſtle undertakes the [x] Vindication of himſelf: Whereinſoever any is bold, I ſpeak fooliſhly, I am bold alſo. Are they Hebrews? So am I. Are they Iſraelites? So am I. Are they the Seed of Abraham? So am I. Elegant.

Are they the Miniſters of Chriſt? I ſpeak as a Fool, I am more; in Labours more abundant; in Stripes above Meaſure; in Priſons more frequent; in Deaths often. Of the Jews five Times received I forty Stripes ſave one; thrice was I beaten with Rods; once was I ſtoned; thrice I ſuffered Shipwrack; a Night and a Day I have been in the Deep. In Journeyings often; in Perils of Waters, in Perils of Robbers, in Perils by my own Countrymen, in Perils by the Heathen, in Perils in the City, in Perils in the Wilderneſs, in Perils in the Sea, in Perils among falſe Brethren; in Wearineſs and Painfulneſs, in Watchings often; in Hunger and Thirſt, in Faſtings often; in Cold and Nakedneſs; beſides the Things which are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the Care of all the Churches. Hitherto the Diviſion and Cadence of every Period has been very rhetorical, conſonant to the niceſt Ear, and the Matter throughout truly noble, but, in the next Verſe, the Apoſtle's Eloquence is ſtill more ſurprizing: Who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is offended, and I burn not? If I muſt needs glory, I will glory of the Things which concern my Infirmities. Here the Heroicalneſs of the Apoſtle's Religion inſpires his Stile with a new Degree of Sublimity, and gives it ſuch a Turn of Grandure, and Nobleneſs of Thought, as is inimitable by Pagan Eloquence. Thoſe Infirmities, which a Pagan would have palliated by little Extenuations, for Fear of impairing his Reputation and affected Fame, our Apoſtle values himſelf upon, as the Glory of his Religion, and the brave Conqueſt of the Fleſh, by the Grace of God, under the Chriſtian Diſpenſation, which the Heathen Morality knew nothing of.

FROM theſe few Examples (for it would be endleſs to proceed in Inſtances of this Kind) it appears, that the Holy Scriptures are far from being defective in Point of Eloquence; and (what is a peculiar Commendation of them) [y] their Stile is not only full of grateful Variety, ſometimes majeſtick, as becomes [z] that high and holy One that inhabiteth Eternity; ſometimes ſo low, as to anſwer the other Part of his Character, who dwelleth with him that is of an humble Spirit; but at all Times ſo proper, and adapted to the ſeveral Subjects, they treat of, that when they ſpeak of ſuch Things, as God would not have Men to pry into, [a] they wrap them up in Clouds and thick Darkneſs, by that Means, to deter inquiſitive Man (as he did at Sinai) from breaking into the Mount; when they ſpeak of Things of a middle Nature, (which may be uſeful to ſome, but not indiſpenſably neceſſary to all) they leave them more acceſſible, yet not ſo obvious, as to be within every Man's Reach; but when they ſpeak of ſuch Truths, as are neceſſary for every one to know, there they are as plain as poſſible, and condeſcenſive to the meaneſt Capacity; it being agreeable to the Wiſdom and Goodneſs of God, that, what he has made the Revelation of his Will, ſhould contain an Exerciſe for all Sorts of Readers, to humble the Learned, and inſtruct the modeſt Chriſtian, [b] and, in this Reſpect, reſemble the Fulneſs of a River, wherein the Lamb may quench its Thirſt, and yet the largeſt Elephant not be able to exhauſt it.

SECT. V.

Of the METHOD, and PERSPICUITY of the HOLY SCRIPTURE.

Method, when invented.

WHATEVER Opinion we may have of Method, as very conducive to the Clearneſs and Perſpicuity of Diſcourſe, yet we cannot but know, that this artificial Way of Writing was an Invention but of a modern Date, in Compariſon of the Time, when ſome Books of this ſacred Volume were wrote. [c] It was a Kind of Art or Science, firſt invented and cultivated at Athens, and the Rules of it were laid down by Philoſophers for Authors to obſerve in their Writings; but it is unreaſonable to expect, that other Nations ſhould bind themſelves up to the ſame Rules, which they were utter Strangers to, and were never taught at School in the Way of their Education. We indeed in Europe, who have taken our Examples from Greece, can hardly read any Thing with Pleaſure, that is not digeſted into Order, and ſorted under proper Heads: But the Eaſtern Nations, who were uſed to a free Way of Diſcourſe, and never cramped their Notions Notions by methodical Limitations, would have deſpiſed a Compoſition of this Kind, as much as we do a School-boy's Theme, with all the Formalities of its Exordiums, Ratios, and Confirmations. And if this was no Precedent for other Nations, [d] much leſs can we think that God Almighty's Methods ought to be confin'd to human Laws, which, being deſign'd for the Narrowneſs of our Conceptions, might be improper and injurious to his, whoſe Thoughts are as far above ours, as the Heavens are higher than the Earth. Not requiſite in the Holy Scriptures.

'THE Truth is, Inſpiration is, in ſome Meaſure, the Language of another World, and carries in it the Reaſoning of Spirits, which, without Controverſy, is vaſtly different from ours. We indeed, to make Things lie plainly before our Underſtanding, are forc'd to ſort them out into diſtinct Partitions, and conſider them by little and little, that ſo, at laſt, by gradual Advances, we may come to a tolerable Conception of them: But there is no Cauſe to think that pure Spirits do reaſon after this Manner. Their Underſtandings are quick and intuitive: They ſee the whole Compaſs of rational Inferences at once; and have no need of thoſe little methodical Diſtinctions, which oftentimes help the Imperfection of our Intellects. Now, tho' we do not aſſert, that the Language of the Holy Scripture is an exact Copy of the Reaſoning of the ſpiritual World; yet, ſince they came by the Inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt, it is but reaſonable to expect, that they ſhould retain ſome ſmall Reliſh of it, as Books tranſlated into another Tongue, always preſerve ſome Marks of their Originals. And hence it comes to paſs, that though the Holy Ghoſt does vouchſafe to ſpeak in the Language of Men; yet, in his Divine Compoſitions, there are ſome Traces to be found of that bold and unlimited Ratiocination, which is peculiar to the heavenly Inhabitants, whoſe noble and flaming Thoughts are never clogged with the cold and jejune Laws of human Method. To this Purpoſe we may obſerve, that even among the Heathens, whenever their Authors repreſent an inſpired Perſon, a Sybil, a Caſſandra, or a Tireſias, they never introduce them making a ſet methodical Speech, but ſaying always ſomething noble and ſublime, that diſdains our ordinary artificial Fetters. And if the greateſt Maſters of philological Learning thought it proper to neglect all Rules and Reſtraints, in Compoſitions of pretended Inſpiration, why ſhould that be thought culpable in the Holy Scriptures, that is held ſo exquiſite in Sophocles, or any other lofty Tragedian?

BUT after all, the Holy Scriptures are far from being deſtitute of Method: For though they be not wrote upon the Formalities of the Greek and Latin Plan, (as it is impoſſible they ſhould) yet are they delivered in ſuch a Manner, as is eaſy to be underſtood, not unpleaſant to read, and, to ſuch, as are accuſtomed to Oriental Compoſitions, exceedingly beautiful. Where can we find a more methodical Hiſtory, than that of Moſes, beginning at the firſt Creation of all Things, and the Formation of human Kind; proceeding in the Account of their Increaſe, and Depravation, and almoſt total Deſtruction by an univerſal Deluge: After their ſecond Increaſe, relating their Relapſe into Idolatry, and thereupon God's electing a peculiar People to ſerve him, according to his own Appointment; and ſo recording the firſt Original, and various Succeſſes of their Progenitors, the Afflictions and Wanderings of that choſen Nation, and the Polity, which they ſhould obſerve, when they were to be ſettled in the promiſed Land? Nothing can be more regular than this; and as for the other Hiſtorians, who wrote the Tranſactions of the Jewiſh Nation, from the Conqueſt of Canaan, to the Babyloniſh Captivity, they are ſo exact in obſerving the Order of Time, and in ſetting down the Length of each Prince's Reign, that they afford us a better Foundation for hiſtorick Truth, as well as Chronology, than is to be found in the beſt Heathen Writers of this Kind. The Evangeliſts begin their Account with the Incarnation and Birth of Chriſt; they continue it with the Doctrines he preached, and the Actions he did, and conclude it with his Death and Reſurrection; in which it muſt be allowed there is no Want of Method: And as for the doctrinal and argumentative Parts of Scripture, they are digeſted in ſuch wiſe, as to make them intelligible; and, though the Partitions and Tranſitions in them are not ſo formally diſtinct, as in ſome other Books, yet they are perceivable enough by an attentive Reader, and will receive great Illuſtration from the Analytical Works of ſome Expoſitors. The Scripture methodical.

IN ſhort, if there appears to be any Defect of Method, or Incoherence of Senſe in the Holy Scriptures, it muſt ariſe, either from the Negligence of Tranſlators, Why ſometimes defective herein.

[d] Boyle, of the Stile of Scripture. [e] Nicholls's Conference.

ſlators, or our Ignorance of the Holy Ghoſt's Manner of Writing; which ſometimes, (from an accidental Word or Expreſſion) takes an Occaſion to make a Digreſſion, for our Inſtruction, which ſeems to interrupt the original Subject; and many Times carries the Prophets into a long Prediction of the Meſſias, which, at firſt Sight, may look like a cauſeleſs Ramble of Thought, but is, in Reality, a wiſe Deſign of Providence to give us, as much as poſſible, a ſtedfaſt Hope of that wonderful Mercy, which, in Fulneſs of Time, God Almighty intended for Mankind.

[f] THE Hebrew Tongue, wherein a great Part of the Holy Bible is wrote, has very many Words conſiſting of the ſame Syllables, and yet of very different Significations; it is defective too in ſeveral Moods and Tenſes, which the Languages, we are more accuſtomed to, are ſupplied with: And by this Means it comes to paſs, that, if the Tranſlator had miſtaken the Signification of the Word, he ſpoils the Connection of the Sentence; or, if he has not given the Verb the right Mood and Tenſe, (which, in a great Meaſure, he is obliged to gueſs at) there will be a plain Incoherence in the Senſe: And yet theſe, and ſuch like Omiſſions, are what generally occaſion the Confuſion we meet with.

[g] IT ought to be remember'd likewiſe, that the Diſorder, which is complained of in Scripture, is frequently occaſioned by the miſplacing of a Parentheſis: For, as there were none in the Original Hebrew, and Greek Originals, the Tranſlators have placed them as they thought fit; ſome having made long ones, ſome ſhort ones, ſome none at all, and moſt of them ſuch, as ſtand in need of ſome Correction. Nor muſt it be forgot, that the preſent Diviſion of the Scripture into Chapters and Verſes, contrived by Stephanus, and drawn up in Haſte, (though of excellent Uſe to the Memory) has ſometimes ſeparated Things, which ſhould have been united, and ſometimes united Matters, which ſhould have been ſeparated; which diſturbs the Senſe, and makes it look very wild and ſtaring to thoſe, who are not qualified to obſerve its Propriety and Connection in the Original.

Why ſometimes obſcure.

THESE are ſome of the Reaſons of the ſeeming Immethodicalneſs, and the like may be ſaid of the Difficulties, and Want of Perſpicuity, which ſome have complained of, in the Holy Scriptures, viz. that, when they do not ariſe from the Subject-Matter, which ſometimes contains Myſteries above all human Comprehenſion, and ſometimes relates to Hiſtories, Cuſtoms, and Ceremonies, which we in a Manner are quite ignorant of; they uſually happen, [h] when the Signification of Words is ambiguous and uncertain in the Original; when there occur any particular Idioms of the Hebrew or Greek Languages, not ſo familiar to us; when the Conſtruction is intricate, and the Words make different Senſes, according as they are differently joined together; when the Stile itſelf is obſcure by Reaſon of Figures, Metaphors, and Allegories, which are uſual in the Poetick Books; or when the Writer paſſes from one Subject to another, a little too abruptly, which frequently happens in thoſe of the Prophets. But, theſe Caſes excepted, (which, with a little Study and Application of our own, and Inſtruction from thoſe, to whom is committed the Expoſition of theſe Matters, may be remedied) that the Holy Scriptures are, in all Points neceſſary to Salvation, and to all Perſons of a competent Underſtanding, ſufficiently plain and intelligible, [i] we have the expreſs Teſtimony of the Scriptures themſelves, the avowed Deſign of writing them, God's frequent commanding us to read them, and our Obligation, under Pain of Damnation, to believe and practiſe them, effectual Arguments to convince us.

For the main, plain and perſpicuous.

THE Commendation that the Royal Pſalmiſt gives of the Laws of God, which were written before his Days, runs in this Strain: [k] The Law of the Lord is an undefiled Law, converting the Soul; the Teſtimony of the Lord is ſure, and giveth Wiſdom unto the Simple; the Statutes of the Lord are right, and rejoice the Heart; the Commandment of the Lord is pure, and giveth Light unto the Eyes: Moreover, by them is thy Servant taught, and in keeping them there is great Reward: But how can any Law make the Simple wiſe, enlighten the Eyes, or convert the Soul of Men, unleſs it be ſo plainly and clearly revealed, as that the Simple may be capable of apprehending it, and the Eyes or Underſtanding of Men able to diſcern the Senſe of it? In what Manner the Apoſtles behaved themſelves in the Diſpenſation of the Word, St Paul has declared for himſelf, and all the reſt: [l] Having renounced the hidden Things of Diſhoneſty, we handle not the Word of God deceitfully, but, by Manifeſtation

[f] Boyle of the Stile of Scripture. [g] Boyle, ibid. [h] Du Pin's Canon of Scripture. [i] Scot's Sermons, Vol. II. [k] Pſal. xix. 7, &c. [l] 2 Cor. iv. 2, &c.

Manifeſtation of Truth, commend ourſelves to every Man's Conſcience in the Sight of God. For if our Goſpel be hid, 'tis hid to them that are loſt, in whom the God of this World has blinded the Eyes of them that believe not, leſt the Light of the glorious Goſpel of Chriſt (who is the Image of God) ſhould ſhine unto them. Suppoſing then that the Apoſtles wrote with the ſame Clearneſs that they ſpoke, (as there's no Shadow of Reaſon to doubt it) then is it evident, that they neither, in their Preachings or Writings, affected to ſpeak obſcurely, but that their great Deſign was, ſo to manifeſt and make known the Truth, as that, by their Plainneſs and Simplicity, they might recommend themſelves to the Conſciences of all, who heard and read them.

[m] AND, indeed, ſince Jeſus Chriſt came into the World to teach Men all thoſe Truths, which God was pleaſed to reveal unto them, and was pleaſed likewiſe to have his Life and Doctrine written by his Apoſtles and Evangeliſts, in Books, which were to be the Rule and Foundation of his Holy Religion; it was agreeable to his Wiſdom, to provide, that thoſe Books ſhould be written in a diſtinct and perſpicuous Manner, to the End that Chriſtians might eaſily diſcern the Truths, they were obliged to believe, and the Rules they were to practiſe. For nothing ſeems more incongruous to the Divine Wiſdom and Goodneſs, than to ſuppoſe, that the Books which God has given Men, to teach them the Truths neceſſary to their Salvation, ſhould, by his Appointment, be written ſo obſcurely, that very few Perſons ſhould be able to underſtand them.

[n] MOST of the hiſtorical Parts of Scripture are delivered in a plain, ſimple Stile, much better adapted to common People's Capacity, than any Tranſlation of Saluſt or Thucydides would be. And though it ſometimes happens, that Commentators upon theſe Books differ, as to the Senſe of a Word, or the Deſign of ſome old Cuſtom, or the like; yet this is no more than what is common to all other Books of Antiquity: Nor does it affect theſe Sacred Records any more, than it does Virgil or Homer, or the fore-mentioned Hiſtorians, whoſe Annotators as often diſagree, as the others do about the Explanation of the Bible. Moſt of the Doctrinal Parts of Scripture are far from being obſcure, in thoſe Points eſpecially, whoſe Knowledge relates to our Salvation. The Doctrines of the Incarnation of Jeſus Chriſt, and his Sufferings for the Sins of the World; the Doctrines of future Rewards and Puniſhments; the Neceſſity of Repentance and a good Life, in order to Salvation; the common Precepts of Morality, and thoſe other improved ones of Peaceableneſs, Humility, Self-denial, &c. are ſo plainly delivered, and over and over again repeated, that Words cannot make any Thing more intelligible and more expreſs.

Myſteries in the Scripture.

IT muſt not be diſſembled indeed, that there are ſeveral Places in Scripture, which have their Obſcurities: But then there is a very good Reaſon to be aſſigned for it, viz. that the Sublimity of the Subject will admit of no greater Clearneſs. Thus, when any Paſſages relate to the Doctrine of the Holy Trinity, or the eternal Generation of the Son of God; when they ſpeak of the Nature of Angels, whoſe Beings and Operations are above the Compaſs of our Underſtandings; when they treat of Propheſies of future Events, whoſe Nature it is to be dark and obſcure; or contain Deſcriptions of the World to come, which we, in this imperfect State, can have no adequate Notions of: In theſe and ſeveral ſuch Inſtances, it is impoſſible, but that they ſhould ſeem obſcure; but this is no Fault of the Writer: It is entirely owing to the ſublime Nature of theſe noble and tranſcendent Subjects, and to the Shallowneſs of our Underſtandings, that cannot comprehend them. Wiſh therefore we may, that the Scriptures were leſs difficult to us; but then we ſhould remember, that we wiſh away that, which was deſigned by Providence, as not the leaſt Part of their Excellency: For it is not, without a Divine Intention, that ſome Paſſages are obſcure, in order to raiſe in Men a more ſacred Awe and Veneration (which they would not be ſo apt to have) for theſe Books, if nothing, but a plain Method and Tenor of Perſpicuity were diſcernable in them; juſt as the Gloomineſs of an ancient Church raiſes a devotional Reſpect within us, not to be affected by the Gaiety or Lightſomeneſs of any other Building.

[o] The Truth is, 'tis a great Commendation of this ſacred Volume, that it is not deſtitute of Abſtruſities; that there is a Freedom of Diſquiſition allowed us; and that, in ſeveral Places, every Man is at Liberty to embrace what Senſe he pleaſes of the Words, if it be but according to the Analogy of Faith, and agreeable to other, leſs intricate, Parts of this inſpired Book. This gives us an Opportunity of exciting our Care, of exerting our Induſtry, of improving our Knowledge, and of enlarging our Faculties by continual Reſearches. Beſides the Repreſentation, that it ſets before us, of the preſent Weakneſs of our Capacities; the conſtant Leſſon it teaches us againſt ſpiritual Pride; and the ardent Deſires it is always ſuggeſting, of aſpiring at that happy State, where our imperfect Knowledge now, ſhall be then improved into a beatifick Viſion.

[m] Du Pin's Canon of Scripture. [n] Nicholls's Conference, Vol. II. [o] Edwards, of the Stile of Scripture, and Boyle, ibid.

The Scriptures the only Rule of Faith.

FROM what we have hitherto ſaid, concerning the Divine Authority and Inſpiration of the Holy Scriptures, their Excellency both in Matter and Stile, their Perfection and Incorruptneſs, their Plainneſs and Perſpicuity, &c. it will neceſſarily follow, that they are the only Rule of Faith we are to apply to, and that [p] they "contain all Things (as our Church expreſſes it) neceſſary to Salvation; ſo that "whatever is not read therein, or may be proved thereby, is not to be required "of any Man to be believed, as an Article of Faith, or be thought requiſite or ne-"ceſſary to Salvation." And, [q] in Conformity to this, we aſſert, that theſe Writings are plain and perfect, as to all neceſſary and eſſential Matters, and accordingly able to put an End to all Controverſies, which relate to Salvation; that the Hereticks, as well as Orthodox, looked upon them, as the Standard and Meaſure of Chriſtian Doctrine, appealed always to them in Matters of Diſpute; and that the Fathers, in their Homilies, did uſe conſtantly to declare to the People, what they were to believe, and what they were to practiſe out of them; that the New Teſtament, in particular, is the laſt Revelation of God's Will and Counſel, to which nothing is to be added, nothing taken from it; in which there is nothing ſhort and defective, nothing ſuperfluous and redundant; in which all the Principles of true Religion, and all the Meaſures of Holy Living are contained; ſo that, while we proceed according to this perfect Canon, we are infallibly certain of the Truth of what we believe, and of the Rectitude and Lawfulneſs of what we act: And therefore our neceſſary Duty of reading it, and being daily converſant in it, together with the beſt Method of doing it to Advantage, will be no improper Concluſion of what has been ſaid on this Subject.

That they ought to be tranſlated.

NOTHING is more eaſy to common Conception, than that a Revelation of God's Will, when committed to Writing, ought to be read promiſcuouſly by all, as containing Matters of the higheſt Conſequence to all; and, for this Reaſon, ſhould either at firſt be indited, or afterwards tranſlated into ſuch Languages, as are beſt accommodated to every one's Capacity. To this Purpoſe we may obſerve, [r] that Moſes, and the other Authors of the Books of the Old Teſtament (until the Time of Ezra) wrote in the Language of their own Country, that the Jews might not want Opportunity, by reading theſe Books, of inſtructing themſelves in the Laws of God, and the Hiſtory of their Anceſtors: That after the Babyloniſh Captivity, (when Hebrew was by Degrees intermitted) learned Men began to tranſlate the Holy Bible into the Chaldean Tongue, for the Benefit of the Jews living in Judea; while the Helleniſts, i. e. thoſe that dwelt in other Countries, and were better acquainted with the Greek, made uſe of the Verſion of the Septuagint: That the Evangeliſts and Apoſtles wrote at a Time, when the Greek was in the greateſt Vogue in the Roman Empire; and did therefore chiefly make uſe of that, as the moſt general Language, wherein to publiſh the Goſpel over the Face of the Earth: That in the Parts of the Roman Empire, where the Greek was not ſo perfectly underſtood, Tranſlations were ſoon made into the Latin Tongue; and in every Country, in ſhort, where Chriſtianity prevailed, there were always Verſions in the common Language, for the Benefit and Inſtruction of thoſe, who had given up their Names to Chriſt; inſomuch that we may reſt aſſured, that there is not, at this Day, any Nation or People, that are enlightened by the Goſpel, who have not the Bible among them, or at leaſt the New Teſtament, and ſome Books of the Old, tranſlated into the vulgar Tongue. [s] Whatſoever Things were written aforetime, were written for our Learning, that we, through Patience and Comfort of the Scriptures, might have Hope; and ſince whatſoever Things were written in Languages, that were then of general Uſe, but ſince of leſs Currency among the Vulgar, were tranſlated into every one's Mother-Tongue; what ſhould the Deſign both of writing and tranſlating the Scriptures be, but that every one, even of the meaneſt Capacity, ſhould be in a Condition to acquaint himſelf with the Will of God?

And read by all.

THE Law of Moſes, I am ſure, was delivered by God to all the People in general; and what he requires them all to do is, [t] to keep the Words, which he commanded them, them, in their Hearts, to teach them diligently to their Children, to talk of them as they ſat in their Houſes, and as they walked in the Way, and when they lay down, and when they roſe up. The Sermons of the Prophets were uſually prefaced with an Hear, O Iſrael, hear O Houſe of Judah, hear O Houſe of Jacob, and all ye of Judah. Our bleſſed Saviour preached his Diſcourſes and Parables, not only to his Apoſtles and Diſciples, but to all the Multitude, and in his Conferences with the People, frequently aſks them theſe Queſtions: Have ye not read? Have ye never read in the Scripture? And, hath not the Scripture ſaid ſo and ſo? His Apoſtles direct their Epiſtles, not only to the Saints, to the Beloved, and to the faithful in Chriſt Jeſus, which in Scripture-Language includes every Chriſtian, but alſo to all that are at Rome; to all the Saints, which are in Achaia; to the twelve Tribes, which are ſcattered abroad; and to all, that, in every Place, call on the Name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. Since then the Holy Scriptures are directed to all, this not only gives a Right, but lays an Obligation likewiſe upon all, to acquaint themſelves with them: And ſince the Articles of Faith, which they propoſe, are neceſſary to be believed by all, the Precepts of Life, which they preſcribe, are neceſſary to be practiſed by all; and the Threats and Promiſes, wherewith they inforce thoſe Precepts, are neceſſary to be conſidered by all; it muſt follow, that for Men wilfully to neglect reading, what God has written for their Uſe, and thereby not only authoriz'd, but obliged them to read, argues a very profane Contempt both of the Author, and Matter of ſuch Divine Revelation; and for any Man, or Society of Men, to inhibit others from reading it, is ſhutting up the Gates of Heaven againſt them, as it were, by making bold Invaſions upon their common Right.

Abuſe in Reading them.

"IT were heartily to be wiſhed, that the groſs Neglect of converſing with theſe ſacred Oracles, were not ſo ſcandalous, ſo ungrateful, as muſt needs one Day riſe up againſt the Generality of Chriſtians, and condemn them: But it is greatly to be feared withal, that Matters will not be found much better with many, who ſpend a great deal of Time and Pains upon the Holy Scriptures, but to no good Purpoſe. Entering into the Niceties of Argument and Expreſſion, ſettling dark Points of Hiſtory, explaining difficult Texts, and reconciling ſeeming Contradictions; theſe are too often propounded as the chief End of ſome Mens Studies. Nay, well it were, if we had not others among us, who read them infidiouſly, on purpoſe to collect Matter of Objection and Cavil; who with a malicious Diligence compare Texts, in hopes to find out Contradictions; and read attentively, but to no other End, than to remark what they account Incoherences and Defects in Stile; which when they think they have ſtarted, they have their Deſign, and look no farther for any proper Solution. A groſs Spirit of Infidelity this, which loves to fortify itſelf againſt Convictions, and to turn the moſt ſalutary Medicines into Poiſon!

Requiſites for right reading them.

" How then ſhall we, who have theſe lively Oracles in our Hands, and ſuch fre" quent Exhortations to a conſtant Peruſal of them, acquit ourſelves in this Duty?
" And by what Means ſhall we be enabled to find out their true Meaning, and to " make our Acquaintance with them conducive to the Improvement of Knowledge,
" and the Salvation of our Souls?" This is an Enquiry of great Concernment to us, and in order to give it a ſatisfactory Anſwer, ſome Qualifications, we muſt know, are antecedent, ſome concomitant, and ſome ſubſequent to our profitable Reading of them. For, [x] ſince they are written in an unknown Tongue, have Strictures of moſt Arts and Sciences in them, and in many Places allude to the Rites and Cuſtoms, the Manners and Opinions, the Sayings and Proverbs of diſtant Ages, and almoſt all Nations in the World; ſince, in the very Subject-Matter of them, there are [y] ſome things hard to be underſtood, Rules of great Nicety, and Doctrines of great Sublimity, which thoſe that are unlearn'd and unſtable may wreſt to their own Deſtruction; ſome Skill in the learned Arts and Languages, ſome Knowledge of Hiſtory, and other Monuments of Antiquity, and ſome Acquaintance with the beſt and earlieſt Commentators upon obſcure Paſſages, is certainly neceſſary to a competent Underſtanding of them: And thoſe Men muſt be proud and vainly puff'd up in their fleſhly Minds, who pretend to deſpiſe all humane Attainments, in a Diſquiſition, where ſo much Learning, as well as Strength of Faculties, is requir'd.

Sincerity.

SINCE the Scriptures are acknowledg'd to be the only Rule of our Faith, and Director of our Lives, our next Care ſhould be to approach them with Simplicity, and a godly Sincerity, i. e. with a Mind diveſted of all Prejudice, and fully reſolv'd to to practiſe whatever it finds recommended as a Duty, and to believe whatever God has been pleaſed to reveal as an Object of Faith. For, without ſuch a Diſpoſition, we do but deceive our Souls, and, in every Page we read, if it be more for the Improvement of our Knowledge, than Amendment of our Lives; more for the Confirmation of our private Opinions, than the Illumination of our Underſtandings to the Acknowledgment of the Truth, we are treaſuring up Wrath againſt the Day of Wrath: And, laſtly, ſince they were written at firſt by the Inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt, we muſt implore of God the Aſſiſtance of the ſame Spirit, to conduct us to a right Underſtanding of them. [a] The Things of God (the Apoſtle tells us) are ſpiritually diſcerned: [b] And tho' the natural Man may well enough apprehend the Letter and grammatical Senſe of God's Word; yet, its Power and Energy, its inſinuating and perſuaſive Force, whereby it works on Hearts, is peculiar to the Spirit; without whoſe Aids, even the Bible, while it lies open before our Eyes, may ſtill be as a Book that is ſeal'd, as ineffectual to our Advancement in ſaving Knowledge, as if its Characters were illegible. [b] Since ſpiritual Illumination then is neceſſary, in order to the comprehending of Scripture-Truths, our great Care muſt be (after we have prepared our Minds with honeſt Purpoſes, and reverential Thoughts) with all fervent Devotion to repair to this infallible Teacher, the Spirit of God, and, with mighty Importunity, beſeech him to open our Eyes, that we may behold wondrous Things out of the Divine Law, and to conduct our Reaſon and Underſtanding right, while, with all Modeſty and humble Diffidence of our own Abilities, we are enquiring into this ſacred Volume.

Prayer.

Attention.

WHEN this is done, we are in ſome Meaſure qualified to take it into our Hands: And while we are employ'd in reading it, the firſt Thing we are to do, is to ſettle our Minds into a fix'd Attention to the Senſe of what we read; to conſider diligently the principal Deſign of the holy Penman, and the Weight of every Argument he makes uſe of to enforce his Doctrines or Precepts; to attend carefully to the Context, and be always mindful what the Words refer to, and what Coherence they have with the Things which went before, or follow in the Thread of the Diſcourſe; to compare one Place with another, or with ſeveral others, if there be Occaſion, that the Doubtful and Obſcure may be aſcertain'd and illuſtrated by thoſe that are more plain and eaſy; and, laſtly, to obſerve (as we go along) the peculiar Force and Elegancy of the ſacred Stile, which, in ſeveral Inſtances will be found (to the great Satisfaction of every impartial Reader) to riſe above the Strains of the moſt eloquent Orators of Greece and Rome.

Recollection.

THIS cloſe Attention would make what we read both inſtructive of our Underſtandings, and influential of our Lives: Eſpecially if, after we have finiſh'd the holy Exerciſe, we ſit ourſelves down, and recollect what obſervable Things, what Exhortations to Virtue, or Determents from Vice; what Promiſes to Obedience, or Menaces to the contrary; what Examples of God's Vengeance againſt Sins, or what Inſtances of his Bleſſings, upon ſuch and ſuch Duties, we have met with in the Portion of Scripture, we have juſt done reading. Our Memories at the beſt are but very weak; and, in Things of a ſpiritual Concern, extremely defective: Nor is the Defect unimprov'd by the Induſtry of the Devil, who hates our acquainting ourſelves with God, and, by one Wile or other, endeavours to ſteal the good Seed out of our Hearts, as ſoon as it is ſown. To remedy therefore this Infirmity of our Nature, and Malice of our Adverſary, we muſt keep our Minds in a Poſture of ſerious Meditation, and for ſome Time conſider the Importance of what we have read, until the Weight of it has fix'd itſelf in our Minds, above the Cunning of the Enemy, the Amuſements of Life, or our own natural Forgetfulneſs to eraſe. By this Means we ſhall become Men powerful in the Scriptures, if we take but Care, in the laſt Place, to add to our Knowledge Practice, without which, all our Reading, Attention, and Recollection, will only ſerve to inhance our Guilt. For, if after we have known the Will of God, and been inſtructed in his Laws; if, after we have been convinc'd of the Reaſonableneſs of his Injunctions, and their juſt Agreement with the Excellency of our Nature; if, after we have ſeen the Deformity of Sin diſplay'd, and God's utter Abhorrence and Deteſtation of it; if, after we have been perſuaded of the Riches of his Promiſes, and made to believe, that in keeping the Laws of Heaven there is great Reward, in breaking them, eternal Puniſhment; we ſuffer ourſelves to be entangled with our Luſts, and live in open Contradiction to our Faith,

CHAP. V.

Of the NATURE and ATTRIBUTES of GOD.

THE Rule of Religion, as it is contained in the Holy Scriptures, (which we have ſhewn to be a Revelation of the Divine Will) is ſufficiently conſidered already: And we now proceed to an Examination of the ſeveral Parts of Religion; ſuch, in the firſt Place, as are called ſpeculative, and relate to our Knowledge of the Nature and Operations of God, which, when duly conſidered, introduce the Obligation of what we call practical, as including our Duty to him, our Neighbour, and ourſelves.

The Nature of God incomprehenſible.

WHAT the Nature and Eſſence of Almighty God is, we muſt not ſuppoſe ourſelves able, after the ſtricteſt Enquiry and Application, to comprehend; this being, in the Nature of it, † impoſſible from the infinite Diſproportion between the Faculty and the Object. [a] If we will confeſs the Truth, we muſt own ourſelves ignorant of the Subſtance of all other Things, even ſuch as are moſt familiar to us, and which we think we beſt underſtand. The meaneſt and moſt contemptible Plant or Animal puzzles the moſt enlarged Underſtanding upon Earth: Nay, even the ſimpleſt and plaineſt of all inanimate Beings have their Eſſence or Subſtance hidden from us in the deepeſt Obſcurity; and therefore the Queſtion, which his Friend Zophar puts to Job, carries its own Conviction with it: [b] Canſt thou by Searching find out God? Canſt thou find out the Almighty to Perfection? It is as high as Heaven, what canſt thou do? deeper than Hell, what canſt thou know? The Meaſure thereof is longer than the Earth, and broader than the Sea.

Yet ought to be contemplated.

BUT though we muſt for ever deſpair of finding out the Almighty to Perfection, [c] yet we ought not, for this Reaſon, to give over our Diſquiſitions after him; ſince the Pleaſure and Advantages, wherewith they are rewarded, do more than compenſate for all the Pains of our Attention and Reſearches. This made holy Job, under the greateſt Conflicts of Mind and bodily Sufferings, expreſs ſo ſtrong a Deſire of ſtill purſuing his Enquiries concerning the Divine Nature and Perfections: [d] Surely I would ſpeak with the Almighty, and I deſire to reaſon with God. When [e] Moſes deſired the Bleſſing of a more particular View of God, though his Requeſt was partly refuſed, becauſe not ſuitable to his mortal State, and what might have proved fatal to him, had it been granted; yet God, we find, is ſo far from being diſpleaſed at him, that he returned him a gracious Anſwer, and vouchſafed him a Privilege, which no Man ever had before: Thou canſt not ſee my Face and live; but I will cover thee with my Hand, while I paſs by, and thou ſhalt ſee my Back-parts, but my Face thou ſhalt not ſee: Which ſeems to imply, that to meditate upon Subjects, which we cannot comprehend, and to enquire even into the Nature and Attributes of God himſelf, is far from being offenſive to him, ſo long as our Enquiries are tempered with Humility and a godly Fear. [f] Now, if it be lawful to contemplate God, in order to raiſe in ourſelves

† The Words of a late learned Author, upon this Subject, are very excellent, "As our Minds are finite, they cannot, without a Contradiction, comprehend what is infinite; for, how ſhould we comprehend the Nature of the Supreme, incorporeal Being, or how he exiſts, when we comprehend not the Nature of the moſt inferior Spirits, or have any Conception even of Matter itſelf, diveſted of its Accidents? How ſhould we attain to an adequate Knowledge of the Supreme Author of the World, when we are utterly incapable of knowing the Extent of the World itſelf, and the numberleſs undeſcried Regions, with their ſeveral States and Circumſtances, contained in it, never to be frequented or viſited by our Philoſophy? What Way ſoever we turn ourſelves, we are ſtill accoſted with Something above our Underſtanding; and if we cannot penetrate ſo far into Effects, as to diſcover them, and their Nature thoroughly, it is not to be expected that we ſhould, that we can ever be admitted to ſee through the Myſteries of his Nature, who is the Cauſe, ſo far above them all;" Behold, God is great, and we know him not, and touching the Almighty, we cannot find him out, Job xxxvi. 26. and xxxvii. 23. Wollaſton's Religion of Nature, page 39.

juſt Sentiments of his Perfections, this ſeems to be the moſt delightful Exerciſe, the Soul can enjoy on this Side Heaven. For, as Admiration is the moſt pleaſing Affection of the Mind, and bears Proportion to the Nature and Circumſtances of the Thing admired; ſo no Admiration can afford ſo much Satisfaction to the Mind, as that which has God for its Object. In our Admiration of the moſt ſublime corporeal Things, we have this to allay our Satisfaction, that they are of a limited Nature; that they are of a Nature inferior to ourſelves, and fall in our Eſteem, the more we are acquainted with them; conſequently, that they expoſe our Weakneſs, and upbraid the Imperfection of our Underſtanding in admiring them: Whereas, to be amazed and aſtoniſhed in the Contemplation of ſo glorious and infinitely perfect a Being, as God, can be no Reflection upon finite human Underſtanding, nor prove any Pall to the Appetite; ſince his Perfections are ſo immenſe, that the more Knowledge we have of him, the more Reaſon we ſhall have to love and admire him, and every freſh Diſcovery will prove an Incitement to us to diſcover more.

How to form right Notions of it.

FOR theſe Reaſons we are not only allowed, but encouraged, to make the Nature of God the Subject of our Contemplation: And though the redundant Luſtre of his Deity hinders him from being directly looked upon, yet we may behold it by Reflection; and, from the Conſideration of our own Souls, (which are ſaid to be framed after the Image of God) raiſe ſome tolerable Idea of his infinite Perfections. [g] We perceive, for Inſtance, what Thought is; but, at the ſame Time, we perceive likewiſe the Advantage of ſuch an eaſy Thought, as ariſes out of a Senſation, ſuch as Seeing or Hearing, which gives us no Trouble. We think, without Trouble, of many of the Objects, which we ſee all at once, or ſo near at once, that the Progreſſion from one Object to another is ſcarce perceptible; but the Labour of Study, and of purſuing Conſequences, wearies us, though the Pleaſure or Vanity of having found them out, compenſates the Pains, and ſets us upon new Enquiries. We perceive in our Minds a Love of Truth, and a Vexation, when we ſee ourſelves in an Error, or labouring under any Doubt; and we are ſenſible that we act moſt perfectly, when we act upon the cleareſt Views, and in the ſtricteſt Purſuance of them. Now, out of all this, we may eaſily raiſe, in our Imaginations, an Idea of a Mind, which ſees all Things by a clear and full Intuition, without the Poſſibility of being miſtaken; which always acts in that Light upon the ſureſt Proſpect, and with the perfecteſt Reaſon; and does therefore rejoice in every Thing it does, and has a conſtant Perception of all Truths ever before its Eyes. This Idea does ſo naturally ariſe from what we perceive both of the Perfections and Imperfections of our own Minds, that a very little Reflection will help us to form it to a very high Degree.

By aſcribing all Perfections to him.

1. THE firſt Step therefore, in order to do Juſtice in our Thoughts to God, and form right Apprehenſions of him, will be, to aſcribe all imaginable and poſſible Perfections to him. [h] For, ſince he is the firſt and ſupreme Cauſe, from whence all the Perfections of Being are derived, he muſt not only neceſſarily include in himſelf all the Perfections, which he hath communicated to others, but every Perfection likewiſe, that is poſſible in itſelf, muſt be poſſible to him; and what is poſſible to him, muſt be actually in him, who is the Cauſe of all Things. [i] For this Reaſon we ſay of God, that he is a Spirit, i. e. quite another Thing than Body and Matter, which, being determined by the neceſſary Laws of Motion, are incapable of Knowledge and Liberty, and conſequently of Wiſdom or Goodneſs. We ſay of him, that he is the Cauſe of all other Beings, which were by him, and are always dependent on him; that he knows all Things, and can do all Things in the moſt perfect Manner, by a Glance of his Mind, and a Nod of his Will, without long Study or Deliberation, without laborious Pains and Endeavours; and conſequently that nothing is exempted from his Knowledge, and Power, and Providence; that he adminiſters all Things in a Way of Goodneſs and Wiſdom, of Juſtice and Truth, and therefore all Things are to be referred to him, as their laſt End. Theſe, and all other poſſible Perfections, we are to conſider the Divine Nature as fully poſſeſſed of, in an higher and more excellent Degree, than our finite Underſtandings are able to comprehend: And,

By removing all Imperfections from him.

2. As we are to aſcribe all imaginable Perfections to God, ſo are we to ſeparate and remove all Manner of Imperfection from him; becauſe, to admit of any, the leaſt Shadow of Defect, is to ſtrike at the Foundation, and deſtroy one of the cleareſt and moſt eſſential Notions, we have of God. When therefore we aſcribe unto God any Perfection, that we ſuppoſe in ourſelves, we muſt, at the ſame Time, be careful to abſtract from the Notion every Degree of Imperfection, that is intermixed with it.

it. [k] Thus, when we call him by the Name of Subſtance, becauſe we have no proper Denomination of his Eſſence, we muſt ſeparate from him all Matter, and material Affections, and conceive of him, as a pure and ſimple Spirit. † When we attribute to him the Power of Activity, we muſt exempt him from the Labour and Pains, which it coſts other Beings in their Operations, and conſider him as an omnipotent and indefatigable Agent; and when we aſcribe to him the Perfections of Knowledge, our Manner of Reaſoning and Diſcourſing, our arguing Conſequences from Principles, and Effects from Cauſes, muſt be no Compariſon to him, who, at one Intuition and ſimple View, beholds all Things paſt, preſent, and to come, and in his infinite Mind comprehends them all together. [l] Above all, we muſt be careful, in our Conceptions of God, to clear him of all moral Imperfections, wherein the Holy Scriptures have more eſpecially conſulted his Honour, by removing every Thing of this Kind from his Character: For, if it be an Imperfection to be unjuſt; [m] That be far from thee, to do after this Manner; to ſlay the Righteous with the Wicked, that be far from thee: Shall not the Judge of all the World do right? If it be an Imperfection to countenance Sin; the Scripture acquits God of this: [n] Thou art not a God, that has Pleaſure in Wickedneſs, neither ſhall any Evil dwell with thee. If it be an Imperfection to ſtand in need of any Thing, or to depend on others for our Happineſs; this is likewiſe remov'd from him: [o] Can a Man be profitable to God? Or is it any Gain to him, that thou makeſt thy Way perfect? If it be an Imperfection to falſify one's Word; this is denied of him: [p] The Strength of Iſrael will not lye, or repent; for he is not a Man, that he ſhould repent: And, (to mention no more) if it be an Imperfection to be in any Reſpect mutable; this is likewiſe ſet far from God, with whom there is no Variableneſs, nor Shadow of Turning.

3. THUS in our Conceptions of God, we muſt be mindful not only to aſcribe to him all poſſible Perfections, but to ſeparate from him every Semblance of Imperfection likewiſe, and (to make our Idea ſtill more compleat) we are to conſider his Perfections in Conjunction, and ſo, as to reconcile them with one another. [q] The greateſt Miſtakes, that have yet happened in Religion, have certainly ſprung from this Root; viz. from ſeparating the Perfections of God, from conſidering them ſingly, and framing ſuch wide and large Notions of one, as have, in a Manner, quite excluded another. Among Men indeed, an eminent Degree of any one Excellency does uſually impair another. And therefore it is obſerved, that Power and Moderation, Love and Diſcretion, do not often meet together; that a great Memory, and a ſmall Judgment, a good Wit, and an ill Nature, are many Times found in Conjunction: But in infinite Perfection, all Perfections do eminently meet, and conſiſt together. [r] They are indeed but one entire Perfection, which, tho' it exerts itſelf in different Ways and Actions, and accordingly admits of divers Names, ſuch as Wiſdom, Goodneſs, Juſtice, and Mercy, yet in itſelf, is but one ſimple and indiviſible Principle of Action, whoſe Operations are all uniform and harmonious; whoſe Acts of Wiſdom are infinitely good, whoſe Acts of Goodneſs are infinitely wiſe, whoſe Acts of Juſtice are infinitely merciful, and whoſe Acts of Mercy are infinitely juſt. If this were but once rightly conſidered, it would be of mighty uſe to ſecure our Minds againſt all thoſe falſe Apprehenſions of God, which lead to Superſtition and Preſumption: For we ſhould ſo apprehend his Wiſdom and Juſtice, as not to be overwhelm'd with Deſpair, and ſo apprehend his Goodneſs and Mercy, as not to be buoy'd up with Security: And, as on one Hand, his Juſtice would protect his Mercy from being abuſed by an Over-Confidence, ſo, on the other Hand, his Goodneſs would protect his Wiſdom from being miſrepreſented by an anxious Suſpicion.

Conſider his Perfections conjunctively.

THESE are ſome Rules, which may be of uſe to govern our Opinions concerning the Attributes and Perfections of God: And we have only this one Caution more to adjoin concerning them; viz. [s] that we are not to conſider them, as having any ſeparate

[k] Scot's Chriſtian Life, Part. II. Vol. I.

† A learned Author upon this Subject has given ſome other Inſtances, which help to illuſtrate it. "Wiſdom, "ſays he, is an abſolute Perfection, as it includes in it no Imperfection, or Want of Knowledge, and ſo we abſolutely "ſay, that God is wiſe; but Learning is a Perfection acquir'd with much Study, and preſuppoſes former Ignorance of "what we have now learn'd, which Ignorance is an Imperfection; and ſo we cannot properly ſay, that God is "learned, but only that his Underſtanding far exceeds the Learning of the wiſeſt Man:" And, in like Manner, to be able to move ſwiftly from Heaven to Earth, and from one Country to another, is a Perfection in the Angels, but then it argues Imperfection, as preſuppoſing a finite Nature, and limited to one Place; and therefore cannot be aſcrib'd to that God, who is preſent every where, and filleth all in all, Eph. i. 23. Whitby on the Attributes.

ſeparate and diſtinct Subſiſtence in the Divine Nature, (for the Wiſdom of God is God himſelf, and the Power of God is God himſelf, and ſo of all the reſt) but only in the Manner of our conceiving them, according to their different and external Operations. Thus when God puniſhes, we conſider his Act, as an Act of Juſtice; when he pardons, as an Act of Mercy; and when he promiſes, as an Act of Goodneſs: And † yet we are not to conſider his Juſtice, Mercy, or Goodneſs, as flowing from ſo many Principles, really diſtinct in him, but from one pure, ſimple, and undivided Principle.

And in a more exalted Senſe.

IN ourſelves indeed, (becauſe we are limited, and compounded Creatures) there are certain Powers and Faculties, really diſtinct from one another, and from our own Eſſence, ſo that what we do, admits of a ſeparate Conſideration from what we are: But in God there can be no inherent Powers and Faculties, formally diſtinct from one another, or from himſelf. To ſuppoſe ſuch a Diſtinction, would be to deſtroy the perfect Simplicity and Unity of his Nature, and infer ſuch a Sort of Compoſition in it, as an all-perfect Being is abſolutely incapable of. [t] 'Tis from the Default of our Underſtanding therefore, (which cannot conceive Things in the Groſs) that we divide our Notions, and contemplate the ſame infinite Being under different Apprehenſions, which we call Attributes; but even what we call Attributes in God, muſt not be ſuppoſed to be of the ſame Kind and Quality, with what we term Properties in Men, but Something, that we are to underſtand in a Senſe infinitely more exalted and ſublime. [u] Thus, when we ſpeak of the Knowledge of God, we muſt not ſuppoſe that he knows Things in the Manner that we do, that any Intention or Operation of his Mind is requiſite to produce it; that he apprehends by the Impreſſion of Objects, or reaſons by the Help of Ideas, (for this were to make him a paſſive, limited, and imperfect Being) but that his Knowledge of all Things paſt, preſent, and to come, is immediate and intuitive, infinitely exceeding, and vaſtly different from the Faculty which we perceive in ourſelves, and which we aſcribe unto him, not from any Congruity or Likeneſs in the Nature of the Faculties, but from ſome ſmall Proportion obſervable in the Effects of them. And, in like Manner, when we ſay that God is merciful, we muſt not underſtand it to be Mercy, like that which is called Compaſſion in us: For, though this be a Property implanted in human Nature, for wiſe and good Reaſons of Providence, yet, as it is accompanied with Uneaſineſs, it muſt not be imputed to God, in the ſame Senſe, wherein it is aſcribed to us, but only by Way of Reſemblance and Analogy.

THE Truth is, † we perceive in our own Minds Pity and Compaſſion, Love and Hatred, Wiſdom and Knowledge, &c. and thence we transfer them to the Nature of God, and call them by the Name of his Attributes; but then we are to remember, that between theſe, when aſcribed to God, and as they are in us, the Difference is infinite: That in us they are but faint Shadows and Reſemblances, or indeed Emblems and parabolical Figures of the Divine Attributes, and that theſe Attributes are the Originals, the true real Things, and of a Nature infinitely ſuperior, and different from any Thing we diſcern in his Creatures, or that can be conceiv'd by finite Underſtanding; for, as the Heavens are higher than the Earth, ſo are his Ways higher than † As God is a pure and uncompounded Being, his Attributes of Mercy, Juſtice, &c. cannot be, as we conceive them, becauſe in him they are one. Perhaps they may more properly be called together Divine Reaſon, which, as it exerts itſelf upon this or that Occaſion, is by us variouſly denominated. Wollaſton's Religion of Nature, Sect. 5.

† "The Deſcriptions, which we frame to ourſelves of God, or of the Divine Attributes, (ſays the great Author I am now quoting) are not taken from any direct or immediate Perceptions, that we have of him, or them, but "from ſome Obſervations, we have made of his Works, and from the Conſideration of thoſe Qualifications, that we "perceive would enable us to perform the like. Thus, obſerving great Order, Conveniency, and Harmony in all "the ſeveral Parts of the World, and perceiving that every Thing is adapted, and tends to the Preſervation and Advantage of the whole; we are apt to conſider, that we could not contrive and ſettle Things in ſo excellent and proper a Manner, without great Wiſdom, and thence we conclude, that God, who has thus concerted and ſettled Matters, muſt have Wiſdom: And, having then aſcribed to him Wiſdom, becauſe we ſee the Effects and Reſult of it in "his Works, we proceed, and conclude, that he has likewiſe Foreſight, and Underſtanding; becauſe we cannot conceive Wiſdom without theſe, and becauſe, if we were to do what we ſee he has done, we could not expect to perform "it without the Exerciſe of theſe Faculties: And from hence it truly follows, that God muſt either have theſe, or "other Faculties and Powers equivalent to them, and adequate to theſe mighty Effects, which proceed from them: "And becauſe we do not know what his Faculties are in themſelves, we give them the Names of thoſe Powers, "that we find would be neceſſary to us, in order to produce ſuch Effects, and call them Wiſdom, Underſtanding, and "Fore-knowledge: But, at the ſame Time, we cannot but be ſenſible, that they are of a Nature altogether different "from ours, and that we have no direct and proper Notion or Conception of them; only we are ſure, that they have "Effects, like unto thoſe, that do proceed from Wiſdom, Underſtanding, and Fore-knowledge in us, and that, "when our Works fail to reſemble them in any Particular, as to Perfection, it is by Reaſon of ſome Want or Defect in theſe Qualifications. Thus Reaſon teaches us to aſcribe thoſe Attributes to God, by Way of Reſemblance "and Analogy to ſuch Qualities and Powers, as we find moſt valuable and perfect in ourſelves." Archbiſhop King, "on Divine Predeſtination.

than our Ways, and his Thoughts than our Thoughts. Our Powers and Faculties do more imperfectly imitate him, than a Picture does a living Man; and yet, if we reaſon from them by Way of Analogy and Proportion, they are ſufficient to give us ſuch a Notion of his Divine Perfections, as will oblige us to fear and love, to obey and adore him.

SECT. I.

Of the incommunicable ATTRIBUTES of GOD: And firſt, of his UNITY.

God's Unity.

IT may be worth Obſervation, perhaps, that the Scripture gives ſometimes the Title of Gods to ſuch as are only Creatures, upon the Account of ſome Character, or a Reſemblance, that they bear to the Supreme Being; that [x] Angels are ſo called, by reaſon of their Spiritual Nature, their Wiſdom and Strength, as well as Miniſterial Office in the Court of Heaven; that [y] Magiſtrates are ſo named, as being on Earth the Vicegerents of God, from whom they derive all their Power, and Right of Government; and that [z] Judges are dignified with the ſame Appellation, becauſe they are inveſted with a Divine Authority, and [a] judge not for Men, but for the Lord, who is with them in Judgment. But there be many, who, upon theſe Accounts, may be called Gods, yet is there but one, who, by Way of Eminence, is ſo named, i. e. one Eternal and Infinite, one Supreme and Independent, one All-powerful and All-wiſe, one perfectly juſt, and merciful, and good God: The God, who created all Things for his own good Pleaſure, and on whoſe Will depends every Moment their Preſervation; the God, by whoſe Providence every Thing is governed, by whoſe Wiſdom every Thing is directed, and by whoſe Bounty every Thing is fed: [b] The Father of Mercies, and God of all Comfort; whoſe Title in Scripture is, The Moſt High God, God over all, God of Gods, and Lord of Lords. And that there can be but one ſuch God as this, and no more, will appear from a brief Conſideration of ſome of theſe Attributes. For,

Proved from his other Attributes.

IF God be a ſelf-exiſtent Being, it is impoſſible there ſhould be more than one: For to ſuppoſe two, or more diſtinct Beings, neceſſarily exiſting of themſelves, and independent from each other, implies this plain Contradiction, viz. [c] that each of them being independent, they may either of them be ſuppoſed to exiſt alone; ſo that it will be no Contradiction to imagine the other not to exiſt, and conſequently, neither of them will be neceſſarily exiſting. Whatſoever therefore exiſts neceſſarily, is the one ſimple Eſſence of the ſelf-exiſting Being; and whatever differs from that, is not neceſſarily exiſting; becauſe in abſolute Neceſſity there is no Difference or Diverſity of Exiſtence. Other Beings there may be innumerable, beſides the one infinite, ſelf-exiſtent; but no other Being can be ſelf-exiſtent, becauſe it would be individually the ſame, at the ſame Time that it is ſuppoſed to be different.

IF God be an infinitely perfect Being, 'tis impoſſible to imagine two ſuch Beings at the ſame Time: [d] Becauſe, either they muſt have ſeveral Perfections, or the ſame. If they have ſeveral Perfections, it will follow, that neither of them can be God, becauſe neither of them have all poſſible Perfections: If they have both equal Perfections, neither of them again can be God, i. e. abſolutely perfect, becauſe it is not ſo great a Privilege to have the ſame equal Perfections, in a Kind of Partnerſhip with another, as to be alone, and ſuperior to all others; and to ſuppoſe one of them, (whether with ſeveral, or the ſame Kinds of Perfections) inferior to the other, ſufficiently ſhews, that one of them is not properly God, becauſe not Supreme; for Supremacy over all other Beings comes ſo naturally into the Idea of infinite Perfection, [e] that we cannot ſeparate the one from the other. A Being therefore, that has not all other Beings inferior and ſubordinate to it, cannot be infinitely perfect; and what is not infinitely perfect, cannot be God.

From Reaſon.

THERE is no Neceſſity then for ſuppoſing more Gods than one; for one infinite Being is ſufficient to all the Purpoſes, that we can imagine, and more may but occaſion Confuſion. If we can ſuppoſe more than one, inveſted with a ſupreme Power, we may ſuppoſe a thouſand; and, as they muſt all be ſuppoſed to have a Freedom of Will, they may poſſibly determine not only different, but contrary Things; and what then would the Conſequence be? Why, theſe many Gods, willing different and contrary Things, would diſturb the Courſe of Nature, and put the whole Frame into Diſorder. But now, [f] the plain Connexion and Dependance of one Thing upon another, through the whole material Univerſe; through all Parts of the Earth, and in the viſible Heavens; the Diſpoſition of the Air, and Sea, and Winds; the Motions of the Sun, and Moon, and Stars; and the uſeful Viciſſitudes of Seaſons, for the regular Production of the various Fruits of the Earth, have always been ſufficient to make it evident, even to mean Capacities, that all Things are under the Direction of one Power, under the Dominion of one God, to whom the whole Univerſe is uniformly ſubject.

THE wiſeſt of the Heathen World, therefore, (among the Multitude of their inferior Gods) did always acknowledge one ſupreme Deity, in whom they placed their greateſt Confidence, and made him the Object of their Adorations. [g] The Egyptians of old (though of all others the moſt infamous for their Multiplicity of Gods) did nevertheleſs aſſert one Maker, and chief Governor of the World, under whom they ſuppoſed ſeveral ſubordinate Deities, who preſided, as his Deputies, over ſeveral Parts of the Univerſe. Orpheus, indeed, gives us an Account of the Genealogy of the Gods, whom he reduces to the Number of three hundred and ſixty; but he afterwards (in a Diſcourſe to his Son Muſæus, and other of his Friends) recanted his abſurd Fables, and aſſured them, "That there was but one God, of himſelf, and none "beſides him; by whom all other Things were made, and on whom they did "depend: For though Men differ much in their Opinions about other Matters, "(as we have it in [h] Maximus Tyrius) yet in this they all agree,——that there is "one God, the King and Father of all, under whom there are leſſer Deities, who "are admitted to ſome Share of Government with him."

From Scripture.

THE Inſtitution of theſe leſſer Deities was probably from a Deſire, in the firſt and rude Ages of the World, to perpetuate the Manners of ſuch heroick Perſons, as had, either by their Valour or Inventions, proved beneficial to Mankind; and were thereupon thought fit to be advanced to the higheſt Honour after their Death, and admitted (in a ſubordinate Way) to ſome Share of Government, eſpecially the Protection of their own Countries. And to this the Apoſtle ſeems to allude, when he tells us, [i] there are Gods many, and Lords many, (i. e. Angels in Heaven, and Magiſtrates on Earth, as well as the departed Souls of Heroes) but theſe are but figuratively ſo called; To us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all Things, and we in him, and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom are all Things, and we by him. To which Purpoſe the Pſalmiſt profeſſes, [k] Among the Gods there is none like unto thee, O Lord,——thou art God alone; by his Servant Moſes God himſelf declares, [l] I, even I am he, and there is no God with me; and by the Mouth of his holy Prophet, [m] There is no God beſides me, a juſt God and a Saviour. There is none beſides me; for I am God, and there is none elſe; I am the firſt, and I am the laſt, and I know no other. And therefore the firſt of all the Commandments is; Hear, O Iſrael, the Lord our God is one Lord *.

An Objection anſwered.

"But if the Declarations in Scripture are ſo poſitive, "that there is only one God, and, beſides him none elſe, how come we to aſcribe Di"vinity to two other Perſons, our bleſſed Saviour and the Holy Ghoſt, when the "Terms are apparently ſo excluſive, that they will admit of no other?" Now † it is a Rule and Maxim, and may be proved by many Inſtances in ſacred and profane Writings, that excluſive Terms are not to be interpreted with the utmoſt Rigour, ſo as to leave no room for tacit Exceptions, ſuch as Reaſon and good Senſe will eaſily ſupply. Thus, for Inſtance, when it is ſaid, [n] that no one knoweth the Father, but the Son, and no one knoweth the Son, but the Father, were we to interpret theſe excluſive Terms with the utmoſt Strictneſs, it would follow, that the Father does not know himſelf, nor the Son himſelf, but no Man of common Senſe will think ſo of either. In like Manner, when it is ſaid of the Son, that [o] he had a Name written, which no one knew but himſelf. Upon a ſtrict Conſtruction of theſe Words, it will follow, that the Father himſelf was ignorant of what was known to the Son. And again, when St Paul declares, [p] I determine not to know any thing among you, ſave Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucified, according to a rigorous Acceptation of what the Apoſtle

Apoſtle ſays, he muſt have been ignorant of God the Father, and of many the moſt important Articles of the Chriſtian Religion. So that theſe Inſtances plainly ſhew, that, in many Caſes, excluſive Terms muſt admit of a favourable Conſtruction: And therefore, when it is ſaid of the Father, that he only is God, the excluſive Term only need not be ſuppos'd to affect the other two Perſons in the Godhead: They may ſtill be tacitly underſtood, as they certainly are, in all the Expreſſions of Unity, which we meet with in Scripture; unleſs it be better to ſay, that the Word God, in all ſuch Places, is to be underſtood in the indefinite Senſe, and abſtracted from the particular Conſideration of this or that Perſon, in like Manner as the Word Man often ſtands not for any particular human Perſon, but for the whole Species, or human Nature in General. Since therefore the Doctrine of the Trinity (as we ſhall prove in its proper Place) is demonſtrable from other Scriptures, the Suppoſition is not without Foundation, that the true and real Meaning of the Word God, is the Divine Nature, or Godhead, as oft as the Context, or other Circumſtances do not confine its Signification to one Perſon only. Now, if according to this Acceptation, there be no Gods but one, the proper Reſult of this Conſideration is, not to make to ourſelves any more.

THE Jews, to whom this Precept was primarily given, by their Abode in the Land of Egypt, had contracted a ſtrange Inclination to Idolatry, and, according to the Humour of the Country, were wont to worſhip ſeveral Kinds of living Creatures, and ſometimes Images made of Stocks and Stones. There is not the like Danger of our tranſgreſſing in this Manner; but there is another Kind of Idolatry, by Divines called moral, wherewith we are all liable to be overtaken: For whatever we immoderately ſet our Hearts upon, whatever we love, or fear, or deſire, or truſt in to Exceſs, that we make our Idol, and in ſome Meaſure our God. And accordingly the Apoſtle, in a very elegant Figure, tells us, that [q] Covetouſneſs is Idolatry, and therefore [r] charges them, who are rich in this World; not to truſt in uncertain Riches, but in the living God. And, becauſe all leud and debauch'd Perſons have no Regard, no Intention, no Deſire to pleaſe God, but are wholly intent upon pleaſing and gratifying their own corrupt Inclinations, and are entirely Servants and Slaves to their Pleaſures, he therefore very elegantly repreſents theſe likewiſe as figurative Idolaters, [s] whoſe God is their Belly, and elſewhere, [t] who ſerve not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, but their own Belly. The like is to be ſaid of all wilful Sinners, of whatever Denomination, who take Delight in the Practice of what is vicious and unlawful; they make their Luſts their chief Good, and, in ſo doing, diſparage the God of Heaven, whom alone they are bound to [u] love with all their Hearts, and with all their Minds, and with all their Strength. If there be no Gods but one, the Reſult again is, that we place all our Truſt and Confidence in him, who alone is able to ſupport, and ſave us to the uttermoſt; to which Purpoſe we find God himſelf, in the Words of the Prophet, applying the Conſideration of his Unity. [x] I am God, and none elſe, there is none other beſides me; and therefore look unto me, and be ſav'd, all the Ends of the World. And indeed to what other Being can we turn ourſelves in any Time of Danger or Diſtreſs. Angels are limited, Men are impotent, Idols are Vanity; and the Saints know nothing of us; he only, whoſe Power no Strength can reſiſt, whoſe Wiſdom no Craft can over-reach, whoſe Juſtice no Art can evade, whoſe Goodneſs no Malice can pervert, and whoſe Being no Time can out-laſt, is the proper Saviour and Defender of Mankind, under which Conſideration the Royal Pſalmiſt could triumphantly ſay, [y] The Lord is my Light, and my Salvation, whom then ſhall I fear? The Lord is the Strength of my Life, of whom ſhall I be afraid? Though an Hoſt ſhould encamp againſt me, my Heart ſhall not fear; though War ſhould riſe againſt me, in this will I be confident. The whole Univerſe is under his Dominion: All ſecond Cauſes are at his Diſpoſal: Angels are his miniſtring Spirits: Men his appointed Inſtruments; his Preſence and Inſpection is always with us; the Shadow of his Wings always over us; and his providential Care always extended to us; and being under this Perſuaſion, we may take up again the Pſalmiſt's Reſolution, and ſay; [z] I will lay me down in Peace, and take my Reſt; for it is the Lord only that maketh me to dwell in Safety.

We ought therefore to place our Heart and Affections on God only.

SECT.

SECT. II.

Of the ETERNITY of GOD.

God's Eternity, what.

BY Eternity[a], in this Place, we mean an infinite Duration, which never had a Beginning, and will never have an End. But there are ſeveral Texts in Scripture, wherein the Words Eternal and Everlaſting are to be underſtood in a more limited Signification. For [b] ſometimes they ſignify no more, than Things of a long Continuance or Duration. This indeed is the loweſt Senſe of the Words, and in this Senſe it is, that the Hills and the Mountains are called [c] everlaſting, merely becauſe they are ſtrong, and as permanent as the Frame and Conſtitution of the Earth. Sometimes they denote a Duration continuing as long as the Subject exiſts, and then putting it into a State, out of which it ſhall never be reſtored, even as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the Cities about them, are ſet for an Example, ſuffering the Vengeance of eternal Fire, i. e. of ſuch a Fire, as irrecoverably deſtroy'd theſe wicked Cities, and ended in their final, or eternal Overthrow. At other Times they ſignify, in an higher Senſe, a Duration not figuratively, but properly and literally everlaſting, without End, though not without Beginning; for thus Angels and the Souls of Men are eternal, or immortal, and the Happineſs they enjoy in Heaven is everlaſting Life, an endleſs and eternal Weight of Glory. But the laſt, and higheſt, and moſt abſolutely perfect Senſe of the Words, is, when they ſignify a Duration of inexhauſtible and never-failing Permanency, both without Beginning, and without End; and not only ſo, but including likewiſe neceſſary and independent Exiſtence, ſo as, in no Manner whatever, to derive from any other; for what depends not upon any Thing external for its Exiſtence, muſt always unalterably be the ſame; ſince, having no other Cauſe of its Exiſtence, but the abſolute Neceſſity of its own Nature, it muſt of Neceſſity have exiſted from everlaſting without Beginning, and muſt of Neceſſity exiſt to everlaſting without End.

Proved from Reaſon.

[d] SINCE God then is a Being, that never depended on any, what ſhould make him ceaſe to be what he has been, to all Eternity, or put any Stop to his own Perfections? He cannot deſire his own Deſtruction; that is againſt the univerſal Nature of all Things to ceaſe from Being, if they can preſerve themſelves. He cannot deſert his own Being; becauſe he cannot but love himſelf, as the beſt and chiefeſt Good. There is Nothing in his Nature, that can introduce any Decay; becauſe he is infinitely ſimple, without any Mixture. There is nothing without, that can controul or circumvent him; becauſe of his infinite Power and Wiſdom: And as he has no Original of his Exiſtence, but his very Being is inſéparable from his Nature, ſo he ever was, and ever muſt be. [e] To be, we muſt allow, is ſome Degree of Perfection; to continue in Being is a greater Degree of that Perfection; and therefore it is evident, that, when we conceive of God as the moſt perfect Being, we muſt conceive him to be infinite in this Perfection alſo, as well as in others; and that as his Power is not bounded by any oppoſite Strength, nor his Immenſity terminated by any Bounds of Place, ſo neither is his Duration limited by any Periods of Time, but that he exiſts, and lives, and governs all Things from everlaſting to everlaſting. And therefore we may obſerve farther, that the wiſeſt of the Heathen Nations, partly by their Aſſertions, and partly their Symbols and Hieroglyphicks, always expreſſed their Belief of this Article. [f] The antient Egyptians repreſented God by a Circle, which is without Beginning and End: The antient Romans built round Temples to their Gods, to ſignify the ſame Thing; and, to remind his Diſciples of the like Doctrine, it was an Injunction of Pythagoras, that, in their Worſhip of God, they ſhould always move in a circular Motion. Though therefore their Poets might talk of the Birth and Genealogy of their Gods, [g] yet what they ſay of this Kind is only to be aſcribed to their Heroes and Dæmons; their Supreme God they always look upon as eternal: And therefore their known Epithet for him was ἀθάνατος, immortal, and their uſual Oath ran thus, Deos teſtor immortales, I call the immortal Gods to witneſs the Truth of what I ſay. Nay, Lucretius himſelf (who has undertaken to repreſent to the World the Doctrine of Epicurus, and has robbed the Divinity of as many Perfections, as he well could) gives us notwithſtanding this Account of it, [h] that 'twas abſolutely lutely neceſſary to the Nature of the Gods, that they ſhould paſs an Eternity in profound Peace and Quiet: For to ſpeak of a God, that may be mortal and corruptible, (according to the Senſe of † Plutarch) is ſo monſtrouſly abſurd, that a Man cannot deviſe any thing more wild and extravagant.

From Scripture.

BUT, after all, it muſt be owned, that the richeſt Diſcoveries we have of this Doctrine, are from the Holy Scriptures; which not only repreſent it in the cleareſt Light, but from the Conſideration of this Attribute excite likewiſe the moſt pious and moving Senſations in the Heart. [i] The Royal Pſalmiſt, ſpeaking of this Divine Attribute, expreſſes himſelf after a Manner ſuitable to the Light that ſhines through his Compoſitions: [k] Lord, thou haſt been our Refuge from one Generation to another: Before the Mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadſt formed the Earth, and the World, even from Everlaſting to Everlaſting thou art God. And again, to denote the perpetual Continuance of his Duration: [l] Thy Years are throughout all Generations: Of Old, thou haſt laid the Foundations of the Earth, and the Heavens are the Work of thy Hands: They ſhall periſh, but thou ſhalt endure; yea, all of them ſhall wax old, as a Garment, and as a Veſture ſhalt thou change them, and they ſhall be changed; but thou art the ſame, and thy Years ſhall have no End. There are ſeveral Paſſages in Iſaiah anſwerable to the Sublimity of Thought, and Strength of Expreſſion, that diſtinguiſh that Prophet: [m] Haſt thou not known, haſt thou not heard, that the everlaſting God, the Lord, the Creator of the Ends of the Earth, fainteth not? For, thus ſaith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth Eternity, I am the firſt, and I am the laſt, and beſides me there is no God. And to mention one Paſſage out of the New Teſtament, where God is repreſented as ſpeaking himſelf of his eternal Duration: [n] I am Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the Ending, ſays the Lord; which is, and which was, and which is to come; [o] for one Day with the Lord, ſays St Peter, is as a thouſand Years, and a thouſand Years as one Day; which Words, however Interpreters have troubled themſelves about them, as being afraid of a Contradiction in them, do plainly import no more than this; that ſuch is the infinite Duration of God, that all the Meaſures of Time can bear no Proportion to it: [p] For he is great, and we know him not, neither can the Number of his Years be ſearched out. [q] When therefore we find the Spirit of God in Scripture condeſcending to our Capacities, in ſignifying the Eternity of God by Days and Years, (which are Terms belonging to Time, whereby we meaſure it) we muſt no more believe that God is bounded by Time, or has Succeſſion of Years, becauſe of theſe Expreſſions, than we can conclude him to have a Body, becauſe ſeveral Members are aſcribed unto him, the better to help our Conceptions of his glorious Nature and Operations. Now, if God be eternal, † it will hence follow, that he is independent in his Being, and all his Attributes. For he, that is the firſt of Beings, could not receive his Being, or thoſe Divine Perfections, that neceſſarily exiſt together with it, from any other Being, that exiſted after him, becauſe the Cauſe muſt always be before the Effect; and therefore the Apoſtle argues rightly, when he makes the Enquiry, [r] Who hath firſt given to him, that he may repay him? For of him, and through him, and to him, are all Things; to whom be Glory for ever, Amen.

Reliance on God, and fearing him, the Reſult of this Attribute.

WHAT we are to learn from the Conſideration of God's Eternity then, is in the Words of the Prophet, [s] Truſt ye in the Lord for ever; for in the Lord Jehovah there is everlaſting Strength. When we truſt in Men, we have no real Foundation for our Confidence: Their Kindneſs may change, their Power faint, or, at leaſt, their Lives may vaniſh, and diſappoint our Expectations. And therefore the Pſalmiſt's Advice is, [t] not to truſt in Princes, nor in any Child of Man, in whom there is no Help; for when his Breath goes forth, he returneth to his Earth, and then all his Thoughts, of Favour and Kindneſs to us, periſh; but bleſſed is he, that hath the God of Jacob for his Help, and whoſe Hope is in the Lord his God. In like Manner, when we fear Man, we do it without Reaſon, becauſe the Wrath of Man is deſpicable; it has its Limits and Bounds; it can only extend to the Body; it expires with this Life, and cannot follow us beyond the Grave; and therefore the Advice of God, by the Mouth of his Prophet, is, [u] Fear ye not the Reproach of Men, neither be afraid of their reviling; for the Moth ſhall eat them up like a Garment, and the Worm ſhall eat them up like Wool. But now the Wrath of the eternal God reaches not only the Body, but the Soul likewiſe; is not only confined to this Life, but purſues us to the other World; and, after a thouſand and ten thouſand Ages, is ſtill as violent and unappeas'd, as it was the firſt Moment it fell upon us; and therefore our Saviour's Admonition is founded upon the Rules of human Prudence: [x] Be not afraid of them, that kill the Body, and after that have no more that they can do; but I will forewarn you whom you ſhall fear; fear him, who, after he hath killed, hath Power to caſt into Hell; yea, I ſay unto you, fear him.

SECT. III.

Of the IMMENSITY of GOD.

God's Immenſity, what.

BY the [y] Immenſity of God, we mean that infinite Greatneſs, whereby his Being has no Bounds or Limits; but does every Way ſpread and diffuſe itſelf, beyond what we can imagine. We cannot therefore define the Preſence of God by any certain Place, ſo as to ſay, Here he is, but there he is not; nor by any Limits, ſo as to ſay, Thus far his Being reacheth, and no farther; but he is every where preſent, after the moſt infinite Manner, in the darkeſt Corners, and moſt private Receſſes. The moſt ſecret Cloſet that is in the World, the Heart of Man, Darkneſs and Privacy, cannot keep him out; the Preſence of another Being, even of a Body, (which is the groſſeſt Subſtance) cannot exclude him; the whole World doth not confine him; but he fills all the Space, that we can conceive beyond this viſible World, and infinitely more, than we can imagine.

Proved from Reaſon.

AND indeed, if we conſider that God is the ſole Creator of the World, we cannot but imagine, that he muſt be preſent in every Part of it: [z] For if there be any Part of the World, from which God is excluded, whatever Cauſe it be, that does exclude him, limits his Power, and reſtrains him in his Operations. Now, ſince neither the Power, nor any other Attribute of God, is really diſtinguiſhed from his Eſſence, but only in our Manner of conceiving it; wherever his Power acts, there muſt his Eſſence be, and conſequently, if he created all Things, his Eſſence muſt of Neceſſity always have been, and muſt always continue to be of the ſame Extent with the whole Creation. Nay, had it been his good Pleaſure to have carried the Creation to a farther Extent, and added infinite Worlds more to the preſent Syſtem, this would have been no Limitation to his Eſſence, nor would the Heaven of Heavens, and all the immenſe Spaces, we may conceive beyond them, have ever been able to contain it.

IF we conſider farther, that God is not only Creator, but Conſerver of the Univerſe, [a] we muſt neceſſarily conclude, that he is every where: For this is the Argument of the great Apoſtle, when he diſputed with the learned Athenians; He is not far from every one of us, i. e. he is intimately near, and preſent with us; for in him we live, and move, and have our Being. [b] If Things live, God is in them, and gives them Life: If Things move, God is in them, and gives them Motion: If Things have any Being, God is in them, and gives them Being: And ſince by him all Things and Perſons, at the greateſt Diſtance from one another, are preſerved and ſuſtained, he, of Neceſſity, muſt be in every Place, to aſſiſt and concur with them in their ſeveral Operations. [c] So that to ſuppoſe the Divine Eſſence † to be limited or confined, and his Preſence any where excluded, is to contradict this neceſſary Perfection [x] Luke xii. 4, 5. [y] Tillotſon's Sermons. [z] Fiddes's and Uſher's Body of Divinity.

[a] Edwards's Body of Divinity. [b] Charnock, on the Attributes. [c] Tillotſon's, ibid.

† A learned Author upon this Subject draws the Argument from one Perfection in the Divine Nature to another, in this Manner: ——— "It is to be obſerved, ſays he, that, if Being or Exiſtence be at all a Perfection, (as it manifeſtly is the Foundation of all other Perfections) it will follow, that in like Manner, as continuing to exiſt through larger Periods of Time, ſo alſo Extent of Exiſtence (and conſequently of Power) through larger Portions of Space, is the having a greater Degree of this Perfection. And as that Being, which is abſolutely perfect, muſt, with regard to Duration, be eternal; ſo, in reſpect of Greatneſs, it muſt likewiſe be immenſe. Otherwiſe its Perfections will be limited (which is the Notion of Imperfection.) And, by being ſuppoſed to be finite in Extent, the Perfection of its Power will as totally be deſtroyed, as it would be, ſuppoſing it to be temporary in Duration: For as any Being, which is not always, at the Time, when it is not, is as if it never was; ſo whatever Being is not every where, in thoſe Places, where it is not, (to all the Purpoſes of Power and Activity) is as if it had no Being in any Place at all; becauſe no Being can act where it is not, any more than when it is not. To frame to ourſelves therefore a true Idea of this Attribute, we muſt reaſon in this wiſe; ——Since all created Beings, by the neceſſary Condition of their Nature, are finite and circumſcribed, they can be preſent but in one determinate Place at once, but then the larger the Space is, which any Creature occupies, the greater Share it has of the Perfection of Extent, and therefore by inlarging this Perfection to its utmoſt Poſſibility, we come to aſcribe to God (the moſt perfect of all Beings) Infinity or Immenſity, and are led to conceive of him, as a Being, that fills all Things, and that contains all Things within his own boundleſs Nature; that is not defined or circumſcribed by any Space, but co-exiſts with, and is preſent with all Things, and infinitely beyond whatever we can imagine, without Limits, and without Bounds." Clarke's Serm. Vol. I.

fection of God, his univerſal Providence, which, implying in it his Omniſcience and Omnipotence, muſt likewiſe include his Omnipreſence.

WE find that all finite Beings have a finite Knowledge, and a finite Power; nor can it be conceiv'd, how infinite Underſtanding and Power can be founded any where elſe, but in an infinite Eſſence. To have an infinite Knowledge of all Things, that are moſt ſecret and hidden; to be able to do all Things; to ſteer and govern the Actions of all Creatures; and to have a conſtant and watchful Care of them, ſeems, in all Reaſon, to require immediate Preſence: And accordingly we may obſerve, that the wiſeſt of the Heathen World always eſpouſed this Doctrine: [d] That God is, as it were, a Soul paſſing through, and inſpiring all Nature; that Men ought to believe that the Gods ſee all Things, and that all Things are full of them; inſomuch, [e] that which Way ſoever thou turneſt thyſelf, ſays Seneca, thou ſhalt find God meeting thee; for nothing is void of him: He himſelf fills all his Works, and is preſent with the whole Creation. [f] Whither then ſhall I go from thy Spirit? ſays holy David, in a rapturous Contemplation of this Attribute, and whither ſhall I flee from thy Preſence? If I aſcend up to Heaven, thou art there; if I make my Bed in Hell, behold thou art there; if I take the Wings of the Morning, i. e. if I could flee as ſwift as the Morning Light, which darts in a Moment from under one End of Heaven to the other, and dwell in the uttermoſt Parts of the Sea, even there ſhall thy Hand lead me, and thy Right Hand ſhall hold me: For [g] I am a God at Hand, and not a God afar off; I fill Heaven and Earth, ſaith the Lord; and can any one hide himſelf in ſecret Places, that I ſhall not ſee him? [h] Tho' he dig into Hell, thence ſhall my Hand take him; tho' he climb up to Heaven, thence will I bring him down; and tho' he hide himſelf in the Top of Carmel, I will ſearch and take him out from thence. From Scripture.

THUS fully do the Holy Scriptures, in Conjunction with the Voice of Reaſon, declare the Immenſity of God's Eſſence, and Ubiquity in his Preſence; nor is this Truth any way impair'd by thoſe Expreſſions, where he is ſaid to dwell in Heaven, to draw near unto us, or depart from us: For ſince (as we ſaid before) there is a Difference to be made between his eſſential and majeſtick Preſence; [i] his eſſential being equally and alike in all Places, while his majeſtick diſcovers itſelf by an extraordinary Manifeſtation of his Glory chiefly in Heaven; there is likewiſe his gracious Preſence, which is attended with miraculous Effects of his Favour, and Kindneſs, and Aſſiſtance, whereby he is ſaid to dwell in the Hearts of good Men, and with them that are of an humble and contrite Spirit. When therefore God is ſaid to make Heaven his Habitation, it muſt be meant of his majeſtick Preſence, which diſplays itſelf, both in its Operations and Attendants, in a more conſpicuous Manner there; and when he is ſaid to draw near to, or forſake us, it muſt be underſtood of his gracious Preſence, which is exhibited, or withheld, according to our Behaviour. But, in both Caſes, his eſſential Preſence is the ſame: [k] And therefore when we are told, that [l] Heaven is his Throne, we are aſſur'd, at the ſame Time, that the Earth is his Footſtool. He dwells on high in regard of the Excellency of his Name; but he is in all Places, in regard of the Diffuſion of his Preſence: He is far from us, as he is our angry Judge; and he is near to us, as he is our gracious Benefactor: He departs from us, when he leaves us to the Frowns of his Juſtice; and he comes to us, when he encircles us in the Arms of his Mercy: But ſtill we are to remember, that he was equally preſent with us in both Diſpenſations, in regard of his Eſſence. Nor is his Glory and Majeſty at all diminiſh'd, by ſuppoſing him to be always actually preſent in all, even in impure Places; [m] for as the Beams of the Sun are no Way ſoiled by the Matter they ſhine upon; and as the Purity and Holineſs of the Divine Nature is not in the leaſt diminiſhed by beholding all the Wickedneſs, and moral Impurity, that is acted in the World; ſo the Omnipreſent Eſſence of God is not at all affected by any natural Impurity of Things, or Places whatever; becauſe it is the ſuperlative Excellency and Prerogative of his Nature, to act always upon all Things every where, but itſelf to be acted upon by nothing. Clear'd from Objections.

SUCH is the Nature and Perfection of the Divine Immenſity, and what now is the proper Affection of Mind, which the Contemplation hereof ſhould beget in us? The ſame Wonder and Aſtoniſhment [n] that Men are uſually ſtruck with, at the firſt Sight of the Sea, when they behold a vaſt Maſs of Waters, without being able to ſurvey the Bounds, or conſider the Depth of it. [o] All other Beings are narrow and contracted, To be admir'd.

contracted, and have their certain Boundaries ſet them, that they cannot paſs. The Earth comparatively is but a Point, the Ocean a Drop, and the whole World an Atom; but the Creator of theſe is immenſurable, unlimited, and ſurpaſſing all Bounds. He is every where; he repleniſhes all Places, and his Preſence is ſpread thro' all Extents of Space, whether real or imaginary, and yet, is confin'd by none. [p] Of his other Perfections we meet with ſome Traces and Footſteps in the Creatures, that his Hands have made. In the holy Angels, and in holy Men too, Men influenc'd and govern'd by the Divine Spirit, there are fair Images of the Veracity, the Wiſdom, the Goodneſs, the Mercy, and the Compaſſion of God, which yet, are all infinite in him: The vaſt Meaſures of Power, which are imparted to ſome Creatures, eſpecially to the Angelick Hoſt, are ſome Repreſentation of Omnipotence; that Steddineſs of Soul, which is the Portion of juſt Men made perfect, looks a little like the Immutability of God: But, in all the Ranks and Orders of Creatures, there is no Semblance of Immenſity, or Omnipreſence to be found. All is amazing and aſtoniſhing, when we think of it: And therefore (as the Angels cover their Faces before him) with what awful Reverence, with what Proſtration of our Souls, ſhould we, creeping Worms, come into his Sight; with what Zeal and Fervency reſound his Praiſe; and, above all, be careful and ſollicitous to ſhun and avoid every Thing, that we are conſcious will offend him!

Dreaded. IF then we believe, that God ſearcheth us, and knoweth us; that he is about our Paths, and about our Beds, and ſpieth out all our Ways; that he hath beſet us behind and before, ſo that there is no fleeing from his Preſence, no Darkneſs, that can hide us from him, no Night, that can conceal our Impieties: If we believe this, I ſay, [q] how ſhould we live in an awful Senſe of his Majeſty, which is always above us, and before us, and about us, and within us; as inſeparable from us, as we are from ourſelves; and whoſe Eye, from the Beginning of our Lives, to the End of our Days, is conſtantly obſerving and inſpecting us! Did Men believe that God is always with them, that he ſees thro' the Darkneſs, wherein they think to hide themſelves, and pries into the moſt ſecret Receſſes of their Hearts; that they do all Things in his Sight, ſpeak all Things in his Hearing, and think all Things in his Preſence; the Thoughts of this would not only put a Check to their exorbitant Lives, and arreſt them in their moſt impetuous Career of Vice, but, even in every looſe Sally of their Minds, and Determinations to do ill, whiſper this preventing Admonition of the wiſe Heathen: "[r] God is preſent, what doſt thou do? What doſt thou con" trive? What doſt thou hide? God, thy Keeper, will follow thee; even he,
" whom thou canſt not poſſibly ſhift off: Why therefore doſt thou ſeek for a ſecret
" Place, and ſhunneſt Witneſſes of thy Deeds? 'Tis in vain to expect Privacy, or
" to imagine that thy Actions or Deſigns will paſs undiſcover'd."

And relied on. IF we believe, that the Eyes of the Lord are in every Place, [s] and run to and fro thro' the whole Earth, to ſhew himſelf ſtrong in Behalf of them, whoſe Heart is perfect towards him; how ſerviceable muſt this Conſideration be, to adminiſter Comfort to all ſuch, as are in Difficulties, and loaded with Afflictions; ſince there is no Calamity or Diſtreſs of Life, that the Contemplation of this Divine Attribute will not alleviate! For, are we in never ſo many Straits? God is with us; in never ſo many Troubles? God is not far from us; never ſo diſtant from our Friends and Acquaintance? We cannot be baniſh'd from his Preſence and Protection, [t] tho' we be forced to dwell beyond the uttermoſt Parts of the Sea. In every Country and Climate God is the ſame; his Hand will there lead us, his Right-Hand hold us, and his omnipotent Goodneſs ſecure and preſerve us; ſo that, if we commit our Souls to him in well-doing, we ſhall not need to fear, tho' the Earth be removed, and the Mountains be carried into the midſt of the Sea: Tho' the Fig-Tree ſhall not bloſſom, nor Fruit be in the Vines; tho' the Labour of the Olive ſhall fail, and the Fields yield no Meat; tho' the Flock ſhall be cut off from the Fold, and there be no Herd in the Stalls, yet will I rejoice (may the Righteous ſay) in the Preſence of God; I will joy in the God of my Salvation.

SECT.

SECT. IV.

Of the IMMUTABILITY of GOD.

BY the Immutability of God, we mean, that he always is, and was, and, to all Eternity, will be the ſame; being ſubject to no Changes, either in his Eſſence or Perfections. [u] As to his Eſſence †, he is ſaid to be eternal, incorruptible, and only to have Immortality; and in Reference to his Perfections, he is always the ſame infinitely wiſe, good, and powerful, infinitely juſt and holy Being; and from hence follows, that he is conſtant and immutable in all his Decrees and Purpoſes. We indeed are uncertain and mutable in our very Nature and Beings, in all thoſe Qualities and Perfections, that belong to us, and in all our Deſigns, Reſolutions and Actions. We frequently change from one Extreme to another; are better or worſe, ſtronger or weaker, more knowing or more ignorant, as it happens, or as we order ourſelves; and are ſo fickle in our Minds, as to alter our Purpoſes, and break our Promiſes, and contradict our firmeſt and moſt ſerious Reſolutions, upon every ſlight Occaſion; but God is everlaſtingly the ſame in all his Perfections; conſtant to his Intentions, ſteady to his Purpoſes, and immutably fix'd, and perſevering in all his Decrees and Reſolutions. God's Immutability, wherein it conſiſts.

AND indeed if we conſider the Nature of God, [x] that he is a ſelf-exiſtent and independent Being, the great Creator and wiſe Governor of all Things; that he is a ſpiritual and ſimple Being, void of all Parts, and all Mixture, that can induce a Change; that he is a ſovereign and uncontroulable Being, which nothing from without can affect, or work an Alteration in; that he is an eternal Being, which always has, and always will go on in the ſame Tenor of Exiſtence; an omniſcient Being, who, knowing all Things at one Point of Intuition, has no Reaſon to act contrary to his firſt Reſolves; and, in all Reſpects, a moſt perfect Being, that can admit of no Addition or Diminution; we cannot but believe, that both in his Eſſence, in his Perfections, in his Will, in his Purpoſes, in his Covenants, and in his Threatnings, he muſt of Neceſſity be unchangeable. To ſuppoſe him otherwiſe, is to ſuppoſe him an imperfect Being. [y] For, if he change, it muſt be either to a greater Perfection, than he had before, or to a leſs: If to a greater Perfection, then was there plainly a Defect in him, and a Privation of ſomething better, than what he had, or was; then again was he not always the beſt, and conſequently, not always God: If he changes to a leſſer Perfection, then does he fall into a Defect again; loſe a Perfection, he was once poſſeſs'd of; and ſo ceaſing to be the beſt Being, ceaſe at the ſame Time to be God. The ſovereign Perfection of the Deity therefore is an invincible Bar againſt all Mutability: For, which Way ſoever we ſuppoſe him to change, his ſupreme Excellency is null'd or impair'd by it: For ſince in all Changes, there is ſomething from which, and ſomething to which, the Change is made, a Loſs of what the Thing had, or an Acquiſition of what it had not; it muſt follow, that if God change to the better, he was not perfect before, and ſo not God; if to be worſe, he will not be perfect, and ſo no longer God, after the Change. Changeableneſs in Men, we generally eſteem either an Imperfection or a Fault. Their natural Changes (as to their Perſons) are from Weakneſs and Vanity; their moral Changes (as to their Inclinations and Purpoſes) are from Ignorance or Inconſtancy; and therefore what is a Blemiſh in us, can no ways be compatible with the Glory and Attributes of God. For, if the Divine Nature be, in any Caſe, ſubject to Change, this will caſt an univerſal Damp upon all its Attributes and Excellencies, and make them like a Flower of the Field, which, how gay and glorious ſoever, is but fading and corruptible: Nay, the greater its Perfections are, the more imperfect they will become, if once [z] we ſuppoſe them mutable. How cloudy will his Bleſſedneſs be, if it proves liable to Change! How dim his Wiſdom, if it may be obſcur'd! How feeble his Power, if it is capable to decay or languiſh! How will Mercy loſe its Luſtre, if it ſhould change into Wrath, and Juſtice its Dread, if it ſhould be turn'd into Mercy, while the Object of Juſtice remains unfit for Mercy, and the Object of Mercy undeſerving of divine Vengeance! Prov'd from his Nature.

From his Perfections.

[u] Tillotſon's Serm. Vol. II.

† In reſpect to his Eſſence, God is abſolutely unchangeable, becauſe his Being is neceſſary, and his Eſſence ſelf-exiſtent: For whatever neceſſarily is, as it cannot but be, ſo it cannot but continue to be invariably what it is; and that, which depends upon nothing, can be affected by nothing; can be acted upon by nothing, can be chang'd by nothing, can be influenc'd by no Power, can be impair'd by no Time, can be varied by no Accident. Clarke's Serm. Vol. I.

[x] Edwards's Body of Divinity. [y] Charnock, on the Attributes. [z] Charnock, ibid.

From Reaſon.

AND, as the Mutability of God would darken all his other Perfections, ſo would it take away the Foundation and Comfort of all Religion, inſomuch, that we could have no great Honour and Eſteem for a Being, that is fickle and inconſtant: His Threatnings would loſe their Awe and Force, if his Power and Juſtice were uncertain; and his Promiſes and Declarations, how graciouſly ſoever tender'd, be of no Security to us, if his Truth and Faithfulneſs could at any Time fail. And therefore, [a] the wiſeſt of the Heathen World were always of this Opinion, that God is never in any wiſe capable (as Plato with great Emphaſis [b] expreſſes it) of any Kind of Change whatever, [c] and that he is always conſtant to his Decrees, and does never repent of his Purpoſes; [d] for 'tis neceſſary that he ſhould be always pleas'd with the ſame Thing, who can be pleas'd with nothing, but what is beſt: Nor can this be any Prejudice to his Liberty or his Power, ſince he is his own Neceſſity, i. e. nothing from without, but his own natural Perfection lays this Neceſſity upon him.

And from Scripture.

BUT the fulleſt Declarations of God's Immutability, both as to his Nature and Properties, his Decrees and Purpoſes, his Threats and Promiſes, &c. are from his own Divine Oracles, which teach us, that though all other Things are mutable, even the Frame of the Heavens above, and the Foundations of the Earth below, which [e] ſhall periſh, and wax old as a Garment; yet God is the ſame, the ſame through all Generations, and beyond all Generations ſtill unchangeable, the ſame. Which teach us, that [f] the Counſel of the Lord ſtandeth for ever, and the Thoughts of his Heart to all Generations; that his Mercy and Goodneſs endureth for ever, and his [g] Righteouſneſs is firm and immoveable, like the ſtrong Mountains. Which teach us, that [h] his Faithfulneſs he will not ſuffer to fail, his Covenant will he not break, nor alter the Thing that is gone out of his Lips; ſince [i] I the Lord have ſpoken it, it ſhall come to paſs, and I will do it, I will not go back, neither will I ſpare. Which teach us, in ſhort, that in God [k] the Father of Lights, there is no Variableneſs neither Shadow of turning; [l] where the Compariſon is taken from the Sun, and ſeems to intimate to us, that though that bright Luminary is the moſt regular, and the moſt conſtant Diſpenſer of Light and Heat to this inferior World; yet is its Influence frequently varied by different Motions, by Clouds and Shadows, as well as by Alterations within its own Body; whereas God, the Father of Spiritual Light, the Author and Diſpoſer of all good and perfect Gifts, has in him no Motion, no Uncertainty, no Alteration of any of his Perfections, no Variableneſs, neither Shadow of turning.

An Objection anſwer'd.

WHENEVER therefore we meet, in Scripture, with any Expreſſions, which ſeem to imply a Mutability in God, we muſt be ſatisfied of this, that they are not to be taken in a ſtrict Senſe, as if God were at any Time accuſtom'd to alter his Purpoſe, or falſify his Word, or repent of any Action, that he does; [m] For he is not a Man, that he ſhould lye, neither the Son of Man, that he ſhould repent: Hath he ſaid, and ſhall he not do it? Or hath he ſpoken, and ſhall he not make it good? [n] The Expreſſion of God's Repentance, therefore, (as well as many other which occur in Holy Writ) is to be underſtood in a figurative Senſe; as ſpoken by Way of Condeſcenſion and Accommodation to our Weakneſs and Capacity, and not as caſting any Imputation of Mutability or Inconſtancy upon him, as if, out of Levity, or Want of Foreſight, he chang'd and alter'd his Mind. Thus when God is ſaid to repent, that he made Man, or that he made Saul King, the Change was not in him, but in them; and it ſignifies, not that God was abſolutely deceiv'd in his Expectations, but that Things had fallen out contrary to all reaſonable Expectation: And therefore the Scripture cloathes God with the human Paſſion of repenting and grieving for what he had done, as Men are us'd to do, when they are greatly diſappointed, and fall ſhort of their Expectations; to ſignify to us, that the unworthy Behaviour of Men, and their Abuſe of the Divine Goodneſs was ſuch, as was enough to raiſe Grief and Indignation in his Breaſt, were the Majeſty of his Nature capable, as the Infirmity of ours is, of any uneaſy Senſations. And, in like Manner, when God is ſaid to repent him of the Evils, which he threatned, the Expreſſion only ſignifies thus much, that God does not execute that, which ſeem'd to us to have been his peremptory Purpoſe and Reſolution, i. e. he is pleas'd to do otherwiſe, than his Threatnings ſeem'd openly to expreſs, becauſe of ſome tacit Condition imply'd in them, which he did not think fit to acquaint us with.

* IN moſt of the Threats, and Promiſes in the Word of God, there is always a Condition expreſs'd or underſtood. 'Tis ſometimes expreſs'd, as in this [o] remarkable Text: If that Nation, againſt whom I have pronounc'd my Judgments, turn from their evil Ways, I will repent me of the Evil, which I thought to bring upon them; where Amendment of Life is the Condition annex'd: But ſometimes it is only imply'd, as in the Caſe of Nineveh; Yet forty Days, and Nineveh ſhall be deſtroyed, i. e. unleſs that City repent of their Sins. [p] Now, put the Caſe that a People do repent, after a Sentence of Deſtruction is gone out from God, yet, ſince that Sentence was not abſolute, but conditional, there is no Change or Diſappointment in the Divine Will, tho' it be not executed; becauſe the Condition, upon which it is ſuſpended, is Part of the Decree, which being performed, the Sentence is vacated; for, [q] when the Men of Nineveh turned from their evil Ways, (which was the Condition imply'd in the Denunciation) [r] The Lord repented of the Evil, he ſaid he would do unto them, and he did it not. The Sum of the whole Solution is this: [s] The Declarations of the Divine Decrees and Purpoſes (as being prophetical of the great Events of Providence) are in themſelves abſolutely fix'd and unalterable; becauſe the Wiſdom of God could not poſſibly be deceiv'd in the original Deſign and Intention of appointing them; but his Promiſes and Threats (which are merely perſonal) either to any particular Man, or to any Number of Men, are always conditional; becauſe the Wiſdom of God thought fit to make theſe depend on the Behaviour of Men. Good or Evil, Virtue or Vice, are the Things which God has declared his immutable Love or Hatred unto, and his Promiſes and Threats invariably follow theſe Diſpoſitions thro' all the Changes of Mens perſonal Behaviour: And therefore, as the ſame Fire, with one unvaried Action, conſumes combuſtible Matter, but purifies and refines Gold; and, as the ſame Sun, with one continual Heat, melts one Sort of Bodies, and hardens another; ſo God, without any Change or Alteration in himſelf, puniſhes the Wicked, when they ſo continue, and ſhews Compaſſion upon the ſame Perſons, when they become truly and ſincerely penitent.

THIS is the State of the Doctrine: and what now are the proper Affections that the Contemplation hereof ſhould beget in our Minds? Here is Matter enough for Terror to ſuch, as continue in the Practice of their Sins: For, if he is an holy God, and of purer Eyes than to behold Iniquity; [t] if he is a juſt God, and will by no means clear the Guilty, nor let Sin go unpuniſh'd; if he is omnipotent, ſo that none can reſiſt his Power, or [u] ſtand in his Sight when once he is angry; and, (what gives a ſad Accent to all this) if he, that is thus holy, juſt, and powerful, continues for ever the ſame; will never alter, nor put off any of theſe Properties; will never ceaſe to hate Iniquity; will never be reconcil'd to impenitent Sinners; what a fearful Thing muſt it needs be to fall into his Hands, who lives for ever, and can puniſh for ever, and whoſe Indignation againſt ſuch as die in their Sins, all they can ſuffer to eternal Ages will be unavailable to appeaſe! The Uſe of the Doctrine.

HERE likewiſe is Matter of Comfort and Conſolation enough to ſuch, as ſeek the Divine Favour, by leading godly Lives; ſince, in all the Changes and Viciſſitudes of the World, if we do ſo, [x] he will be our God for ever, and our Guide unto Death: For [y] tho' the Mountains depart, and the Hills be removed, yet my Kindneſs (as God aſſures the Righteous) ſhall not depart from thee, nor ſhall the Covenant of my Peace be removed. Which Way ſoever we turn our Eyes, [z] whether without us or within us, we can find no ſolid Ground for Comfort and Confidence but in God. If we look without us, we can perceive nothing but what is ſubject to Change. Men are inconſtant, and as their Circumſtances, or Opinions, or Intereſts vary, aſſume many Times a different Deportment. But admitted they were more fix'd and permanent, yet [a] what is their Life? It is even as a Vapour, that appeareth for a little Time, and then vaniſheth away. And therefore, weak muſt that Dependance be, which is placed in Man, [b] whoſe Breath is in his Noſtrils. But now our God will be the ſame, yeſterday and to-day, and for ever. His Affection to his faithful Children will be the ſame, his Promiſes the ſame: He will not leave us, when we are old, nor forſake us when our Strength decays, but [c] when our Fleſh and our Heart ſhall fail us, he will be then the Strength of our Heart, and our Portion for ever. A powerful

SECT. V.

Of the Communicable ATTRIBUTES: And firſt, of the LIFE of GOD.

BESIDES the Incommunicable Attributes which we have already conſider'd, there are others ſtil'd Communicable, becauſe they are in ſome lower Degree, and by Way of Participation communicated to other inferior Beings; and among theſe, that which in the firſt Place occurs to our Thought, is Life.

The Life of other Beings.

THE Life of any Being may be ſaid to conſiſt in its having ſuch a Motion or Action proper to it, as tends to advance whatever Power or Perfection it is capable of. 'Tis in the loweſt Signification of the Word, that Life is attributed to Things, which, by a Motion proper to them, are only preſerv'd in their natural State; in which Senſe, we read of living Waters. [e] In the next Degree of Life are thoſe Beings, whoſe Parts are contriv'd in ſuch a Manner, as to make them capable of Nutriment and Increaſe; ſuch are Stones, and all Minerals, but more eſpecially Plants and Trees, which have not only their periodical Seaſons of flouriſhing and bearing Fruit, but (what is no leſs ſurprizing to obſerve) have the Principles of Life ſtill abiding in them, (even when there ſeems to be the leaſt Appearance of it) and awakening into freſh Vigour and Beauty, according to the nearer Approach of the Sun. In Animals, the Organs and Offices of Life are ſtill more curious. They move ſpontaneouſly from Place to Place; they feed, they grow, and ſeverally propagate their Kind; are acted by the Impreſſion of diſtant Objects; and not only diſcover all the Capacities and Operations of Senſe, but the viſible Effects of Paſſion likewiſe, of Anger and Love, of Fear and Revenge; for which there is hardly any accounting by the ſtated Rules of Mechaniſm. In Man, conſider'd as a rational Creature, the Principle of Life is ſtill more vigorous; for, by Virtue of his Intellect, (which we conſider as a Power flowing from the Life of his Soul) he can, not only reaſon, and deliberate, and judge of Things within; but even carry his Contemplations into the inviſible World of Spirits, converſe with God and Angels, and take a Survey, in his Imagination, of all the innumerable Beatitudes, that the heavenly Manſions abound with; in ſhort, can extend himſelf, as it were, over the whole Creation in a Moment, climb up to Heaven, and go down to Hell, and fly to the uttermoſt Parts of the Earth, at the Inſtant he deſigns. In Angels, who excel in Strength, and are accounted the Chief of the Ways of God, the Power of Life (in all the aforeſaid Functions and Operations) is ſtill more excellent, in Proportion to the Dignity of their Nature, and the Incumbrances of Fleſh, which they are exempted from: Beſides that, they may probably have certain other Modifications of Life peculiar to them, that we are unacquainted with, and can form no manner of Conception of.

The Excellency of God's Life.

THESE are the different Degrees of vital Powers, obſervable in created Beings; but when, by theſe Steps, we aſcend to the original Source and Fountain of Life, how infinitely more powerful and perfect muſt the Operations of it be! For, becauſe whatever we find in the Effect, muſt of Neceſſity be more eminently contain'd in the Cauſe. God therefore, in the ſtricteſt Senſe, may be only ſaid to live, as operating independently, and [f] having Life in himſelf; whereas thoſe living Creatures, which ſeem to be moſt free and vigorous in their Actions, are only Agents in Subordination to him, [g] in whom they live, and move, and have their Being. And, upon this tranſcendent Excellency of his Life, the Scriptures peculiarly appropriate to him, by Way of Diſtinction, the Name of [h] the Living God, and everlaſting King; telling us, at the ſame Time, [i] that he only has Immortality; that [k] as to his Years, they fail not; that [l] his Work is always perfect; and himſelf [m] mighty in Strength, and excellent in Power.

From Scripture.

THAT

[d] 1 Cor. xv. 58. [e] Vid. Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Part I. [f] John v. 26. [g] Acts xvii. 28.
[h] Jer. x. 10. [i] 1 Tim. vi. 16. [k] Heb. i. 12. [l] Deut. xxxii. 4. [m] Job xxxvii. 23.

THAT ſuch a Life, even in the higheſt Degree of Perfection, is to be attributed to God, we have the Voice of Reaſon, as well as Revelation, to convince us. For, ſince God is the great Ruler and Governor of the Univerſe, he muſt needs be inveſted with a Nature capable of ſuch Government, and have all the vital Powers in himſelf, which are found diſpers'd among his Creatures; otherwiſe, his other ſuppos'd Perfections are of no Avail; for without Life, he is but an Idol, incapable of Rule, and undeſerving our Adorations, becauſe he can neither know nor reward them. Vain therefore and trifling muſt the Notions of thoſe idle Diſputers of this World be, who tell us, ſo much of Nature, Fate, Chance and the like; and, in their Diſcourſes, ſeem to aſcribe the Being and Order, the Beauty and Uſefulneſs of the World, and all that is therein, to theſe, as their real Cauſes, which, in Truth, are nothing, but mere empty Words, mere abſtract Notions, mere Fictions, or Idols of the Imagination, which have no Life, no real Exiſtence, and (as St Paul expreſſes himſelf in the like Caſe) are nothing in the World! For, what is Nature? What is Fate, or Chance? Are they any real Beings, or Agents? Or can that be truly the Cauſe of any Thing, which itſelf has no Manner of Subſiſtence? Leſs unreaſonable, of the two, were thoſe ancient Idolaters, who ſtopping ſhort at the viſible Cauſes of the Life, and Plenty, they enjoyed, paid their Obſervance to the Sun, Moon, and Stars of Heaven, as the Authors of thoſe Bleſſings, whereof they were only the Inſtruments. Leſs unreaſonable, I ſay, was even this, than to attribute the Cauſe of all Things to the Efficacy of a mere abſtract Nothing; and yet even this, was not pardonable in the darkeſt Times of Heathen Ignorance, as the Words of Job (who ſeems to have had no Knowledge of the Jewiſh Religion) abundantly teach us: If I beheld the Sun, when it ſhined, and the Moon, walking in Brightneſs, and my Heart hath been ſecretly enticed, or my Mouth hath kiſſed my Hand; this were an Iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judge, for then I ſhould have denied the God that is above. And Reaſon.

How much then are we concern'd to acknowledge this great Truth, viz. that, in the higheſt and moſt abſolute Senſe, God liveth, and, in reſpect of him, nothing can be ſaid to live; to frame our Minds according to the deep Apprehenſions we have of this Divine Attribute; to entertain becoming Thoughts of him, in whom we live; to own our continual Dependance on him, by whom we act; and to dedicate our whole Lives to his Glory and Honour, who is the ſole Donor and Conſerver of our Lives and Beings both! Reſult of this Doctrine.

SECT. VI.

Of the SPIRITUALITY of GOD.

THAT God is a Spirit, i. e. a Subſtance without Body, Parts, and Paſſions, is not only a Propoſition of our Chriſtian Faith, and what is deduceable from ſeveral Declarations of the Jewiſh Law, but a Principle of Religion likewiſe, that the Heathens themſelves were not unacquainted with. To this Purpoſe Cicero informs us, That we cannot conceive of God, but as of a pure Mind, entirely free from all mortal Compoſition and Mixture; for [n] that he cannot be compounded of any Principles or Parts, is plain from hence, becauſe the Principles and Ingredients, which concur to the making of any Thing, muſt be antecedent to the Thing that is made: And therefore, if the Divine Nature were compounded, it would follow, that there muſt be ſomething in Nature before God, and he, conſequently, not the firſt Cauſe, which Conſideration might induce Plutarch to give us this Deſcription of the Divine Nature: God is a Mind, ſays he, an abſtract Being, pure from all Matter, and diſtinguiſhed from whatever is paſſible, or capable of ſuffering. God a Spirit univerſally own'd.

[o] SOME indeed, from the pretended Difficulty of conceiving what a Spirit is, have cloathed the Deity with a corporeal Subſtance, and would endeavour to perſuade us, that whatever Being exiſts, muſt be Matter: Whereas, if we will be impartial, the Notion of a Spirit is as intelligible as that of a Body; and 'tis by the latter indeed, that we are able to form ſome tolerable Apprehenſion of what the former is. A Body, or Matter, is ſuch a Subſtance, as conſiſts of external Parts, and conſequently is capable of Diviſion, and thereby of Alteration and Corruption. It is the Object of external Senſe and Perception; is dull and ſluggiſh in itſelf; has no Principle of Activity, no Motion or Operation of its own Nature; nor any, the leaſt Capacity In a ſuperlative Degree.

[n] Wilkins, on Natural Religion. [o] Edwards's Body of Divinity.

for ſuch refined Acts, as Underſtanding and Thinking. Now that, which has Qualities contrary to theſe; that which, in its own Nature, is indiviſible and incorruptible; that which can move and actuate itſelf; whoſe chief and diſtinctive Operation is to reaſon and underſtand; and cannot, by any corporeal Senſe, be ſeen, felt, or apprehended, as having no Quantity or Parts, to be the Object of ſenſible Perception, this is a Spirit: And, becauſe it is the higheſt Excellence in our Nature, we apply the Term to God; but, at the ſame Time, muſt conceive it in a Senſe, infinitely ſuperior to any Thing we find in ourſelves, viz. that he is an immaterial, incorruptible, impaſſible Subſtance, uncapable of being divided, or impair'd by any Force whatever; an immenſe Mind or Intelligence, ſelf-active, ſelf-moving, and wholly above the Comprehenſion of bodily Senſe; free, in ſhort, from the Imperfections of Matter, and all the Infirmities of corporeal Beings, and of a far more excellent and tranſcendent Nature, than any finite or created Spirit whatever, as being originally ſuch, and therefore not improperly ſtiled, [p] the Father of Spirits, and the God of the Spirits of all Fleſh.

This proved from Reaſon.

THE firſt and moſt natural Notion we have of God, is, that he is a Being every Way perfect; and from this Notion we muſt argue about the Properties, which are attributed to him, and accordingly govern our Reaſonings concerning him: So that, when any Thing is ſaid of God, the beſt Way to know whether it is to be aſcribed to him, is to enquire whether it be a Perfection or not; if it be, it belongs to God; if it be not, as we ſaid before, it is to be ſeparated from him. Now ſince ſpiritual Subſtances are more excellent than bodily, [q] the Soul of Man more excellent than other Animals, and Angels more excellent than Man, as containing in their own Nature whatever Dignity there is in inferior Beings; God muſt have an Excellency above all theſe, and muſt therefore be infinitely remov'd from the Conditions both of the moſt refin'd corporeal, and of the moſt ſublime ſpiritual Subſtance.

And Scripture.

AND accordingly we may obſerve, that the wiſeſt, and moſt learned of the Heathen World, always embrac'd a Notion ſomething like this; that ſome of the Greek Sages were wont to ſtile him νῦς ἀσώματος κοσμοποιός, the incorporeal Mind, who made the World, and, among the Latin Philoſophers, theſe Appellations were common [r] Mens Divina, mens pura & ſincera, mens ſoluta & libera, ſegregata ab omni Concretione mortali: And therefore, we may well expect to find him in Scripture characteriz'd, as [s] the inviſible God, [t] whom no Man has ſeen at any Time, nor can ſee. To find our Saviour affirming to the Jews, that they had [u] neither ſeen his Shape, nor heard his Voice; and Moſes, after the miraculous Appearance on the Mount, giving them this Caution, [x] Take heed unto yourſelves, leſt you make you a graven Image, or the Similitude of any Figure; for ye ſaw no Manner of Similitude, in the Day, that the Lord ſpake unto you in Horeb, out of the midſt of the Fire.

WOULD we then form right Apprehenſions of God as to this Particular, [y] we muſt conceive of him, as of a Being, infinitely remov'd from all thoſe groſs Properties, which conſtitute the Nature of Matter or Body; as of a Being, not limited by human Shape, nor included under any other Form whatever; as excelling, in an infinitely higher Proportion, not only the Souls of Men, but alſo all other Intellectual Natures, or Spirits whatſoever; and, laſtly, as wholly void of all thoſe Paſſions, Affections, and Commotions, ſuch as Love, Hatred, Anger, &c. which are the Properties of embodied Spirits, but cannot be aſcrib'd to him in any other, than a figurative Senſe.

In what Senſe he is ſaid to have Members.

WE indeed, at preſent, are not able to conceive ſpiritual Objects without ſenſible Images and Repreſentations; and therefore God, (who is deſirous to make himſelf known to us) in Compliance to this general Defect of human Nature, ſpeaks of his Attributes and Operations after the Manner of Men, and, by all ſuch Repreſentations, ſignifies ſuch Actions of his, as bear ſome Reſemblance to thoſe, which we perform by the Faculties, which he hath given us: Inſomuch, that whenever we meet with any of the Parts or Actions of human Bodies aſcribed to God, we ſhould always conceive them in a figurative Senſe. By his Eyes and Ears we are to underſtand his Omniſcience; by his Face, the Manifeſtation of his Favour; by his Mouth, the Revelation of his Will; by his Bowels, the Tenderneſs of his Compaſſion; by his Heart, the Sincerity of his Affection; and by his Hand, the Strength of his Power, &c.

And to be viſible.

And in explaining thoſe Paſſages of the Old Teſtament, where God is repreſented as appearing viſibly, and, as it were, Face to Face, to holy Men of old, (whereas, according cording to the Nature of Things, the Eſſence of a pure Spirit is abſolutely impoſſible to be ſeen, and according to the Senſe of Scripture, the Divine Character is, that he is [z] the inviſible God whom no Man has ſeen, or can ſee). It is to be obſerv'd, that tho' God's Eſſence is inviſible, [a] yet there is a Glory, which is as it were the Train and Attendance of his Eſſence, (by the Pſalmiſt's Authority, we may call it the Garment or Cloathing of his Eſſence; for ſo the Pſalmiſt ſays of God, that he decketh himſelf with Light as with a Garment) and by the Apoſtle's Authority, we may call it the Dwelling or Palace of his Eſſence, (for ſo ſays the Apoſtle concerning God, that he dwelleth in Light that is unapproachable) and this Glory or Majeſty of God is ſuch, as we muſt all allow to be viſible. There is therefore a Diſtinction to be made between the eſſential and majeſtick Preſence of God; for his eſſential Preſence is infinite; and ſo every where, and every where unſeen; but, on the contrary, his majeſtick Preſence is the notifying or diſcovering of his eſſential Preſence, in a determinate Place, by ſome Kind of magnificent luminous Appearance; and this we know has been accommodated, and brought down to the Perception even of mortal Eyes. Thus all the People ſaw God Face to Face, by ſeeing this Symbol of his Preſence on the Mount, and thus, in all Probability, Jacob ſaw God, becauſe he ſeems to rejoice that, after ſuch a Sight, his [b] Life was preſerv'd, contrary to the prevailing Notion, that no Man could ſee the Face of God, and live.

We are not to liken him to any Thing.

SINCE Reaſon and Scripture then both declare, that God is a Spirit, [c] we muſt be careful how we repreſent him to our Thoughts, as having a Body, or any corporeal Shape or Members. He condeſcends indeed, to repreſent himſelf to us according to our Capacities, but it will be very ungrateful in us, if we abuſe his Condeſcenſion, to the Blemiſh and Reproach of his Divine Nature; and, becauſe he is pleas'd to ſtoop to our Weakneſs, to level him to our Infirmities. Above all, we muſt be careful how we worſhip God under any Image or ſenſible Repreſentation: [d] For, to put a religious Character upon any Image, form'd by the corrupt Imagination of Man, as a Repreſentation of the inviſible and ſpiritual Deity, is to think [e] the Godhead to be like Silver, or Gold, or Stone, graven by Art or Man's Device. [f] Have ye not known? Have ye not heard? Hath it not been told you from the Beginning? (ſays the Prophet, upbraiding the People with their Folly) It is God, that ſitteth upon the Circle of the Earth, and the Inhabitants thereof are as Graſhoppers; that ſtretcheth out the Heavens as a Curtain, and ſpreadeth them out as a Tent to dwell in; that bringeth Princes to nothing, and maketh the Judges of the Earth as Vanity. To whom then will ye liken me? And to whom will ye make me equal, ſaith the Holy One? 'Tis ridiculous then to think of repreſenting a Being, ſo inconceivably great and mighty, by the Work of any Man's Hands; and to worſhip him thro' any ſuch Medium, is the groſſeſt Idolatry. The Works of God's own Hands, eſpecially thoſe great celeſtial Bodies, that we behold, are certainly a more excellent Repreſentation of him, than any Thing of human Compoſition; and [g] yet kiſſing the Hand to the Sun when it ſhineth, or to the Moon walking in Brightneſs, (as Repreſentative of the Excellency and Majeſty of God) is declared Idolatry in the Scriptures, a Denial of the God that is above, and an Iniquity fit to be puniſhed by the Judge; much more is our debaſing and adoring his Divine Nature, thro' Repreſentations vaſtly meaner, and more contemptible.

But to worſhip him in Spirit, and how to do it.

THE Direction that the Holy Scripture gives us in what Manner we are to behave towards God, is, not to repreſent him, even in our Imagination, by the Likeneſs of any Thing that is in Heaven above, or in the Earth beneath, or in the Waters under the Earth; but as [h] he is a Spirit, to worſhip him in Spirit and in Truth. Now to lay a Foundation for this ſpiritual Worſhip of God, we muſt be careful, at all Times, to poſſeſs our Minds with right Apprehenſions of his Nature and Perfections: [i] To repreſent him to our Thoughts, as our chief Good, and our exceeding great Reward, and therefore worthy to be belov'd by all: As a God, who is infinitely wiſe and powerful, able to preſerve us from all the Evils we dread, and to confer on us all the Bleſſings we want: A God, rich in Mercy and Compaſſion, of great Kindneſs to thoſe, that endeavour to be Objects of his Love, and a bountiful Rewarder of all them that ſerve him in Sincerity: A God of exact Truth and Faithfulneſs, ſincere in all his Promiſes and Threats, his Exhortations and Addreſſes, his Offers and Declarations made to the Sons of Men: A God of Holineſs and Purity, who abhors all all Iniquity, and ſtands bound both in Juſtice and Veracity, to render unto every Man according to his Works: And, laſtly, a God, who is continually preſent with us, who is [k] about our Paths, and about our Beds, and ſpieth out all our Ways, in order to bring every Work into Judgment, with every ſecret Thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.

THESE are the Notions of God that we muſt endeavour to impreſs upon our Minds; and from theſe will that inward and ſpiritual Worſhip of him, which we are now enquiring after, naturally flow. The Conſideration of his Power, Truth, and Faithfulneſs, will cauſe us to rely upon his Promiſes and hope in his Word. The Apprehenſion of his Goodneſs, Wiſdom, and Readineſs to help us, will engage us to truſt in him, to wait on him, and to pour out our Souls before him. The Senſe of his Greatneſs and Purity will diſpoſe us to reverence his Majeſty, and to walk humbly with him. The Belief of his ſovereign Power to diſpoſe of us, and our Concernments, will move us with Patience to ſubmit to his Will, and with Chearfulneſs to reſign ourſelves to his Diſpoſal. The Thought of his Juſtice, and all-ſeeing Eye, will beget in us a religious Fear of offending him, and an holy Care to purify ourſelves from all Filthineſs of Fleſh and Spirit. And (to name no more) the Conception of him, as our chiefeſt Good and only true Felicity, will make us inwardly to long and thirſt for him, to chuſe him as our Portion, and, at every Reflection upon his Bounty and Goodneſs, to break out into this Soliloquy; [l] Whom have I in Heaven but thee! And there is none upon Earth that I deſire beſides thee. Thus Love and Deſire, Truſt and Reliance, Humility and Reverence, Submiſſion and Reſignation, &c. fixt ſtedfaſtly in the Mind, and exerted upon all proper Calls and Occaſions, are that ſpiritual Worſhip, which the Conſideration of the Divine Attributes is apt to beget in us. Theſe are called [m] the Kingdom of God within us: In theſe conſiſt the Power and Life of Godlineſs: From theſe all outward Worſhip derives its Goodneſs; and without theſe, the utmoſt Expreſſions of our Homage will be but a lifeleſs Service, and a Sacrifice without an Heart.

GOD however requires of us to glorify him with our Bodies, which are his, as well as our Spirits; and therefore this internal Worſhip muſt not be ſuppoſed to exclude, or to ſtand in Oppoſition to what is external. Prayer, Praiſes, and Thankſgiving, a ſolemn Invocation of God's Name upon proper Occaſions, Hearing his Word preached, and Entering into Covenant with him by Sacraments, and theſe performed in the moſt devout and reverential Manner, that is poſſible, are Duties of perpetual Obligation: Only we muſt take abundant Care, that, as we ſerve the Searcher of Hearts, one that is preſent to our Spirits, and conſcious of their moſt ſecret Motions, we make our † Minds, our Thoughts, and Affections accompany what we do of this Kind. For "the beſt and choiceſt Oblation, ſays [n] a wiſe Heathen, that "thou canſt make to God, is thy Soul. 'Tis this only, that joins us to God; there "being no Affinity between Matter and Spirit, as there is between Spirit and Spirit, "from whence ariſes our Likeneſs and Communion with God. The worſt and "vileſt Perſons can bring rich Offerings to the Altar, but good Men only can make "an Oblation of their Hearts: Wherefore ſays he, give thyſelf to God, give ſome"thing of thine own, ſomething that is inward; for Things without us pleaſe not "God."

SECT. VII.

Of the KNOWLEDGE of GOD.

The Knowledge of God, what.

BY the Knowledge [o] of God, we mean that Perfection or Faculty, whereby he underſtands, and conſiders Things abſolutely, and as they are in their own Natures, their Powers, Properties, and Differences, together with all the Circumſtances belonging to them. [p] Our Knowledge and Comprehenſion of Things indeed is ſhort, as our Duration, and narrow, as our Extent. Our Senſes inform us of the Surfaces, and external Properties of a few Things, within the Reach of our imperfect Organs. Our Imaginations and Conjectures extend a little farther, to a greater Number of Things, but with greater Uncertainty, and leſs Diſtinctneſs. Angels, according to the greater Activity of their Natures, and higher Perfection of of their Faculties, comprehend ſtill more Things, than we, more in Number, and with a clearer Inſight; yet are they limited, and bounded within their proper Sphere, as we within ours. But the Knowledge of God is abſolutely unlimited, and perfectly univerſal; infinite as his Duration, and boundleſs as his Immenſity; extending to all Things, every where, without Exception, and to all the Properties and Powers of Things, without Reſtriction.

Prov'd from Reaſon.

[q] AND indeed to deny this Perfection, even in its utmoſt Latitude, to God, would be ſtrangely to eclipſe the divine Nature, and bring an univerſal Obſcurity upon all its other Attributes. It would deſtroy his Wiſdom; for where there is no Knowledge of the Nature and Qualities of Things, there can be no Application of Means to Ends, nor any proportioning one Thing to another: It would weaken his Power; for Power without Knowledge muſt, in moſt Caſes, be ineffectual, and in many produce great Irregularities: It would take away his Providence; [r] for without Knowledge there could be no Forecaſt or Proviſion for the future, nor any Kind of regular Government of the World: And (what is more) it would take away his Goodneſs too, ſince no Being can properly be ſaid to be good, that acts either out of Ignorance or blind Neceſſity. The Idea of Eternity and Omnipreſence, devoid of Knowledge, is as the Notion of Darkneſs compar'd with that of Light, or as the Notion of the World without the Sun to illuminate it; and therefore we find Plato aſſerting, that Wiſdom was of ſuch Excellency, that it could not properly be aſcrib'd to any but God; Seneca maintaining, [s] that nothing is hid from God, who is intimate to our Minds, and mingles himſelf with our very Thoughts; and Tully making it an Argument for a [t] ſtrict and cautious Behaviour, both in private and publick.

From Scripture.

THE Holy Scriptures however are more eſpecially copious in Declarations of this Kind, when they aſcribe every Object of Knowledge to God, and give us the Reaſons for this Immenſity of his Underſtanding. Thus, in Relation to his own Eſſence and Attributes, they teach us, [u] that the Spirit of God knoweth the deep Things of God: In Relation to his own Works, they aſſure us, that [x] known unto him are all his Works, from the Beginning of the World, neither is there any Creature, that is not manifeſt in his Sight: In Relation to the Works of his Enemies, they tell us, that [y] Hell and Deſtruction are before him, and that [z] there is no Darkneſs or Shadow of Death where the Workers of Iniquity may hide themſelves; in Relation to human Actions, [a] that the Ways of Man are before the Eyes of the Lord, and he pondereth all his Goings; in Relation to their Words, [b] that there is not a Word in their Tongue, but he knoweth it altogether; and in Relation to their Thoughts and Intentions, that [c] he ſearches their Hearts, and underſtandeth every Imagination of their Thoughts; [d] for the Lord ſeeth not as Man ſeeth; Man looketh on the outward Appearance, but the Lord looketh on the Heart.

THUS the Scriptures repreſent the Omniſcience of God: And they ſupply us farther with two Conſiderations, that of his Preſence, and that of his Creative-Power, whereby this Notion may be better clear'd, and the Conviction of it confirm'd upon our Minds.

1. THE Royal Pſalmiſt, having aſſerted the Omniſcience of God at large, [e] Lord, thou haſt ſearched me, and known me; thou knoweſt my Down-ſitting, and my Up-riſing, art acquainted with my Ways, and underſtandeſt my Thoughts afar off, confirms his Argument, and inculcates the Belief of the Doctrine, with this Reflection: Whither ſhall I go from thy Spirit? Or, whither ſhall I flee from thy Preſence? If I climb up to Heaven thou art there, &c. intimating, that God's Immenſity neceſſarily inferr'd an Univerſality of his Knowledge, and that he, who is every where, muſt of Neceſſity know every Thing. [f] Now this Conſideration of God's Omnipreſence is uſeful to prevent thoſe Miſtakes in our Opinion of him, which we are wont to take up, by thinking of him with Reſemblance to ourſelves. We ourſelves are confin'd to a Place, and limited to a certain Diſtance in our Perception of Things; and ſo we are apt, in our firſt Thoughts, to limit, and confine God, and conſequently to imagine, that a conſtant Inſpection and Obſervation of all Men, and all their Actions, would beget either Trouble, or Wearineſs, or Diſtraction in God, becauſe any great Application does ſo in us: Whereas, on the contrary, the Notion of God's being every where, leads our Underſtanding to apprehend, that it is as eaſy for him to obſerve every Man, as one Man, and every Action, as one ſingle Action of our Lives; that he, conſequently, is as near to our Mouth, when we ſpeak, as the Man is, who leans his Ear to our Whiſpers; as near to our Actions, when we do any Thing in ſecret, as they are, whom we admit to our Confederacy; and as near to our Thoughts, when we purpoſe, wiſh, or deſign any Thing, as our own Soul is, that conceives them, and in Conſequence, that he is familiarly acquainted with them all.

2. THE other Conſideration, which the Scripture offers, to inculcate the Belief of God's Omniſcience, is that of his Power, viz. that plaſtick operative Power, whereby he is the Fountain and Author of all our Beings; from which Topick the ſame Royal Pſalmiſt argues thus; [g] He that planted the Ear, ſhall he not hear? He that formed the Eye, ſhall not he ſee? He that teacheth Man Knowledge, ſhall not he underſtand? Which, (if thrown into a general Form of Reaſoning) will run thus: "All our Faculties of Knowledge, all our Organs and Inſtruments of Information, "we have from God; and can we think then that he wants any for his own Uſe? "All of us are his Creatures; and can we conceive that he has made any Creature of "ſuch a Capacity, as to act any Thing beſide his Privity, or beyond his Comprehen-"ſion?" This would be a weak, and (as our Author calls it) a brutiſh Imagination. [h] The Truth is, if God gives Wiſdom to the Wiſe, and Knowledge to Men of Underſtanding; if he communicates this Perfection to his Creatures, the Inference muſt be, that he himſelf is poſſeſs'd of it, in a much more eminent Degree, than they; [i] that his Knowledge is deep and intimate, reaching to the very Eſſence of Things, theirs but ſlight and ſuperficial; his clear and diſtinct, theirs confus'd and dark; his certain and infallible, theirs doubtful and liable to Miſtakes; his eaſy and permanent, theirs gotten with much Pains, and ſoon loſt again by the Defects of Memory or Age; his univerſal and extending to all Objects, theirs ſhort and narrow, reaching only to ſome few Things, while [k] that which is wanting cannot be number'd; and therefore, [l] as the Heavens are higher than the Earth, ſo (the Prophet has told us) are his Ways above their Ways, and his Thoughts above their Thoughts.

An Objection. "BUT how tranſcendent ſoever the Knowledge of God be, yet ſome Things it "muſt, of Neceſſity, be ignorant of; ſince we cannot conceive, how Fore-Know-"ledge in him can be conſiſtent with Liberty of Action in Man; and yet, without "ſuch Liberty, the very Formality of all Virtue and Vice is deſtroyed."

Anſwer'd. IF indeed the † Preſcience of God and the Freedom of Man were abſolutely inconſiſtent, it would follow, not, that Man's Actions were not free (for that would vacate all Religion at once) but that ſuch Actions, as Man's are, and without which rational Creatures could not be rational Creatures, were not the Objects of divine Fore-Knowledge: And, in ſuch Caſe, it would be no more a Diminution of God's Omniſcience, not to know Things impoſſible, and contradictory to be known, than 'tis a Diminution of his Omnipotence, not to be able to do Things impoſſible, and contradictory to be done. But this is not the Caſe. Fore-Knowledge in itſelf has no Influence at all upon the Things fore-known, becauſe Things would be juſt as they are, and no otherwiſe, though there was no Fore-Knowledge. [m] The Futurity of free Actions is exactly the ſame, and, in the Nature of Things themſelves, of the like Certainty in Event, whether they can, or cannot be fore-known: And, as our knowing a Thing to be, when we ſee it is, does not hinder an Action from being free, notwithſtanding that it is then certain, and cannot but be, what it is; ſo God's foreſeeing that any Action will be done, does not at all hinder its being free, becauſe his fore-ſeeing Things to come does no more influence, or alter the Nature of Things, than our ſeeing them, when they are. The Truth is, [n] God, who has an intimate Knowledge of the State of our Souls, of all the Affections, Paſſions, Springs, and Weights, wherewith they are mov'd, knows infallibly, how every poſſible Object, that preſents itſelf, will determine our Judgments and Choices, tho' he himſelf does not determine them at all: As the Man, who ſees the Setting of the Chimes, can tell

† The Learned Author of Divine Predeſtination has made it evident, that Fore-Knowledge in God is of a different Kind, quite of another Nature, than what it is in Man, and that we only aſcribe it to him by Way of Analogy and Compariſon; that, in ſhort, as it is in God, we have no proper and adequate Notions of it, any more than a Man born blind has of Sight and Colours, and that therefore we ought no more to pretend to determine, what is conſiſtent, or not conſiſtent with it, than a blind Man ought to determine, from what he hears, or feels, to what Objects the Senſe of Seeing reaches; for this would be to reaſon from what is only comparatively, and improperly aſcrib'd to God, and by Way of Analogy and Accommodation to our Capacities, as if it were properly and univocally the ſame in him, and in us.

[m] Clarke's Sermons, Vol. I. [n] Young's Sermons, Vol. I.

tell ſeveral Hours before, what Time they will play, without any poſitive Influence either upon their Setting or their Playing.

1. THIS Perfection of the divine Knowledge then, ought, in all Reaſon, to excite our Veneration, and humble our Minds, at the ſame Time, under a Senſe of our great Deficiency in that Particular. [o] Of all the Attainments of human Nature, there is nothing, that we admire ſo much as Knowledge; and yet the higheſt Knowledge of Man, the moſt glorious Underſtanding, that ever any one of the Sons of Men were endow'd with, compar'd to the Knowledge of God, is but as a Gloworm to the Sun. If then we eſteem theſe Candles of the Lord, which ſhine ſo imperfectly in the Dark; if we reverence a little Knowledge, compaſs'd about with much Ignorance; how ſhould we admire the Father of Lights, in whom is no Darkneſs at all, and adore that Knowledge, which has not the leaſt Blemiſh or Imperfection in it! [p] Who hath put Wiſdom into the inward Parts? or who has given Underſtanding to the Heart? Is a Queſtion that God himſelf puts to Job, and the Anſwer is very obvious: Even the original Cauſe and Author of all Things: But then the Conſequence muſt be, that Knowledge, and all other Faculties in created Beings, not only in Men, but even in the higheſt Angels alſo, are but little Images and Shadows of Perfection; faint and derivative Rays of Light from the Incomprehenſible Fountain of Glory; in Compariſon of whom our Knowledge itſelf is Ignorance, and our Light as Darkneſs [q]. The Reſult of this is Veneration.

2. AND as the Omniſcience of God ſhews the Weakneſs of human Underſtanding, ſo it expoſes the Folly of all Colluſion and Hypocriſy. How vain it is to make a Shew of that outwardly, which inwardly, and in our Hearts we are not; to put on a Maſk of Religion, and paint ourſelves beautifully without, when inwardly we are full of Rottenneſs and Uncleanneſs. If we were to deal with Men, this would not be a very wiſe Way, ſince there is Danger of Diſcovery even from them: But when we have to do with God, [r] to whom the Works of Men are as the Sun before him; to whom all our Diſguiſes are tranſparent, and all our little Arts of Concealment ſignify nothing, 'tis Madneſs to hide our Iniquity in our Boſom, or to think that any Place, tho' never ſo ſecret and retir'd, can conceal us from his Sight, [s] to whom Darkneſs is no Darkneſs at all, but the Night is as clear as the Day, and the Darkneſs and Light are both alike. Humility.

3. RATHER let the Conſideration of this Attribute engage us to live, as under his continual Obſervation and Inſpection. 'Tis the Advice of [t] Seneca to his Friend Lucilius, that he ſhould repreſent to his Mind and Thoughts Socrates, or Ariſtides, or Cato, or ſome other excellent and worthy Man, as a conſtant Obſerver and Examiner of his Actions; and this he recommends as a good Expedient towards reforming a Man's Life, and making him more virtuous in his Converſation. We are told by ſome late Writers, that the People of China think themſelves oblig'd to be very wary and circumſpect in all their Actions, from an Opinion generally prevailing among them, that the Souls of their departed Friends are preſent with them, and take ſpecial Notice of their Behaviour. This is but a falſe Surmiſe; but what I am ſpeaking of is a real Truth: We have a conſtant Inſpector and Obſerver of our Lives, noting down every Thing, we think, ſpeak, or do, in his all-containing Mind, to be produc'd for, or againſt us, at the laſt great Audit. [u] As therefore he is ever preſent with us, and his Eyes always upon us, ſo let ours proportionably be upon him; keeping our Minds in a lively Senſe of the Venerableneſs of his Preſence, and the Awfulneſs of his Inſpection, which is the beſt Method, to guard us from treating that Inſpection irreverently, and to keep us tender of doing any Thing unſuitable to ſuch a Preſence. And Circumſpection.

SECT. VIII.

Of the WISDOM of GOD.

THE Knowledge and Wiſdom of God, though both one in his infinite Eſſence, may nevertheleſs admit of this Diſtinction, that the one is the ſpeculative, and the other the practical Act of the divine Mind; that the one implies a bare Knowledge of Things, the other the ordering and diſpoſing of Things to a proper End: That The Wiſdom of God, what.

[o] Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. II. [p] Job xxxviii. 36. [q] Clarke's Sermons, Vol. I. [r] Eccleſiaſticus xvii. 19. [s] Pſal. cxxxix. 11, 12. [t] Epiſt. 11 & 25. [u] Young's Sermons, Vol. I.

[x] That the Knowledge of God, consequently, is a perfect Comprehension of the Nature of all Things, with all their Qualities, Powers, and Circumstances; whereas the Wisdom of God is a perfect Comprehension of the Respects and Relations of Things to one another, of their Harmony and Opposition, their Fitness and Unfitness to such and such Ends.

Prov'd from Reason.

THAT there is in the Mind of God such a Faculty, as we term Wisdom, or a Power of disposing and regulating Things to Purposes, best conducing to the Advancement of his own Glory and Honour, no one can doubt, who considers him as the Center of all Perfection. As he is indeed the sole original Cause and Author of all Things, [y] he cannot but know, what each of their Powers and Faculties can produce; cannot but see, at one View, all the possible Circumstances and Dispositions of Things; all their mutual Relations and Dependences, all their Compositions and Divisions, their Variations and Changes, their Fitness or Suitableness to certain respective Ends and Purposes; and, beholding all these Things at once, of Necessity he cannot but know, without all Possibility of Error, what is the best and propereſt End to be brought about, in every possible Method of disposing Things; which are the fittest Means to that End; and how those Means may be best employ'd, in order to accomplish it: And, having no wrong Inclinations within to change his Will, or Opposition from without to withstand his Power, 'tis plain, that he will always effect, what, in Right and Reason, is fittest to be done. Now this is infinite and perfect Wisdom; to know always the best End; to see always the Means, that will produce that End; to understand exactly how to apply those Means, and to have always a right and invariable Inclination to act accordingly.

MANKIND, I think, are agreed in this, that [z] Wisdom is the most eminent of all human Virtues, without which the other Graces of the Mind lose their Value and Lustre, (insomuch, that Mercy becomes Weakness, and Justice Cruelty, Patience Timorousness, and Courage Brutality, without the Conduct of Wisdom) and therefore we cannot but allow, that God (who is the Author and Giver of Being to the whole Universe) must in himself possess whatever is noble in any of his Creatures: If Wisdom, which is the most noble Perfection in any Creature, be wanting in him, he must be deficient in that, which every one accounts the highest Excellency. Nay, he must be deficient in that, whereof himself is confessedly the Fountain and Original, and distribute to others, what, upon this Supposition, he has not the Power to give. Since every good and perfect Gift therefore cometh from God above, and what is in the Effect is always more eminent and perfect in the Cause; it must follow, that he only is originally and independently wise, and that all created Wisdom, whether of Men or Angels, is but a Spark of the divine Light, like that of the Planets borrow'd from the Sun.

From Scripture.

WITH this Sentiment it is, that holy Job asks the Question: [a] Where shall Wisdom be found? Or, where is the Place of Understanding? And then, proceeding to observe, that it is neither to be found in the Land of the Living, nor purchas'd with the most valuable Merchandize, he resolves us at length where we may seek for the original Source of it: God understandeth the Way, and knoweth the Place thereof; for he looketh to the Ends of the Earth, and seeth the whole Heaven, to make the Weight for the Winds, to weigh the Waters by Measure, to make a Decree for the Rain, and a Way for the Lightning of the Thunder. And in like Manner, to shew the Excellency and Superiority of the divine Wisdom, in a comparative Sense, the Prophet expresses himself in a very sublime Manner: [b] Who hath measur'd the Waters in the Hollow of his Hand, meted out Heaven with a Span, comprehended the Dust of the Earth in a Measure, and weighed the Mountains in Scales, and the Hills in a Balance? Who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord, or, being his Counsellor, hath taught him? With whom took he Counsel? And who instructed him in the Path of Judgment, and taught him Knowledge, and shewed to him the Way of Understanding?

From the Works of Creation and Providence.

AND indeed, if we take never so slight a Survey of the Works of Creation and Providence, we cannot but perceive in them very legible Characters of divine Wisdom. [c] The Sun, and Moon, and other Luminaries in Heaven, whether planetary or fixt, with their different Orders and Revolutions; the Air, and other Bodies, that occupy the Space between Heaven and Earth; the wonderful Balancing of the Winds, and gentle Falling of the Clouds in useful Rain and Showers; the Frame and Situation of the Earth, and the great Variety of Plants and Trees, of Rivers and Fountains, of Men and other Creatures, that do ſtock and adorn it; the ſubterraneous World, wherein are repoſited Metals and Minerals, Salts, Sulphurs, and Stones, both precious and common, for the Uſe and Ornament of Mankind; and the wide and great Deep, ſo ſtored with Treaſures, and fitted for the Commerce of the different Inhabitants of the World: All theſe, or the leaſt Individual in them, if carefully enquired into, will abundantly proclaim the Glory of God, and diſcover the Wiſdom of their Creator, as the holy Penmen, in ſome of the loftieſt Strains of Eloquence, have endeavoured to ſet it out. [d] He ſpreadeth out the Heavens, and treadeth upon the Waves of the Sea; he maketh Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades, and the Chambers of the South; he doth great Things paſt finding out, yea, and Wonders without Number. [e] He ſtretcheth out the North over the empty Space, and hangeth the Earth upon nothing: He bindeth up the Waters in the thick Clouds, and the Cloud is not rent under them: He hath compaſſed the Waters with Bounds, until the Day and Night come to an End. The Pillars of Heaven tremble, and are aſtoniſhed at his Reproof; he divideth the Sea by his Power, by his Spirit he hath garniſhed the Heavens. Lo, theſe are Parts of his Ways! But how little a Portion is heard of him, and the Thunder of his Power who can underſtand? For, if (as ſome have done) [f] we ſuppoſe other Worlds beſides this, furniſhed with Creatures, whoſe Fabrick and Motions, and conſequently, their Properties and Operations differ from what we ſee before us, how muſt this increaſe our Ideas of God's Wiſdom, both in framing and governing ſuch a vaſt Variety of different Worlds! For, if to keep one complicated Machine in Order be accounted a Work of no ſmall Skill, how extremely aſtoniſhing muſt it be to conſider, what Wiſdom and Providence is requiſite, to guide and over-rule ſo many Millions of Engines, (as we may call them) and many of them endowed with Liberty of Will, in ſuch a Manner, as to make them ſubſervient to his wiſe Purpoſes and Decrees! [g] O Lord! how manifold are thy Works, in Wiſdom haſt thou made them all; the Earth is full of thy Goodneſs.

2. IF we conſider the Work of Man's Redemption, we ſhall find the ſame Diſplay of [h] the manifold Wiſdom of God, as the Apoſtle calls it. [i] Man had ſinned, and, by his Tranſgreſſion, ſtopped the Effuſions of Goodneſs, and opened a wide Paſſage for divine Wrath to fall upon him: But how to ſave this Creature, loſt and undone by his own Choice, the Invention of Men and Angels could not deviſe. Nay, Heaven itſelf ſeemed to be divided, Mercy inclined to ſave, but Juſtice interpoſed for Satisfaction; and the Difficulty was, how to anſwer the Demands of the one, and not deny the Requeſts of the other. In this Exigence, his Mercy excited his Wiſdom to interpoſe as an Arbiter, which, in the Treaſure of its incomprehenſible Light, found out an admirable Expedient to ſave Man, without Prejudice to his other Perfections; and that was, by conſtituting a proper Mediator between the guilty Creature and himſelf, that, by tranferring the Puniſhment on the Surety, he might puniſh Sin, as Juſtice required, and yet pardon the Sinner, as Mercy deſired. And Redemption.

[k] HERE then is the Compaſs of Divine Wiſdom diſplayed: In God's taking Occaſion, from Sin and the Fall of Man, to magnify his own Glory, and exalt his Creature to a more excellent State; in ordaining ſuch a Mediator, as was qualified to reconcile God to Man, by making Expiation, and Man to God, by making Interceſſion for him; in making, in all Appearance, ſuch oppoſite Means accompliſh ſuch glorious Effects; and in laying the Deſign of the Goſpel in ſuch a Manner, as both provides for the Comfort, and promotes the Holineſs of Mankind; for the matchleſs Wiſdom of God is equally viſible in the Revelation, he hath made of himſelf; [l] in the Doctrines, and Laws, and Precepts, which he hath delivered, to inſtruct us in the right Principles of Knowledge, and to regulate our Actions in a Manner moſt congruous to Reaſon.

IF then the Wiſdom of God, in all his Diſpenſations to us, be ſo conſpicuous, the proper Reſult of this Conſideration is, to praiſe and adore his Divine Majeſty, in the Language of the Prophet Daniel; Bleſſed be the Name of God for ever and ever, for Wiſdom and Might are his; and to humble ourſelves, and ſuppreſs every Thought in us, that exalteth itſelf againſt the Knowledge of God, and if we lack Wiſdom, to repair to the ſacred Fountain, and aſk it of him, who giveth to every one liberally, and upbraideth not; [m] for if thou cry after Knowledge, and lift up thy Voice for Underſtanding; if thou ſeek her as Silver, and ſearch for her as hid Treaſure; then ſhalt thou The Uſe of this Doctrine.

thou understand the Fear of the Lord, and find the Knowledge of God. Above all, we must be mindful not to censure God in any of his Dealings with the Sons of Men, but, in all the Issues of his Providence, to place our whole Trust and Confidence in him, with a fixed Acquiescence in his good Pleasure. 'Tis a noble Saying that of Epictetus, (as it is recorded by Arrian) and bespeaks a gallant Soul: "Lift up thine "Eyes, says he, with Confidence to God, and say, Henceforth, Lord, deal with "me as thou pleasest; I am of the same Opinion with thee, just of the same Mind, "that thou art. I refuse nothing that seems good to thee; lead me where thou "wilt; cloath me with what Garments thou pleasest; set me in a publick Place, "or keep me in a private Condition; continue me in mine own Country, or banish "me from it; bestow Wealth upon me, or leave me to struggle with Poverty; "which of these thou pleasest, ἐγὼ σοι ὑπὲρ ἁπάντων τούτων πρὸς ἀνθρώπους ἀπο-"λογήσομαι. If Men shall censure this Providence towards me, and say, Thou deal-"est hardly with me, I will apologize for thee, I will undertake, and maintain thy "Cause, that, what thou doest, is best for me." What Christian could say more, or better, of a perfect Resignation to the Divine Providence? And yet this Epictetus had a maimed and deformed Body, was no more than a Slave, extremely poor, and very cruelly and tyrannically used; so that we can hardly imagine a Man in worse and more wretched Circumstances: All which notwithstanding, he justifies the Providence of God in all that he sent upon him; not only submits to his Condition, but embraces it with Chearfulness; and since God thought it fittest and best for him, he is of the same Mind, and thinks so too; from a wise Sense, no doubt, of a Divine Superintendency, and a firm Persuasion, that he had infinite Wisdom, managing and directing infinite Goodness, engaged to take Care of him; as he always makes all Things work together for the Good of them that love and fear him.

SECT. IX.

Of the POWER of GOD.

The Power of God, what.

BY the Power of God, we mean that Ability and Strength, whereby he can bring to pass whatever he pleases; whatever his infinite Wisdom can direct, or the infinite Purity of his Will resolve; provided the Thing be consistent with itself, and compatible with his Divine Nature and Perfections.

[n] To help our Conception of this sovereign Power, let us imagine a Principle, from which all other Power is derived, on which it depends, and to which it is perfectly subject and subordinate; a Principle, which can do, not only what any created Being, but infinitely more than all Beings in the World, joined together, can do; a Principle, which nothing can oppose; which can check, and controul at Pleasure, and bear down, and annihilate all other Powers whatever; a Principle, which can do all Things in the most perfect Manner, at once, in an Instant, and with the utmost Ease; and, lastly, a Principle, which, after we have imagined it never so perfect, can do many more Things, and in a Manner much more perfect, than we can imagine.

What God cannot do.

SUCH we may conceive the Omnipotence of God to be, boundless, and irresistible, and under no Limitation, except where the Thing either in its own Nature implies a Contradiction, or some plain Repugnancy to the Perfections of his Nature. [o] Where Things in themselves imply a Contradiction, as that a Body may be extended, and not extended; in a Place, and not in a Place, at the same Time; such Things, I say, cannot be done by God, [p] because Contradictions are impossible in their own Nature. Nor is it any Derogation from the Divine Power to say, they cannot be done: For, as the Object of the Understanding, of the Eye, and the Ear, is that which is intelligible, visible, and audible; so the Object of Power must be that which is possible; and as it is no Prejudice to the most perfect Understanding, or Sight, or Hearing, that it does not understand what is not intelligible, or see what is not visible, or hear what is not audible; so neither is it any Diminution to the most perfect Power, that it does not do what is not possible.

IN like manner, God cannot do any Thing that is repugnant to his other Perfections: He cannot lye, nor deceive, nor deny himself; for this would be injurious to

[n] Tillotson's Sermons, Vol. II. Fiddes's Body of Divinity. [o] Charnock and Wilkins, on the Attributes. [p] Edwards's and to his Truth: He cannot love Sin, nor puniſh Innocence; for this would deſtroy his Holineſs and Goodneſs: And therefore, to aſcribe a Power to him, that is inconſiſtent with the Rectitude of his Nature, is not to magnify, but debaſe him; for all Unrighteouſneſs is Weakneſs, a Defection from right Reaſon, a Deviation from the perfect Rule of Action, and ariſes from a Defect of Goodneſs and Power. In a Word, ſince all the Attributes of God are eſſentially the ſame, a Power in him, which tends to deſtroy any other Attribute of the Divine Nature, muſt be a Power deſtructive of itſelf. [q] Well therefore may we conclude him abſolutely omnipotent, who, by being able to effect all Things conſiſtent with his Perfections, ſheweth infinite Ability, and, by not being able to do any Thing repugnant to the ſame Perfections, demonſtrates himſelf ſubject to no Infirmity.

His Omnipotence prov'd from Reaſon.

AS therefore himſelf is the Fountain of Power, and derives down Being and Abilities to all his Creatures, he muſt more eminently contain in himſelf what he communicates to others: [r] And, as he is an abſolute and ſelf-exiſtent Being, by whom all Things in the Univerſe were made, and are entirely dependent upon him; from whom all the Powers of all Things are derived, and muſt therefore be perfectly ſubject and ſubordinate to him; nothing can make any Difficulty or Reſiſtance to the Execution of his Will, but he muſt of Neceſſity have abſolute Power to do every Thing he pleaſes, with the perfecteſt Eaſe, and in the perfecteſt Manner, at once, and in a Moment, whenever he wills it.

AND indeed, if ſuch Power, as we are now ſpeaking of, belonged not to God, [s] all his other Perfections would be inſignificant and ineffectual: His Goodneſs would be but an empty Sound: his Knowledge but an idle Speculation; and Wiſdom to contrive, without Power to execute, a very vain and uſeleſs Thing: There would be no Reaſon to reſpect his Juſtice, if God were without Power to reward and puniſh; no Cauſe to depend on his Faithfulneſs and Truth, if he were not able to perform his Promiſes; nor any Occaſion to acknowledge his Providence, ſince a Being deſtitute of Power muſt be deem'd incapable to take upon him the Government of the World. And for this Reaſon, the wiſeſt of the Pagan Writers are very copious in ſuch Aſſertions as theſe: [t] That there is nothing that God cannot do; and that, without any Kind of Labour; that all Things are equally eaſy to him, and that nothing can be ſaid to be difficult; whereupon they juſtly concluded, that this vaſt Frame of Nature, and the upholding and preſerving of it, was a Conſequence and Argument of a Divine and inviſible Power: As who indeed can contemplate this Fabrick, and conſider the different Magnitude, Figure, and Situation of its Parts, and not draw from it the ſame Concluſion?

From the Frame of the World.

FOR how vaſt and ſtupendous is the Maſs of Matter that the World conſiſts of! [u] The fixed Stars, which to the naked Eye appear but like Spangles, are found by Aſtronomers to be an hundred Times bigger than the Earth. The Sun is by ſome eſteemed ten thouſand Times bigger; and yet, theſe great and immenſe Bodies are nothing, as it were, in Compariſon of that vaſt Expanſe of fluid Matter, which does every where ſurround them. Now, if in forming this ſtupendous Work, we could ſuppoſe God to have made uſe of any Engines, [x] what Notions muſt we have of the Force neceſſary to raiſe even but one of theſe fixt Stars, and to place it at a Diſtance, which is thought almoſt incredible, in its proper Orb! What Idea ſhall we be able to form of the Hand, which faſhion'd it behind and before, and gave it, in all Reſpects, the Figure and Dimenſions proper to it? Thus, if we argue, by Way of Alluſion to the uſual Methods of erecting any Fabrick built by the Hands of Men, to that glorious and amazing Structure, whoſe Builder and Maker is God, we cannot avoid forming the ſtrongeſt Apprehenſions of his Power; eſpecially when we conſider that he had no Aſſiſtant, or ſubordinate Agent in his Work, but [y] ſtretched forth the Heavens alone, and ſpread abroad the Earth by himſelf. But if, inſtead of employing any inſtrumental Means towards the Conſtruction of this Work, God only ſpake, and it was done, and, with Reſpect to the ſeveral Parts of it, only commanded, and they were created, this gives us ſtill a more lively Idea of his Power, than if he had made uſe of the moſt prodigious Machines, ſuppoſing there could have been found a Place for fixing them.

The Government of it.

[z] AND as none, but an Almighty Architect, could have form'd the World at firſt without Materials, and brought it to Perfection without the Help of Inſtruments;

[q] Pearſon, upon the Creed. [r] Clarke's Being and Attributes. [s] Wilkins, of the Principles of Natural Religion. [t] Nihil eſt quod Deus efficere non poteſt. Tull. De Divin. ments; ſo none, but an Almighty Ruler, could have preſerv'd it in the Order wherein we ſee it. The Motion of the Earth about its own Axis is prodigiouſly ſwift, [a] ſwifter than a Bullet from the Mouth of a Cannon; and yet nothing in Compariſon to the Motion of ſome celeſtial Bodies, ſwimming in liquid Æther, which are computed to move three thouſand Times faſter than any Cannon Ball in the Air. What a large Conception muſt this then give us of the immenſe Power of their Creator, who has impreſs'd ſuch a wonderful Quantity of Motion on Matter, and maintains it ſo exactly? Who not only ſets Bounds to the Sea, and ſays to its proud Waves, Hither ſhall they come, and no farther, but moderates the ſtupendous rapid Motion of the Globes, and their intercurrent Fluids ſo, that, notwithſtanding the Greatneſs of their Bulk, and the Velocity of their Courſe, they move more regularly than the beſt-made Watch! Well therefore might the Royal Pſalmiſt cry out, in full Admiration of his Works of Creation and Providence, [b] thou haſt a mighty Arm; ſtrong is thy Hand, and high is thy Right-Hand; nor could we have told how to account for all theſe Prodigies of Divine Power, had not the Prophet took Care to inform us, that Omnipotence can do all Things with the moſt abſolute Eaſe, without any Difficulty in itſelf, and without any Pains or Labour in the Operation; for [c] haſt thou not known, ſays he, haſt thou not heard, that the everlaſting God the Lord, the Creator of the Ends of the Earth, faileth not, neither is he weary.

From Scripture. AFTER this, we need not purſue the Power of God, in the ſtrange and miraculous Occurrences that have happen'd in the World, and wherein [d] he is ſaid to make bare his Arm in the Eyes of all Nations. The holy Penmen have done it in a Manner, proper to poſſeſs our Minds with the greateſt Sentiments of the divine Majeſty, and to give us the moſt awful Impreſſions of a religious Fear and Reverence: [e] He is wiſe in Heart, and mighty in Strength: Who hath hardened himſelf againſt him, and proſpered? He removeth the Mountains, and they know it not; he overturneth them in his Anger; he ſhaketh the Earth out of her Place, and the Pillars thereof tremble; he commandeth the Sun, and it riſeth not, and ſealeth up the Stars; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlaſting Strength. [f] Declare his Glory among the Heathen, his marvellous Works among all Nations; for great is the Lord, and greatly to be praiſed; he is alſo to be feared among all Gods: Glory and Honour are in his Preſence, and Strength and Gladneſs in his Place; and therefore give unto the Lord, ye Kindreds of the People, give unto the Lord Glory and Strength, give unto the Lord the Glory due unto his Name; for this is what his infinite Power and Majeſty call upon us to do.

Affections reſulting from this Attribute. A FARTHER Effect of the Contemplation of this Attribute, is to make God at all Times the chief Object of our Fear, our Confidence, and Adoration. And indeed, the Fear of God is of ſo great Importance to us in the Conduct of our Lives, Fear of God. that he himſelf ſeems to have given us a gracious Intimation of it, in every Motion of our natural Fears; inſomuch, that whatever a rational Creature may think himſelf concern'd to dread and be afraid of, that very Thing does properly remit him to God, as an Object much more becoming his Fear, and awful Apprehenſions. [g] Thus, if it be reaſonable to fear Want, much more reaſonable is it to fear him, whoſe Bounty is the Fountain of all our Supplies; if it be reaſonable to fear Diſappointments, much more to fear him, whoſe Providence diſpoſes the Iſſue of all we project; if it be reaſonable to fear Pain, and other Inconveniencies of Life, much more to fear him, whoſe Pleaſure determines all our Eaſe, and all our Sufferings: In a Word, if it be reaſonable to fear them that can kill the Body, much more to fear him, who, after he hath killed, can caſt into Hell. This then is the Moral, and this is the Leſſon of all our Fears, fear God. Nor do our natural Fears only remit us to God, but they remind us, at the ſame Time, to lay hold on his Almighty Power, in order to ſtrengthen and ſupport our Imbecillity againſt the Violence of the Oppreſſor, and the Tyranny of the Proud: For, if God be on our Side, we need not fear what Man, whoſe Breath is in his Noſtrils, can do unto us; he [h] ſhall give his Angels charge over us, to keep us in all our Ways, either to reſtrain the Wrath of Men, and [i] redeem us from our Enemies, or cover us with his Feathers, and under his Wings, [k] until his Tyranny be over-paſt.

AND as the Conſideration of God's Omnipotence is of great Efficacy to excite in our Minds a Fear of him, and him only; ſo will it juſtify our Truſt and Confidence in him, and prove a Baſis for our Contentment, in all the Calamities that can befal us. 'Tis an Expreſſion, that of the Royal Pſalmiſt, full of Comfort and Conſolation to every virtuous Man, labouring under Affliction: Our Help ſtandeth in the Name of the Lord, who hath made Heaven and Earth. [l] For when we are reduced to the laſt Extremities, when Tribulation flows in upon us with an extraordinary Force, when all the Sluices are opened, and the Flood-gates broke up, ſo that we expect nothing but to be overwhelm'd; he that made Heaven and Earth can even then preſerve and protect us, and raiſe up ſuch Banks and Ramparts, as ſhall keep out the raging Waters, and reſtrain their Violence. [m] The ſame Royal Pſalmiſt, to excite in our Minds a lively Senſe of the Almighty Power of God, in defending his Servants in the needful Time of Trouble, has borrow'd Alluſions from every Thing that either Nature has made, or Art has invented, proper for Defence: [n] The Lord is my Rock, and my Fortreſs, and my Deliverer; my God, my Strength, in whom I will truſt; my Buckler, and the Horn alſo of my Salvation, and my high Tower. When he conſidered the Number and Power of thoſe Enemies, with whom he was to contend, he had Reaſon to be diffident of himſelf; but when he contemplated the far ſuperior Strength of his Aſſiſtant, all his Fears were immediately diſcarded: [o] The Lord is my Light, and my Salvation, whom ſhall I fear? The Lord is the Strength of my Life, of whom ſhall I be afraid? Tho' an Hoſt camp againſt me, my Heart ſhall not fear; tho' War ſhould riſe againſt me, in this will I be confident. And well he might, when the great Controller of the Univerſe had given him this Aſſurance: [p] Becauſe thou haſt made the Lord, even the Moſt High, thy Habitation, there ſhall no Evil befall thee, neither ſhall any Plague come nigh thy Dwelling. For, (as holy [q] Job elegantly expreſſes it) He ſhall deliver thee in ſix Troubles, yea, in ſeven there ſhall no Evil touch thee; in Famine he ſhall redeem thee from Death, and in War from the Power of the Sword——at Deſtruction and Famine thou ſhalt laugh, neither ſhalt thou be afraid of the Beaſts of the Earth; for thou ſhalt be in League with the Stones of the Field, and the Beaſts of the Field ſhall be at Peace with thee. If therefore we do but endeavour to be ſuch Perſons, as God's Omnipotence is concerned to relieve, and wait the Iſſues of his Providence with a patient Submiſſion to his good Pleaſure, we may with Safety [r] commit our Cauſe unto him, who does great Things, and unſearchable marvellous Things, and without Number; unto him, who ſlumbereth and ſleepeth not, who fainteth not, neither is he weary; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlaſting Strength.

And Confidence in him.

SECT. X.

Of the HAPPINESS of GOD.

THE Notion of Happineſs, taken in its higheſt Senſe, (as we muſt neceſſarily do, when we apply it to God) is no other, than a fix'd and immoveable State of Contentment and Satisfaction, of Pleaſure and Delight, reſulting from the ſecure Poſſeſſion of all that is good and deſirable, i. e. of all Excellency and Perfection. [s] So that theſe following Ingredients muſt go to make up a compleat State of Happineſs. 1. Perfect Knowledge, to underſtand what it is, that conſtitutes Happineſs, and when one is really poſſeſſed of it. 2. Perfect Wiſdom, to concert the Means and Methods of compaſſing, and ſecuring ſuch a State of Happineſs. 3. Abſolute Power, to be able to do whatever conduces to it, and to check and controul whatever would obſtruct it. 4. Univerſal Goodneſs, or a generous Diſpoſition of Mind, to communicate of its Happineſs to others. 5. nothing without, that can poſſibly hinder his Acquiſition, or diſturb his Enjoyment of it, the perfect and moſt conſummate Felicity of his Nature muſt undeniably follow.

'COULD we ſuppoſe, that the Contemplation or Enjoyment of any Thing without could contribute to the Happineſs of the Divine Nature, God (as the Cauſe of all other Beings, and of all their Powers and Perfections) muſt neceſſarily take all the Complacency in them, that they are capable of exciting. But the Goodneſs of his Creatures extendeth not to him: He is infinitely and abſolutely happy in the Perfections and internal Operations of his own Nature: He is his own Light, and his own Object; and, as nothing without is capable of acting upon him, or diſturbing his Action, he muſt be happy for ever without Allay or Intermiſſion, without Mixture or Meaſure. And, accordingly, the wiſeſt of the Heathen Sages (in Conformity to the Holy Scriptures, which ſtile him [u] the bleſſed God, the King eternal, immortal, the bleſſed and only Potentate) were always of this Opinion, [x] that God muſt needs be happy, becauſe he is ſufficient in himſelf, and ſtands in need of nothing; and [y] that nothing is ſo happy, as the Divine Being, becauſe nothing abounds with all Manner of Goodneſs, but he. Nay, they accounted Happineſs ſo eſſential to the Notion of a God, that they made this one of their Ways to find out what Properties were fit to attribute to him, and what not, even by conſidering what Things were conſiſtent with Happineſs, or inconſiſtent with it; and thence inferring what might be a ſuitable, or unſuitable Attribute to the Divine Nature: For which Reaſon Epicurus (as he is repreſented by Lucretius) excludes God from the Making and Government of the World, leſt it ſhould diſcompoſe his Eaſe, or be any Obſtruction to his Felicity. [z] It is neceſſary, ſays he, that the Divine Nature ſhould be happy, and therefore altogether unconcern'd in our Affairs; free from all Grief and Danger, ſufficient for itſelf, and ſtanding in need of no Body; neither pleaſed with our good Actions, nor provoked by our Faults; which, tho' it be a very faulty Poſition, confirms us in this Perſuaſion, that Bleſſedneſs is ſo inſeparable from the Notion of a Deity, that, whoever profeſſes to believe a God, muſt acknowledge him to be perfectly happy.

What we are to learn from this Attribute.

1. [a] 'IF the Divine Nature then be ſo infinitely and compleatly happy, this is a great Confirmation of our Faith and Hope concerning the Happineſs of another Life, which the Scripture deſcribes to us by the Sight and Enjoyment of God. As we are Creatures of a finite Power, and limited Underſtanding, we neceſſarily want many of thoſe Perfections, which are the Cauſe and Ingredients of perfect Happineſs; but the bleſſed God, who is infinitely happy, himſelf, can alſo make us happy according to our finite Meaſure and Capacity: For, as he, who is the firſt and original Being, can communicate Being to other Things, ſo he, who is the Fountain of Happineſs, can derive and convey Happineſs to his Creatures.

THAT he will do ſo, we have the greater Reaſon to believe, when we conſider, that Goodneſs, as it is the prime Perfection, ſo is it likewiſe the chief Felicity of the Divine Nature. Baſe and envious Tempers indeed are narrow and contracted; they love to confine their Enjoyments, and good Things to themſelves, and are loth that others ſhould take part with them: But the moſt noble Minds are always moſt free and enlarged, and cannot be happy themſelves, unleſs they find, or make others ſo. As therefore to be good, and to do good, is the ſupreme Felicity of God himſelf, we may eaſily believe, that he is very ready and forward to make us happy, by all the Ways, that are agreeable to his infinite Wiſdom, and to the higheſt Degree our Nature will reach; for [b] Eye hath not ſeen, nor Ear heard, neither have entered into the Heart of Man, the Things which God hath prepared for them that love him.

2. [c] 'FROM this Happineſs of the Divine Nature, we may learn farther wherein our own Felicity does conſiſt, namely, in the Image, and in the Favour of God: In the Favour of God, as the Cauſe of our Happineſs, and in the Image of God, as a neceſſary Qualification for it. Unleſs God loves us, we cannot be happy; for miſerable are all they, whom he hates; and yet he himſelf hath told us, that he hateth all the Workers of Iniquity; that the Wicked ſhall not ſtand in his Sight, neither ſhall Evil dwell with him. Nay, even if we ſhould ſuppoſe that he could take Pleaſure in any any Perſon of this Denomination, yet we cannot ſee how the Perſon himſelf could be happy, becauſe he would want that inward Frame and Diſpoſition, a Reſemblance of the Divine Holineſs and Goodneſs, which is ſo neceſſary to any one's Happineſs, that the external Preſence of God, and a local Heaven (if we could imagine ſuch an one admitted to it) would ſignify no more to make him happy, than Heaps of Gold and Diamonds, the moſt delicious Food, or melodious Muſick, would contribute to a Man's Eaſe, in the Paroxyſms of a Fever, or in a violent Fit of the Stone; becauſe the Man has that within him, which torments him, and, 'till that be removed, he cannot poſſibly be at Eaſe. In a Word, the ſureſt Foundation of Love and Friendſhip (we are very ſenſible) is a Similitude of Temper and Diſpoſition: Every Thing naturally affects its own Likeneſs, and gladly runs into its Embraces: God therefore and Man muſt be like one another, before they can take Pleaſure in one another. If we are unlike God, 'tis impoſſible that we ſhould be happy in one another; and therefore, either God, or we, muſt be chang'd, in order to effect this End. Now the Nature of God is fixt and unchangeable; therefore change thyſelf, Sinner, and endeavour to be like him: And, ſince he cannot depart from his Holineſs and Purity, thou muſt leave thy Sins, and be holy, as he is holy, if ever thou expect to be happy, as he is: For every one, that has this Hope in him, muſt purify himſelf, even as he is pure.

SECT. XI.

Of the Moral ATTRIBUTES of GOD: And firſt, of his HOLINESS.

God's moral Attributes, what.

THE true Notion of a Moral Agent is, that he acts, or ought to act in Conformity to ſome Law; the Obſervance whereof is attended with Honour and Satisfaction of Mind, and the Violation of it with Shame and Regret. God indeed, as he is the ſupreme Lord and Creator of all Things, cannot be directed in any Thing from without; but, as Reaſon is the Law of Order, determining what is right and wrong, good and evil, decent and diſagreeable, and a Law which God unalterably loves, and eternally delights to follow; he muſt (as he poſſeſſes Reaſon in the higheſt and moſt perfect Degree) be, in the higheſt and moſt perfect Degree, a moral Agent.

BUT how tranſcendent ſoever the moral Perfections of the Divine Nature may be, when compared with thoſe of Men, or any other intelligent Being; yet if the Reaſons of Right, Good, and Fit, have the ſame Foundation in the divine, that they have in an human Mind, the moral Attributes of God muſt be of the ſame Nature with what we perceive in Men, how much ſoever they may differ in the Degrees of their Perfection: Otherwiſe, we could form no diſtinct Notions of them, nor could they be propos'd as fit Objects for our Imitation.

The Holineſs of God, what.

NOW of all the moral Attributes of God, that, which naturally occurs firſt to our Thoughts, and is the preſiding Attribute, (if we may ſo call it) having the moſt general Influence and Direction over the reſt, is Holineſs; which (if taken in a general Senſe) denotes a Freedom from all Impurity and Imperfection; but, as apply'd to God, is [d] that peculiar Eminence of the Divine Nature, whereby it is ſeparate and remov'd, at an infinite Diſtance, from all moral Imperfection, or what we call Sin: By which we mean, that there is no ſuch Thing as Malice, or Envy, or Hatred, or Revenge, or Imperiouſneſs, or Cruelty, or Tyranny, or Injuſtice, or Falſhood, or Unfaithfulneſs in God; or if there be any other Thing which implies Sin and Vice, and moral Imperfection, Holineſs ſignifies, that the Divine Nature is not only devoid of theſe, but poſſeſſed of the contrary Perfections to an infinite Degree. And indeed we can hardly entertain any tolerable Notion of God, unleſs we ſeparate from him whatever is impure, and liable to pollute either his Nature or Actions. [e] We may conceive him infinite in Majeſty, infinite in Eſſence, eternal in Duration, mighty in Power, wiſe in Counſels, merciful in his Proceedings with Men, and whatever other Perfections may dignify ſo ſovereign a Being; but, if at the ſame Time, we conceive him deſtitute of this farther Perfection, and poſſeſs'd with the leaſt Contagion of Evil, we we make him but an infinite Monſter, and ſully all the other Perfections, which we aſcrib'd to him before.

'TWAS a great and laudable Saying that of Plutarch, "That he ſhould account "himſelf leſs injur'd, if any one ſhould ſay, that there never was ſuch a Man as Plu- "tarch, than if he ſhould ſay, there was ſuch an one indeed, but that he was a "looſe and profligate Fellow." And in like Manner, the Wrong done to God is leſs, to diſcard all Acknowledgments of his Being, than to believe his Exiſtence, and at the ſame Time pronounce him a baſe and unrighteous Deity; for he that ſays that God is not holy, ſpeaks much worſe of him, than he that ſays, there is no God at all. For this Reaſon, [f] ſome that have undertook to vindicate Epicurus from the Imputation of Atheiſm, (wherewith he was commonly charged) tell us, that he did not deny the Being of a God, but of thoſe wicked and adulterous Deities, which the Vulgar worſhipped, though guilty of Practices unbecoming the Nature of God. The Truth is, the wiſeſt of the Heathen Philoſophers always aſſerted, that Virtue was an Imitation of God, and the righteous Man a Reſemblance of him: And therefore this might be one Reaſon why Plato (the great Founder of a learned Sect) was for excluding all Poets from his Commonwealth, becauſe the Transfigurations of their falſe Gods, and the many Extravagancies committed by them, were, in the Opinion of all good Men, horrid Fables, and unfit for Modeſty either to report or hear. However this be, 'tis certain, that, being at a Loſs to account for the Origin of Sin, (rather than make God the Author of it) they choſe to aſcribe it to Matter, and ran into the abſurd Opinion of fancying that Matter uncreated, rather than that any injurious Imputation ſhould fall upon the undefiled Governor of the World, as they us'd to ſtile him. Nor may it be a bad Apology for ſome ancient Hereticks, that their aſſerting two diſtinct eternal Principles, one the Cauſe of Evil, as God was the Fountain of Good, proceeded, in ſome Meaſure, from a Dread of involving the ſupreme Deity in any Thing, that had a criminal Aſpect: So rooted was the Notion of this divine Purity, that none would ever ſlander Goodneſs itſelf with that, which was ſo diſparaging to it!

The Teſtimony of Heathens.

IF we look into the Holy Scriptures, [g] there we ſhall find no Title ſo frequently given God, or ſo often ingeminated, as this of his Holineſs. How often may we find him call'd [h] the Holy One, [i] the Holy One of Iſrael, [k] the Holy One of Jacob, &c. What other Epithet of his do we hear ſo many Times repeated in the joyful Acclamations above, [l] where the four Beaſts reſt not Day and Night, ſaying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come? To denote his Hatred againſt Sin, he is ſaid to be [m] a jealous God, viſiting Iniquity, and upon Provocation, [n] a conſuming Fire. To clear him of any Participation in Guilt, [o] far be it from God that he ſhould do Wickedneſs, and from the Almighty, that he ſhould commit Iniquity! [p] God tempteth no Man; and therefore [q] ſay not thou, 'tis through the Lord that I fell away; ſay not thou, he cauſed me to err; for he hath no need of the ſinful Man. To diſclaim any Complacency, he can take in evil Actions, he is ſaid to be [r] a God, that takes no Pleaſure in Wickedneſs, neither ſhall any Evil dwell with him; that he is of purer Eyes than to behold Iniquity; and [s] that therefore the Sacrifice, the Way, and the Thoughts of the Wicked, are an Abomination to him. And laſtly, to ſhew the great Excellence and Tranſcendency of this Perfection in him, the Compariſon is taken from the loftieſt Creatures we are acquainted with, and yet we are told, [t] that the Heavens are not pure in his Sight, and his Angels are charged with Folly: As bright and illuſtrious as theſe celeſtial Beings are, yet their Holineſs grows dim and pale in his Preſence; they cover their Faces, out of Weakneſs to behold his, and hide their Feet, out of a Senſe of their comparative Deformity.

From Scripture.

An Objection.

THUS copiouſly have the Holy Scriptures ſet forth the Holineſs and Purity of God in all its Branches and Reſpects. "But do not the ſame Scriptures, in other Places, "repreſent him as countenancing and encouraging Sin, as promoting, advancing, "and ſometimes acting it? Are there not ſeveral Texts, in the Old and New Teſta- "ment both, that make him, as it were, the Author of Sin, the Cauſe and Pro- "curer of what is vicious and unlawful? How then is this conſiſtent with his pure "and immaculate Nature? And when he is ſaid to blind Men's Eyes, to harden their "Hearts, to give them up to their Luſts, to make them err from his Ways, and put it "in

" in their Hearts to do all Manner of Wickedneſs, what Apology ſhall we make for " his ſo much applauded Holineſs?"

NOW, for a Solution of this, it may be conſider'd, [u] that God is ſometimes ſaid to do theſe Things, as he with-holds his Grace from Men, and denies them the Help of his bleſſed Spirit, whereby alone they are enabled to do what is good and holy: Sometimes, as he preſents them with ſuch Occaſions and Objects, as are a Means to incite them to ſinful Deſires and Actions; and ſometimes, as he ſubmits them to the Aſſaults and Temptations of Satan, and allows them to proceed in their Iniquities, in order to make one Sin the Puniſhment of another: In all which Caſes, God is not culpable, neither is there any Blemiſh caſt upon his Holineſs, becauſe he lays no poſitive Bias upon their Wills, but leaves them to their own Choice. The propoſing of Objects deſtroys not their Liberty, but 'tis the Corruption of their Nature, which bears them down, without any other Influx. And though the Communications of his preventing Grace might be available to their Standing; yet, when Men have long ſlighted and abuſed that ineſtimable Gift, 'tis but Juſtice in him to abandon the Care and Preſervation of them, that they may eat the bitter Fruit of their own Ways, and be filled with their own Devices. Anſwer'd at large.

THIS is a general Solution for ſome of theſe Difficulties; but then it may be conſidered farther, that, in Actions, which have a manifeſt Depravity in them, there is a Diſtinction to be made between the natural Act, and the moral Evil, that adheres to it. For the Underſtanding of this, we muſt remember, that the general Power of Thinking and Willing, and the natural Faculty of Doing any Thing, is from God; in him, as the Apoſtle ſays, we live, move, and have our Being; are not only ſuſtain'd in our Exiſtence, but act and operate by his divine Influence. Nay, even our vicious Actions, as they are natural Actions, come from God, and yet, under that Conſideration, they are not ſinful. The natural Act is a Thing indifferent, and varies according to the Object, the Circumſtances, and Diſpoſition of the Doer: And therefore, though God determines a Man to the natural Act, yet it does not therefore follow, that he determines him to the Sin, that accompanies it: [x] For the Act, as an Act, is one Thing, and the Viciouſneſs of it is another. The Act is the Efficacy of the Faculty, extending itſelf to ſome outward Object; but the Sinfulneſs of it is the Privation of that Rectitude, which ſhould be in it, and its Deviation from the Laws of God. Though God therefore, as the univerſal Cauſe of all natural Effects in the World, and as the Upholder and Suſtainer of Men's Beings, concurs in all their Actions, whether good or bad; yet the Evil or Obliquity of theſe Actions he concurs not in: That ſprings from their deprav'd Wills, and the corrupt Motions of their own Minds.

TO make this more plain, we may obſerve (as I ſaid before) that the Evil of any Action does not attend it ſimply as an Action, but as an Action ſo and ſo circumſtantiated; inſomuch, that the ſame Action, done by two ſeveral Perſons, may be good in one, and bad in the other. Two Judges, for Inſtance, joined in Commiſſion for the Trial of a Malefactor, upon the Appearance of his Guilt, equally condemn him. The Action in both, conſider'd as an Action, is the ſame; and yet in him, who condemns him in pure Conſideration of the Demerit of his Fault, and in him, who condemns him out of ſome private Pique or Reſentment, it is widely different; in the one it is morally good, in the other morally evil; in the one, an Act of Juſtice, in the other an Act of Murther: Which plainly ſhews, that there is a Diſtinction to be made between the Action and the Depravity of it, and that God may concur in the Subſtance of the Act, without concurring in the Sinfulneſs of it; as the good Judge, that condemned the Priſoner out of Conſcience, concurr'd with the evil Judge, that condemned him out of private Revenge, not in the Principle and Motive of Condemnation, but in the material Part of it.

IN ſhort, ſince it is agreed on all Hands, [y] that no Creature can move, or act, or do any Thing without the Help and Co-operation of God, even Men's wicked Actions muſt be done by the ſame Concurrence with their good; but then, that Concurrence, relating only to the bare phyſical Act, cannot intitle God to their Sins; ſince to preſerve their Nature, and actuate their natural Powers (which is all that God does in the Caſe) is no more the Cauſe of their Sin, than his firſt creating them. This ſeems to be the moſt effectual Anſwer: But whatever Difficulties may ariſe farther, or in what Manner ſoever we may ſuppoſe God to act, with Reſpect to the Production of what is Evil; yet we are ſure that it is without any Stain or Depravity, without any Fault or Appearance of Vice, and that he, whoſe Eyes are ſo pure, and whoſe Nature ſo immaculate, whoſe Laws are ſo ſtrict, and Comminations ſo ſevere againſt Sin, cannot, by any poſitive Act, prompt to Wickedneſs, or inſtil any evil Qualities into the Minds of Men.

The Reſult of this Attribute, Reverence to God.

SINCE Holineſs then is ſo eminent a Perfection of the Divine Nature, the proper Reſult of this Conſideration is, that we endeavour to acquire, and fix in our Mind a ſtrong and lively Apprehenſion of it; becauſe the clearer our Conceptions are of this, the more affectionate will our Reverence be in all our Approaches to God. [a] Had thoſe Nations, which worſhipped the Sun, at firſt ſeen its Brightneſs maſk'd in a Cloud only, how would their Admiration have been rais'd gradually, as they ſaw it ſhaking off its Veil of Darkneſs, and chaſing away the Miſts before it! But what a profound Veneration would they have paid, when they came to behold it in its full Glory and meridian Brightneſs! And in like Manner, our Reverence to God, in all our Addreſſes to him, would riſe to a greater Elevation, if every Act of Duty were uſher'd in and ſeaſon'd with the Thoughts of him, as ſitting upon his Throne of Holineſs. We ſhould have a more becoming Senſe of our own Vileneſs, a more awful Reſpect to his Preſence, a greater Ardor to his Service, a greater Dread of his Diſpleaſure, and a more chearful Acquieſcence in all his Diſpenſations, had we but a competent Notion of this illuſtrious Perfection. But the Misfortune is, we firſt deface the Image of God in our Souls, and then frame a Repreſentation of him, according to our Fancies, as one winking at our Follies, and indulgent to our complectional Vices; and hence we loſe the Senſe of the true God, whoſe Throne of [b] Holineſs is a fiery Flame; and, falling in Love with the Idol of our own making, commit Wickedneſs with an unbounded Licentiouſneſs, and crown our Vices with the Names of Virtues, becauſe they are ſo like the Sentiments of that God, which we figure to ourſelves. But if ever we would have right Notions of God, we muſt repreſent him to our Thoughts, not according to our vicious Inclinations, but as he has repreſented himſelf in Scripture; [c] glorious in Holineſs, a Lover of Righteouſneſs, and an Hater of Iniquity, and who, for the Conſervation of the whole World, cannot connive at Sin, or contaminate the Purity of his Nature.

And Holineſs in ourſelves.

UNDER this Contemplation, our farther Care muſt be, to labour after a Conformity to God in this Perfection; [d] for he who hath called us is holy, ſo ſhould we be holy in all Manner of Converſation; and that, in Regard to our Happineſs, both here and hereafter; [e] becauſe the Capacity of all Felicity muſt be laid in the inward Frame of our Minds, in a godlike Temper and Diſpoſition. 'Till the Image of Holineſs, which has been defaced by Sin, be renewed in our Minds, we are utterly incapable of the Enjoyment of the firſt and chief Good, in which, all our Felicity does conſiſt; for, [f] what Fellowſhip hath Righteouſneſs with Unrighteouſneſs, or what Communion hath Light with Darkneſs? Our holy [g] Religion therefore, (in order to prepare us for the Happineſs of the next Life) is deſign'd to mortify our Luſts and Paſſions, and to reſtrain us from the inordinate Love of groſs and ſenſual Delights; to call off our Minds from theſe inferior Things, and to raiſe them to higher and more ſpiritual Objects, that we may be diſpoſed for the Happineſs of another World, and taught to reliſh the Delights of it: Whereas, ſhould we be able to taſte no Pleaſure in any Thing, but what is ſenſual and earthly, we muſt needs be extremely miſerable, when we come into the other World; becauſe we ſhould meet with nothing to entertain ourſelves withal, no Employment ſuitable to our Diſpoſition, no Pleaſure that would agree with our deprav'd Appetites, and vicious Inclinations. [h] For what Concord could there be between ſenſual and carnaliz'd Souls, that underſtand no other Pleaſures, but only thoſe of the Fleſh, and thoſe pure and Virgin Spirits, which never eat, nor drink, but live for ever upon Wiſdom, and Holineſs, and Love, and Contemplation? "How "can I be happy in ſeeing that God, whom I cannot love; in converſing with thoſe "Spirits, whoſe Genius I abhor; and in being for ever employed in thoſe heavenly "Exerciſes, to which I have the greateſt Averſion? No, no, till I am of the ſame "Opinion with the celeſtial Inhabitants, and have my Mind contemper'd to the hea-"venly State, it is impoſſible that Heaven and I ſhould ever agree; and I may as "well ſee without Eyes, or hear without Ears, as pretend to enjoy Heaven without "an heavenly Diſpoſition:" So that, by the Nature of Things, as well as by the Laws of God, it is ordain'd, that no unclean Thing ſhall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, and that without Holineſs, none ſhall ſee God.

SECT. XII.

Of the GOODNESS of GOD.

OF all the Divine Perfections, that which repreſents God under the Notion of an amiable, as well as a glorious Being, the Father, as well as the Governor of the Univerſe, is this Attribute of his Goodneſs. [l] Eternity and Immenſity amaze our Thoughts: Infinite Knowledge and Wiſdom fill us with Admiration: Omnipotence, or irreſiſtible Power, is great and adorable; but, at the ſame Time, if conſidered ſingly by itſelf, 'tis alſo dreadful and terrible: Dominion and Majeſty, cloathed with perfect and impartial Juſtice, are worthy of the higheſt Praiſes; but ſtill to Sinners they appear rather awful and venerable, than the Object of Deſire and Love: Holineſs and Purity are inexpreſſibly beautiful and amiable Perfections, but of too bright a Glory for Sinners to contemplate with Delight. 'Tis Goodneſs, that finiſhes the Idea of God, and repreſents him to us under the lovely Character of being the beſt, as well as the greateſt Being in the Univerſe.

The Goodneſs of God, what.

NOW Goodneſs, in the moral Senſe, (wherein we are to conſider it) conſiſts in a Benevolence of Temper, [k] or a Readineſs to diſtribute the Good and Happineſs we enjoy, deſiring that others ſhould partake of it, and exerting that Deſire in kind and beneficial Actions upon all Occaſions: And, as it is applied to God, [l] 'tis a beneficent Diſpoſition of the Divine Nature, which moves him to diffuſe, upon all his Creatures, through the immenſe Univerſe, and through a boundleſs Eternity, every good Thing that is proper for them; every Thing that tends to their true Happineſs; every good Thing, which either they, in their own Nature, are capable of receiving, or which for him, in his all-wiſe Government of the World, is fit and reaſonable to give. This is that inexhauſtible Fountain of Beneficence, which, according as it terminates upon different Objects, admits of different Denominations; ſo that, [m] when it confers Happineſs without Merit, 'tis Grace; when it beſtows Happineſs againſt Merit, 'tis Mercy; when it beſtows it according to Promiſe, 'tis Truth; when it commiſerates a diſtreſſed Perſon, 'tis Pity; when it ſupplies an indigent Perſon, 'tis Bounty; when it ſuccours an innocent Perſon, 'tis Righteouſneſs; when it pardons a penitent Perſon, 'tis Forgiveneſs; when it bears with a criminal Perſon, 'tis Patience, or Long-ſuffering.

Proved from Reaſon.

THAT God (in all this Latitude of Acceptations) is a good and gracious Being, we may, when we pleaſe to take a Survey of the Works of Creation and Providence at any Time, convince ourſelves; becauſe [n] whatever Power and Perfection we ſee in the Creatures, proceeded originally, and with direct Intention, from God. Inanimate Beings, though not in their own Nature proper Objects of Goodneſs, yet, every where, in their relative Uſe, bear evident Marks and Signatures of it. The Powers of Life and Senſe diſcover ſtill greater Effects of Divine Goodneſs, and are, in an higher Degree, ſubſervient both to the Beauties and Advantages of human Life: But Reaſon and Intelligence is the nobleſt Inſtance of the Bounty of our Creator, becauſe we are thereby, in ſome Meaſure, made Partakers of the Divine Nature; are capacitated to maintain a kind of Society with God; to draw near to him, to love him, and to employ the Means that he hath made requiſite for our enjoying him, and the Things that he hath prepared for thoſe that love him, in a future and far happier State.

NOW it is hardly poſſible to conceive how we could have any reaſonable Motives to love God, or take Delight in his Communion, if we ſhould once ſuppoſe him diveſted of Goodneſs. Power without Goodneſs is attended with an Idea of Terror; Juſtice without Goodneſs puts on the Face of Rigour and Cruelty; Wiſdom debaſes itſelf into Craft and Diſſimulation; nor do we know of any one Quality, ſeparate from this, that can give the Heart a kindly and laſting Impreſſion: Whereas Kindneſs and Beneficence fix an Intereſt in the Minds of Men, and will procure us an Aſcendency, when all the Ties of Fear and Dependence fail. However this be, it certainly yields us, upon the Reflection of having done ſome good and truly generous Action, a Pleaſure and Complacency of Mind, that all the Joys of Senſuality cannot come up to.

[o] WE may therefore prove the Divine Philanthrophy from what we feel in ourſelves, or perceive in others. We find in our own Breaſts a Deſire and Readineſs to do good, and to be beneficial to our Fellow-Creatures, and, when we relieve their Wants, we ſeem to relieve our own Bowels. We obſerve others of the ſame Diſpoſition with ourſelves, ready to give, glad to diſtribute, and making Acts of Munificence and Charity the Study, as it were, and Employment of their Lives: And, if this be deſervedly accounted an Excellence in us, we may rationally gather, that it is in God, in a far more tranſcendent Degree, and that whatever Goodneſs the beſt-natur'd of the Sons of Men, or the moſt glorious Angel in Heaven is poſſeſs'd of, is but a weak and imperfect Repreſentation of that eternal Love, by which all the Hoſt of Heaven, and all the Race of Mankind were created.

From the Teſtimony of Heathens.

THE Creation and Conſervation of all Things, indeed, are ſuch a plain Demonſtration of infinite Goodneſs, that, even in the darkeſt Ages of the Pagan World, God did not [p] leave himſelf without a Witneſs, as the Apoſtle argues, in that he ſent them Rain and fruitful Seaſons, filling their Hearts with Food and Gladneſs. Nor were they inſenſible of his Beneficence: For which Reaſon, among all the Divine Titles, they gave a conſtant Pre-eminence to his [q] Goodneſs, and made it a fundamental Article of their Religion, [r] "That the firſt Act of Worſhip was to believe the Exiſtence "of a God; the next, to aſcribe Majeſty or Greatneſs to him; and then to aſcribe Good-"neſs, without which there could be no Greatneſs."

FROM what Principle the ſeveral Acts of their religious Worſhip did proceed, we have a remarkable Paſſage in Seneca to inſtruct us: "He that denies the Good-"neſs of God, ſays he, does not ſurely conſider the infinite Number of Prayers, "that, with Hands lifted up to Heaven, are addreſs'd to God, both in private and "publick: Which certainly would not be, (for is it credible, that all Mankind "ſhould conſpire in this Madneſs of putting up their Supplications to deaf and im-"potent Deities?) if they did not believe, that the Gods were ſo good, as to con-"fer Benefits on thoſe who pray'd unto them." [s] Nay, the very Idolatry, ſo prevalent among the Heathens, is, in my Opinion, a clear Teſtimony of their common Sentiment of the Goodneſs of God; ſince they adored thoſe Creatures chiefly that were of moſt general Benefit, as the Sun, the Moon, &c. (which muſt be founded on a pre-exiſtent Notion, not only of the Being, but of the Bounty and Benignity of God) and ever placed the Perſons, who were moſt eminent for any uſeful Invention, among the Number of their Gods: And, for this Reaſon, the Men of Lyſtra, when they ſaw a Reſemblance of the Divine Goodneſs, in the charitable and miraculous Cure of one of their Fellow-Citizens, preſently miſtook Paul and Barnabas for Gods, and thence inferred their Right to Divine Worſhip; enquiring into nothing elſe, but the viſible Character of their Goodneſs and Uſefulneſs, to capacitate them for the Honour of a Sacrifice.

And Scripture.

WHAT Teſtimony the Word of God, in Conjunction with the common Sentiments of Mankind, gives to this bleſſed Attribute, 'tis needleſs to recite, when in every Page we read large Encomiums of the divine Generoſity and Benevolence, viz. [t] that the Earth is full of his Goodneſs, and as [u] the Eyes of all wait upon him, he openeth his Hand, and ſatisfieth the Deſire of every living Thing; but [x] his Delights are with the Sons of Men; and though the Virtuous are the peculiar Objects of his Care, [y] ſo that he with-holds no good Thing from them, [z] giving them all Things richly to enjoy, and [a] caſting his Eyes to and fro through the whole Earth, to ſhew himſelf ſtrong in their Behalf; yet [b] he giveth, without Diſtinction, to all liberally; [c] he maketh his Sun to riſe on the Evil and on the Good, and ſendeth Rain on the Juſt and on the Unjuſt; being, in ſhort, [d] good to all, and having his Mercies over all his Works.

Several Inſtances, and the Reſult of it.

and Beaſt, and for their proper Continuance and Well-being: By the ſame Goodneſs was Man [g] made a little lower than the Angels, crowned with Glory and Honour, and endued with a Reaſon, which enables him not only to have Dominion over the Things that are put in Subjection under his Feet, but to contemplate, adore, and imitate his great Creator himſelf: By the ſame Goodneſs * was our Subſtance, being yet imperfect, faſhion'd and curiouſly wrought in the loweſt Parts of the Earth; were we all [h] taken out of our Mother's Womb, nurs'd in the Infirmities of our Infancy, preſerv'd in the many Dangers of our giddy Youth, and ſecur'd from the Temptations of our more advanced Years: By the ſame Goodneſs, in the whole Courſe of our Lives, have we been ſurrounded with an Ocean of Bleſſings, both Spiritual and Temporal; protected from Evils, which, with all our Wiſdom and Sagacity, we could neither foreſee nor prevent; or, if they were brought upon us, either ſoon reliev'd, or greatly ſupported under them: By the ſame Goodneſs is the Light of Conſcience ſet up in our Breaſts, to diſtinguiſh between Good and Evil, as an inward perpetual Monitor, to put us in Mind of a future Judgment, and (what is more) the Senſe of this natural Faculty is confirm'd to us by an expreſs Revelation: By this Goodneſs are we poſſeſſed [i] of the Oracles of God, [k] of the Adoption, and the Glory, and the Covenants, and the Service of God, and the Promiſes; are admitted, in ſhort, into the Kingdom of Grace here, and intitled to the Kingdom of Glory hereafter: By this Goodneſs, and in Pity to loſt Mankind, God ſent his only-begotten Son into the World, that [l] whoſoever believeth in him ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting Life; and that [m] being juſtified by Faith, we have Peace with God through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom we have Acceſs into this Grace wherein we ſtand; and, laſtly, by this Goodneſs, the Holy Spirit, that bleſſed Comforter, was ſent down, to inſtruct and teach us, to perſuade and admoniſh us, to ſanctify our Minds, and purify our Conſciences, and thereby fit and prepare us for the glorious Inheritance of the Saints in Light.

THUS which Way ſoever we caſt our Eyes, whether above us, or beneath us, whether within us, or without us, we find ourſelves ſurrounded with the bleſſed Effects of God's Loving-kindneſs. That we are Men, and not Worms; that we are not Stones or Clods of Earth, utterly inſenſible of all Good, and incapable of all Felicity; that we are inſpir'd with immortal Minds, and endow'd with vaſt Capacities of Happineſs; that we have ſo many ſenſible Organs, capable of ſuch a Variety of Pleaſures, and ſo many Pleaſures to ſuit and entertain them; that we have Life and Motion, Health and Vigour, Senſe and Perception, Reaſon and Underſtanding, to guide and govern them; that we are provided for the other World as well as this; provided with an Happineſs above our largeſt Wiſhes and Deſires; and have the whole ſacred Trinity employed in contriving, preparing, and accompliſhing our everlaſting Felicity: [n] Oh the Depth of the Riches, of the Goodneſs and Bounty of God; how unſearchable are thy Deſigns of Kindneſs, and thy Ways of Beneficence *paſt finding out! SECT. XIII.

Of the MERCY and PATIENCE of GOD.

HITHERTO we have ſurveyed the Goodneſs of God, as it is extended to ſuch of his Creatures in general, as are the proper Objects of it: There are two chief Branches in it, Mercy and Patience, which reſpect Mankind in a State of Diſobedience, and conſequently, under the Wrath and Diſpleaſure of the Almighty; which ſeem to deſerve a particular Conſideration, as Attributes, which to ſinful Mortals are of more direct and immediate Concern.

1. NOW the Mercy of God is a Diſpoſition in the Divine Nature, whereby he is inclined to ſuccour thoſe that are in Miſery, and to pardon thoſe that have offended. [p] In Scripture-language it is uſually ſet forth to us by the Expreſſions of The Mercy of God, what.

Pity and Compaſſion; which is an Affection, that cauſes a ſenſible Commotion and Diſturbance in us, upon the Apprehenſion of ſome great Evil, either threatning, or oppreſſing another; purſuant to which, God is ſaid to be grieved and afflicted for the Miſeries of Men. But though God be pleaſed, in this Manner, to convey an Idea of his Mercy and Tenderneſs to us, yet we muſt take heed how we cloath the Divine Nature with the Infirmities of human Paſſions. We muſt not meaſure the Perfections of God by the Expreſſions of his Condeſcenſion; and, becauſe he ſtoops to our Weakneſs, level him to our Infirmities. When therefore God is ſaid to pity us, or to be grieved at our Afflictions, we muſt be careful to remove the Imperfection of the Paſſion, the Commotion and Diſturbance that it occaſions, and then we may conceive as ſtrongly of the Divine Mercy and Compaſſion as we pleaſe, viz. that it exerts itſelf in a very tender and affectionate Manner, and, without producing the Diſquiet, produces the Effects of the moſt ſenſible human Pity.

Proved from Scripture.

UNDER this Reſtriction, it may be no unpleaſing Contemplation to obſerve in Scripture, with what Pride, and ſeeming Oſtentation it is, that this endearing Attribute is diſplayed. [q] The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-ſuffering, abundant in Goodneſs and Truth, keeping Mercy for Thouſands, forgiving Iniquity, Tranſgreſſion, and Sin. This is the Deſcription God gives of himſelf, and the Name, whereby he deſires to be called: And therefore the Holy Scriptures not only tell us, that [r] the Lord our God is a merciful God, but that [s] he is the Father of Mercies, and the God of all Comfort; that he [t] delights in Mercy, [u] waits to be gracious; [x] rejoices over us to do Good, [y] and crowneth us with his Loving-kindneſs: To denote the Greatneſs and Continuance of this Affection, they not only tell us, that [z] his Mercy is above the Heavens; but that it extends itſelf over all his Works, [a] is laid up in Store for a thouſand Generations, and is to endure for ever and ever: To expreſs the Intenſeneſs of it, they not only tell us of the [b] Multitude of his tender Mercies, [c] the Swooning of his Bowels, the Relentings of his Heart, and [d] the Kindlings of his Repentance; but, to give us as ſenſible an Idea as poſſible of the Compaſſions of God, they compare them to the tendereſt Affections among Men; to that of a Father towards his Children; [e] as a Father pitieth his Children, ſo the Lord pitieth them that fear him; nay, to the Compaſſion of a Mother towards her Infant: [f] Can a Woman forget her ſucking Child, that ſhe ſhould not have Compaſſion on the Son of her Womb? Yea, ſhe may forget, 'tis poſſible, though very unlikely; but though a Mother may turn unnatural, yet God cannot prove unmerciful; Behold I have graven thee upon the Palms of my Hands. I will not forget thee.

The various Kinds of it.

IN ſhort, the Scriptures every where magnify the Mercy of God, and ſpeak of it with all poſſible Advantage, as if the Divine Nature (which does in all Perfections excel every other Thing) did in this Perfection excel itſelf. And of this we may have a farther Conviction, if we lift but up our Eyes to God, and then turning them upon ourſelves, begin to conſider how many Evils and Miſeries, that every Day we are expos'd to, by his preventing Mercy are hinder'd, or, when they were coming upon us, ſtopped or turned another Way: How oft our Puniſhment has he deferred by his forbearing Mercy, or, when it was neceſſary for our Chaſtiſement, mitigated and made it light: How oft we have been ſupported in our Afflictions by his comforting Mercy, and viſited with the Light of his Countenance, in the Exigencies of our Soul, and the Gloomineſs of Deſpair: How oft we have been ſupplied by his relieving Mercy in our Wants, and, when there was no Hand to ſuccour, and no Soul to pity us, his Arm has been ſtretched out to lift us from the Mire and Clay, and, by a providential Train of Events, brought about our Suſtenance and Support: And above all, how daily, how hourly, how minutely we offend againſt him, and yet by the Power of his pardoning Mercy, we are ſtill alive: For, conſidering the Multitude and Heinouſneſs of our Provocations, [g] 'tis of his Mercy alone that we are not conſumed, and becauſe his Compaſſions fail not. Whoſo is wiſe will ponder theſe Things, and he will underſtand the Loving-kindneſs of the Lord.

The Patience of God, what.

2. THE Patience of God is that kind Diſpoſition of the Divine Nature, whereby he is inclin'd to bear with Sinners, and to delay, or moderate their deſerved Puniſhment, in in Hopes of their Amendment. [h] Thoſe, that have treated on the Paſſions, do generally obſerve, that nothing debaſes human Nature more, than being of a paſſionate and implacable Temper: Calmneſs and Eaſineſs of Mind, ſay they, are the Effects of good Senſe, as well as good Nature; they are the Reſult of conſcious Virtue, and flow from a juſt Security a Man has, whenever he has Occaſion to ſhew his Courage and Magnanimity: Whereas, he that is quick in his Reſentments, diſcovers his weak Side, and gives his Adverſary an Advantage againſt him. The Wiſdom of Solomon has happily fallen into the ſame Sentiment: [i] He that is haſty of Spirit exalteth Folly; but he that is ſlow to Wrath, is of great Underſtanding: [k] He that is ſlow to Wrath is better than the Mighty; and he that ruleth his Spirit, than he that conquereth a City. And if a patient and forbearing Temper be accounted ſo great an Accompliſhment in Man, a certain Elevation of Mind, whereby he is ſeated, as it were, in a ſuperior Region above the vain Inſults and Provocations of an Enemy; much more Reaſon is there to believe, that in God, who is the moſt powerful Being, this Perfection is infinitely more tranſcendent; and therefore the Royal Pſalmiſt not only makes ample Declarations of this Divine Attribute, but in ſome Meaſure accounts for it: [l] The Lord is merciful and gracious, ſays he, ſlow to Anger, and plenteous in Mercy; he will not always be chiding, neither keepeth he his Anger for ever: He hath not dealt with us after our Sins, nor rewarded us according to our Iniquities; for he knoweth whereof we are made, he remembreth that we are but Duſt, i. e. not worthy of Anger, nor able to bear the Expreſſions of his Indignation: And therefore he recommends his Patience, in another Place, from the Conſideration of his Power; God is ſtrong and patient, ſays he, God is provoked every Day: God is ſtrong, and therefore patient, or God is infinitely patient, notwithſtanding his Power to revenge the daily Provocations of his Creatures is infinitely great and irreſiſtible. [m] His Patience is an Argument of his Power; for nothing can declare his Power more, than that he is able to with-hold his Hand from deſtroying us, when he is provoked ſo grievouſly; in which Senſe is that Declaration in the Book of Wiſdom, [n] Thy Power is the Beginning of Righteouſneſs, and becauſe thou art the Lord of all, it maketh thee to be gracious unto all.

Prov'd from Reaſon and Scripture.

To give us a proper Notion then of this adorable Attribute, let us conſider a little, how it is we deal with God, and, notwithſtanding our Miſconduct, how it is he deals with us. Every Sin that we commit is an Affront to the Divine Majeſty, and a Contempt of his Authority. By denying Submiſſion to his Laws, we queſtion his Omnipreſence; or if we acknowledge it, our Provocation is ſtill the greater, becauſe then we affront him to his Face; we dare his Juſtice, and challenge his Omnipotence, and provoke the Lord to Jealouſy, as if we were ſtronger than he. Now if Offences are encreaſed, according to the Dignity of the Perſon injur'd, and the Meanneſs of him that does the Injury, then no Offences are ſo great as thoſe, that are committed by Men againſt God, no Affronts like thoſe, which are offered to the Divine Majeſty by the continual Provocations of his Creatures, foraſmuch as he is their Creator, Preſerver, and gracious Benefactor. And yet, [o] though he perfectly underſtands the Greatneſs of his own Majeſty, which is vilified, and the Heinouſneſs of the Offences, which diſparage him; though he be moved by his Holineſs, urged by his Juſtice, and directed by his Omniſcience to vindicate himſelf; yet Mercy and Patience ſtep in to with-hold his Arm, and withſtand the Aſſault of all his other Attributes: [p] How ſhall I give thee up, Ephraim? How ſhall I deliver thee, Iſrael? Mine Heart is turned within me, my Repentings are kindled together: I will not execute the Fierceneſs of mine Anger; I will not return to deſtroy Ephraim; for I am God, and not Man, The Prophet here ſeems to have deſcrib'd a beautiful Conflict between the Divine Attributes: Juſtice is pleading for the Deſtruction of a rebellious People, and urging the Divine Nature to execute it; the Divine Nature is almoſt drawn on by her Importunity to conſent, but, reflecting upon the Horror of the Work, Pity ſtarts up, and then ſhuddering at the Sight of it, and flying off with a contrary Reſolution, I will not execute the Fierceneſs of mine Anger, ſays he; for I am God, and not Man.

The Degree of it.

" Man may be peeviſh, and reſentive, cruel, and inexorable to his Brother, but I " am full of Patience and Long-ſuffering; Judgment to me is a ſtrange Work; my " Property is to have Mercy, to me it appertaineth to forgive Sin; and therefore I " ſpare, when Men deſerve Puniſhment, and, in the midſt of my Severity, think " upon [h] Dr. Adams's and Dr. Moſs's Sermons. [i] Prov. xiv. 29. [k] Ibid. xvi. 32. [l] Pſal. ciii. 8, &c. [m] Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. II. [n] Chap. xii. 16. [o] Charnock, upon the Attributes. [p] Hoſea xi, 8, &c.

" upon Clemency, being [q] unwilling that any ſhould periſh, but that all ſhould come to " Repentance; for I am God, and not Man."

Theſe Attributes encourage Hope.

AND this Conſideration may be of Uſe to rectify our Notions of the Divine Nature, with Regard to the Forgiveneſs of our Sins. [r] When we look into ourſelves, and conſider how void of Bowels and Compaſſions we are, how cruel, and hard-hearted, and inſolent, and revengeful; how many Motives are required to raiſe the leaſt Pity in our Breaſts, and, when any one has offended or provoked us, how quick we are to reſent, and how ſlow to forgive; what ſevere Upbraidings muſt precede, and vile Submiſſions be the Condition of a Reconciliation; we may poſſibly imagine (under the Senſe of our Tranſgreſſions) that there is the ſame Moroſeneſs, and Difficulty of Admittance in Almighty God, and thence juſtly infer, how ſhall we be forgiven? Nay, how ſhall we able to ſtand in his Sight to aſk Forgiveneſs, if he ſhould be extream to mark what is done amiſs? But to reſolve this Doubt, and pacify the Trouble of our dejected Minds, the Father of Mercies anſwers for himſelf, I am God, and not Man. God is patient and merciful to us, out of the mere Benignity of his Nature, and bears us a more hearty good Will, than any Man does to his Friend, or any Father upon Earth ever did to his deareſt Child: And therefore, if we will but comply with the gracious Intentions of his Loving-kindneſs, which ſhould lead us to Repentance, in all our uneaſy and gloomy Reflections, we may comfort ourſelves with this Soliloquy, [s] Why art thou ſo vexed, O my Soul, and why art thou ſo diſquieted within me? Put thy Truſt in God; for I will yet give him Thanks for his abundant Goodneſs, his gracious Promiſes, his ſure Mercies, and free Declarations of Pardon, who is the Health of my Countenance, and my God.

But not Preſumption.

2. BUT how much ſoever we may pleaſe ourſelves with this comfortable Contemplation, yet we are to remember, that the Mercy of God is an Enemy to Sin, as well as his Juſtice, and not in tended to encourage our Impenitence, but Repentance; that nothing is ſo provoking, as the Abuſe of his Patience, nor any Means ſo infallible to aggravate our Ruin; that the Wrath of God will make itſelf amends for its Slowneſs, when it comes; and his Juſtice exaſperated and ſet on by injur'd and abus'd Mercy, like a Razor ſet in Oil, will have the keener Edge, and be the ſharper for its Smoothneſs; and that thoſe, in ſhort, that [t] deſpiſe the Riches of his Goodneſs, and turn his Grace and Patience into Laſciviouſneſs, do but treaſure up to themſelves Wrath againſt the Day of Wrath, and the Revelation of the righteous Judgment of God, This then is the Leſſon, and only true Inſtruction we can learn from the whole: [u] Let the Wicked forſake his Ways, and the unrighteous Man his Thoughts, and turn unto the Lord, for he will have Mercy, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.

SECT. XIV.

Of the JUSTICE of GOD.

The Juſtice of God, what.

THE Juſtice of God is that eternal Rectitude of the Divine Nature, whereby he orders and diſpoſes all Things, according to the Rules, which his infinite Wiſdom has preſcribed, and governs all Mankind with the utmoſt Exactneſs and Impartiality, in Relation to the Diſtribution of Rewards and Puniſhments. To illuſtrate this, we muſt obſerve, [x] that there is an intrinſical Rectitude and Obliquity in Things, and that the Reaſons and Relations of moral Good and Evil do not depend upon any uncertain and arbitrary Principle, but are fixt and immutable, eternal and indiſpenſable: Purſuant to this, that Goodneſs, Juſtice, and Truth, are eſſential and neceſſary Properties in the Divine Nature, antecedent to any Conſideration of his Will, and what he can no more alter or unſettle, than he can deny himſelf, or ceaſe to be: That, as he is the Maker and Governor of the World, he has an undoubted Authority to make Laws, and enforce them with proper Sanctions: That, when Laws are thus enacted, he ſets Bounds, in ſome Meaſure, to his own Authority; for Juſtice requires, that he ſhould not preſcribe what is above Man's Strength, or if he does, that he ſhould grant them ſupernatural Power to obey: That, upon obeying, he cannot deny them the promis'd Reward, without prejudice to his Juſtice; and upon the Violation of them, he hath a juſt Right to inflict the Puniſhments, which he has enacted: And from hence it will follow, that, in all his Proceedings with Man, God is neceſſarily obliged obliged, both by his Nature and Covenant, to act with the ſtricteſt Juſtice and Impartiality.

Prov'd from Reaſon and Scripture.

[y] MEN indeed may be ſenſible of the moral Obligations of Juſtice, and yet, in many Caſes, either not perceive the Reaſons of them, or if they do, be unwilling to be determined by them. [z] All human Juſtice finds a great deal of Obſtruction for Want of Evidence; for, many Times Facts are obſcure, and Circumſtances doubtful, and Allegations preſumptive, and Teſtimonies inconſiſtent; or where the Evidence is compleat, the Intricacy of the Caſe, and the ſpecious Appearance of Reaſon on both Sides, may render the Merits of it impervious: Nay, even where Men have Capacity to underſtand what the Rules of Juſtice require them to do, yet too frequently they have other Rules of their own making, which are of much more Efficacy to determine their Choice, than thoſe which Juſtice preſcribes.

Now the chief Reaſons, whereby Men are uſually carried to commit Injuſtice, being either Ignorance, Prejudice, or Partiality; Ignorance of the Matter under Debate; Prejudice againſt other Perſons; and Partiality to ſome Deſign or Intereſt of their own; and as none of theſe Motives are compatible to God, in him there cannot be the leaſt Tincture of Unrighteouſneſs. For he knows the true and neceſſary Relation of Things, their Agreement and Diſagreement, their Fitneſs and Inequality; and as his Judgments are true and righteous altogether, ſo his Procedure, in the Execution of them, is exactly correſpondent to that Knowledge, which has every Matter naked and open'd before its View. He cannot be capable of any Prejudice towards his Creatures, becauſe [a] he is the Father of us all, and [b] loveth all Things that are, and abhors nothing that he has made; for never would he have made any Thing, if he had hated it: Nor can he be influenc'd in the Exerciſe of Juſtice by any Conſideration of Self-Intereſt; [c] for our Goodneſs extendeth not to him; [d] all Greatneſs and Power, all Majeſty and Glory, all that is in Heaven and in Earth is his; and therefore [e] doth God pervert Judgment, or doth the Almighty pervert Juſtice? No ſurely: His abſolute and independent Power ſets him above all inglorious Ends; and therefore, far be it from him, from him that has no Reaſon, no Provocation to it, to commit Iniquity; the Work of a Man ſhall he render unto him, and cauſe every Man to find according to his Ways: Yea, ſurely God will not do wickedly, neither will the Almighty pervert Judgment.

† WORLDLY Conſiderations may prevail with Men in the higheſt Authority to pervert Judgment: Friendſhip, or Relation, or ſome other Intereſt, the Solicitations of the Great, or the Faſcinations of a Bribe, may blind his Eyes, and make him accept the Perſons of Men in the Diſtribution of Juſtice; but [f] the Lord our God is the God of Gods, and Lord of Lords, a great God, a mighty and terrible, which regardeth not Perſons, neither taketh Rewards; ſo that, [g] if it be not fit to ſay to a King, thou art wicked, or unto Princes, ye are ungodly, how much leſs to him, that accepteth not the Perſon of Princes, nor regardeth the Rich more than the Poor, for they are all the Work of his Hands. So evident it is, [h] that he, who perfectly knows the Rule of Equity, and neceſſarily judges of Things, as they really are; who has compleat Power to execute Juſtice according to that Knowledge, and no poſſible Temptation in the leaſt to deviate from it; who can neither be impos'd upon by any Deceit, nor mov'd by any Biaſs, nor aw'd by any Power; ſo evident it is, I ſay, that ſuch a Being will always do what is right, without Iniquity, and without Partiality, without Prejudice, and without Reſpect of Perſons.

† That the ſupreme Lord and Governor of all Things is, and cannot but be juſt in all his Actions, may be made appear in the following Manner, ——— "There being neceſſarily in Nature a Difference of Things, which is "what we call natural Good and Evil, and a Variety in the Diſpoſitions and Qualifications of Perſons, which is what "we call moral Good and Evil; from the due or undue Adjuſtment of theſe natural Qualities of Things, to the moral "Qualifications of Perſons, ariſe unavoidably the Notions of Right and Wrong. Now the Will of every intelligent "Agent, being always directed by ſome Motive, 'tis plain, that the natural Motive of Action, where nothing irregu"lar interpoſes, can be no other than this Right or Reaſon of Things. Whenever this Right and Reaſon are not made "the Rule of Action, it can only be, either becauſe the Agent is ignorant of what is right, or wants Ability to purſue "it, or elſe is knowingly and willingly diverted from it by the Hope of ſome Good, or the Fear of ſome Evil. But "now, as none of theſe Cauſes of Injuſtice can poſſibly have any Place in God; his Actions muſt always neceſſa"rily be directed by Right, and Reaſon, and Juſtice only. For, having all Knowledge, 'tis impoſſible he can be "deceived in judging what is right: Having no Want of any Thing, his Will cannot poſſibly be influenced by any "wrong Affection; and, having no Dependence on any, his Power can never be limited by any ſuperior Strength." Clarke's Sermons, Vol. I.

An Objection. BUT if God be no Reſpecter of Perſons, [l] "wherefore doth the Way of the Wicked "proſper? Wherefore are all they happy, that deal treacherouſly? [k] The Taberna- "cles of Robbers proſper, and they that provoke God are ſecure; [l] they come in no "Perils like other Folk, neither are they plagued like other Men; [m] their Houſes are "ſafe from Fear, neither is the Rod of God upon them; for they ſpend their Days in "Mirth and Wealth, and in a Moment, with a quick and eaſy Paſſage, go down to the "Grave: Where then is the Juſtice of God? Or what are the Tokens of his Anſwer'd. "Impartiality?" The Tokens of God's Impartiality indeed are not always viſible in this World; becauſe having intended it for a State of Trial, wherein he is to approve the Obedience of Men, and their Inclinations to Good or Evil, he could not ſo properly make this Uſe of it, without an unequal Diſtribution of what we call Proſperity; nor ſhould we have that Certainty of a future Judgment, (becauſe there would not be that Occaſion for it) if every Thing were exactly adjuſted here, So that there are very good Reaſons why God defers the Puniſhment of the Wicked, and, as [n] the Pſalmiſt complains, makes them remarkably proſperous in the World, that ſometimes they may be Inſtruments in the Hands of Providence for the Puniſhment of others, as in the Caſe of Tyrants and publick Oppreſſors; that ſometimes he may make their Puniſhment, when it finally comes upon them, more exemplary and awakening, as in the Caſe of Pharaoh; and that, at other Times, he may ſhew his Mercy and Forbearance, and cut off all Excuſe for Impenitence, [o] by enduring with all Long-Suffering the Veſſels of Wrath fitted to Deſtruction. We may therefore, when we pleaſe to be fooliſh, envy the Felicity of the Sinner, and the Pride of the Oppreſſor; but certainly, if we retain the Senſe of another World, we cannot but believe, that there is a Time coming, when the greateſt Perſons in this, thoſe who overturn Kingdoms, and lay waſte Countries, and oppreſs and ruin Millions of Mankind to gratify their Luſts and Ambition; that there is a Day coming, I ſay, when theſe, of all others, ſhall fear and tremble moſt before the impartial Juſtice of God; [p] when the Kings of the Earth, and the great Men, and the rich Men, and the mighty Men, ſhall hide themſelves in the Dens, and in the Rocks of the Mountains, and ſay unto the Mountains and Rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the Face of him, that ſitteth on the Throne; for the great Day of his Wrath is come, and who ſhall be able to ſtand? Which ſingle Conſideration is enough to rectify, in our Conceptions, all the Inequality of preſent Diſpenſations, were it ten thouſand Times greater than it is. [q] Let not thy Heart therefore envy Sinners, but be thou in the Fear of the Lord all the Day long; for ſurely there is an End, and thy Expectation ſhall not be cut off.

The Reſult of this Attribute. Content. To juſtify therefore the Providence of God in all Events, and [r] to bring our Minds to a ſteady Patience and Contentment, we muſt urge upon them continually what the profound Moraliſt has taught us, viz. [s] "that the Deity, by its Nature, is the moſt juſt of all Beings, otherwiſe he would not be a Deity." But more eſpecially we ought often to inculcate what God himſelf hath ſaid, that [t] his Ways are equal, and that he hath not done without Cauſe, whatever he hath done to us. It is not without Cauſe, that any Perſons are under Pain and Torture of Body; it is not without Cauſe, that Want and Poverty is their Portion; it is not without Cauſe, that they are brought to Shame and Diſgrace; in a Word, it is not without Cauſe, that they labour under any Sort of Calamity: The Reaſons of Providence may be obſcure, but cannot be trifling and defective; for he, that is Juſtice itſelf, cannot deal unjuſtly with any of his Creatures; he that is Righteouſneſs itſelf, cannot do them any Injury. Since Afflictions ſpring not from the Duſt, we muſt look into ourſelves for the Cauſe and Original of them; and, if we have any Senſe of our manifold Provocations, as we lift up our Eyes to Heaven, take up the Confeſſion of the Prophet, and ſay, [u] Thou art juſt in all that thou haſt brought upon us; for thou haſt done right, but we have done wickedly.

Fear. 2. THE Conſideration of the ſame Divine Attribute ſhould have a different Effect upon Mankind, according to their different Diſpoſitions, ſince it exhibits as much Terror to the Wicked, as it does Conſolation to the Righteous. [x] The Prophet Iſaiah has ſet forth the Juſtice of God, and the Aſtoniſhment of Sinners, in very lively Colours, when he repreſents the Lord of Hoſts, lifting up his Banner, muſtering all his Forces, and preparing the Weapons of his Indignation, to avenge himſelf on his Adverſaries: [y] Howl ye, for the Day of the Lord is at Hand; it ſhall come as a Deſtruction ſtruction from the Almighty. Therefore ſhall all Hands be faint, and every Man's Heart ſhall melt, and they ſhall be afraid: Pangs and Sorrows ſhall take hold on them; they ſhall be in Pain, as a Woman that travaileth; they ſhall be amazed at one another; their Faces ſhall be as Flames: And I will puniſh the World for their Evil, and the Wicked for their Iniquity; the Arrogance of the Proud I will cauſe to ceaſe, and will lay low the Haughtineſs of the Terrible. Every Word, in this pompous Deſcription, breathes Awe and Terror: Howling and Deſtruction, Fainting of Hands, and Meltings of Heart, Pangs and Sorrows, the Throws of a Woman in Labour, and Pains of an hard Travel, Amazement and Confuſion of Face, Deſolation and final Exciſion, are the ſeveral Images, which, put together by the Prophet, make up, in one exquiſite Piece, the frightful Scene of the great and terrible Day of the Lord.

And Reliance on God.

BUT ſee the bleſſed Effects of a virtuous Life! That ſame Juſtice, which looks ſo angry upon the Wicked, puts on another Aſpect, when it turns to the Righteous; and, like [z] the Pillar of the Cloud, ſheds a friendly Light upon the one, while, to the other, it portends nothing but Darkneſs and Deſpair. The Lord is King, (is an Exclamation of the Royal [a] Pſalmiſt's, full of Joy) the Earth may be glad thereof, yea, the Multitude of the Iſles may be glad thereof: And he gives the Reaſon in the next Verſe; Righteouſneſs and Judgment are the Habitation of his Throne. And, indeed, in all the Afflictions and Oppreſſions that can befal Men, what can be a greater Conſolation to ſuch as are true of Heart, than to conſider that the Lord is King, whoſe Juſtice calls upon him to animadvert, and whoſe Power enables him to redreſs their Grievances; and that he is ſeated on a Throne, from whence he can behold the Wrongs they ſuffer, and can ſtretch out his Arm to protect their Perſons, and vindicate their Cauſe? And therefore the ſame Prophet, that juſt now repreſented to us the Terrors of the Lord, in order to reſtrain us from Impiety, does inſtruct us likewiſe in the Promiſes of the Lord, to ſuccour us in all our Diſtreſſes, if we adhere to him, and to our Duty: [b] Fear not thou, ſaith the Lord, for I am with thee: Be not diſmayed, for I am thy God: I will ſtrengthen thee, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the Right-hand of my Righteouſneſs. Fear not; I will help thee, I will help thee, ſaith the Lord, and thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Iſrael. Enough, in all Conſcience, to alleviate all Sorrows, that can befal us here, and to give us an Hope full of Immortality hereafter.

SECT. XV.

Of the VERACITY of GOD.

THE Veracity of God is that eternal Rectitude of the Divine Mind, [c] whereby his Ideas are exactly conformable to the Truth and Reality of Things, and his Words anſwerable to his Ideas, and expreſſive of the real Senſe and Intention of his Mind, ſo as to import the utmoſt Sincerity in ſuch Declarations, and the utmoſt Fidelity in ſuch Promiſes, as he ſhall, at any Time, think fit to make to the Sons of Men. Men indeed, who are far from knowing the perfect Nature of Things, are, every Moment, liable to make wrong Judgments, having (beſides their native Ignorance) the Biaſs of their Paſſions and Prepoſſeſſions always at Hand to draw them aſide, and Plenty enough of ambiguous Words to diſguiſe their Meaning, in caſe they are minded to impoſe upon their Hearers: But now in God there can be no Defect of Underſtanding, becauſe he perfectly knows the Nature of all Things, with all their ſeveral and diſtinct Relations; [d] He is Light, and in him is no Darkneſs at all. And as therefore he cannot poſſibly be deceived in the Judgment he makes of Things, ſo neither can he be under any Temptation to deceive us in his Manner of expreſſing them: Becauſe the Motives, upon which any rational Being may be ſuppoſed capable of Falſification, are infinitely removed from the known Perfections of his Divine Nature. [e] To be a Lyar, is eſteemed, among Men, an odious Character, and full of Reproach, becauſe it is an Argument of a baſe and ſervile Spirit, proſtitute to the Fear of loſing ſome Advantage, or incurring ſome Danger: But God has his own Fulneſs and All-ſufficiency to ſecure him, both againſt the Hopes of increaſing, and the Fears of impairing the Felicity of his Eſtate, from any Event whatever; and therefore cannot be deemed liable to any ſuch Action, as has a moral Turpitude in it.

The Truth of God, what.

Proved from Reaſon.

WHEN

[z] Exod. xiv. 20. [a] Pſal. xcvii. 1, 2. [b] Iſa. xli. 10, &c. [c] Fiddes's Body of Divinity.
[d] 1 John i. 5. [e] Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. II.

WHEN Men are unfaithful, and break their Words, they do it, becauſe they are either raſh and inconſiderate in paſſing them, or forgetful in minding them, or inconſtant in keeping them, or impotent and unable to perform them: But none of theſe are incident to God, becauſe his infinite Wiſdom, and perfect Knowledge, and clear Foreſight of all Events, guard him againſt Raſhneſs, Inconſtancy, and Forgetfulneſs, as his infinite Power enables him to perform whatever his Lips have uttered, and his Goodneſs thought fit to promiſe. And this is ſo natural a Notion of the divine Excellencies, that the Heathens themſelves, in their Reaſonings upon this Argument, were conſtantly led into it: And therefore having laid it down for a Maxim, That Lying and Falſhood are Imperfections, and odious to God and Men. [f] Plato tells us, That the Divine Nature is free from all ſuch Temptations, as ariſe either from Fear or Advantage; and thereupon concludes, that God is true, and deals plainly with us, both in his Words and Actions; for Truth (in the Senſe of Pythagoras) is ſo great a Perfection, that if the Deity were to render himſelf viſible to Men, [g] he would chuſe Light for his Body, and Truth for his Soul.

From Scripture. 'TIS no Wonder then that we find the Holy Scriptures abounding with ſuch Poſitions as theſe, that the [h] Paths of the Lord are Mercy and Truth, and that his [i] Words, [k] his Ways, his [l] Judgments are true and righteous; to remove the contrary Quality from him, declaring that [m] God is not a Man, that he ſhould lye, neither the Son of Man, that he ſhould repent; what he hath ſaid, he will do, what he hath ſpoken, he will make good: And, to aſſure us of his Sincerity and Truth, averring that [n] he will not ſuffer his Faithfulneſs to fail, his Covenant he will not break, nor alter the Thing that has gone out of his Lips; for [o] his Truth endureth to all Generations, and [p] though Heaven and Earth ſhall paſs away, yet his Word ſhall not.

An Objection. [q] "BUT how can God be ſaid to be ſo true and faithful, when there are ſeveral "Promiſes made to the Godly, that are far from being fulfilled? [r] Great Peace have " they that love the Law of the Lord, and nothing ſhall offend them: [s] He ſhall deli- " ver them in ſix Troubles, yea, in ſeven there ſhall no Evil touch them: In Famine, " he ſhall redeem them from Death, and in the War from the Power of the Sword: " They ſhall be hid from the Scourge of the Tongue, neither ſhall they be afraid of De- " ſtruction, when it cometh; for [t] Godlineſs is profitable in all Things, having the " Promiſe of the Life that now is, and of that which is to come. Theſe, and many " more of the like Nature, are the repeated Promiſes of God: But alas! how ſel- " dom are they made good to the Religious! Or how is Godlineſs profitable to them, " (as to the Things of this Life) when they are pined with Hunger and Want; when " they are expoſed to all Dangers and Calamities; when they are reviled, maligned, " and perſecuted, and many Times for Righteouſneſs Sake? An Exemption from " Danger, and the Collation of Wealth and Honour, of Peace and Safety, ſeem leaſt " of all to be the Conditions of Godlineſs here, whatever they may be hereafter."

Anſwered. To reſolve, in ſome Meaſure, this great Problem, we ſhould do well to conſider, that the Promiſes of worldly Happineſs are not made abſolutely to all, but to ſuch only, as are duly qualified, both by being truly godly, and by making uſe of proper Means to attain them. Now, ſince there is ſo much Diſſimulation in the World, and ſo many Ways of diſguiſing Men's ſecret Vices; unleſs we had the Faculty of looking into their Hearts, we cannot, with any Certainty, pronounce who are ſincerely good, and who not. A cunning Hypocrite may impoſe upon us, and the Want and Afflictions we perceive him labouring under, may be thought a ſevere Diſpenſation, when in Reality they are no more than a juſt Retribution for his Sin. Till therefore we have a more diſtinct Knowledge of Men, than our preſent Capacity can extend to, we ſhould be very cautious how we cenſure the Faithfulneſs of God, when 'tis a Thouſand to One, but that the Default lies originally in them, who, by not performing the Duty, that is made the Condition of the Promiſe, render themſelves unfit to receive the Accompliſhment of it.

AND, in like manner, Men cannot, upon any tolerable Ground, imagine that they ſhould enjoy the Comforts and Accommodations of Life, unleſs they apply themſelves to the proper Methods of attaining them. [u] For when God promiſes a good Man a plentiful Increaſe of his Subſtance, he does not immediately open the Windows of Heaven, and ſhower down Abundance of Gold into his Lap; nor does he ſurround him him with ſuch a diſtinguiſhing Providence, as that, whereby * he watered Gideon's Fleece, while all the Ground about it was perfectly dry: But he leaves him, in a great Meaſure, to his own Care and Aſſiduity, attending his honeſt Induſtry only with his Bleſſing, and crowning it with Succeſs, which the idle and ſlothful Man muſt in vain expect. The like may be ſaid of bodily Health, of Peace and Safety, of Credit and Repute, &c. that the Man muſt make uſe of the Means conducing thereunto, he muſt addict himſelf to Moderation and Sobriety, he muſt obſerve the Laws of Continence and Chaſtity, he muſt be juſt in his Dealings, and curious in the Choice of his Company, &c. otherwiſe he fulfils not the Condition, upon which the Promiſe is ſuſpended, and devolves all the Blame upon himſelf in caſe of Non-Performance.

BUT ſuppoſe the Condition be fulfilled: Yet it is to be conſidered farther, that all Promiſes of this Kind are under certain Limitations, and are to be underſtood always with reſpect to God's Glory, and the Benefit of the Perſons to whom they are extended. Now it is certain, that the Glory of God is ſometimes ſerv'd, not ſo much by the Happineſs, as by the Afflictions of his Servants. In the Caſe of righteous Job, this is the declared End of his Suffering, that thereby he might give a Teſtimony of his Sincerity and Uprightneſs; that his Faith and Patience might be tried to the utmoſt; that he might commend theſe Graces to the Sufferers of ſucceeding Times; that the Devil and his Agents might be baffled and confounded; that the Divine Power and Strength might be diſplay'd in his Weakneſs, and, by all theſe, God's Glory manifeſted and advanc'd. And is it not evident, that, by the Sufferings and Perſecutions of the Faithful, by the Death and Martyrdom of holy Men, the Truth of the Goſpel is confirmed, the Chriſtian Faith propagated, Religion itſelf credited, and the Lord of Heaven and Earth glorified? Is it not manifeſt, that he is with his Servants in Tribulation and Diſtreſs, to guide and conduct them, to protect and defend them, to comfort and refreſh them, to ſhew his Power in their Infirmity, and oftentimes to reſcue and deliver them?

THUS their Sufferings redound to God's Glory (which is a Limitation not to be overlook'd in the fulfilling of Promiſes); but this is not the only Conſideration, that avails with God. He, who is ſo intimately acquainted with our Frame and Conſtitution, knows very well to what Uſe we ſhould apply his Bleſſings; and therefore, like a wiſe Phyſician, that tenders the Good and Welfare of his Patients, he lets us not have what we extravagantly deſire and call for. The Things of this World he beſtows not according to our Longings and Appetites, but gives us ſuch a Portion of them, as he knows is moſt ſuitable to our Condition, and will be moſt ſerviceable to our ſpiritual Health. He perceives before-hand, that we ſhould prove negligent in Health, wanton in Eaſe, proud, and haughty, and luxurious in Plenty; he foreſees that we ſhould ſtand in need of Chaſtiſements; that Afflictions and Croſſes would prove profitable to us, to ſubdue our evil Inclinations, to wean us from the Vanities of Life, and raiſe our Affections to him, and Heaven; and therefore, he refuſes the one, which would be ſo pernicious, and gives us the other, which are ſo very beneficial to us; and all this is pure Kindneſs, that our light Afflictions, which are but for a Moment, may work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal Weight of Glory: Which is enough to vindicate the Faithfulneſs of God in all his Proceedings, ſince he with-holds nothing but what he knows would hurt us, and abundantly ſupplies the Want of worldly and temporal, with heavenly and everlaſting Comforts.

The Reſult of this Attribute, Reliance on God.

HERE then is a firm and laſting Baſis for our Truſt and Reliance on God; that how great ſoever the Bleſſings are, which he hath been pleas'd to promiſe, yet ſince he has been ſo gracious as to promiſe, he will think himſelf concern'd to make them good. Tho' therefore the Mercies of God be very great, and the Benefits we expect from him far beyond our Merits and Deſerts; yet, ſince we have his Promiſe, that, as long as we adhere to him, and to our Duty, he will not leave us, nor forſake us, we may rely upon his Word for the Continuation of his Favour, his Protection in Time of Danger, and his conſtant Proviſion for us, in Time of Want. Tho' the Senſe and Conſciouſneſs of our Sins be a melancholy Reflection, and, conſidering the Majeſty of him, againſt whom they are committed, and againſt what Light and clear Conviction, againſt what Entreaties and Calls to do otherwiſe, we many Times committed them, enough to ſink us into Deſpair; yet when we conſider, that God has promis'd, upon our Repentance, to blot out our Iniquities, and remember our

* Judges vi. 37.

Tranſgreſſions no more; to caſt them behind his Back, and throw them into the Depth of the Sea, (as he is pleas'd to expreſs himſelf for our Conſolation) we have Encouragement given us to look upon him, no longer as an angry and inexorable Judge, but as a tender and reconcil'd Father, thro' the Merits and powerful Interceſſion of his well-beloved Son. Once more, tho' the Reward, which God has propounded to our Hopes, be vaſt and inconceivable, and far above our largeſt Expectations; tho' we cannot conceive for what Reaſon it is, that the great God of Heaven and Earth, who is the Center of his own Happineſs and Enjoyment, ſhould have need of us in his Celeſtial Kingdom; ſhould deſire us to live with him, and to be in his Preſence to all Eternity; tho' this eternal Weight of Glory, I ſay, cannot enter into our Minds, for what Reaſon it can be conferr'd, and is enough to raiſe ſome Doubt and Diffidence in us, whenever we look upon our Performances to deſerve it: Yet, ſince Chriſt has aſſur'd us, that in his Father's Houſe are many Manſions, and that he is gone before to prepare a Place, that where he and his Father are, we may be alſo, our Title to the heavenly Inheritance, thro' the Purchaſe of his Blood, is confirm'd, and, in the Strength of his Merits, we may at any Time [y] flee for Refuge, to lay hold on the Promiſe, that is ſet before us.

A Belief of what he has revealed.

HERE again is a ſufficient Ground for our Belief and Aſſent to whatever, we are ſatisfied, is a Declaration of God's Will to Mankind. God does not indeed expect, that we ſhould implicitly believe every Thing, that goes under the Name of a Divine Revelation: This is a Matter that he ſubmits to our Enquiry, and calls upon us to uſe our utmoſt Diligence in the Search, that we may be able to give an Account of the Faith that is in us. But, after we have made it our Enquiry, and, upon Examination, are convinc'd, that ſuch and ſuch Things are certainly reveal'd to us by God, our Belief of them then ſtands not ſo much upon the Credibility of the Things themſelves, as upon the Truth and Veracity of him, who has reveal'd them. [z] If therefore we receive the Scriptures as the Word of God, and are ſatisfied of their Divine Authority, we ought, in all Conſcience, to believe every Thing contain'd in them, even tho' there be ſome Points, that to us are unintelligible, and wherein our deepeſt Reſearches can give us no particular Satisfaction. The Reaſon is, becauſe we are perſuaded, that they are reveal'd by God, who cannot lye, whoſe Knowledge is infallible, whoſe Word is Truth, and upon whoſe Teſtimony alone (if we are willing to glorify this Perfection of his, and ſet our Seal to his Veracity) we ought to give up our firm and unfeigned Aſſent; in which Senſe is that Expreſſion of the Apoſtle: [a] He that believeth on the Son of God, hath the Witneſs of himſelf; but he that believeth not God, hath made him a Lyar, becauſe he believeth not the Record, that God gave of his Son.

THUS we have conſider'd ſome of the chief Attributes of God, in order to raiſe in our Minds great and worthy Conceptions of him, and to beget in our Hearts holy Affections, ſuitable to our Condition, and daily Dependence on him: And from the whole we may perceive, that the [b] Simplicity of his Nature ſhould teach us to have low Thoughts of our different Compoſition; his Spirituality ſhame our Mixture and Allay of Fleſh; his Eternity cauſe us to bluſh that we are but of yeſterday; his Ubiquity vilify our narrow and contracted Locality; his Omniſcience ſhew the ſhallow Reach of our Underſtanding; his Omnipotence expoſe our Weakneſs, and Want of Strength; his Holineſs command our Admiration; his Goodneſs our Love; his Mercy our Thankfulneſs; his Juſtice our Dread; his Dominion and Happineſs our Joy and Complacency; and his Truth and Faithfulneſs, together with his Conſtancy and Unchangeableneſs, our Faith, and Hope, and Reliance on him: And that, from a general View of his manifold Perfections, and our comparative Vileneſs and Deformity, we may be provok'd to fall down before him; and, in the Spirit and Words of holy and devout Job, proclaim his Majeſty, and ſay, [c] I have heard of thee by the Hearing of the Ear, but now mine Eye ſeeth thee, wherefore I abhor myſelf, and repent in Duſt and Aſhes.

CHAP. VI.

Of the TRINITY.

HITHERTO we have treated of the Nature of God, abſtractly conſider'd, and of thoſe ſeveral Attributes, which neceſſarily ariſe from the Contemplation of it; and are now led to obſerve what it is that the Holy Scriptures teach us of the Manner of its ſubſiſting in a Trinity of Perſons. I ſay, what it is the Scriptures teach us; for it muſt be acknowledged, [a] that ſuch a Myſtery as this would never have enter'd into our Thoughts, had not the Spirit of him, who knows his own Nature and Subſtance beſt, been pleaſed to reveal it to us.

The Trinity a Doctrine purely Chriſtian.

SOME Prints, indeed, of a [b] very antient Tradition (as I ſhall have Occaſion to ſhew hereafter) are to be met with, concerning three real Differences, or Diſtinctions in the Divine Nature; but whence this Tradition had its Original, or whether we Chriſtians do not put that Conſtruction upon ſome obſcure Hints, and force them, as it were, to look that Way, has been a Matter of Debate among the learned World. Nay, ſome have adventured (and I think not without Reaſon) to carry the Thing ſo far, as even to deny, that the Jews themſelves ever had any expreſs Revelation of this Matter; and therefore they conclude, [c] that the Word Elohim, which is of plural Termination, when joined with Bara, which is a Verb ſingular, i. e. God created, is a common Idiom of the Hebrew Tongue, and cannot be ſuppoſed to import a Plurality of Perſons in the Unity of Eſſence; that † the Expreſſions, [d] Let us make Man in our own Image, and, [e] the Man is become like one of us, &c. imply the Majeſty only, (as it is cuſtomary for Kings to make mention of themſelves in the plural Number) and not the Plurality of the Speaker, nor any Conſultation among the ſeveral Perſons in the Godhead; and that the threefold Repetition of [f] Holy, Holy, Holy, when applied to God, inſtead of relating to the three Hypoſtaſes of the Godhead, expreſſes only the Vehemence of the Speaker, or the Importance of the Thing, and is a common Form in all Languages: So that theſe, and ſuch-like Places of Scripture, carry not in them (according to theſe Mens Sentiments) any ſuch evident Proof of a Trinity, as to perſuade us, that the Jewiſh Church could from hence attain a clear and diſtinct Knowledge of it. As for the Opinion of the modern Jews touching this Matter, 'tis certain, that they acknowledge no ſuch Thing as a Trinity, but utterly explode it; and the Followers of Mahomet, in all their publick Performances of religious Worſhip, are accuſtomed to repeat this Sentence with much Earneſtneſs: There is but one God, there is but one God; not ſo much out of Zeal to aſſert the Unity of the Godhead, as to reject the Trinity of Perſons, believed and maintained by Chriſtians. So that [g] this Doctrine is, as it were, the Shibboleth of the Chriſtian Church, and that wherein the Profeſſors of Chriſtianity are diſtinguiſhed from all other Worſhippers in the World. And as it is the peculiar, ſo it is the great

† The Primitive Fathers, indeed, made Uſe of theſe Texts, to prove the Doctrine of the Trinity againſt the Jews, but then it was, becauſe they had properly no other Way of doing it; for, as the Jews abſolutely rejected the Authority of the New Teſtament, and yet allowed (from the Idiom of their Tongue very likely) that theſe Paſſages, which ſpeak in the plural Number, denoted two, if not more Perſons in the Deity, the Chriſtian Writers took Occaſion from hence to produce them againſt them; but then they produced them, rather as Argumenta ad homines, than any ſubſtantial Proofs. In that Form of Speech, for Inſtance, Let us make Man, the Jews admitted of a Plurality, but then, as the general Opinion was, that God here ſpeaks to his Angels, the Fathers here took their Advantage, and argued in this Manner: ————That, ſince Angels, or any other created Beings, could not be ſuppoſed capable of executing the Divine Commands, becauſe the Work of Creation was infinitely above their Ability, the Perſons, with whom God conſulted, muſt neceſſarily have been of Power equal to himſelf; and from thence they inferred, that in the Godhead there were two, if not more, Omnipotent, and conſequently Divine Perſons. For, "admitting that the "Work of Creation was too difficult for any Creature, and admitting, at the ſame Time, that there were other Per"ſons, beſides the God of Iſrael, who created the World, the Conſequence muſt be, that there are more Divine "uncreated Perſons than one;" but then it is a Conſequence, merely drawn from the Conceſſion of Adverſaries, and does not fully eſtabliſh the Doctrine of a Co-eternal Trinity. 'Tis an Argument, indeed, which the Fathers had no Need of, but in occaſional Diſputes, where it might be of ſome Service, and where the New Teſtament Proofs, on which they chiefly grounded their Doctrine, could not be admitted at all. Waterland's Sermons at Lady Moyer's Lecture.

great and fundamental Doctrine of the Chriſtian Syſtem, and that which virtually comprizes all the reſt; for if God have not an eternal Son, and an eternal Spirit, the whole Myſtery of our Redemption by Chriſt, and of our Sanctification by the Spirit (which, in its Conſequences, is the Whole of the Goſpel, and diſtinguiſhes it from all other Religions whatever) is utterly loſt.

GREAT Care ought therefore to be had in fixing our Faith concerning this Article upon a right Bottom, and not ſo much to conſider what the Wit and Invention of Man have deviſed in order to an Explanation of it, (though this need not altogether be overlook'd) as what the Holy Scriptures, which are our only Oracles in this Caſe, have declar'd. 'Tis to them that I ſhall principally attend in this Argument, after having premiſed this one Conſideration, [h] that though neither the Word Trinity, nor perhaps Perſon, in the Senſe that Divines uſe them, when they treat of this Myſtery, be any where to be met with in Scripture; yet, ſince it cannot be denied but that three are there ſpoken of by the Names of Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, and that theſe three are ſpoken of with as much Diſtinction from one another, as we uſe to ſpeak of three ſeveral Perſons; it will follow, that though the Expreſſions be not ſcriptural, yet, to avoid Prolixity and Circumlocution, they may very properly and innocently be uſed, ſo long as we mean neither more nor leſs by them, than what the Scripture ſays in other Words. Taking this along with us, I ſhall now proceed to the Doctrine itſelf, and ſhall endeavour to ſhew,

I. THAT the Scriptures make Mention of three diſtinct Perſons, equally poſſeſs'd of the Divine Nature and Perfections.

II. THAT theſe three Perſons, according to the ſame Scriptures, are but one God. And,

III. THAT this Trinity in Unity, or three Perſons in one God, is neither a contradictory Doctrine, nor unreaſonable to be believ'd.

That there are three diſtinct Perſons mentioned in Scripture.

I. THAT the Holy Scriptures make Mention of Three, by Way of great Eminence and Diſtinction, may appear from many Paſſages, out of which I ſhall only produce ſome. At the Prediction of the bleſſed Virgin's Conception, which was to be without the Concurrence of a Man, the Divine Meſſage is deliver'd in theſe Words: [k] The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, and the Power of the Higheſt ſhall overſhadow thee; therefore alſo that holy Thing that ſhall be born of thee, ſhall be called the Son of God. Here are plainly diſtinguiſhed from each other, the Holy Ghoſt, or Power overſhadowing; the Higheſt, whoſe Power that Spirit is; and the holy Thing, or Perſon, who is called the Son of God, becauſe born of a Mother, impregnated by that Divine Power. At our bleſſed Lord's Baptiſm, [l] the Spirit of God, we read, deſcended like a Dove, and reſted upon him, and a Voice from Heaven declar'd him to be the Son of God: [m] Nothing can be plainer than three Perſonalities in this Tranſaction; the Father ſpeaking from Heaven, the Son coming out of Jordan, and the Spirit deſcending from above. In the Promiſe, which our bleſſed Saviour makes his Diſciples, to comfort their Hearts againſt what was coming upon them, [n] I will pray the Father, and he ſhall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever, even the Spirit of Truth; and when the Comforter is come, whom I will ſend unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of Truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he ſhall teſtify of me; there are manifeſtly Acts, and Perſons, and Capacities different. The Father, from whom the Spirit proceeds, whom the Son prays, and by whom, at the Son's Requeſt, the Comforter was given: The Son, praying the Father, ſending the Comforter from the Father, and teſtified of by the Spirit ſo ſent: And the Spirit, given by the Father, ſent by the Son, teſtifying of the Son, and, upon the Son's Departure, abiding for ever with the Diſciples.

THE great Apoſtle of the Gentiles, to enforce the Doctrine of the Reſurrection, tells the Romans, [o] that if the Spirit of him, who raiſed Jeſus from the Dead, dwelt in them, he that raiſed up Chriſt from the Dead, would alſo quicken their mortal Bodies by his Spirit, that dwelled in them; where he evidently refers to Jeſus, the Son of God, raiſed from the Dead; to the Spirit of God, by which he was raiſed; and and to him, that raiſed Jeſus, and at the laſt great Day ſhall raiſe all others, in whom his Spirit dwells. The ſame Apoſtle, to ſatisfy the Corinthians of the Benefits of their Converſion, after having enumerated ſeveral Ranks of Sinners, [p] and ſuch were ſome of you, ſays he, but ye are waſhed, but ye are ſanctified, but ye are juſtified, in the Name of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and by the Spirit of our God, i. e. God the Father. It cannot be denied that Sanctification and Juſtification are the Gifts of God alone; for none can abſolve us from the Guilt and Pollution of Sin, but he only: But then the Apoſtle tells the Corinthians, that this Benefit they received, not only from God the Father, but from the Lord Jeſus likewiſe, and from the Holy Spirit: Analogous to which is that other Paſſage in the ſame Epiſtle; [q] There are Diverſities of Gifts, but the ſame Spirit, (there is the third Perſon in the Trinity) there are Differences of Adminiſtration, but the ſame Lord, there is the ſecond Perſon) and there are Diverſities of Operations, but it is the ſame God, (or firſt Perſon in the Trinity) that worketh all in all. Once more, the ſame Apoſtle, in his Prayer for the Theſſalonians, directs his Devotion to the ever bleſſed Trinity: [r] Now God himſelf, even our Father, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, direct our Way unto you, and the Lord, (i. e. the Holy Ghoſt) make you to increaſe and abound in Love one towards another: For that by the Lord we are here to underſtand the Holy Ghoſt, I think is very plain from the next Verſe; to the End that he may eſtabliſh your Hearts unblameable in Holineſs before God, even our Father, at the Coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, with all his Saints; ſince he is the Sanctifier, and to eſtabliſh our Hearts in Holineſs is his proper Work and Office: And if ſo, then is there a plain Enumeration of the three Perſons of the Trinity in this Paſſage.

THE great Apoſtle of the Jews begins his firſt Epiſtle General to his diſperſed Brethren, with a Declaration of the ſame Article, when he calls them [s] elect according to the Foreknowledge of God the Father, through Sanctification of the Spirit, unto Obedience, and ſprinkling of the Blood of Jeſus; for there we may obſerve, that the three Perſons are not only expreſsly named, but their diſtinct Employments, with Reference to Man's Salvation, are particularly ſpecified, while the Father is ſaid to elect, the Spirit to ſanctify, and the holy Jeſus to ſhed his Blood. The beloved Apoſtle St John, in his Salutation to the Churches ([t] Grace and Peace from him, which is, and which was, and which is to come, and from the ſeven Spirits, which are before his Throne, and from Jeſus Chriſt) has given us a diſtinct Enumeration of the three Perſons in the Deity, if we will but admit, (as moſt Interpreters have done) that by the ſeven Spirits, [u] which was a ſacred Number among the Jews, that one Perſon (viz. the Holy Ghoſt) is to be underſtood, from whom all that Variety of Gifts and Operations, which were then conſpicuous in the Chriſtian Church, did proceed. But however this be, 'tis certain, that the Paſſage in his Epiſtle of [x] the Three which bear Record in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt, are as full and plain a Teſtimony and Declaration of this Myſtery, as can be cited in Words; and though ſome have endeavoured to invalidate the Authority of this Paſſage, as not extant in ſome antient Copies, and ſeldom appealed to by the firſt Defenders of the Catholick Faith againſt the Arians and Macedonians, yet the contrary to this is moſt evident. [y] Tertullian, [z] St Cyprian, and [a] Fulgentius, quote it in their Writings; [b] Athanaſius made uſe of it in the Council of Nice againſt Arius; and the Reaſon why it was left out in ſome antient Copies, Socrates acquaints us with in his [c] Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, when he tells us, "That the Chriſtian Church had all along com-" plain'd, that the Epiſtle of St John had been corrupted by the firſt Adverſaries of " the Doctrine of Chriſt's Divinity." 'Twas by their Artifice therefore that it was omitted; for ſeveral [d] learned Pens, both of our own and other Churches, have made it very manifeſt, that it was † originally in the Text, and that the moſt and antienteſt Copies always had it.

† To confirm this, we may add, that, if the Difference of Copies happened by the Negligence of Tranſcribers, ſuch a Miſtake is much more eaſily made by omitting a Clauſe, than by inſerting one, eſpecially when the ſame Words occur twice very near together, which is the preſent Caſe: And that, without this Clauſe, the next Verſe is maimed, and hardly good Senſe; the Words, in Earth, ſtanding disjointed by themſelves; whereas the Words, in Heaven, (as we now read them) make a clear, ſtrong, and elegant Antitheſis: And for theſe Reaſons, thoſe Copies, in which this Paſſage is found, are more likely to be true, than thoſe, in which it is wanting. Trapp's Doctrine of the Trinity.

BUT we need not be ſo tenacious of one Text, when, beſides theſe already mentioned, and many more that might be produced upon a farther Enquiry, the very Form of our Admiſſion into the Chriſtian Covenant is [e] in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt; the Form of our Prayers is thus directed, that [f] through the Son we have an Acceſs by one Spirit to the Father; and the Form of our Diſmiſſion from them is, every Day, with this Benediction, [g] The Grace of the Lord Jeſus, and the Love of God, and the Fellowſhip of the Holy Ghoſt, be with us all evermore; as if the Wiſdom of God had intended to inculcate this Notion of the Trinity, and, in every Act of our religious Worſhip, to remind us of the Manner of his Subſiſtence.

That theſe three are diſtinct Perſons, proved from their Relations.

THUS it appears, that there are Three, very often occurring in Scripture, under the different Appellations of Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt: and that theſe three are not one and the ſame Being, under different Reſpects and Conſiderations, but three real and diſtinct Perſons, with a peculiar Manner of ſubſiſting, is plain from the very Names of Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, if we underſtand them in a proper and natural Senſe; [h] becauſe theſe are oppoſite Relations, which can never meet in the ſame Subject: For a Father cannot be Father to himſelf, but to his Son; nor can a Son be Son to himſelf, but to his Father; nor can the Holy Ghoſt proceed from himſelf, or (in this Senſe) be his own Spirit, but the Spirit of the Father, and Son, from whom he proceeds: And therefore the Father is not the Son, nor the Holy Spirit; nor the Son the Father, or Holy Spirit; nor the Holy Spirit either Father or Son. The only Queſtion is, whether theſe Names, when ſpoken of the Trinity, have a proper and natural, or only an alluſive and metaphorical Signification.

THE Divine Nature and Perfections indeed, (as they are far exalted above our Conception) may be brought down by Metaphors, taken from ſome Things, that are analogous in Creatures; in which Senſe we may allow Father and Son to be metaphorical Names, when applied to God: Not that God the Father is not, in the higheſt and moſt perfect Senſe, a Father, and his Son a moſt proper, natural, and genuine Son; but becauſe the Divine Generation is ſo perfect a Communication of the Divine Nature and Being from Father to Son, that human Generations are but obſcure and imperfect Images and Reſemblances of it. The Truth is, when any Thing is ſpoken metaphorically of God, the Metaphor and Image are always in the Creatures, the Truth, Perfection, and Reality of all, in God: And if ſo, then if God be a Father, and have a Son, an only-begotten Son, begotten eternally of himſelf; though this eternal Generation be infinitely above what we can imagine or conceive, yet it is evident, that God the Father is more properly and perfectly a Father, and God the Son more properly and perfectly a Son, than any earthly Fathers or Sons ever were. And if God the Father and his Son be truly and perfectly Father and Son, they muſt be truly and perfectly diſtinct Beings; [i] for the Father cannot be the Son, whom he begets; nor the Son the Father, that begat him; nor the Holy Ghoſt either the Father or the Son, from whom he proceeds: Conſequently, they muſt be diſtinct, and real, and proper Perſons; for he that begets, and he that is begotten, and he that proceeds from both, cannot be one and the ſame Perſon.

Diſtinct Offices. AND as this Difference of Relations makes a manifeſt Diſtinction between the three Perſons; ſo the different Offices and Employments, that are aſcribed to them in Scripture, is a farther Note of Diſcrimination. For who ſees not, that the Work of Creation of all Things at firſt, and ever ſince the juſt, and wiſe, and merciful Diſpoſal of them, are attributed to the Father; that the great Undertaking of our Redemption is the Care and Employment of the Son; and the Buſineſs of enlightning and ſanctifying thoſe, whom the Son redeemeth, the particular Province of the Holy Ghoſt? Without ſuppoſing them to be three diſtinct Perſons, I ſay, no ſatisfactory Solution can be given, why, in the great Work of Man's Salvation, a diſtinct Office and Operation ſhould be proper to each of them; why [k] the Father only ſhould be ſaid to elect; the Son only to have ſhed and ſprinkled his Blood, and the Holy Ghoſt only to ſanctify us unto Obedience. So far then as a Diverſity of Names, Offices, and Operations, diſtinguiſhes one Being from another, there is plainly a Diſtinction of Perſons ſubſiſting in the Godhead. But this is not all.

THOSE,

[e] Matth. xxviii. 19. [f] Eph. ii. 18. [g] 2 Cor. xiii. 14. [h] Sherlock's State of the Socinian Controverſy.
[i] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. [k] 1 Pet. i. 2. Rom. viii. 29. Heb. xii. 24. 2 Theſ. ii. 13.

THOSE, who pretend to state † the true Notion of a Perſon, as a Term made uſe of in this Argument, tell us, [l] that it is a Being, which has Underſtanding, and is a diſtinct, entire Subſtance of itſelf; [m] an individual Subſtance of a rational Nature, [n] or a compleat intelligent Subſtance with a peculiar Manner of Subſiſtence: [o] So that there is a common Nature, which muſt be joined by a peculiar Manner of ſubſiſting, to make a Perſon, otherwiſe it would be a mere Mode; for we never conceive a Perſon without the Eſſence in Conjunction with it. And this Notion may haply be of Uſe, not only to ſtate the true Diſtinction of the Perſons in the Godhead, but to account likewiſe for ſome dubious Paſſages in the Fathers, and reconcile the different Parties, that contend about them: Only we muſt take Care (as I ſaid before) that, when we diſcourſe of the Sacred Trinity, the Word Perſon be not conceived in the ſame Senſe as among Men. [p] The Perſons of Men are diſtinct Men, as well as diſtinct Perſons; but this is no Ground for us to affirm, that the Perſons in the Divine Nature are diſtinct Gods. The Diſtinction of the Perſons of Men is founded in a ſeparate and divided Subſiſtence; but this cannot be the Foundation of the Diſtinction of the Divine Perſons, becauſe Separation and Diviſion cannot belong to an infinite Being. In a Word, three human Perſons are three Men, becauſe, though they have the ſame ſpecifick Nature, yet they have not the ſame numerical Nature: But the three Perſons in the Godhead are not three Gods, becauſe they have the ſame numerical Eſſence, which belongs in common to them all: And ſince it is confeſſed on all Hands, [q] that Nature and Subſiſtence go to the making up of a Perſon, why may not the Way of their Subſiſtence be as different, as the human and Divine Natures (one finite, and the other infinite) are confeſſed to be? Though therefore in Things created it is neceſſary for one ſingle Eſſence to ſubſiſt in one ſingle Perſon, and no more; yet this does not at all prove, that the ſame muſt be neceſſary in him, whoſe Nature is wholly different from theirs, and conſequently, may differ as much in the Manner of his Subſiſtence. For 'tis a Thing agreeable even to the Notions of bare Reaſon to imagine, that the Divine Nature has a Way of ſubſiſting very different from the Subſiſtence of any created Being, and conſequently, may have one and the ſame Nature diffus'd into three diſtinct Perſons: But how, and in what Manner this is effected; how one Subſtance in the Deity is communicated to more, and becomes theirs; how of one and the ſame Eſſence, there can be three Perſons numerically different, this is the Difficulty; and what made the [r] holy Father (writing upon the Argument) confeſs, "That the Myſtery of the Trinity is immenſe and incomprehen-
"ſible, beyond the Expreſſion of Words, or Reach of Senſe; that it blinds our "Sight, and exceeds the Capacity of our Underſtanding: I underſtand it not, ſays
"he, nevertheleſs I will comfort myſelf in this, that Angels are ignorant of it, nor "do Ages apprehend it; that neither the Apoſtles enquired after it, nor the Son him-
"ſelf has thought fit to declare it."

Diſtinct Subſiſtences.

THE only valid Objection (and to which all others are reduceable) againſt theſe Perſonalities, ſo often occurring in Scripture, is taken from the Simplicity of the Divine Nature, which, in the Opinion of ſome, will not admit of any Diſtinction. [s] But though the Simplicity of God excludes all Mixture, i. e. all Compoſition of Things heterogeneous in the Godhead, (there being nothing in God but what is God) yet, notwithſtanding this, there may be a Diſtinction of Hypoſtaſes in the Godhead, provided they are homogeneous, and of the ſame Nature. Nay, the Simplicity of the Divine Nature, if rightly conſider'd, is ſo far from excluding, that it neceſſarily infers a Diſtinction of Hypoſtaſes in the Godhead: For, ſince the Simplicity of the Godhead conſiſts chiefly in this, that God is a pure eternal Mind, free from the Mixture of all Kind of Matter whatever; an eternal Mind muſt needs have in it, from all Eternity, a Notion or Conception of itſelf, which the Schools call Verbum Mentis; nor can it, at any Time, be conceived without it. Now this Word cannot be in God, what it is in us, a tranſient vaniſhing Accident; for then the Divine Nature would be compounded of Subſtance and Accident, which would be repugnant to its Simplicity;

An Objection anſwer'd.

† A late learned Author has given us this Definition of a ſingle Perſon, "That it is an intelligent Agent, having the "diſtinctive Characters of I, thou, and he, and not divided or diſtinguiſhed into more intelligent Agents, capable of "the ſame Characters," Waterland's ſecond Defence; and thereupon he thus argues in another Place, Our Ideas of "Perſon are plainly taken from our Conceptions of human Perſons, and from them transferr'd to other Subjects, "tho' they do not ſtrictly anſwer in every Circumſtance. Properly ſpeaking, he and him, are no more applicable to "a Divine Perſon, than ſhe or her;" but we have no third Way of denoting a Perſon, and ſo of the two we chuſe the beſt, and Cuſtom familiarizes it. His Sermons at Lady Moyer's Lectures.

Simplicity; and therefore muſt be a ſubſtantial ſubſiſting Word, and though not divided, yet diſtinct from the eternal Mind, from whence it proceeds. This is no novel Subtlety of the Schools, but a Notion, that † runs thro' all the Fathers of the firſt Ages, and is not deſtitute of a ſufficient Foundation in Scripture. It proves indeed only two Perſons in the Godhead, not a Trinity; but then it proves, that a Diſtinction of Perſons in the Godhead is very conſiſtent with its Simplicity; nay, that from the true Nature of the Simplicity of the Godhead, ſuch a Diſtinction neceſſarily follows; and if there is a Diſtinction of Two, there may be of Three; and that there is of Three, the full Evidence of Scripture (as I have already ſhewn) abundantly aſſures us.

THE Voice of Reaſon then, confirmed by the Oracles of God, does teſtify unto us this great Truth, that there are three Perſons ſubſiſting (though the Manner of their ſubſiſting we cannot ſo well comprehend) in the Unity of the Godhead: And that each of theſe is a Divine Perſon, co-equal and co-eternal, as to their Eſſence and Divinity, is the other Part of the Propoſition, that I now come to make good.

THAT the Father, whom we call the firſt Perſon in the Trinity, is truly and properly God has never been once made a Matter of Diſpute, though ſome have been ſo weak as to imagine, that if they could but ſhew him frequently repreſented in Scripture under this Character, it would be enough to overthrow the Doctrine of a Trinity of Perſons in the Unity of the Godhead; [u] not conſidering, that though the Father may be primarily, or in a certain Reſpect, ſo repreſented, yet he is not ſolely ſo repreſented, nor is the Godhead aſcribed to him in a Senſe excluſive of the other. For the ſame Scriptures and the ſame antient Writers, which ſometimes ſtile the Father the one God, do likewiſe either expreſsly, or, by neceſſary Implication, make the whole three Perſons together, the one God. What therefore I have to do, in order to clear this Matter, will be to ſhew.

1. UPON what Account an Eminence and Priority in the Godhead is aſcribed to God the Father; and,

2. THAT notwithſtanding this, the Son and the Holy Spirit, as to the Divine Nature and Perfections, are truly and equally God.

Wherein the Father's Pre-eminence conſiſts.

1. THAT the Name of God, when taken abſolutely, is uſually aſcribed to the Father, and he, in a more eminent and emphatical Manner, frequently ſtiled [x] the one God, [y] the true God, [z] the only true God, [a] the God, and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, &c. is obvious from the whole Tenor of the Scripture: And that the primitive Writers, though they often call the Son, and ſometimes the Holy Ghoſt, God, yet when they make mention of Father and Son together, do generally call the firſt God abſolutely, and the other either Lord only, or God of God, Son of God, or the like; and when they ſpeak of the third Perſon, do call him commonly the Holy Spirit, or the Spirit of God, reſerving, as it were, the Title of God more peculiarly for the Father, cannot be diſputed by any, that are converſant in their Writings. But then we are conſider, that the Pre-eminence, we are now ſpeaking of, conſiſts not in this, —— that the Eſſence, or the Attributes of one, are greater than thoſe of the other, (for theſe we ſhall ſhew to be alike) but only in this, that the Father has that Eſſence of himſelf, which the Son has only by Communication from the Father; and therefore himſelf acknowledges, that [b] he is from him, that [c] he liveth by him, and uſually refers all Things to him, as if they were received from himſelf; [d] whereupon ſome of the Ancients have not ſtuck, in this Senſe, to interpret theſe Words, [e] My Father is greater than I, of Chriſt, as the Son of God, as the ſecond Perſon in the bleſſed Trinity; but ſtill with Reference, not to his Eſſence, but his Generation, whereby he is underſtood to have his Being from the Father, who only has it of himſelf, and is the Original of all Power and Eſſence in the Son.

THERE

[t] Vid. Bull's Defenſ. Fid. Nic.

† It has with good Reaſon, been ſuppoſed by the Catholick Writers, that the Deſign of the Word Λόγος was to intimate, that the Relation of Father and Son, bears ſome Reſemblance and Analogy to that of Thought, viz. that as Thought is co-eval with the Mind, ſo the Son is co-eval with the Father; and that as Thought is cloſely united to, proceeds from, and yet remains in the Mind; ſo alſo may we underſtand that the Son is in the Boſom of the Father, proceeding from him, and yet never divided or ſeparate, but remaining in him and with him. Waterland's Sermons at Lady Moyer's Lectures.

[u] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. [x] 1 Cor. viii. 6. [y] 1 Theſ. i. 9. [z] John xvii. 3. [a] 2 Eph. i. 13. [b] John vii. 29. [c] Ibid. vi. 57. [d] Pearſon, on the Creed. [e] John xiv. 28.

THERE is a farther Foundation of the Father's Pre-eminence, that ariſes from the Order of the Perſons in the bleſſed Trinity, of which he is undoubtedly the Firſt. For though, in ſome Paſſages of the Apoſtles Writings, [f] the Son, and ſometimes [g] the Holy Ghoſt may chance to be firſt named; yet, where the three Perſons are barely enumerated, and delivered to us as the Rule of our Faith, (as it is in the Form of Baptiſm, which proceeds in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt) there the proper Order is always obſerv'd: And the Precedency, which is given to the Father, is not arbitrary, but naturally reſulting from the Divine Paternity; ſince the Son muſt neceſſarily be the Second unto the Father, from whom he receiveth his Origination, and the Holy Ghoſt unto the Son. For this Reaſon we find the antient Doctors of the Church ſo frequently calling the Father [h] the Origin, the Cauſe, the Author, the Fountain, the Head of every Thing, and even of the other two Perſons; becauſe the Divinity of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, is the Father's Divinity, as being derived from him: And therefore, (according to their common Illuſtration) as the Branch is from the Root, and the River from the Fountain; but, contrariwiſe, the Root receives nothing from the Branch, nor the Fountain from the River; ſo the other two Perſons are from the Father, receiving their Eſſence either by Generation or Proceſſion from him, while he is from neither, as having his Eſſence in himſelf, and Being, what he is, from none. [i] This is the conſtant Language of Antiquity, always keeping up ſome Pre-eminence of Order, as proper to the firſt Perſon, along with the true eſſential Divinity of the other two. This Diſtinction of Order, conſiſtent with a Parity of Nature, they learn'd from Scripture, and inviolably maintain'd: For thus they thought, that by referring all Things to one Head and Fountain, they ſhould preſerve the Unity along with the Diſtinction, and conſiſtently teach a Plurality of Perſons in one Godhead.

THIS again is the true Reaſon, why the Godhead is ſometimes repreſented, as ſubſiſting more eminently in the firſt Perſon, with a Sort of Subordination in the other Two. [k] Some Sort of Subordination indeed is implied in the very Notions of Paternity and Filiation; but this, we are to obſerve, is not a Subordination of Nature and Subſtance; no, nor of eſſential Attributes, or natural Properties, but merely a perſonal Subordination, founded on the perſonal Properties: And, to be ſatisfied in this, we need only conſider, that the Communication of the Eſſence (upon which this Subordination is grounded) is only a perſonal Action, and not an Act or Attribute of the Divine Eſſence. To generate, to be generated, and to proceed, are, not eſſential Attributes of the Divine Nature, but merely perſonal Acts of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit; and conſequently, the ſole Foundation of this Subordination being merely in the perſonal Properties, the Subordination itſelf, founded therein, can only relate to the perſonal, and not at all to the eſſential Properties; for, notwithſtanding their perſonal Subordination, they ſtill continue with the Father, in Subſtance equal, in Majeſty co-eternal.

The Son equally a Divine Perſon from his Filiation.

2. THAT there is a Perſon, frequently occurring in Scripture, under the Stile and Title of the Son of God, none, I think, can deny, who has once caſt his Eye into that ſacred Volume; and [l] though we are far from having any competent Notion of the eternal Generation, whereby the Son was begotten, and only make uſe of that Term, to denote the ineffable Manner, in which the Divine Nature was communicated by the Father, for want of a better and more ſignificant one to expreſs it by; [m] yet thus much we may ſay is eſſential to the Notion of a Son, that he is of him, whom we call his Father, and receives the ſame Nature from him. Now if we believe that God has a Son, neither created out of nothing, nor made of any pre-exiſtent Subſtance, but eternally begotten of himſelf, we muſt acknowledge, that the Father and Son are perfectly of the ſame Nature and Eſſence. For all Men, that know any Thing of the Divine Nature, muſt know this, that God is the moſt pure, ſimple, and uncompounded Being; and if God, who has no Parts, and cannot be divided into any, begets a Son, he muſt communicate his whole undivided Nature to him; for to beget a Son, is to communicate his own Nature to him: And if he have no Parts, he cannot communicate a Part, but muſt communicate the Whole, i. e. he muſt communicate his whole Self, and be a ſecond Self in his Son: For which Reaſon the Son is called by the Apoſtle, [n] the Brightneſs of his Father's Glory, Glory, and the expreſs Image of his Perſon, i. e. of the ſame Subſtance and Majeſty with the Father, a Beam of the ſame Light, as it were, and an exact Reſemblance of his original Perfections.

His Titles. IT is therefore implied in the very Notion of a Son (ſuppoſing him to be a real Son) that he ſhould, as our Confeſſion words it, [o] be God of God, Light of Light, very God of very God, and of one Subſtance with the Father: And tho' we cannot tell how this Subſiſtence was eternally conveyed to the Son, and are far from underſtanding what the Act of Divine Generation means; yet, ſince we read, in the Front of a Goſpel, written on purpoſe to confute the Error of thoſe, who denied the Divinity of the Son, [p] That in the Beginning was the Word, (whereby every one intends the ſecond Perſon) and the Word was with God, and the Word was God; and that [q] being in the Form of God, he thought it no Robbery to be equal with God; and find him almoſt every where, not only abſolutely called [r] God, but attended likewiſe with ſuch heightening Epithets as theſe: [s] the great God, [t] the true God, [u] the Lord God, [x] the Lord of all, [y] the Lord of Glory, [z] the only wiſe God, and [a] King of Kings, who [b] is Heir of all Things, and [c] over all God bleſſed for ever, Amen; we cannot but think, that theſe Expreſſions import ſomething more, than a precarious and ſubordinate Divinity, and that fuller Words could not have been devis'd to denote an entire Equality.

Honours. ANGELS, or Men indeed, acting by a delegated Power from God, may ſometimes receive great and honourable Appellations; in which Senſe the Apoſtle tells us, that there are Gods many, and Lords many: But when it is conſider'd, that, in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, the Son is not only preferr'd to Angels, but even ſet in Oppoſition to them, as one of another Order of Beings, and who [d] by Inheritance hath obtained a more excellent Name than they; that Angels are but God's miniſtring Spirits, who are commanded to worſhip the Son, whoſe Throne is for ever and ever, and whoſe Years ſhall not fail; it muſt needs be acknowledged again, that theſe Honours aſcrib'd to him cannot, without Blaſphemy, be applicable to any created Being, or titular God whatever.

Offices. † THE creating, preſerving, and governing of all Things, may juſtly be accounted a Work, that none can be thought capable of doing, but he that is truly God, and inveſted with Almighty Power; and therefore, when a modeſt ingenuous Chriſtian perceives it recorded in the ſacred Writings, that by the Son [e] were all Things created, that are in Heaven, and that are in Earth, viſible and inviſible, whether they be Thrones, or Dominions, or Principalities, or Powers, all Things were created by him, and for him; that by him they ſubſiſt, and [f] by the Word of his Power he ſuſtains them; he cannot but think, that theſe Words are to be taken in a literal Senſe; that they relate to the old Creation of the natural World, and not any fanciful Creation of a moral World, or Reformation of Men's Minds and Manners, under the State of the Goſpel. Nay, he thinks he has abundant Reaſon to ſuppoſe, that they import the full Power of the Godhead, operating without any ſuperior Hand to direct or over-rule it; and therefore [g] he cannot imagine, that an holy Man, ſpeaking by Divine Inſpiration, would ever addreſs himſelf to one acting in an inferior Capacity, as the Pſalmiſt does in that Paſſage, quoted by the Author to the Hebrews: [h] Thou, Lord, in the Beginning haſt laid the Foundations of the Earth, and the Heavens are the Work of thine Hands; they ſhall periſh, but thou endureſt, and they ſhall wax old, as doth a Garment, and as a Veſture ſhalt thou fold them, and they ſhall be changed; but thou art the ſame, and thy Years ſhall not fail. And in like Manner, when he finds the bleſſed Jeſus talking [i] of the Glory which he had with his

† The late learned Dr Waterland, in two moſt excellent and ſublime Diſcourſes, having abundantly ſhewn, that God the Son, a diſtinct Perſon from God the Father, is ſtrictly and properly the Creator and efficient Cauſe of all Things both in Heaven and Earth, according to what the Apoſtle aſſerts in the Paſſage to the Coloſſians, Chap. i. Ver. 16. and that the Work of Creation is a ſufficient Demonſtration of a Deity, draws this noble Concluſion from it: "Seeing then that the Title of Creator is thus magnificently and elegantly ſet forth in holy Scripture, as a "diſtinguiſhing Mark of Eminency, and the ſure and certain Character of true Divinity; if nothing higher or "ſtronger can be thought on, to raiſe in us the moſt ſublime, awful, and exalted Idea of the ſupreme God of Iſrael; "and if the Son of God be plainly and evidently ſet forth to us under the ſame high Character; if he created all "Things viſible and inviſible; if he laid the Foundations of the Earth, and the Heavens are the Works of his Hands; "if theſe be the Premiſes, let any Man of common Abilities, that has not his Faculties foreclos'd, or is not ſteel'd a-"gainſt Conviction, be left to draw the Concluſion. To ſay of God the Son, that he is the Maker of the World, and "of all the Kinds in it, as well as of the grand Palace itſelf, is to ſay as much, and as high of him, as is poſſible to ſay, "or to conceive of any other Perſon, however nam'd; becauſe the whole, that we can naturally know or apprehend of "God, his Power, or Perfections, is only what we can infer from his Work of Creation."

his Father, before the World was, and ſtiling himſelf [k] Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the Ending, which was, and is, and is to come, teſtifying of himſelf, that [l] he knoweth the Father; that he and his Father are one, he in the Father, and the Father in him, and that all Things that the Father hath, are his. When he perceives, in the Hiſtory given of him by authentic Penmen, that he is able [m] to ſearch the Hearts of Men, and know the hidden Things of God; to pardon Sins, to ſend the Spirit, to diſpenſe Grace, to give eternal Life, to raiſe the Dead, and judge the World at laſt: When he obſerves, I ſay, that theſe Attributes and Operations, which are appropriated to the only true God, are aſcribed equally to Chriſt, the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity; inſtead of deviating into ſtrange Interpretations, in order to elude the Senſe of them, he thinks it more ſafe to affix no other Signification, than what the Words import, [n] becauſe he is ſatisfied, that a Body of honeſt and inſpired Men would never have purſued ſuch a Thread of Paſſages and Diſcourſes, as do naturally lead one to think, that Chriſt is the true God, if he were not actually ſo: And though there may be many Queſtions ſtarted, about the Emanation of the Godhead, which he is neither able to reſolve nor underſtand; yet ſtill he holds it more eligible, to adhere to the obvious Senſe, and to retain [o] Myſtery in the Doctrine of Scripture, where it is venerable, and worthy the Majeſty of God, than to place it in the Phraſe of Scripture, where it is opprobrious, and repugnant to his Sincerity.

The religious Worſhip paid to him.

THERE is not, in his Opinion, a more certain Principle in Religion, than that the only proper Object of Worſhip and Adoration is God. [p] The chief Deſign of the Moſaick Inſtitution was to baniſh Idolatry and Polytheiſm out of the Minds of the Jews, and to poſſeſs them with the Idea of one God, and one Object of religious Worſhip. The Chriſtian Doctrine, he obſerves, purſues the ſame Deſign: All Idolatry is there forbid; and [q] to worſhip the Lord our God, and him only to ſerve, is the poſitive Injunction of the Founder of our Religion: But at the ſame Time that he perceives this, he cannot but obſerve it left upon Record in thoſe Writings, (that are the Rule of his Faith) that [r] all Men muſt honour the Son, even as they honour the Father; that [s] to him every Knee muſt bow; him the very [t] Angels muſt worſhip, and all the [u] Hoſt of Heaven fall down before him and adore: He cannot but obſerve, that all thoſe Forms of Thankſgiving, wherein Bleſſing and Honour, [x] Glory and Majeſty, Dominion and Power are aſcribed to the only wiſe God our Saviour, and [y] to the Lamb, in Conjunction with him, that ſitteth upon the Throne, is a plain Declaration of Co-equality; and that all thoſe Salutations, in the Beginning and Concluſion of the Epiſtles, wherein Grace, and Mercy, and Peace are wiſhed from God the Father, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, are implied Invocations of him: He cannot but obſerve, that he is every where propoſed as the Object of our Faith, Hope, and Love; as a Perſon to whom we are devoted in Baptiſm, in whom we muſt believe, to whom we muſt give Thanks, by whom we muſt bleſs, to whom we muſt pray, and make the proper Object of our Worſhip, both internal and external: He cannot but obſerve, that the Practice of the Saints of Old was conformable to theſe Directions; that the common Denomination of a Chriſtian was, one, [z] that called upon the Name of Jeſus Chriſt our Lord; that St Paul, under the [a] Temptations of the Devil, (as they are commonly underſtood) made his Addreſſes to Chriſt for Relief; and St Stephen, even at his Expiration, worſhipped him in two ſhort Prayers, which, upon the Matter, are the ſame with thoſe our Saviour ſent up to his Father, when himſelf was expiring, [b] Lord Jeſus, receive my Spirit; Lord, lay not this Sin to their Charge; and yet, if Chriſt was not the true God, and equal to the Father, this Proto-Martyr died in two Acts, that ſeem not only idolatrous, but blaſphemous likewiſe; ſince he uſed the ſame Expreſſions to Chriſt, that Chriſt had applied to his Father before. He that obſerves, and conſiders all this, I ſay, muſt either conclude, that Jeſus Chriſt, the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity, was really and eſſentially God; or that the Holy Scriptures were written on Purpoſe to draw him into that Perſuaſion, and thence into the certain Sin of Idolatry; ſince they aſcribe to him ſuch Titles and Attributes, ſuch Honours, and Powers, and Offices, as are peculiar and appropriate to God; ſince they enjoin ſo frequently the Duty of worſhipping him, and recommend it, at the ſame Time, by the Example of all the Saints and godly Men that have gone before: A Thing very inconſiſtent with the Simplicity

Simplicity of the Scriptures, and utterly irreconcileable with the Goodneſs of God; to lay us under a Neceſſity of forming wrong Conceptions, and thence falling unavoidably into dangerous Practices, by repreſenting a Perſon always under a Divine Character, and inveſted with the Fulneſs of the Godhead, that is not really ſo.

An Objection. "BUT our bleſſed Saviour, it may be replied, is ſo far from aſſuming any ſuch "Character to himſelf, that, in the Anſwer he returns to the young Man in the "Goſpel, he ſeems to diſclaim it; [c] Why calleſt thou me good, there is none good but "one, that is God? And in the Prayer, that he offers up in Behalf of his Diſciples, "he bears Teſtimony of his Father's Supremacy: [d] This is Life eternal, that they "may know thee, the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt, whom thou haſt ſent. Tho' there- "fore he might be a very excellent Perſon, [e] the Firſt-born of every Creature, as the "Apoſtle ſtiles him, inveſted with high Powers, and taken up into Heaven, to re- "ceive from God the Inſtructions of his Miniſtry; yet all this is not enough to "perſuade us that he was the Son of the ſupreme, eternal God." This is the Objection of the greateſt Weight, and what comprizes moſt that has been alledged againſt Chriſt's Divinity. But,

Anſwered. 1. 'TIS a ſad Perverſion of our Saviour's Words, to ſuppoſe, that he denies himſelf to be good, in Oppoſition to God, when he only denies it with relation to the young Man's Apprehenſion, who took him to be a mere Man; and therefore [f] his Anſwer is what we call Argumentum ad Hominem, and runs in the ſame Strain, as if he had ſaid to the Perſon that called him good, "If I be no more than a Man, this "Title, that thou giveſt me, cannot, in a ſtrict and proper Senſe, be applied to me; "for none is eſſentially and abſolutely good but God: If therefore thou doſt acknow- "ledge me to be thus good, thou muſt, at the ſame Time, own my Divinity, be- "cauſe no one, after this Manner, is good, but God alone." This is plainly the true and genuine Senſe of the Words; and our Saviour's Deſign is, not to diſſuade, but to inſinuate into this Perſon the Belief of his Godhead, or rather, by a ſkilful Way of Addreſs, to draw him into a Confeſſion of it.

2. THE like Miſconſtruction is made of our Saviour's Words, when he ſpeaks of the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt, whom he hath ſent, as if he meant thereby to exclude himſelf from being God: Whereas the Term Only is uſed merely in Oppoſition to thoſe, that by Nature were not Gods, viz. the falſe and fictitious Deities of the Heathens. In Contradiſtinction to whom, he ſtiles his Father the only true God, but at the ſame Time he calls himſelf ſo too; for the Conjunction καὶ ([g] according to the beſt and earlieſt Interpreters) ſignifies here, not any Oppoſition, but an Agreement of the Things ſpoken of, as in many other Places of Scripture: Thus when the Angel bids the Women, that came to our Saviour's Sepulchre, [h] Go, and tell his Diſciples, and Peter, we muſt not underſtand the Words, as if Peter were not a Diſciple; for 'tis ſuppoſed that he was one, and one of the moſt eminent: And, in like Manner, the only true God, and Jeſus Chriſt, does not intimate an Oppoſition between thoſe two, or as if Jeſus Chriſt were not alſo the only true God; but they imply that he is, and therefore the true Rendering will be, that they may know thee, and Jeſus Chriſt, the only true God. They are both, according to this Paſſage, the only true God, and nothing more is to be learned from it, only that it diſtinguiſhes Chriſt from the Father, and ſhews, that he is not the ſame Perſon in the Godhead, though he be the ſame God.

BUT, admitting the Paſſage in the common Acceptation: Since [i] the Nature of Language requires, that, in ſpeaking of God, we ſhall fix upon one Perſon in the Trinity, to be primarily conſidered as God, it was highly proper and decent in our Lord, to give that Appellation to the Father, who was known under that Character, before either he, or the Holy Ghoſt, were fully revealed to the World, and who, being the Top of Unity, and the Head and Fountain of all (as the Ancients uſually term him) is generally firſt in our Conception, when we ſpeak of God abſolutely conſidered. And, therefore, when our bleſſed Saviour calls his Father the only true God, and elſewhere declares, that [k] he and his Father are one, [l] he in his Father, and his Father in him, to make him ſpeak conſiſtently, we muſt ſuppoſe, that he is ſo far from excluding, that he muſt neceſſarily include himſelf in the Godhead; and was indeed (though there was no Occaſion to call himſelf ſo) the only true God, as well as his Father.

3. WHAT-

3. WHATEVER therefore the Apoſtle might mean by calling our Saviour the Firſt-born of every Creature, yet that he did not intend to rank him in the Order of created Beings, is manifeſt from his following Words, wherein he exempts him from that Number, by aſſuring us, that [m] all Things both in Heaven and Earth, were created by him. [n] Πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως therefore, in this Place, muſt evidently be rendered, as if the Words had been τεκεὶς πρὸ πάσης κτίσεως, born [or begotten] before the whole Creation: Nor ought it to ſeem ſtrange, that we ſhould render πρωτότοκος here in a comparative Senſe by born before; for, in Scripture-Language, 'tis a common Thing to meet with Superlatives that muſt be thus rendered. And if the Words will admit of this Tranſlation, then will our Saviour's eternal Godhead and Exiſtence plainly ariſe from them; both becauſe the Expreſſion before the Creation is well known to be the Idiom of the Jewiſh Language, in which it was a common Phraſe to denote [o] Eternity; and likewiſe, becauſe whatever is prior to all Creation, muſt neceſſarily have been from all Eternity, there being no Medium between the Being from abſolute Eternity, and the Being before all Creation; ſo that, if Chriſt exiſted before all Creation, he muſt neceſſarily be uncreated, and if he be uncreated, he muſt as evidently be eternal.

BUT there is another Meaning of the Expreſſion, that ſeems not leſs probable. [p] By this Title of the Firſt-born of every Creature, the Apoſtle means, that he was Lord and Heir of the Creation: For the Firſt-born is natural Heir, and Juſtinian tells us, Heir did anciently ſignify Lord: Therefore the Scripture uſes theſe Terms promiſcuouſly, and as if they were equivalent; for whereas St Peter ſays of Jeſus Chriſt, that [q] he is Lord of all, St Paul calls him [r] Heir of all Things: And then the Reaſon given by the Apoſtle, why he calls him the Firſt-born of every Creature, will be very fit and proper, becauſe all Things were created by him; for well may he be ſaid to be Lord and Heir of the Creation, who made all Things, that were made, and without whom was not any Thing made, that was made.

TO illuſtrate this Paſſage farther, the antient Interpreters of it have a Thought, that may not deſerve our Diſregard. [s] They ſuppoſe, that, when it pleaſed God to create the World, he ſent forth the Word, or his only Son, who had been always with him, to create all Things; and (becauſe nothing could be acceptable to the ſupreme Being, but through the Merits of him in whom he is well pleaſed) to preſent them to him, when they were created. They ſuppoſe farther, that, purſuant to his Order, the Son went out from the Father, created the World, laid it before him as his own, and putting himſelf at the Head of it, is called the Firſt-born of every Creature, [t] in the ſame Senſe, that Philoſophers uſe the Word ἀρχὴ, i. e. the principal and efficient Cauſe of any Thing: And accordingly we find that very Word, which our Tranſlation renders Beginning, uſed together with the Word Firſt-born, as if they were of the ſame Importance; [u] the Beginning and Firſt-born from the Dead, i. e. the principal and efficient Cauſe of the Reſurrection from the Dead.

4. IN whichſoever of theſe Senſes this Expreſſion be taken, it makes not much Matter, ſince any of them do atteſt our Saviour's Divinity, and do equally baffle that idle Fiction of his being taken up into Heaven at a certain Time, there inveſted with Power and Authority, and thence ſent down upon his Mediatorial Office and Miniſtry. For not to inſiſt on Scriptural Proofs to invalidate this Invention, [x] can any one imagine, that, in ſo exact an Hiſtory of our Saviour's Life, written by ſeveral Perſons, the Relation of ſo important a Matter as this, and of the Circumſtances of it, ſhould be wholly omitted? That we ſhould have a particular Account of his being carried into Egypt in his Infancy, and of the Time when he was brought back from thence; of his diſputing in the Temple with the Jewiſh Doctors, and putting them to Silence, when he was but twelve Years of Age; a punctual Relation of his being baptized by John, and how, after that, he was led by the Spirit into the Wilderneſs, to be tempted by the Devil, and was carried by him from one Place to another; but not one Word of his being taken up by God into Heaven, and of his coming down again from thence; nor the leaſt Intimation given either of the Time, or any other Circumſtance of this memorable Tranſaction, whereon the Authority of his Miſſion, and the Divinity of his Doctrine did ſo much depend? When ſo many Things, of ſo much leſs Moment, are ſo minutely and exactly reported, what can be the Reaſon of this deep Silence in all the Evangeliſts concerning this Matter? But, above all, why ſhould not St John, who wrote his Goſpel laſt, and, as Euſebius tells us, on purpoſe to ſupply the Omiſſions of the other Evangeliſts, have given us ſome ſmall Hint or Intimation of it, had there ever been any ſuch Thing in Nature? The Truth is, the whole Story ſeems deviſed to ſerve an Hypotheſis, that could not ſo well be maintained without it, and to be a fit Expedient to invalidate many Texts, wherein the eternal Generation of the Son, his being in the Boſom of the Father, before the World began, his being ſent from God, and coming forth from God with all Power, and having all Things ſubjected unto him, are ſet out with ſuch Strength and Perſpicuity of Expreſſion, as nothing, but a bold Invention (as he that takes the Liberty to invent any Thing, may eaſily deny every Thing) could ever have the Courage to evade. But enough has been ſaid to baffle this vain Fiction.

The Teſtimony of the Ante-Nicene Fathers.

IN Confirmation of what has been produced from Scripture, we ſhall now proceed to the Teſtimony of the primitive Church; though we can only ſtay juſt to mention what the Ante-Nicene Writers (who are allowed on all Hands to be the beſt Interpreters of the Holy Scriptures) have ſaid concerning our bleſſed Saviour's Divine Nature and Conſubſtantiality with the Father. To inſtance in ſome of the Chief of them.

IGNATIUS [y] calls the Son, the Word of God, not of his Speech, but of his Subſtance, and farther adds, that he is not the Sound of his articulate Speech, but a Subſtance begotten by the Divine Energy. Juſtin Martyr [z] aſſerts that he was begotten of the Father in a proper and peculiar Manner; and being the only begotten of God, is God, and was truly ſo, before the Creation of the World. Melito [a] informs us, that our Saviour manifeſted to us two Eſſences, being, in the ſame Perſon, both perfect God, and perfect Man. Clemens Alexandrinus [b] calls him moſt manifeſt and truly God, equal to the Lord of all Things, becauſe he was his Son. Tertullian has theſe remarkable Words concerning him: [c] Hunc ex Deo prolatum didicimus, & prolatione generatum, & idcirco Filium Dei, & Deum, dictum, ex unitate ſubſtantiæ. Novatian avers, that our Saviour [d] might well call himſelf One with the Father, (as he has, John x. 30.) becauſe he proceeded from him, and by that Means, became God. Hippolytus [e] maintains, that the Son was always God by Nature, and, that, as before, ſo after his Incarnation, his Divine Nature was a ſubſtantial Subſtance, infinite, incomprehenſible, and endowed with all the divine Perfections. Dionyſius of Alexandria [f] aſſerts that in this Divine Generation, the Father and Son are conſubſtantial, partaking of the ſame Nature, as Father and Son do in an human Birth. Gregory of Neocæſarea calls the Son [g] God of God, the true Son of a true Father, and farther affirms, that the Father made him one Being with himſelf. The Fathers of the Council of Antioch, aſſembled to condemn the Errors of Paul of Samoſata, [h] declare the Son to be the Wiſdom, and Word, and Power of God, exiſting before all Ages, not only in Predetermination, but by Eſſence and Perſon, God, the Son of God. Lucian the Martyr [i] calls the Son begotten of his Father before all Ages, God of God, Whole of Whole, Perfect of Perfect, the immutable Image of his Father's Godhead, Eſſence, Power, Will, and Glory. And, to name no more, Lactantius [k] ſays, that ſince the Father produced the Son, they have but one Mind, one Godhead, one Subſtance; and again, that they are juſtly ſaid to be one God, becauſe, whatever is in the Father is tranſmitted to the Son, and whatever is in the Son deſcends from the Father.

WE have here, as it were, in one View moſt of the Ante-Nicene Fathers now extant (whoſe Teſtimony ſhews what the ſtanding Doctrine of the firſt Ages was) jointly and unanimouſly giving Evidence to this great Point, the eternal and co-eſſential Divinity of the Son. Let us now proceed to the third Perſon in the ever-bleſſed Trinity, which is commonly ſtiled the Holy Ghoſt.

The Holy Ghoſt a Perſon.

THAT the Holy Ghoſt is a Perſon, and not a mere Quality or Operation, we need only (when we pleaſe to be ſatisfied in the Thing) conſult our Saviour's laſt and long Diſcourſe to his Diſciples, wherein he promiſes to ſend this Bleſſed Spirit to ſupply his Abſence: [l] I will pray the Father, and he ſhall ſend you another Comforter, who ſhall abide with you: He ſhall teach you all Things; he ſhall teſtify of me: He ſhall abide with you: He ſhall guide you into all Truth: He ſhall ſhew you Things to come: He ſhall bring all Things to your Remembrance: He ſhall convince the World of

of Sin, of Righteouſneſs, and of Judgment: [m] For all theſe Words are nothing elſe, but ſo many Deſcriptions of a Perſon; a Perſon abiding, a Perſon teaching, a Perſon teſtifying, a Perſon ſpeaking, a Perſon reproving, a Perſon inſtructing. [n] But when, over and above this, we read, that this [o] Spirit [p] may be grieved, that [q] he helps our Infirmities, [r] ſanctifies us unto Obedience, [s] gives us Acceſs to the Father, and [t] maketh Interceſſion for us, with Groans, that cannot be utter'd; when we read, that [u] he ſearcheth all Things, yea, the deep Things of God; that [x] he ſeparated Barnabas and Saul for the Work, whereunto he had called them; that [y] he appointed Overſeers over the Church of Chriſt; that he performs all Kind of Operations, and beſtows all Sorts of Gifts upon the Sons of Men; that [z] he gives to one the Word of Wiſdom, to another the Word of Knowledge, to another Faith, to another the Gifts of Healing; and that all theſe worketh the ſelf-ſame Spirit, dividing to every Man ſeverally, as he will. When we find, in the Writings of the Apoſtles, this Spirit expreſsly diſtinguiſhed from the Gifts of the Spirit, and are told by St Paul, that [a] there are Diverſities of Gifts, but one and the ſame Spirit, who doth thus diverſify and diſtribute them to ſeveral: When with honeſt and unprejudiced Minds we read theſe Paſſages, and regulate our Belief by what we read, taking them in that Senſe, which, at firſt reading, they naturally convey to our Thoughts, we can hardly form any Doubt or Scruple, but that the bleſſed Spirit, who is thus ſpoken of, as real Perſons are wont to be ſpoken of; to whom ſuch Actions are aſcribed, as do not uſe to be aſcribed to any but Perſons; and of whom the like Things are ſaid, as are ſaid of the Father and the Son; is as properly a Perſon, as the Father or Son. For in that abovementioned Promiſe of our Saviour, what impartial Thinker can perſuade himſelf, that the Father, to whom Chriſt pray'd, that he would ſend another Comforter, is a Perſon; that he, who prays the Father to ſend another Comforter, is a Perſon; and yet, that this other Comforter, ſent by the Father, through the Interceſſion of the Son, is not a Perſon, but a Quality; not the Giver of Comfort, but the Gift; not another Comforter beſides the Father and the Son, but the Conſolation beſtowed by the Father on Believers, at the Requeſt of the Son. Origen, I am ſure, (whom I chuſe to ſingle out from numberleſs more of the antient Fathers of the Church) was quite of a contrary Opinion: "The Holy Spirit, ſays he, is not, as ſome imagine, an Operation of God, not having, in their Opinion, a proper Subſiſtence: "For the Apoſtle, having enumerated the Gifts of the Spirit, immediately ſubjoins; "that all theſe worketh that one and the ſelf-ſame Spirit, dividing to every one ſeverally, as he willeth; but if he wills, and operates, and divides, he is therefore an "operative Subſtance, not a mere Operation;" and in another Place the ſame Author is more expreſs; where, arguing againſt thoſe, that maintained the Holy Ghoſt not to be a diſtinct Perſon; he declares, We (i. e. the Catholicks) are perſuaded that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt are τρεῖς ὑποστάσεις three Perſons.

IT muſt be acknowledged indeed, that ſeveral Things in Scripture are aſcribed to the Holy Ghoſt, that do not ſo properly belong to a Perſon; [b] but at the ſame Time it ought to be obſerved, that, according to an uſual Metonymy of the Effect for the Cauſe, the Holy Ghoſt is ſometimes put for its Operations, and for thoſe Gifts and Graces, whereof it is the Diſpenſer. When therefore we find the bleſſed Spirit ſpoken of as increaſed or diminiſhed, as poured out, removed, or extinguiſhed, as given in Meaſure, or without Meaſure, to different Perſons, in different Ages of the Church; ſuch Paſſages as theſe are to be underſtood of the Gifts and Effects of the bleſſed Spirit, which are capable of Increaſe or Diminution, of Variety and Change; but not of the Author and Giver of them, who always was, and always will be, what he is, incapable of all Change, and never to be extinguiſhed, as being the ſame God, To-day, Yeſterday, and for ever. For,

A divine Perſon, from his Titles, Honours, and Offices.

THAT the Holy Ghoſt is not only a Perſon, but a Divine Perſon, of the ſame Subſtance, Glory, and Majeſty, with the Father and the Son, may be proved in the very ſame Manner, that we ſhewed the Divinity of the Son: [c] And therefore, when we find in Scripture the ſame Titles given to the Holy Ghoſt, as are due only to God; the ſame Attributes aſcribed to him, as are peculiar to God; the ſame Works done by him, as can be performed by none but God; the ſame Worſhip paid to him, as (without Idolatry) can be paid to none but God: how can we make any Queſtion, but that he, to whom theſe diſtinguiſhing Titles are given, theſe peculiar Attributes

tributes are aſcribed, theſe Divine Works and Offices are aſſigned, and this incommunicable Worſhip is paid, muſt be properly and truly God? It is not to be imagined, [d] that the Supreme Being ſhould diſtinguiſh any Perſon, that is not truly God, not only with the Collation of his eſſential Attributes, but permit him likewiſe to ſhare the Honours of Divine Worſhip, and to be joined in common with him and his Son, in the Form of Baptiſm, in the Doxologies, and in the Apoſtolical Benedictions, ſome of which, in the natural Senſe of them, imply an Invocation of him. What poſſible Grounds can we have to believe, that God, who is ſo jealous of his Honour, who has ſo expreſsly declared that he will not give his Glory to another, and who cannot, conſiſtently with the Perfections of his Nature, give it to another, ſhould yet admit any Perſon, who is not truly God, to an equal Participation with him in the moſt ſolemn Rites and Expreſſions of Divine Worſhip? [e] When therefore we conſider, that, in the Name of the Holy Ghoſt, as well as of the Father and the Son, at our Admiſſion into Chriſt's Church, we were baptized, and expect from the Holy Ghoſt, as well as from the Father and Son, the Benedictions of Heaven; when we conſider, that [f] the miraculous Conception of the Son of God in the Womb of a Virgin, the impowering him [g] to caſt out Devils, the conferring on the Apoſtles that amazing [h] Gift of Tongues, the raiſing Jeſus Chriſt [i] from the Dead, and raiſing us alſo [k] by quickening our mortal Bodies, are declared Operations of the Holy Ghoſt; when we conſider, that our Bodies are therefore ſaid to be [l] the Temples of God, becauſe the Spirit of God dwelleth in them; that our Saviour hath taught us, [m] that Blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt is not to be forgiven in this World, nor in the next; and that St Peter accuſed Ananias with [n] lying unto God, becauſe he lyed unto the Holy Ghoſt; we cannot conceive how he could be able to perform ſuch miraculous Works, as nothing but a Divine Power could do; or why we ſhould be dedicated to him at firſt, bleſſed in his Name, conſecrated by his Inhabitation, and utterly condemned for tranſgreſſing againſt him, if he were not a Divine Perſon, and of the ſame Eſſence, Power, and Majeſty, with the Supreme God.

Particularly from his Government of the Church.

I SHALL mention but one Argument more, to prove the Divinity of the Holy Ghoſt, taken from the Offices he bears in the Adminiſtration of the Church. [o] Our Saviour, being about to leave the World, promiſed his Diſciples that he would ſend them another Comforter, who ſhould abide with them, and take Care of the Affairs of the Church, until his Return; that, purſuant to this, he ſhould ſet apart fit Perſons for the Office of the Miniſtry, ſhould give a Bleſſing and Efficacy to every Inſtitution of God; making the Sacraments available to our Regeneration, and the Diſpenſation of the Word conducive to our godly Living; that he ſhould [p] enlighten the Eyes of our Underſtanding, that we may know what is the Hope of our Calling; [q] ſhould ſhed the Love of God abroad in our Hearts, and fill us with Joy and Peace in believing; ſhould purify our Souls in obeying the Truth; [r] ſtrengthen us by his Might in the inward Man, and ſo lead, direct and govern us in all our Words and Works, that we may do what is acceptable and well-pleaſing in God's Sight. This is the ſtanding Office of the Bleſſed Spirit: But what leſs than an Almighty Power can we conceive ſufficient for theſe Things? Since the Souls and Hearts of Men are the Subjects of his Government, a perfect Intimacy, and thorough Acquaintance with our Thoughts and Intentions, is indiſpenſably requiſite in him, who, by his Office, is to guide and conduct them: For this Purpoſe he muſt be Omniſcient, to know how to execute the ſeveral Branches of his Office; he muſt be Omnipreſent, for otherwiſe, how can he rule and govern all thoſe external Events, by which our Paſſions are moved, and our Deſires regulated? And, what leſs than an omnipotent Power can diſpoſe ſuch a vaſt Variety of Accidents, as relate to ſuch infinite Numbers of Men, ſo diſtant and remote from one another, in Time, Place, Circumſtance, and Temper? He that performs this Office, muſt, doubtleſs, be poſſeſſed of the Divine Perfections; and therefore the Divine Perfections belong to the Holy Ghoſt, becauſe the Scriptures inform us, that he does perform it.

And the Teſtimony of the antient Fathers.

NAY farther; would it be any additional Weight to the Authority of the Scripture, I might ſubjoin the Teſtimony of the earlieſt Ages of the Church, in Confirmation of this Doctrine: For, beſides their profeſſing to believe in the Holy Ghoſt, which is owning him to be God, as all [s] their Creeds do witneſs; beſides their joining his Name with thoſe of the Father and the Son, in their Form of Baptiſm, Baptiſm, as is evident from their common Practice; beſides their aſcribing to him ſuch Attributes, as none but a Perſon of a Divine Eſſence can be poſſeſſed of, as appears every where in their Writings, and their honouring him with ſuch Worſhip as is not communicable to any but God alone, as ſeveral of their Forms of Prayer, ſtill extant, do teſtify; beſides all this, I ſay, we find the Fathers, in many Paſſages of their Writings, aſſerting his Divinity, in expreſs Words, by beſtowing on him the Name of God.

To this Purpoſe Athenagoras refutes the Calumny thrown on the Chriſtians, that they were Atheiſts, by ſaying, [a] Who would not wonder to hear thoſe called Atheiſts, who affirm the Father to be God, the Son God, and the Holy Ghoſt God? Irenæus, under the one God, who is above all, and through all, and in all, comprehends the Son and the Spirit with the Father; and [x] where he ſtates the Difference between the Spirit of God, and that vital Spirit, which makes Man a living Creature, he tells us, that the latter is a created Being, the former the Creator of it; the one temporal, the other eternal. Origen aſſerts, that the Holy Spirit is joined with the Father and Son, in Honour and Dignity, and [y] mentions, in ſome Places, the Godhead of the adorable Trinity, and in others, the Godhead of the Holy Ghoſt. Gregory of Neocæſarea [z] declares, that the Trinity is perfect, undivided in Glory, Eternity, and Dominion; that in it there is nothing created, and that it was always one immutable, invariable Trinity; and to conclude with Tertullian, he tells us, not only, [a] that there is one Subſtance in three coherent Perſons, and that the Name of God and Lord belongs to the Father, Son, and Spirit; but that the Deſign and Subſtance of the New Teſtament is to teach us, that the Father, Son, and Spirit, being three Perſons, make one God, and that thoſe People differ not from the Jews, who believe one God, in ſuch a Manner, as to exclude the Son and Spirit.

THUS we have endeavoured to make it appear, that there are three diſtinct and equally Divine Perſons ſubſiſting in the Godhead, and come now to conſider,

II. THE other Part of this great Myſtery, viz. that theſe three diſtinct Perſons are but one undivided God; [b] for we muſt not omit to obſerve, that the Scriptures, which are ſo clear in the Trinity of Perſons, are not, in any Point whatever, more expreſs, than in the Unity of the Godhead. Hence we read ſo much of [c] one Lord, one God, and none other but he, who is therefore ſtiled the only true God; that although the Heathens had Gods many, and Lords many, yet, to us Chriſtians, [d] there is but one God the Father, of whom are all Things, and we in him; that, though we are baptized in the Name of Three, we are bound to profeſs but [e] one Lord, and one God, even as one Faith, and one Baptiſm; and that though [f] we are aſſured of Three, that bear Record in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt, yet there is no Inconſiſtency in ſaying, Theſe Three are One.

The Unity in Trinity ſhewn.

HERE then the Streſs of the Queſtion begins, and I know no other Way of reſolving it, but either, 1. From the peculiar and tranſcendent Nature of the Deity; or, 2. From the Manner of the Son and Holy Ghoſt's partaking of the Divine Nature.

From the peculiar Nature of the Deity.

1. THOSE that attend at all to the Dignity of the Divine Nature, may eaſily be induced to believe, that the Godhead is not like other Beings, even in its Manner of Subſiſtence. [g] Created Beings ſubſiſt ſingly, and have nothing more in their Nature; but it is the tranſcendent Property of the Divine Nature to reſide in more Perſons than one: Its Fecundity and Exuberance is ſuch, that it cannot exiſt alone, but neceſſarily produces a Divine Iſſue. But even while it does thus, it has this farther inherent Excellency, that it cannot multiply itſelf, becauſe it is of a Nature that is infinite; for what is infinite is incapable of Multiplication, and can admit of no more than one of its Kind. The unparallelled Excellency of the Divine Nature therefore leads us directly to own, that the three Perſons of the Godhead are the ſame God, becauſe the Divinity cannot produce any Thing from itſelf, i. e. from its Divine Eſſence, but what is ſuch; and therefore the Divinity being of an immenſe and infinite Nature, what it produces muſt needs be but One.

To illuſtrate this another Way, [h] we muſt all grant what we feel in ourſelves, viz. that every Mind has its Word and Spirit, and cannot be conceived without them; and therefore it may be preſumed that the eternal Mind has its eternal

Word and Spirit too: And the Reaſon why this Notion did not lead all Mankind into the natural Belief of a Trinity of Perſons, Mind, Word, and Spirit, in the Unity of the Godhead, was plainly this, becauſe they perceived that their own Word and Spirit were not permanent and ſubſiſting Perſons, but the periſhing Creatures of their Mind, which no ſooner were produced, but they died and vaniſhed, as our Thoughts do; which is not ſo in God. Now, if it be eſſential to an eternal Mind to have an eternal, living, ſubſiſting Word and Spirit, by an eternal Generation and Proceſſion, then this eternal Word and Spirit are eſſential to an eternal Mind, not as eſſential Parts or Perfections, but as eſſential Productions or Proceſſions, in the Unity and Identity of Nature. Thus the Scripture repreſents this Myſtery, that there is one God, who has an eternal Word, and an eternal Spirit; and the Catholick Fathers inſiſt on this, as a natural Demonſtration of the Trinity †, viz. that an eternal Mind muſt have its eternal Word and Spirit. If then the eternal Word and the eternal Spirit are eſſential to the eternal Mind, it is certain, that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, the eternal Mind, its Word, and Spirit, are but one individual Divinity; ſince every Thing, that is eſſential, is included in the Notion of an individual Nature; for that is not a compleat and perfect Nature, nor an adequate Notion of Nature, that wants any Thing that is eſſential.

Now, though we may have a general Notion and Idea of a God, as of a Being abſolutely perfect, without knowing any Thing of the Son, or the Holy Ghoſt; yet if we conſider this abſolutely perfect Being, as an eternal, ſelf-originated Mind, with its eternal Word and Spirit, as eſſential Productions or Proceſſions, we can conſider them no otherwiſe, than as one individual Divinity; ſince this eternal Word and Spirit are eſſential Proceſſions of the eternal Mind, which can never be ſeparated from it: For ſuch eſſential Proceſſions are not only co-eval and conſubſtantial with the Nature from whence they flow, but whatever Diſtinction there is between them, they are one individual Nature; ſince, whatever is eſſential to a Being, is indiſputably of the ſame Nature with it.

From the Manner of the Son and Holy Ghoſt's partaking of the Divine Nature.

2. BUT, for a farther Conception of this great Myſtery, we muſt obſerve, that ſince the Father is the Root and Fountain of the Deity, in what Manner it is, that the other two Perſons partake of the Divine Nature. We are apt, indeed, to run into a groſs Notion, that it muſt be by Diviſion, becauſe we ourſelves cannot beſtow any Part of our Being any other Way; but the Divine Nature, if we think rightly, is not capable of it. Unity is its eſſential Attribute; and therefore the Writers on this Argument make Uſe of the Word Communication, whereby they underſtand that the Divine Nature is the ſame, and entire in all the three Perſons; that the Father, from all Eternity, gave his Divine Nature and Eſſence to the Son and Holy Ghoſt, and yet ſtill continued to have it in himſelf undiminiſhed, and unimpaired. [i] And if the Matter be thus; if the Divine Eſſence remains undivided, and yet it is communicated to three diſtinct Perſons; then all the Perſons, though they have their proper Subſiſtence, are but the ſame Divine Eſſence. It muſt needs be ſo, becauſe the Communication of the Divine Nature and Eſſence from the Father to the Son, and from both to the Holy Ghoſt, is without Diviſion and Separation of the Divine Subſtance and Eſſence; and therefore theſe two Perſons muſt have the ſame Divine Eſſence with the Father. [k] If then the Father communicates his whole Nature without Diviſion or Separation to the Son, and Father and Son communicate the ſame whole Nature to the Holy Ghoſt, they are, in the moſt perfect Notion, One; ſince there is one and the ſame, whole, entire, and perfect Divinity in all Three. A Whole, a Whole, and a Whole, are three in Number, but are but one identical Nature; for a Whole of a Whole muſt be the ſame Whole; and in this Unity of Nature conſiſts the Unity of the Godhead.

To help our Apprehenſions a little farther in the Conception of this great Myſtery, let us (with the Schoolmen) ſee, whether, upon the Grounds and Notions of Reaſon, we can frame to ourſelves any Thing, that may carry in it ſome Shadow and Reſemblance of one ſingle undivided Nature's caſting itſelf into three Subſiſtences,

† This Kind of Reaſoning the Sabellian Hereticks took from the Catholick Fathers; but then they abuſed it, and carried it quite beyond its Bounds. They obſerved, that the inward Word, or Thought, was no real ſubſtantial Thing, diſtinct from the Mind itſelf; and from hence they took Occaſion to miſinterpret the Apoſtle very widely, as if the Λόγος, or Word, which he ſpeaks of, John i. 1. were nothing really diſtinct from the Father, nor a Second Perſon, any more, than a Man's Thought, or Word, is another Perſon from the Man; and thus they confounded the Perſons in the Godhead. Waterland's Sermons at Lady Moyer's Lectures.

[i] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. [k] Sherlock's Socinian Controverſy.

Subſiſtences, without receding from its own Unity. [l] And to this Purpoſe we may repreſent to ourſelves, 1. An infinite rational Mind, which, conſidered under the firſt and original Perfection of Being or Exiſtence, may be called the Father. 2. In the ſame infinite Mind we may conſider the Perfection of Underſtanding, as immediately reſulting from the Perfection of Exiſtence, which may be called the Son: And then, 3. When that infinite Mind, by its Underſtanding, reflects upon its own eſſential Perfections, and cannot but love and take Pleaſure therein, that Act of Love and Volition, ariſing from an intellectual Reflection upon them, may be called the Holy Ghoſt. Here then we ſee, that one and the ſame Mind is both Being, Underſtanding, and Willing; and yet we can neither ſay, that Being is Underſtanding, nor Underſtanding, Willing; nor, on the contrary can we ſay, that Underſtanding is merely Being, or that Willing is Underſtanding. But all this, as we ſaid, is but a diſtant Reſemblance; nor is there any Inſtance in Nature indeed ſufficient to repreſent the Unity and Diſtinction of the three Perſons of the holy and undivided Trinity. The Light and Rays of the ſame Sun is an Inſtance, which the Fathers applied as more expreſſive than the other, and therefore they ſaid, that, as the Sun, with his undivided Light and Rays, is one individual Sun; ſo the Father, with the other two Perſons, proceeding from him, and inſeparably exiſting with him, and in him, is one individual Subſtance, one God. [m] A Triangle, conſiſting of equal Sides, whoſe Subſtance or Matter is the ſame, (ſuppoſing it Gold, or any other Metal) is thought a tolerable Similitude: For as, in Reſpect of their common Matter, Gold, each Angle is the ſame, but each of them different, as to their Poſition; ſo each Perſon in the Trinity, as to their common Nature, is the ſame God, and that, wherein they differ, is the Manner of their Subſiſtence in that Godhead. The Father, in this Reſpect, is not the ſame with the Son, nor the Son with the Holy Ghoſt, any more than the Angle, which points to the Right-Hand, is the ſame with that, which points to the Left; but then, as the Triangle is the ſame with the three diſtinct Angles, ſo God is the ſame with the three diſtinct Perſonalities. This ſeems to be ſome ſmall Illuſtration of the Matter; but I mention it not as an adequate Similitude, nor with an Intent to bring down the Myſterioufneſs of the Doctrine to our Apprehenſion, which muſt always be acknowledged to be above the Reach and Ken of human Intellect; but only to ſhew, that it is not ſo abſurd a Doctrine, as ſome would imagine, ſince a faint Reſemblance and Adumbration of it may be borrowed, even from the Things, that are before our Eyes daily. And this leads me on to the

III. AND laſt Propoſition I advanced in this Argument, viz. that a Trinity in Unity, or three Perſons in the Godhead, is a Doctrine, neither contradictory in itſelf, nor repugnant to right Reaſon. [n] Before we charge any Doctrine with Contradictions, 'tis not enough for us to ſay that we do not underſtand it, or cannot reconcile it, but we ſhould be ſure that we underſtand and comprehend it fully; otherwiſe, the Contradiction may not be in the Doctrine, but in our Manner of conceiving it, and a thouſand Abſurdities we may imagine in it, when, in Reality, they are all owing to our own Ignorance. Now, if we conſider how few Things (even the moſt obvious to our Senſes) we perfectly underſtand; how the Eſſences of Things more eſpecially, and the Philoſophy of their Natures, the Reaſons of their Powers and Properties, and the Manner of their Productions and Operations, are all a mere Myſtery to us; we cannot but imagine, that, in the Divine Nature, there muſt be many Things ſurpaſſing our Comprehenſion, and yet we muſt not immediately pronounce them Contradictions, for fear the Default ſhould be in our Capacity. [o] Whoever therefore, oppoſes the Doctrine, we are now conſidering, muſt prove, that the three Perſons in the Trinity cannot be as really diſtinct, as the Perſons of three Men are (though being but one God, they cannot, in this Reſpect, be like the Perſons of Men). And to prove this, he muſt underſtand the Nature of God, as well as he underſtands the Nature of Man; for otherwiſe, he can never be able to prove that three divine Perſons may not be one God, though three human Perſons cannot be one Man. † Were they indeed affirmed to be Three and One in the ſame Reſpect, this would be an undeniable Contradiction; but, [p] ſince they are ſaid

† To ſay that three Gods are one God, or that three Perſons are one Perſon, is indeed a Contradiction: But to ſay, that there are three Perſons in the Godhead, is no more a Contradiction, than to ſay, that there are three Lines in a Triangle, or that three Men are one Company. Trapp's Doctrine of the Trinity.

[p] Stanhope, on the Epiſtles and Goſpels, Vol. III.

ſaid to be One in Subſtance, and Three in the different Manner of having, and communicating that Subſtance; One in all Perfections eſſential to the Godhead, and Three in their mutual Relations and Capacities; in this there is no Contradiction, nor any Abſurdity in affirming, 'that each Perſon in the Trinity is truly God, when, at the ſame Time, we maintain, that there is but one God; becauſe the Term God importing the Divine Nature, which equally, and in common, belongs to the three Perſons, remains numerically one, and no more, notwithſtanding the Attribution of it to each of them; for their partaking of one and the ſame Divine Nature does not render them three diſtinct Gods, but only one and the ſame God, under three diſtinct Modes of Exiſtence. Theſe Modes of Exiſtence indeed are not ſo agreeable to our natural Ideas, but then we are to conſider, that they relate to the Divine Nature, and that every Thing, we know of the Divine Nature, contradicts our natural Ideas. 'An uncreated and created Nature, an infinite and finite Nature, are direct Contradictions to each other. Eternity without Succeſſion, Omnipreſence without Extenſion, Parts, or Place; a pure ſimple Act, which is all in one, without Compoſition; an omnipotent Thought, which thinks all Things into Being, and into a beautiful Order; theſe and ſuch like Ideas of God, are direct Contradictions to all the Ideas we have of Creatures; and why then ſhould a Diſagreement with the Ideas of created Nature be thought a reaſonable Objection againſt believing any Thing, that God reveals to us concerning himſelf?

The Myſteriouſneſs of a Doctrine makes it not incredible.

THAT there muſt of Neceſſity be ſomething Eternal, is evident to every one that underſtands the Signification of the Word; and yet what apparent Contradictions may a Man fancy to himſelf in the Notion of Eternity? 'For what is eternal can never be capable either of a ſhorter or longer Duration, than it always had; ſo that, Millions of Ages to come, it will not have continued longer, than it had done as many Millions of Ages paſt. But now how ſtrange and contradictory does this ſeem to be, that not only ten Ages and one ſhould be the ſame, but that there ſhould be no Manner of Difference between an Hour and an Age, a Moment and a Myriad of them! And yet we aſſent to this, though there are certainly greater Difficulties in the Notion of it, than can be raiſed from the Doctrine of the Trinity.

HOW any Thing can be made out of Nothing, is another Baffle to our Imagination; 'and yet we are forced to believe it, both from the Authority of the Report, and the many apparent Abſurdities, that neceſſarily follow from the Suppoſal of the contrary; though human Reaſon could never yet form an Idea, whereby to conceive the Poſſibility of ſuch a Production, nor can any one ſay whether it be harder to believe, that the Divine Eſſence did, from everlaſting, emanate, or flow into three ſocial and co-eternal Subſiſtences, than to believe, that in the Beginning of Time all Things were made out of nothing.

To exemplify the Power of God, Holy Job pitches upon the Inſtance of [x] his hanging the Earth upon nothing. Now, when we find it impoſſible for the utmoſt Art of Man to make a ſmall Clod of Earth hang in the Air, it is naturally impoſſible to conceive, how the whole Maſs ſhould ſtand firm without a Foundation; nor could we ever believe it, but from a Submiſſion of our Faith to the Divine Omnipotence, or from a Submiſſion to our Senſes, even while they controul the Reluctancy of our Reaſon.

ONCE more, to illuſtrate the ſame Power of God, the ſame holy Penman inſtances, [y] in the Bars and Doors, that he hath ſet to the Sea, and how he hath ſaid to it, Hitherto ſhall thy proud Waves come, and no farther: Which Obſervation is founded upon the Convexity or Roundneſs of the Surface of its Waters; in Reſpect of which, [z] they ſtand upon an Heap, (as the Pſalmiſt expreſſes it) and turn not again to cover the Earth; which, by the common Laws of Motion, they otherwiſe muſt neceſſarily do, and inſtead of a Tide, pour in upon every Shore a Deluge. And yet Reaſon, uninform'd by Experience of this State of Things, could not poſſibly believe this, tho' the Man would be thought wild, that would undertake to gainſay it.

FROM theſe few Inſtances we may perceive, that it is not repugnant to Reaſon to believe a great many Things, of the Manner of whoſe Exiſtence we are not able to give a diſtinct Account: And much leſs then is it repugnant to Reaſon, to believe that thoſe Things belong to God, which we are very well aſſured he hath declared declared concerning himſelf, though the Things by our Reaſon ſhould be incomprehenſible. [a] And this is truly the Caſe of the Matter now before us. We are ſufficiently aſſured that the Scriptures are a Divine Revelation, and that this Myſtery of the Trinity is therein declared to us: Now that we cannot comprehend it, is no Reaſon why we ſhould not believe it; for if this were a Reaſon, it would equally hold good in the myſterious Things of Nature, which we confeſſedly cannot comprehend, and yet make no Scruple to believe. [b] Theſe Things of Nature, 'tis true, we believe, becauſe we ſee them: But may not our Ears bring in as good Evidence as our Eyes? And is not our Liableneſs to Deception leſs, in hearing what God ſpeaks, than in ſeeing what Nature exhibits? The Truth is, we have all imaginable Reaſon to be ſatisfied (upon the Suppoſition that we believe the Divinity of the Scriptures) that there is ſufficient Evidence of this Doctrine's being delivered therein, and that, what is there declared concerning it, does not imply a Contradiction. For why ſhould our finite Underſtanding pretend to comprehend that, which is infinite, or to know all the real Differences which are conſiſtent with the Unity of the Divine Nature, when, with all our Search and Labour, we are ſo little acquainted with the Eſſence, Power, Operations, and Productions of the moſt common Beings, that are daily and hourly before our Eyes?

The Doctrine of the Trinity credible.

LET Reaſon, I grant, in this, and all other Myſteries of our holy Religion, have its proper Work, but then let it withal be conſidered, what the proper Work of Reaſon is. [c] By Divine Revelation in the Scriptures, we are informed concerning the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt; and at the ſame Time are aſſured by this ſupernatural Teſtimony, that theſe Three are One. Now it is the immediate Suggeſtion of our Reaſon, that we ought to believe this; for nothing is more rational, than to give Credit to him, that cannot, and will not deceive us. Though there are great Difficulties in this Myſtery, and ſuch as we cannot comprehend; yet Reaſon ſtill bids us believe it, becauſe God hath ſaid it, who is Truth itſelf. Nay, upon the moſt mature Deliberation, Reaſon will not be averſe to the Myſtery itſelf, becauſe 'tis congruous to think, that there is a great and vaſt Difference between an infinite and finite Being; and conſequently, that we may believe, and aſſert that concerning the One, which is not to be admitted concerning the Other; and that it may be true of an infinite and uncreated Being, that there is a Diſtinction of Perſons, where there is no Difference of Eſſence, though this be not true of a finite and created One: Reaſon, I ſay, teaches us to make this Diſtinction between theſe two Sorts of Beings; and therefore we need leſs wonder that there is in God the ſame common Nature perſonally diſtinct, or (as others love to expreſs it) in one Eſſence a Plurality of Subſiſtences. [d] Without acknowledging ſuch a Plurality of Subſiſtences in the Godhead, we cannot ſo well conceive that αὐτάρκεια, which we attribute to God, i. e. his Self-Sufficiency, and moſt perfect Bliſs and Happineſs in himſelf alone, before, and without all created Beings. But by admitting of this, it plainly appears, that himſelf alone is a moſt perfect and bleſſed Society, the Father, Son, and the Spirit, eternally converſing with and enjoying each other.

WITHOUT entring into any Diſquiſition then, whether natural Reaſon, even improved by Philoſophy, ever found out the Traces of this Doctrine; whether [e] the Egyptians of Old, or [f] the Americans of later Years, had any Notion of it, becauſe they worſhipped God under the Picture of a Sun with three Heads; or whether [g] Plato's three Hypoſtaſes of eſſential Goodneſs, Mind, and Spirit in the Deity, bore any true Reſemblance to the Chriſtian Doctrine of the Trinity; this we may ſay upon clear Grounds, that, when once we are perſuaded that this Doctrine is contained in the Scriptures, and that the Scriptures are of Divine Revelation, Reaſon then pleads for its Reception; and even make it's Incomprehenſibility an Argument for our embracing it. When it appears (as I have already ſhewn in part, and ſhall hereafter ſhew more largely) [h] that this was a Doctrine univerſally received over the whole Chriſtian Church, even before there was either a Chriſtian Prince to ſupport it by his Authority, or a Council to eſtabliſh it by Conſent, Reaſon then bids us reverence its Antiquity; and when it appears, [i] that, for the few learned Men, that have rejected it, forty Times as many, equally learned and ſincere, equally ſagacious and inquiſitive, that have ſtudied the Point, conſidered the Text and examined it by the Principles of Reaſon, have lived and died in the Profeſſion of this Article, Reaſon bids us adhere, and in ſome Meaſure ſubſcribe to the greater Number of Profeſſors, when, in Point of Ability, they ſtand upon equal Ground with the leſs.

THE Doctrine of the Trinity then being founded upon the Authority of the Scriptures, the Voice of Reaſon, the Teſtimony of Antiquity, and the Number of its Profeſſors, it may be no improper Enquiry, in the Concluſion of this Argument, to obſerve,

1. WHAT have been the Cauſes, that have at firſt unſettled, and afterwards deſtroyed the Belief of this Doctrine in ſome. And,

2. WHAT may be the beſt Means to ſettle and preſerve the Belief of it in ourſelves and others.

NOW there are three Things, in my Opinion, that have greatly contributed to ſome People's Defection from the Belief of this Article.

The Cauſe of Mens Diſbelief of this Doctrine.

1. [k] THAT bold and abſurd Cuſtom in attempting to paint and repreſent the Trinity in Figures, which ſome have done by one Head carv'd into three Faces; others, by the Picture of three Men of equal Pitch, ſitting together at one Table, and on one Seat; and others again, by the Image of an Old Man, a Child, and a Dove, one ſignifying the Father, another the Son, and the third the Holy Ghoſt. Now all theſe Things, being ſo contrary to the natural Notions, which Reaſon has of God, have brought many ſober Parts of the World to nauſeate our whole Religion, and reject Chriſtianity, as a new Scheme only of the old Gentile Idolatry, and have encouraged Hereticks in the Uſe of all thoſe vile and abominable Appellations (ſuch as Idolum Trifrons, Monſtrum Triforme, Antichriſti Cerberus, &c.) wherewith they have beſpattered this Divine Myſtery.

2. ANOTHER Cauſe of the ſame Evil is, the equally bold, and inſignificant Terms, wherein ſome Schoolmen have expreſs'd this Article. It was a good and pious Saying of an antient Writer, Periculoſum eſt de Deo etiam vera dicere; no Wonder then, if theſe Men, diſcourſing of the Nature and Subſiſtence of God, in a Language neither warrantable nor intelligible, have, by their Modalities, Suppoſitalities, Circumince ſſions, and twenty ſuch other Chimeras, ſo miſrepreſented this adorable Article of the Trinity to Mens Reaſon, as to bring them firſt to diſguſt, and at length to deny it.

3. I MENTION but one Thing more, that has much weaken'd Mens Belief of this Article, and that is, the imprudent building it upon ſuch Texts of Scripture, as are not ſufficient to evince any ſuch Thing; concerning which I ſhall only make this obvious Remark, That whatever is produced in Behalf of any great and momentous Point of Religion, if it comes not fully cloſe and home to the ſame, is always found much more effectual to expoſe the Truth, it is brought for, than to ſupport it, and to confirm the Hereticks, it is brought againſt, than to convince them.

The Means of preſerving it.

THESE are the chief Cauſes that undermine Mens Belief of the Article of the Trinity; and the Means, that may be conduceable to ſettle and continue it in ſuch Minds, as have already embrac'd it, are briefly theſe two.

1. To acquieſce in the bare Revelation of the Thing itſelf, and in thoſe Expreſſions, under which it is revealed. As for the Thing itſelf, God has expreſſly ſaid, that there are Three, above the Rank of created Beings, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt: And as for the Words, in which he has conveyed this to us, they are few, eaſy, and intelligible, and to be believed juſt as they are propoſed, i. e. ſimply and in general, and without entring too far into Particulars.

2. To ſuppreſs all nice and over-curious Enquiries into the peculiar Nature, Reaſon, and Manner of this Myſtery; for when we are once aſſured, that the Thing itſelf is, for us to amuſe ourſelves and others, how, and which Way it comes to be ſo, (eſpecially in Matters relating to Almighty God) muſt needs be both irreverent and impertinent; and therefore let this, in all our Enquiries, be remember'd, that there is no Obedience comparable to that of the Underſtanding; no Temperance, which ſo much commends the Soul to God, as that which ſhews itſelf in the Reſtraint of our Curioſity.

BESIDES theſe two important Conſiderations, let us conſider alſo, that an over-anxious Scrutiny into ſuch Myſteries is utterly uſeleſs, as to all Purpoſes of a rational Enquiry. It wearies the Mind, but not informs the Judgment. It makes us conceited and fantaſtical in our Notions, inſtead of being ſober, and wiſe to Salvation.

It

[k] South's Sermons, Vol. IV.

It may provoke God alſo, by our preſſing too much into the Secrets of Heaven, and the concealed Glories of his Nature, to deſert and give us over to ſtrange Deluſions. They are only [l] the Things that are revealed (as Moſes told the Iſraelites) that belong to the Sons of Men to underſtand and look into, as the ſole and proper Privilege allow'd them by God, to exerciſe their nobleſt Thoughts upon; but for ſuch high Myſteries as the Trinity, as the Subſtance of one Nature in three Perſons, or of three Perſons in one and the ſame individual Nature, theſe are to be reckon'd in the Number of ſuch ſacred and ſecret Things, as belong to God alone perfectly to know; but to ſuch poor Mortals as we are, humbly to fall down before, and adore.

An Hiſtorical [m] Account of the DOCTRINE of the TRINITY.

THUS far we have conſidered the Doctrine of the ever-bleſſed Trinity, as it is delivered in Scripture, and agrees with the Doctrine of the antient Fathers; and come now to take an Hiſtorical View of it, as a Controverſy, that was all along agitated in the Chriſtian Church. The Form of Admiſſion into the Chriſtian Covenant, at the Time of Baptiſm, in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, ſeems to comprize the Doctrine of this great Article, and was an explicit Declaration of it by every Perſon, that came to be baptized, profeſſing his Belief in the Divinity of three Perſons, co-equal and co-eternal. This being the common Manner of Admiſſion, it is not to be queſtioned, but that it contained the received Doctrine, was very probably Part of [n] that Form of ſound Words, mentioned by the Apoſtle as delivered to the Saints, and one of thoſe firſt Principles, which all ſuch, as were initiated into the Chriſtian Covenant, were bound to profeſs: And as the other Articles are but declaratory of what the Church believes concerning each Perſon, the Creation of all Things by the Father, the Redemption of Mankind by the Son, and the Benefits of our Sanctification by the Holy Ghoſt; ſo this Acknowledgment of three Divine Perſons in one and the ſame Eſſence, was always look'd upon as a Summary of the Chriſtian Faith, and the main Article of the baptiſmal Creed, which the Church continued in quiet Poſſeſſion of, until the Enemy came, and ſowed Tares in the Field, and cauſed Hereſies to ſprout up.

SIMON MAGUS (whoſe Hiſtory we have among [o] the Acts of the Apoſtles) was the firſt that diſturbed the Peace of the Church in this wiſe; for, being rejected by the Apoſtles for his Hypocriſy and other vile Practices, he ſet up for himſelf, and ſo far deluded the People of Samaria with his Sorceries, that he paſſed among them for the great Power of God. So many and monſtrous were the Deluſions which he advanced, that he is juſtly eſteemed to be the Head and Founder of every Hereſy, as being not only firſt in Time, but as having ſown the Seeds of all the reſt. He gave out that himſelf was the Supreme God, who had appeared in Samaria as the Father, in Judea as the Son, and in other Nations as the Holy Ghoſt. The firſt Production of his Mind, as he pretended, was a female Spirit, called Eunæa, who having (as the Mother of all Things) produced thoſe Angels and inferior Powers, whom he called the Creators and Governors of this lower World, did, at that Time, actuate and dwell in the Body of that Helena, whom he entertained as his inſeparable Companion: And upon this Fiction, he, or his immediate Diſciples, formed thoſe extravagant Conceits of their Æons, or Genealogies of Gods, which, in the next Age, began to appear with more Popularity. His Continuance in Paleſtine was not long; for the Apoſtles ſo oppoſed and over-powered his Sorceries by the mighty Hand of God, that he took his Journey to Rome, there to ſpread the Poiſon of his Hereſy; and though, by the Arrival of St Peter, he himſelf was effectually ruined and expoſed; yet the Seeds of his Doctrine ſtill continued and revived, and according to the different Humour of his Followers, branched themſelves out into ſeveral Sects. From this Impoſtor's Pretenſions however, of being Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, we may learn this one Thing, viz. that the eternal Divinity of theſe three Perſons was, at that Time, the received Doctrine of the Church; otherwiſe he had expoſed and ruined his own Cauſe, in aſſuming to himſelf the Characters of all Three.

Simon Magus, A. D. 34.

A. D. 64.

MENANDER,

[l] Deut. xxix. 29. [m] N. B. This Account is chiefly extracted from the learned Dr Berriman's Sermons, preached at the Lecture, founded by the Lady Moyer. [n] 2 Tim. i. 13. [o] Acts viii. 9.

Menander, MENANDER, who was his immediate Succeſſor, not able to digeſt the Notion of a God incarnate, acknowledged the Divine Nature of our Saviour Chriſt, but denied the Reality of his human, pretending, that his Aſſumption thereof was no more than Phantaſm and outward Shew, from whence his Followers were Cerinthus, called Φαντασιαςαί. Cerinthus, on the other Hand, allowed that Jeſus was a real Man, born of a Woman, and that he ſuffered in the Manner, that the Goſpel relates; but then he pretended, that Chriſt was a diſtinct Being, a Divine Power, or one of his inviſible Æons, that deſcended upon him, at the Time of his Baptiſm, that enabled him to work Miracles, and revealed to him the Doctrines he taught;
And Ebion, but, at the Time of his Crucifixion, forſook him. Ebion, a Diſciple of Cerinthus, (from whom a large Sect in the next Century took their Name) agreed with his Maſter in acknowledging Jeſus to be merely Man, but gave not into that Fiction of Chriſt, as another Perſon, deſcending on him, at his Baptiſm; nor did he concur with him in his Notion of Æons, or aſcribing the Creation of the World to any inferior Being.

Oppoſed by St John. St JOHN was alive when theſe different Opinions ſprung up in the Church, and it is obvious to obſerve, both in his Goſpel and Epiſtles, (which were wrote at the Requeſt of the Biſhops of Aſia, to be a Remedy againſt theſe growing Hereſies) how he ſets himſelf to confute them. Againſt that Opinion, which denied the Incarnation of the Son of God, he maintains, that the [p] Word was made Fleſh, and pitched his Tabernacle among Men, ſo that they beheld his Glory; they heard, they ſaw, they handled him, and therefore he pronounces, that whatſoever Spirit ſhall not confeſs his coming in the Fleſh, could not be of God, but was the Spirit of Antichriſt. Againſt the other, which denied the Divinity of our Bleſſed Saviour, he maintains, that the ſame Word, which in Time became incarnate, did nevertheleſs [q] exiſt in the Beginning; that he was the Word of eternal Life, was with God the Father, and was God himſelf; ſo that whoſoever ſhould deny Jeſus to be Chriſt, the Son of God, was likewiſe to be eſteemed Antichriſt, denying both the Father and the Son, and having no true Communion with them. Laſtly, in Oppoſition to the common Opinion of all Simon's Followers, that the World was created, not by the ſupreme God, but by certain inferior Beings, the ſame Apoſtle aſſerts, that by this [r] Word were all Things made, and without him was not any Thing made, that was made; and more particularly, that the World was made by him, and therefore when he came into the World, he came unto his own.

And Ignatius. IGNATIUS was the Diſciple of St John, and by him conſtituted Biſhop of Antioch, in the Reign of Veſpaſian; but his Epiſtles, which are ſtill extant, were not
A. D. 107. wrote until a little before his Martyrdom, which happened in the Reign of Trajan; at which Time the aforeſaid Hereſies were mightily increaſed, by Cerinthus in Aſia, by Menander in Samaria, and by Ebion, very probably, in Judea. No Wonder therefore that this holy Writer, in his Epiſtles to the Churches of Aſia, as well as Rome, ſhould caution them ſo ſtrictly againſt Deceivers, that brought in damnable Doctrines, and [s] mixed Poiſon with the ſweet Wine of the Goſpel; that he ſhould aſſert Chriſt to be God, aſcribing unto him [t] Omniſcience, and an Exiſtence [u] without Beginning of Time; and withal maintain the Certainty of his Incarnation and Death, againſt ſuch Deceivers as would deny their [x] Reality, and affirm that he only ſuffered in Appearance, [y] which this zealous Father looked upon as horrid Blaſphemy. Thus careful was the bleſſed Martyr (as well as the Apoſtle was before him) to aſſert both the divine and human Nature of Chriſt, only with this Difference, that St John reſiding in Aſia, where Cerinthus had chiefly broach'd his Opinions, enlarges moſt upon the Proof of his Divinity; whereas Ignatius, being Biſhop of Antioch, where Menander had ſpread his Poiſon, is moſt full and expreſs in the Doctrine of his Incarnation.

The Gnoſtick Hereſy. IT was not long before the Abetters of theſe Opinions fell under the Denomination of Gnoſticks, as Men, that pretended to more Knowledge in Divine Matters, than any other Chriſtians; and their Hereſy came in Time to be drawn up into a Kind of regular Syſtem, by Valentinus and his Followers, the chief of whoſe Poſitions (ſo far as they affected the Doctrine, we are now conſidering) were ſuch as theſe: "That "Demiurgus, or the Creator of this World, is not the ſupreme God, nor indeed of "a ſpiritual, but animal Nature, inferior to that Plerôma, or Plenitude of the Deity,

THESE, and others of the like Abſurdity, were the Doctrines, which Valentine A. D. 120. firſt broach'd in Egypt, and afterwards at Rome; from whence they were, by his Followers, propagated through many Provinces, till they became the moſt conſiderble and prevailing Hereſy of the ſecond Century. Againſt theſe monſtrous Opinions, Oppos'd by Irenæus, who was an Hearer of St Polycarp, the Diſciple of St John, and afterwards Irenæus. promoted to the Biſhoprick of Lyons in France, a Man of great Integrity and Accuracy of Judgment, declares himſelf in very ſtrong and ſignificant Expreſſions; not only where he aſſerts, that the Word did always exiſt, did always [z] co-exiſt with the Father; equal to him in Immenſity, and, as it were, meaſuring him out, who is unmeaſurable; but where he affirms likewiſe, that the Father has always with him [a] the Word and Wiſdom, the Son and the Spirit, who concurred with him in the Creation, and do ſtill in the Conſervation and Government of the World; ſo that there is [b] one God the Father, one Son, and one Divine Spirit properly diſtinguiſhed from each other, although inſeparably united in that Divinity, which is but one.

BEFORE the Death, or certainly ſoon after the Death, of Irenæus, Clemens, the 192. and Clemens Alexandrinus. celebrated School-maſter and Catechiſt of Alexandria, whoſe Books are ſtored with great Variety of Learning, and digeſted with the niceſt Judgment, undertook, not only the Confutation of Pagan Superſtition, but of heretical Perverſeneſs likewiſe; and, to this Purpoſe, is full of very high and lofty Deſcriptions of the Son of God, calling him the Almighty One with the Father, without Beginning, and without End, to whom the Inſpection of our Hearts, and of all Things in the Univerſe, belongs, as he ſays the ſame Things of the Holy Ghoſt; and therefore, in his [c] famous Doxology joins him with the Father and the Son, as entirely one with them, the Upholder of Eternity, and the Author of all Good.

ABOUT thirty Years before the Concluſion of the ſecond Century, Montanus 172. appeared in the World, pretending to a Divine Authority; and, by a ſpecious Shew of Piety and great Auſterity, making many Proſelytes, and gaining himſelf a conſiderable Reputation. After ſome Time, however, his Followers were excluded from the Communion of the Church, for aſcribing their pretended Revelations to the Impulſe of the Holy Ghoſt: And though, in the Controverſy about Eaſter, they took Occaſion to court the Favour of Pope Victor, and ſo far inſinuated themſelves into his Eſteem, as to obtain Letters of Communion from him; yet, when Praxeas came from Aſia to Rome, and gave the Pope a different Notion of the Men, he ſoon revoked the Letters, and withdrew the Countenance, he had given them. Praxeas, however, was not himſelf clear from the Charge of Hereſy, whilſt, for Praxeas's Hereſy. fear of deſtroying the Unity of the Divine Nature, he acknowledged no more than a nominal Diſtinction in it, believing the Father to be expreſsly the ſame with the Son and the Holy Ghoſt, and differing no otherwiſe, than as he was conſidered under different Views. Tertullian was the firſt who wrote profeſſedly againſt this Oppos'd by Opinion. The main Scope of his Book againſt Praxeas is to prove a real Diſtinc- Tertullian, 209. tion of the Sacred Three, which he expreſſes in ſuch high Terms, as to call the Son another from the Father, and the Holy Ghoſt another from both. But as this Manner of Expreſſion might ſeem a little unguarded, he therefore adds, that he was forced to make uſe of it, not to intimate any real Separation in the [d] Perſons of the Godhead, but to guard againſt the captious Diſpoſition of his Adverſaries; who, attending only to the Monarchy or Unity of the Godhead, did highly prejudice, if not deſtroy, the ſacred Oeconomy, or Perſonality thereof. And therefore he tells us farther, [e] that they were Three, not in Dignity, but Order; not in Subſtance, but Form; not in Power, but Manifeſtation: Though really diſtinguiſhed, they were, at the ſame Time, inſeparably coherent; though ſubſtantially united, they were diſtinctly enumerated; their Number was no leſs certain, than their Inſeparability; and therefore he made no Scruple to attribute the Title of God to every one of the Three, though ſtill he was determined to acknowledge no more Gods, or Lords, than One.

138. BUT notwithſtanding the Oppoſition which Tertullian made to the Hereſy of Praxeas in Africa, he could not hinder it from ſpreading in Aſia, by the Induſtry and Cunning of Noëtius, an Inhabitant of Smyrna, and from whom the Men of that Principle, in thoſe Parts, went under the Name of Noëtians, as in Africa they were called Praxeans. There ſoon appeared, however, a ſeaſonable Antidote againſt it, written by Hippolytus, Biſhop of Porto in Arabia; wherein he aſſerts the Unity of the Godhead with all Strenuouſneſs, but at the ſame Time maintains that [f] myſterious Oeconomy, as he calls it, whereby a Plurality of Perſons ſubſiſted in a proper Order, the Father having always his Word and Wiſdom in himſelf, which were manifeſted in due Time, to perform his wondrous Operations.

Hippolytus, 240.

And Origen. CONTEMPORARY with Hippolytus was Origen, who has expreſſed the Diſtinction of the three Divine Perſons in Terms ſtill ſtronger, and more ſignificant. The Word Πρόσωπον, which ſometimes ſignifies no more than a bare Appearance, had very likely, at this Time, been perverted by the Hereticks, being willing to own three Perſons in the Godhead in this Senſe, but not according to the Acceptation of the Catholicks, who thereby intended three Perſons, really ſubſiſting; and 'twas for this Reaſon, that Origen ſubſtituted the Word Ὑπόστασις in its room, which, beſides a bare Appearance or Manifeſtation, conveys a Notion of ſome Subſtance under it, and was afterwards a Term of eſtabliſhed Uſe and Approbation.

The Sabellian Hereſy, 258. NOT many Years after Origen aroſe Sabellius in Africa, a Diſciple (as ſome have reported) of Noëtius, but, to be ſure, a ſtrenuous Aſſertor and Propagator of his Principles. He broached his Doctrines at Ptolemais, a City of Pentapolis in Africa, which were greedily imbibed, not only by the common People, but by many of the Biſhops; [g] and as his Error conſiſted in denying a Plurality of Perſons in the Divine Nature, and aſſerting, that in the Godhead there was no more than one individual and ſingular Subſiſtence; that conſequently, the Titles of Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, were no more than different Names for one and the ſame Perſon, or ſeveral Modes belonging to the ſame Hypoſtaſis; ſo, in Proceſs of his Error, the Father was declared to have taken on him human Fleſh, and in ſeveral Churches there was no Mention made of the Son of God. This raiſed the Zeal of Dionyſius, who had formerly been Origen's Pupil, and was then Patriarch of Alexandria, inſomuch that he wrote ſeveral Epiſtles, aſſerting the real and neceſſary Diſtinction between Father and Son: But, as it uſually happens in the Heat of Controverſy, he let fall ſome Expreſſions, not ſufficiently guarded againſt the contrary Extream, which gave an Umbrage to the Orthodox, as well as Sabellians, and occaſioned their Complaints againſt him to his Name-ſake Dionyſius, then Biſhop of Rome. The Patriarch defended himſelf againſt his Accuſers with great Force of Argument, and to the entire Satisfaction of Pope Dionyſius, and the Synod aſſembled under him upon this Occaſion; yet the great Zeal, which was ſhewn in that Age againſt the Noëtian and Sabellian Hereſies, gave Riſe to two different Errors, which Dionyſius of Rome, in a Letter, very probably wrote while the Affair of his Name-ſake of Alexandria lay before the Synod, takes Notice of. For he tells us, That there were ſome, that overthrew the Doctrine of the Church, by dividing the Monarchy, or Divine Unity, into three Powers, three ſeparate Hypoſtaſes, foreign to each other, which was the ſame Thing, in his Opinion, as making three Gods; while others thought them, not only ſeparate in Subſtance, but even inferior in Nature, eſteeming the Son, and, by Conſequence, the Holy Ghoſt, to be no better than created Beings: And therefore he tells us, that, to ſteer between theſe Extreams, the Method is, [h] not to deny that there are three Hypoſtaſes, but to maintain that they are by no Means ſeparate, or divided from each other, but perfectly joined together by Unity of Eſſence.

NOT long after Sabellius aroſe Paulus Samoſatenus, Biſhop of Antioch, who (according to ſome) denied that Chriſt came from Heaven, aſſerting, that he was a mere Man, and thereupon prohibited all Hymns to be ſung to his Honour; though others will have it, that he did not actually deny the Divine Nature in Chriſt, but only ſo far ſeparated it from the human, as to deſtroy the Unity of Perſon. However this be, he was ſummoned before two ſeveral Councils at Antioch; in the firſt of which he behaved with ſo much Art and Sophiſtry, that, though his Tenets were condemned, himſelf eſcaped without any Sentence paſſed upon him; but, in the next Council, he was depoſed from his See, and Domnus was nominated to ſucceed him. 263, The Samoſatenian,

IT was not long after the Depoſition of Paulus Samoſatenus, that the Manichean Hereſy began to grow conſiderable, which, beſides denying the Reality of Chriſt's Body, ſeems to have eſpouſed the Sabellian Principle, by repreſenting Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, as one God under three Names: But, as their Scheme contained likewiſe a Collection of the moſt deteſtable Abominations of the Heathens, and worſt of Hereticks, they are to be looked upon as Pagans, rather than Chriſtians, and fall not ſo properly under our preſent Conſideration. And Manichean Hereſies.

THUS we have taken a View of the Doctrine of the Church, with Relation to the ever-bleſſed Trinity, for the three firſt Centuries, and of the moſt conſiderable Hereſies, that raiſed themſelves up againſt it. The antient Liturgies, which might be a farther Illuſtration of this Matter, are in a great Meaſure loſt: But, from the Remains of what we have of them, we may perceive, that though the Father was conſtantly acknowledged for the Fountain of the Deity, and had conſequently moſt of the Prayers and Praiſe of the Church offered unto him; yet ſome Parts of Divine Worſhip, as well Hymns as Doxologies, were immediately addreſſed to the Son and Holy Ghoſt, in Terms the moſt expreſs and particular; which would never have been allowed, had not the Divine Nature and Co-eſſentiality of theſe two Perſons with the Father been, at that Time, the received and Catholick Doctrine.

AFTER this Period of Time, the outward Face of the Church began to change; and, inſtead of Poverty and Perſecution, Riches and Honours, and civil Emoluments were introduced; but together with them, Diſcord and Contention. The See of Alexandria being made vacant by the Martyrdom of Peter, in the Time of the tenth Perſecution, Achillas, his immediate Succeſſor, did not long ſurvive him; when Alexander, who had been diſtinguiſhed for his Chriſtian Zeal, was deſervedly promoted to the Patriarchal Dignity. Arius, at this Time, was one of the Preſbyters of Alexandria, and thinking himſelf ſlighted to have a Brother ſet over his Head, he entered into a fatal Reſolution to oppoſe him, and it was not long before he found an Occaſion. The Biſhop had been treating, ſomewhat curiouſly, concerning the Trinity, and, in his Catholick Manner of explaining it, had aſſerted the inſeparable Unity of Subſtance: This gave Arius an Handle to charge him with Sabellianiſm, and to ſet himſelf up as a Patron of the oppoſite Extream, by declaring, that there was a Time when the Son was not; that he was a Creature, and made out of nothing, mutable in his Nature, and like the created Angels, liable to fall into Sin; that, being united to human Fleſh, he ſupplied the Place of the human Soul, and was conſequently ſubject to Sufferings and Pain. The Patriarch, at firſt, uſed gentler Means to reclaim him from theſe blaſphemous Opinions, but when nothing of this Kind would avail, he and his Adherents were, by a Council of an hundred Biſhops of Egypt and Lybia, not only degraded from their Orders, but anathematiz'd likewiſe, and caſt entirely out of the Church. Arius, after this, applied himſelf to other Biſhops, and under Pretence of being reconciled to Alexander, endeavoured to fortify his Intereſt againſt him; while Alexander, on the other Hand, was not negligent to juſtify his Conduct to other Churches: And in this Condition continued the Diſpute, each labouring to ſtrengthen his own Party, until Conſtantine, for the Conſervation of the Peace of the Church, thought it expedient to call a General Council at Nice, in Bithynia, where three hundred and eighteen Biſhops, from all Parts of the Chriſtian World (beſides Prieſts and Deacons almoſt innumerable) met, and were firſt, to deliberate about the Particulars of that Faith, which was delivered to the Church, and then conferring with Arius himſelf, to require, at his own Mouth, an open Declaration of his real Sentiments. The Arian Hereſy. 317. 319. The firſt general Council held at Nice.

1. IT was, at firſt, the Intention of the Council[i] to declare the Catholick Faith in the Words of Scripture, and in the moſt plain and ſimple Manner of Expreſſion; but, as the Arians had learned to elude the Senſe of all Scripture Phraſes by evaſive Explanations, the Council was obliged to proceed in another Method. The grand Point was to bring them to a Confeſſion of Chriſt's Divine Nature: And therefore they explain'd his Generation to be very God of very God; they diſtinguiſhed between Generation and Creation, aſſerting, that the Son was begotten, not made; and to preclude all poſſible Subterfuge, they affirmed, that he was ὁμοούσιον τῷ Πατρὶ, of one Subſtance with the Father, i. e. of the ſame Nature with the Father, in Reſpect of his Godhead, as he was with us, in Reſpect of his Humanity.

To this Character of the Son of God, there were but five, out of the hundred and eighteen Biſhops, that, with any Pertinacioufneſs, refuſed to ſubſcribe; and the Reaſon they alledged for ſo doing was, the Novelty, the Unſcripturalneſs, and the Incongruity of the Term. But, after ſome Debate, when the Creed was drawn up by Hoſius, the famous Biſhop of Corduba in Spain, and the Term inſerted in it, as the beſt Fence againſt Arian Prevarications, there were but two Biſhops, viz. Euſebius of Nicomedia, and Theognis of Nice, that perſiſted in their Refuſal to ſubſcribe it.

2. WHEN Arius was called to a Conference before the Synod, he maintained his Aſſertions with all Boldneſs and Obſtinacy imaginable; nor did he want ſome to extenuate his Fault, and patronize his Cauſe, though they did it covertly. The Anathema, however, that Alexander had denounced againſt him, was confirmed by the Synod, and the two Biſhops, which finally adher'd to him, were concluded in the ſame Sentence; which Sentence was followed by another from the Emperor, excluding the condemned Perſons from Civil, as well as Eccleſiaſtical Rights, and condemning them to Baniſhment.

328. BUT this Severity of the Emperor's did not laſt long. In about three Years Time the Biſhops were recalled, and reſtored to their Sees, and admitted to a conſiderable Intereſt at Court. Nor was it long before the Emperor was perſuaded to recal Arius likewiſe; who, to juſtify the Repreſentation his Friends had made of him, preſented him with a Confeſſion of his Faith in Writing, drawn up in Terms, that had a latent Reſervation, yet, at the ſame Time, an Appearance ſo entirely Catholick, that they ſatisfied the Emperor. But, notwithſtanding this, Athanaſius, who was now advanced to the See of Alexandria, and better acquainted with his Prevarications, refuſing to admit him to Communion, enrag'd the Party ſo, that they rais'd many Calumnies, and formed an Accuſation againſt him, which, by the Intereſt they had at Court, procur'd firſt his Depoſition, and afterwards his Baniſhment. The People of the Church of Alexandria, however, ſtill refuſed to admit Arius into their Communion, which made the Emperor ſend for him to Conſtantinople, where, upon delivering in a freſh Confeſſion of his Faith in Terms leſs offenſive, and appealing to the Searcher of Hearts for his Sincerity, the Emperor commanded Alexander, the Biſhop of that Church (who was reſolutely bent againſt doing the Thing) to receive him next Day into his Communion: But that very Evening, Arius dying a very remarkable Death, (as Hiſtorians tell us, for he burſt aſunder in the Midſt, and his Bowels guſhed out) Providence put an End to the Contention.

Athanaſius baniſhed.

Arius dies. 336.

337. THE Party, however, continu'd ſtill in great Credit at Court; and though, upon the Death of Conſtantine, the Affairs of Conſtantius were a little too much embarraſs'd, to oppoſe his Brethren, in recalling Athanaſius, and the other Biſhops from their Baniſhment; yet, in a ſhort Time after, Athanaſius was again removed; and, to juſtify ſuch Proceedings, the old Calumnies were reviv'd, and an Accuſation ſent againſt him, and the other depriv'd Biſhops, to Pope Julius; who in a full Synod, after a juſt Examination, acquitted them of the Charge, and pronounc'd them innocent. But the Arian Faction cared for none of theſe Things, having the Countenance of the Government, and making, or depoſing Biſhops, as it beſt ſerv'd their Purpoſes.

The Photinian Hereſy.

BEFORE the Middle of the fourth Century, there was ſome Diſturbance in the Eaſtern Parts of Europe, occaſion'd by Photinus, formerly of great Reputation among the Orthodox, and promoted to the See of Sirmium in Illyricum, to their general Satisfaction; but now fallen into a Set of Opinions, that gave a general Diſguſt. The Antients have not given us a diſtinct Account of the Hereſy he advanc'd, but in this they ſeem to agree, that he denied the real Diſtinction of Perſons in the Godhead; that that he denied the perſonal Union of the divine and human Natures in Chriſt; and ſuppoſed the eternal Word to be no more than a Divine Power, or Virtue of the Father, himſelf inſpiring, and operating upon Jeſus: Which, among others, were accounted Poſitions ſo groſs, that the Arians themſelves, in a Council held in his own City of Sirmium, publickly depos'd him.

WHILE this Affair of Photinus was depending, the Emperor Conſtans prevail'd with his Brother Conſtantius to have a General Council call'd, which met at Sardica: But the Arians, perceiving that they could not carry every Thing as they deſired, withdrew by Night to Philippopolis, which was under the Juriſdiction of Conſtantius, and there held a ſeparate Aſſembly of their own, but ſtill calling themſelves the Council of Sardica. In Conſequence of which, it came to paſs, that both Councils anathematiz'd each other; what the one did, the other as ſurely revers'd; and no ſooner was Athanaſius reſtor'd at Sardica, but he was immediately depos'd again at Philippopolis. 347.

THIS Proceeding Conſtans (who had occaſion'd the meeting of the Council) thought himſelf concern'd to reſent; and therefore ſent immediately to his Brother to demand the Reſtoration of the depos'd Biſhops, which, as Things then ſtood, was readily complied with: But, upon the Death of Conſtans, the Defeat of Magnentius, and the Acceſſion of the whole Empire to Conſtantius, all was revers'd again. Athanaſius was condemn'd in a Council held at Arles, and thoſe that adventur'd to oppoſe the Sentence, or ſpeak in Vindication of him, underwent the ſame Fate. Under this Encouragement, the Arians pull'd off the Maſk, and avow'd their Doctrines; and, having the ſecular Power on their Side, rais'd a terrible Perſecution all the Empire over, againſt thoſe, that refus'd to conform; in the Violence of which, many great Names fell away from the right Faith, and embrac'd the Arian Communion; though there wanted not others, of Honeſty and Conſtancy enough, to reject all ſuch Overtures, and deſpiſe all Terror, in Atteſtation of the Truth. 348. 350. 353. 357.

THE Arians had hitherto been unanimous in the Deſign of pulling down the Church, and had well nigh accompliſhed their End; when (as the Effect of Proſperity is) they fell a quarrelling and diſputing with one another. Some of them diſlik'd the Term ὁμοούσιος, of the ſame Subſtance; and yet were willing to come as near it as poſſible; and therefore aſſerted of the Son, that he was ὁμοιούσιος of the like Subſtance with the Father; though this Term, in the Opinion of others, border'd too much upon the Catholick Senſe. Among theſe Aëtius, who had been formerly a Deacon of the Church of Antioch, reviv'd the old Tenets of Arius, and declar'd openly, that the Son was not only ἑτερούσιος, of another Subſtance from the Father, but that he was ἐξ οὐκ ὄντων made out of nothing, and ἀνόμοιος τῷ Πατρὶ unlike the Father; from whence the Followers of his Opinions were for ſome time called Anomæans. Theſe Poſitions he had Intereſt enough to get ratified both at Sirmium and Antioch; though others immediately condemned them, and, in a Synod at Ancyra, drew up a Declaration of Anathemas againſt them, which they ſent to Conſtantius, then at Sirmium; and he thereupon order'd two Councils to be called, one at Rimini, in Italy, for the Weſtern, and the other at Seleucia, in Cælo-Syria, for the Eaſtern Biſhops. The Arians diſagree among themſelves; Whereupon two Councils are call'd, 359.

THE Council of Rimini did moſtly agree to condemn the Arian Hereſy, depoſing thoſe that patronized it, and ratifying the Confeſſion of Nice. Some Arians however among them propoſed a different Confeſſion; and both Sides ſent Deputies to the Emperor to notify what they had done. But the Catholick Deputies being Men of no great Experience, were, by the Artifice of the Arians, prevailed to revoke what had been done at Rimini, and to ſign a new Confeſſion, wherein the Word Subſtance was omitted, and the Son declared to be like the Father, according to the Scriptures: Which the Emperor underſtanding, ſent his Orders to the other Biſhops of the Council to do the ſame; and they, partly thro' Fear, and partly thro' a Miſrepreſentation of the Caſe, were induced to do it.

THE Council of Seleucia, conſiſting chiefly of Semi-Arians, i. e. ſuch as aſſerted the ὁμοιούσιον, or Likeneſs of the Son with the Father, from the Averſion they had to the Anomæans, were become almoſt Catholicks, and approved of the Council of Nice in every Thing, except the Word ὁμοιούσιος: But, by the Management of the Party, they too were perverted, in the like Manner as the Catholick Deputies; ſo that the greateſt Part, both of the Weſtern and Eaſtern Biſhops, were by one Stratagem or other brought over to the Anomæans.

The Macedonian Hereſy.

ALL this while, the Divinity of the third Perſon in the ever-bleſſed Trinity had been very little diſputed. The Council of Nice had declared their Belief in the Holy Ghoſt, without any farther Explanation, and the Arians ſeemed not to oppoſe
358. it; until ſome, that pretended to deteſt the Arian Hereſy in Reſpect of the Son, ventured even to exceed it in Reſpect of the Holy Ghoſt; aſſerting, that he was no more than a Creature, and one of the miniſtring Spirits, that differed from the holy Angels in Degree only. The Sect was from their Doctrine called at firſt Pneumatomachi, or Fighters with the Spirit, but after that Macedonius embraced the ſame Opinion, they generally took their Denomination from him.

The Hiſtory of ſucceeding Times.

UPON the Death of Conſtantius, Julian the Apoſtate, thinking to deſtroy Chriſtianity by increaſing the Diſputes among its Profeſſors, recalled thoſe that had been baniſhed, of whatever Denomination they were, and gave a free Toleration to all Parties; whereupon thoſe of the Catholick Communion gained Ground viſibly: The Belief of a conſubſtantial Trinity was openly profeſs'd, in a Council held by Athanaſius at Alexandria;
362. and many, that had apoſtatized, retracted their Error, ſubſcribed the Nicene Confeſſion, and were received into their reſpective Stations in the Church.

BUT this Lenity of Julian did not laſt long: He ſoon began a Perſecution againſt Chriſtians of all Characters; harraſſing the People with Bonds and Impriſonments, and Deaths of all Kinds; baniſhing the Biſhops, and driving away the Clergy from their Churches, that the Knowledge of Religion might by Degrees be loſt and extirpated. In which ſad Period of Time, it cannot but be ſuppoſed, that the Heat of religious Controverſies was allayed, when all Parties equally ſuffered, and made it Matter of their Prayer to be reſcued from the common Oppreſſion.

363. JOVIAN, his Succeſſor, reigned ſo ſhort a while, that, though he favoured, he could do no great Service to the Catholick Cauſe; only, in his Time, two Councils were held, one by Athanaſius at Alexandria, and the other by Meleſius at Antioch, wherein the Article of Conſubſtantiality, and other Points, contained in the
364. Nicene Creed, were openly profeſſed. His Succeſſor, Valentinian, contented himſelf with the Weſtern Empire, and committed to his Brother Valens the Government of the Eaſt; who, by the Perſuaſion of his Empreſs being prepoſſeſſed in Favour of the Arians, put the Macedonians, in common with the Catholicks, under Perſecution; whereupon they ſent Deputies to the Weſtern Biſhops, teſtifying their Readineſs to ſubſcribe to the Confeſſion of Nice, which the Biſhops accepted, and thereupon admitted them to Communion. But, upon the Return of the Deputies, there happened a Diviſion among the Party, ſome diſliking, and others approving the Accommodation; ſome denying the proper Divinity of both ſecond and third Perſons; while others embraced all the Articles of the Nicene Faith, only with ſome Difference in their Explication of what related to the Holy Ghoſt; which laſt were properly called Semi-Arians. The Weſtern Churches in the mean Time enjoyed great Peace and Tranquillity in the Profeſſion of the Catholick Doctrine, under the
375. Government of Valentinian, until the Death of that Prince left his Brother Valens at Liberty to continue his Barbarities.

The Apollinarian Hereſy.

APOLLINARIS, Biſhop of Laodicea, was a Perſon of great Parts and Learning, but delighting to argue from human Reaſon, more than the Authority of the Scripture, he fell into ſome ſtrange Notions about the Incarnation. He aſſerted, that there was but one Nature in Chriſt; that the Deity was inſtead of a rational Soul; and though he ſometimes allowed him to have an animal Soul, yet all his intellectual Faculties he ſaid were ſupplied by the Fulneſs of the Godhead, that dwelt in him. Nay, according to ſome, he proceeded ſo far as to teach, that the very Fleſh of Chriſt was not taken from the bleſſed Virgin, but brought from Heaven with him, being either a Portion of the Divine Word, converted into that Form, or ſo mixt with the Godhead itſelf, as to have its Subſtance altered, and become Divine.

THE Author of theſe groſs Opinions (though anſwered by ſeveral Hands) was for ſome Time concealed; but when he began to declare himſelf, and to ordain Biſhops of his own Party, they were condemned by three Councils ſucceſſively, and at laſt himſelf was cenſured for them by that general One of Conſtantinople: But the Seeds of many fatal Diviſions, that he left behind him, were of a much longer Continuance.

378. UPON the Death of Valens, Gratian and Valentinian the Younger, who ſucceeded their Father in the Weſt, were now left in full Poſſeſſion of the whole Empire: But Valentinian being too young for Action, Gratian committed the Government vernment of the Eaſt to Theodoſius, and contented himſelf (as his Father had done before him) with the Weſt. They both, in their ſeveral Dominions, gave great Encouragement to the Catholicks, recalling the Exiles, and reſtraining the Hereticks, and prohibiting them to hold Congregations in Towns and Cities. And becauſe the Confuſions of the Eaſt had been of ſo long Continuance, it was thought expedient, for the Reſtoration of Peace and Order, to convene a free and general Council; which accordingly met at Conſtantinople, to the Number of an hundred and fifty Biſhops, to re-eſtabliſh and explain the antient and Catholick Doctrine of the Church, and to find out Remedies againſt the growing Errors. For this Reaſon, becauſe the Apollinarian Hereſy denied the Reality of Chriſt's human Soul and Body, it was thought proper to have ſome expreſs Declaration againſt it; and therefore the Nicene Article, which only ſaid conciſely, that he came down, and was incarnate, and was made Man, they enlarg'd with this Clauſe, taken from a ſhort Creed of Epiphanius, that he came down from Heaven, and was incarnate, by the Holy Ghoſt, of the Virgin Mary, and was made Man: And becauſe the Pneumatomachi, or Macedonian Hereticks, denied the Divinity of the Holy Ghoſt; inſtead of the Name Paraclete, which ſpake by the Prophets, (as the Nicene Creed expreſſes it) they inſerted (again from Epiphanius) theſe more auguſt Characters, the Lord, and Giver of Life, who proceedeth from the Father, and the Son, and who, with the Father and the Son, together is worſhipped and glorified; whereby they aſſerted the full Divinity of the Holy Ghoſt, and an Equality of Honour, and Worſhip, which theſe Heretitks denied, when they excluded him from their Doxologies. Thus the Council of Conſtantinople determin'd the antient Doctrines of the Church, which the Emperor added the Sanction of penal Laws to enforce; and 'tis from this happy Union and Concurrence that we may date the Downfal of Arianiſm in the Eaſt, after it had ſtood about fifty Years; and the great Peace and Proſperity in the Church, for ſo many Years after.

The ſecond general Council held at Conſtantinople, 381.

IT was in the Reign of the Junior Theodoſius, and after Neſtorius (a Man of great Parts, but ſtrong Paſſions) was made Patriarch of Conſtantinople, that Anaſtaſius, a Preſbyter of that Church, in a publick Sermon, caution'd his Hearers againſt calling the Virgin Mary Θεοτόκον, or the Mother of God; it being impoſſible, as he ſaid, for God to be born of one, that was only poſſeſs'd of human Nature: And when many of the Clergy and People were not a little ſurpriz'd at his Doctrine, Neſtorius, was ſo far from cenſuring the Preacher for it, that he himſelf avow'd and maintain'd the ſame. He acknowledg'd indeed the Divinity of the Word, but made it intirely ſeparate from Chriſt, in whom it dwelt only as an Inmate, as the Holy Ghoſt did in the antient Prophets; and therefore he affirm'd, that the bleſſed Virgin could no mre be deem'd the Mother of the Word, than her Couſin Elizabeth could be called the Mother of the Holy Ghoſt, becauſe her Son, the Baptiſt, is ſaid to have been filled with it from his Mother's Womb. St Cyril, Patriarch of Alexandria, was the moſt zealous of his Oppoſers, impugning his Principles, and anathematizing thoſe that were his Abettors; which the other returned in much the ſame Language: So that the Quarrel went ſo high between them, and their Adherents, that a general Council was thought expedient to allay the Diſturbance; which accordingly was appointed to meet at Epheſus; where Neſtorius, refuſing to appear himſelf, was depos'd, his Doctrine cenſured, and that of his Adverſaries confirmed to be true and Catholick.

The Neſtorian Hereſy.

The third general Council held at Epheſus.

IN the Heat of this Controverſy, Eutyches, an Abbot of Conſtantinople, and a ſtrenuous Aſſertor of the Doctrine of the Church againſt Neſtorius, had run into the contrary Extream; affirming, that the Godhead did not only inhabit, but was actually converted into the Manhood, or, (as he ſeemed rather to maintain) that the Fleſh itſelf was Deified, and made, not by Way of Appropriation, but ſubſtantially, divine. This was a Scheme of ſuch dangerous Conſequences, that Flavian, who was then Patriarch of Conſtantinople, thought it a Matter deſerving the Animadverſion of a Synod; where though it was twice condemned, and the Author of it anathematiz'd, yet ſuch was his Intereſt at Court, that the Emperor granted him a Re-hearing in another Council called at Epheſus; where he was abſolved, and Flavian, for his ſuppoſed Inveteracy againſt him, depoſed from his Patriarchal See. Under this hard Uſage he appealed to a general Synod, but it was not till after the Death of Theodoſius, that Valentinian, the ſurviving Emperor of the Weſt, and Marcian, who ſucceeded in the Eaſt, agreed to appoint ſuch a Council: Which accordingly aſſembling at Chalcedon, confirm'd the Depoſition of Eutyches and his Adherents; anathematiz'd the Hereſies, which the three former general Councils had condemn'd; ratified the ſame Doctrines, that they had approved; and what Neſtorius and Eutyches had lately advanced vanced concerning the Incarnation, utterly rejected and declar'd againſt. But this Deciſion of the Council had but ſmall Influence upon others: The Catholicks indeed held themſelves determined by it, but the Neſtorians and Eutycheans (who were now become the only conſiderable Sects in the Eaſt) purſued the Schemes they had eſpouſed, and, as the latter increaſed under the Countenance of ſome ſucceeding Emperor, they came in Time to fall into very various and inconſiſtent Notions. From their great Doctrine of the Unity of Nature, they were induced to aſſert ſometimes, that the Deity itſelf is paſſible, becauſe Chriſt ſuffered on the Croſs; ſometimes, that the Divine Word, by reaſon of that Mixture, which they ſuppos'd, loſt its Omniſcience; and at other Times that the Humanity of Chriſt, by reaſon of the ſame Change, was not ſubject to Pain, or any other Infirmities; while others among them maintain'd, that the three Divine Perſons were three diſtinct Natures or Subſtances, from whence they had the Name of Tritheiſts. To ſuch wild Extravagancies did their wanton Fancies run, until God thought fit, for the Puniſhment of their Blaſphemies, to let looſe the Succeſſors of Mahomet upon the Eaſtern Empire, and ſo remove the Candleſtick out of its Place.

The ſucceeding Hiſtory of the Church.

IN the Weſt, the Goths and Vandals, which were now making large Inroads into ſeveral Countries, brought in Arianiſm along with them; and, as they eſtabliſhed their Conqueſt, ſettled their Religion by the Strength of their Sword. In Spain and Italy, and eſpecially in Africa, ſeveral Perſecutions were carried on againſt the Catholicks for a whole Century: And even in Places, where they were beſt uſed, no more than a bare Toleration was granted them, while the Arians had Poſſeſſion of the Churches, and the conſtant Countenance of the civil Government; until the Em-

553. 496. peror Juſtinian compleated, in Africa and Italy, what Clovis, King of the Franks, after his Converſion from Paganiſm to the Chriſtian Faith, had begun in Gaul, half a Century before the Expulſion of the Goths and Vandals, and the Reſtoration of the

586. Catholicks to the Protection of the Civil Powers. In the mean Time, in Spain and Languedoc, (by the prudent Management of King Recarede, who declared himſelf a Catholick) a Reformation of Religion was carried on gradually, and without any

589. great Diſturbance, and was afterwards confirmed by a Council aſſembled at Toledo.

WHILE France and Spain were thus happily reformed, it pleaſed God to ſuffer Italy once more to fall a Prey to Arian Conquerors, which happened upon this Occaſion. The Imperial General, who had expelled the Goths, was made Governor of Italy, and had enjoy'd that Station almoſt fifteen Years, when, upon ſome Account or other, he was removed from that Dignity, and another appointed. This pro-

568. voked the General to that Degree, that he invited the Lombards, a Northern warlike People, and moſt of them Arians, to penetrate Italy, which they readily did, and, in the Space of three Years, making an entire Conqueſt, eſtabliſhed their own Religion; and, for above an hundred Years, treated thoſe that differed from it very

73. roughly; until their King Bertaride, who was a zealous Convert to the Catholick Cauſe, took ſuch prudent Meaſures for the Converſion of his People, that the Arian Hereſy was by Degrees utterly extinguiſhed among the Lombards, and the Catholick Religion profeſs'd, without Interruption, for about an hundred Years more: When, by the Victories of Pipin, King of France, and his Son Charles the Great, the whole Nation of the Lombards was extinguiſhed, and Italy, except what was granted to the Pope, was annexed to the Dominions of France, together with the Title of

800. Roman Empire.

The Inſtitution of School Divinity.

AFTER the Extirpation of the Arian Hereſy, Learning began to decline apace, and the Diſputes in the Trinitarian Argument, for above three hundred Years, were very few, and moſt of them about Words, more than any real Difference of Sentiment; until, about the Beginning of the twelfth Century, Petrus Abelardus, a Man of great Learning for his Age, and much addicted to a metaphyſical Way of Writing, was 1120. by St Bernard, his Contemporary, as likewiſe by two Gallican Councils, accuſed of ſeveral Hereſies, as favouring of Arianiſm, when he treated of the Trinity; of Pelagianiſm, when he treated of Grace; and of Neſtorianiſm, when he treated of the Perſon of Chriſt: But, in his Conference, he acquitted himſelf ſo well, that he was both reconciled to St Bernard, and abſolved by the Pope.

1150. IN Imitation of him, Peter Lombard, the fam'd Maſter of the Sentences, who was firſt Profeſſor of Divinity, and afterwards Biſhop of Paris, improved the Method of metaphyſical Divinity, which, for ſome following Centuries, much perplexed the Doctrines of the Trinity and Incarnation, as well as other Articles of Religion; but nevertheleſs was held in great Eſteem and Reputation, until the Corruptions of the Church of Rome put ſome upon looking back into Scripture and Antiquity, as a ſurer Guide, than what had, for ſome Time, been followed, and this occaſioned a Revival of the Trinitarian Controverſy.

IN the Beginning of the Reformation, one Michael Servetus, a Spaniard by Birth, and who had applied himſelf to the Study firſt of the Civil Law, and afterwards of Phyſick, began to enquire into the Corruptions of the Church of Rome, and, among other Subjects, pitched upon this Article of the ever-bleſſed Trinity. In the Proceſs of his Enquiry, he fell into Notions that were ſomewhat ſingular and unintelligible: He acknowledged, indeed, a Trinity of Perſons, but 'twas in the Senſe of a theatrical Character, and Manifeſtation only; the Divine Word he held to be a certain Emanation from God, but ſuch as had no real Exiſtence before the Beginning of the World; and that, at his Incarnation, his Fleſh itſelf was not like ours, but taken from the Subſtance of God, upon which Account he might, as he ſaid, with the greateſt Propriety, be ſtiled the Son of God. The great Zeal he employ'd in the Propagation of his impious Opinions, occaſioned many bold Speculations in Matters of Religion, and might poſſibly give Encouragement to a Club of above forty Perſons of Learning and Diſtinction, among whom Lælius Socius was one, which uſed to hold Aſſemblies in the Country of Venice, debating about Points of Faith, and more eſpecially what related to the Doctrine of the Trinity, and the Satisfaction of Chriſt. They were not, however, long indulged in theſe licentious Meetings: Two of them were apprehended, and put to Death: Some of them fled to Geneva, (where Servetus had been but lately burnt for Hereſy) and there, meeting with the Severity of the Law, were forced to recant their Opinions; while others betook themſelves into Poland, where one Spiritus, a Dutchman, had, ſeveral Years before, ſtarted ſome Difficulties about the Subject of the Trinity, which made ſo great an Impreſſion upon the Mind of Modrevius, a Poliſh Knight, that, by his Example, many Perſons of Diſtinction had eſpouſed the ſame Principles, and obtained a general Connivance, which was afterwards improved into a publick Toleration of them. So that the Italian Refugees, meeting here with Encouragement, ſoon augmented their Numbers, and grew conſiderable enough to be diſtinguiſhed by a Name: Accordingly they were called either Pinczovians or Racovians, from the Poliſh Cities they chiefly inhabited; or Arians and Photinians, from their Reſemblance to thoſe antient Hereticks, in Point of their Opinions; and ſometimes Anabaptiſts, from their diſallowing the Form of Baptiſm publickly eſtabliſhed.

FROM Poland, the Hereſy travelled into Tranſilvania: For Blandrata, one of their Party, being choſen chief Phyſician to John Sigiſmond, Prince of that Country, made uſe of this Opportunity to poiſon the Minds of the People, while he preſcribed Remedies for their bodily Diſeaſes; and, in a ſhort While, prevailed ſo far, as to obtain the Countenance of the Government in Favour of his Sentiments. It was not long, however, before a warm Diſſenſion happened among his Followers: Some of whom, from the Doctrine that was advanced of Chriſt's being no more than Man, were ready to infer, that he could not then be the Object of religious Worſhip, and conſequently, that all Prayers and Invocations to him were as unwarrantable, as thoſe offered up to Saints and Angels. This Concluſion Blandrata laboured to oppoſe, and called in Fauſtus Socinus, and his Nephew Lælius, already mentioned, to aſſiſt him in it: But the Inference was too juſt and well founded, not to find Countenance and Abettors, both in Poland, where Budnæus, and in Tranſilvania, where Franciſcus Davidis were warm Aſſertors of it. Socinus, however, was a Man of that Art and Addreſs, had ſuch a Command of his Temper, ſuch an Appearance of Modeſty, and withal, ſuch a ſtudious Application, both to refine his own Scheme, and oppoſe all thoſe that appear'd againſt it, that, in the End, the various Sects of Anti-Trinitarians were combined in One, and fell under the general Determination of Socinians, though their own Writers affected rather to be called Unitarians. They methodized and digeſted their Doctrines by Degrees into a regular Syſtem, though intirely repugnant to the whole Tenour of the Goſpel; maintaining, "That the Su"preme Deity is perſonally but One; that our bleſſed Saviour is not God over all;
"that he had no Exiſtence before his Birth of the Virgin Mary; that whatever is
"ſaid of his Merit and Satisfaction, his Sacrifice for Sin, and Redemption of Sin"ners, &c. is certainly to be underſtood in a metaphorical Senſe; and that the Holy
"Ghoſt is no more than a Divine Influence, without any perſonal Subſiſtence at all:

" pretation of Scripture, the State of ſeparate Souls, the Reſurrection of the Body, " and the Nature of a future Judgment, too tedious here to be related."

BUT how well ſoever they had dreſs'd up their Scheme, upon the Death of Sigiſmond the Third, the Countenance of the Government was withdrawn from them,
1633. and Uladiſlaus, who ſucceeded to the Crown of Poland, upon ſome Offence or other, denied them the Liberty of the Preſs, the Uſe of their Church, and the Govern-
1638. ment of their Univerſity at Racovia. In the ſucceeding Reign of Caſimir, when the King of Sweden, taking the Advantage of the Diſtraction of the Country, invaded 1655. Poland with an Army like a Torrent, the Unitarians too readily ſubmitting to the Conqueror's Protection, and expreſſing ſome indecent Zeal upon that Occaſion, (when Caſimir recover'd his Loſſes) were, by a Royal Edict confirm'd by the Diet of War-
1658. ſaw, baniſh'd the Kingdom upon Pain of Death; whereupon ſome renounced their former Errors for Fear of Baniſhment, and others were diſpers'd through Hungary, Holland, and any other Places, where they could find a favourable Reception.

1609. IN Holland, the Notions of the Calviniſts, about the Doctrines of Grace, and the Decrees of Almighty God, had given ſuch Diſguſt to ſome of a contrary Perſuaſion, that they preſented to the States the Reaſons of their Diſlike of them, (for which they were called Remonſtrants) and, in the Heat of the Diſpute, fell a little too unwarily into the Reaſonings of Socinus; which, when the Synod of Dort cenſured with great Rigour and Severity, they were provoked to ſuch a Degree, that 1618. they rejected the Synod's Authority; and, though of different Perſuaſion in Point of 1656. the Trinity, entered into Communion with the Socinians. In England, the Doctrine
1547. of the Trinity was, at the Beginning of the Reformation, as much enquired into, as in other Nations; but the Number of the Arians was but few, and their Principles ſo generally deteſted, that (though the Diſcipline of thoſe Times was certainly very rigorous) we meet but with two Perſons, that were executed for Hereſy; one for denying the Divinity of Chriſt, and the other for aſſerting, that his Fleſh was not of the Subſtance of the bleſſed Virgin. What the ſubſequent Sentiments of the Nation were, the Church's Liturgy, ſo often reviſ'd and examin'd, and ſtill retaining its Collects and Doxologies entirely repugnant to the Arian Hypotheſis, as well as the Articles of Religion, drawn up by the Biſhops, ratified by Parliament, and required to be ſubſcribed by the inferior Clergy, are a certain and ſtanding Monument. And though there was, no doubt, a great Mixture of Arianiſm among the Tenets of the Anabaptiſts and Browniſts, and other wild Sectaries; yet it never much appear'd, till within or near the Time of Cromwell's Uſurpation.

1644. IT was much about this Time, that John Biddle, a School-Maſter in Glouceſter, began to make an open Profeſſion of his Hereſy; which, in a great Meaſure, agreed with the Socinian Scheme, except that, with the Pneumatomachi of Old, he denied the Divinity of the Holy Ghoſt, aſſerting, that he was no more than Chief among the Angels: But the Impiety of his Opinions was, even by thoſe Times, accounted ſuch, that he was twice committed to Priſon for them; and when, upon his ſeveral Releaſements, he ſtill continued to propagate his Hereſy, he was, after the Reſtoration, once more committed for them, and died under his Impriſonment, leaving behind him a Sect, who took, from him, the Name of Biddellians, though that was ſoon loſt in the more common Appellation of Socinians, or, what they rather chuſe to be called, Unitarians.

1669. IT was not long after this, that Sandius publiſhed his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, manifeſtly calculated for the Service of the Arian Cauſe, and to perſuade his Readers, that, till the Time of the Nicene Council, the Catholicks were of the ſame Sentiments with Arius and his Followers, and ſuch as differed from them were account-1685. ed Hereticks; which gave Occaſion to an excellent Defence of the Nicene Faith, drawn up by the learned Biſhop Bull, and was followed by his other Treatiſe of the Judgment of the Catholick Church, concerning the Neceſſity of believing Chriſt's Divinity, in Oppoſition to Epiſcopius, and his Remonſtrant Brethren.

1690. THE Boldneſs and Increaſe of Hereſy, ſoon after the Revolution, gave Occaſion to [k] a great Divine to write his Vindication of the Doctrine of the holy and ever-bleſſed Trinity; but, by uſing ſome novel Terms in Explication of this great Myſtery, he was, in the Judgment of ſome, chargeable with Tritheiſm; nor did [l] the other eminent Divine, that animadverted upon him a little too ſeverely, eſcape, in the Opinion of others, (though he certainly made uſe of Catholick Expreſſions) the Imputation of Sabellianiſm. However this be, 'tis certain that the Socinians made great Advantage of

of this Contention, boaſting that the Church was divided between real and nominal Trinitarians; the latter of which agreed ſo well with their Sentiments, that they offered themſelves ready to ſubſcribe to Doctrines thus expounded. And in this Situation continued the Controverſy, until the Arian Scheme, a very few Years ago, was revived again with great Freedom and Aſſurance: But what Topicks have been uſed to recommend and enforce it, as well among the Members of the eſtabliſhed Church, as thoſe that diſſent from it; and what Arguments have been employ'd to beat it down and deſtroy it, ſo that it ſeems now to lie as it were expiring; theſe are Matters of Fact too freſh in every one's Memory to need a particular Recital. 1708.

THUS we have brought down the Trinitarian Controverſy to our own Times: And from the whole Account may obſerve, that the Church has all along aſſerted the real and diſtinct Subſiſtence of three Perſons in the Godhead; that each of theſe, by himſelf, has been always acknowledged to be truly Divine, and poſſeſſed of Perfections, that are inſeparable from the Nature of God; that notwithſtanding this, the Unity of the Godhead has been conſtantly maintained, and therefore accounted for in this wiſe, viz. by referring the ſecond and third Perſons to the firſt, as their Head and Origin, from whom they are eternally derived, and with whom they are eſſentially and indiviſibly united. This is the Catholick Faith: And though in ſeveral Ages of the Church, it has met with ſtrong Oppoſition, yet ſuch has been the Force of Truth, and the clear Evidence of Scripture on its Side, that it has every where prevail'd and prov'd victorious: And 'tis no ſmall Argument of its being a Doctrine ſent from God, and bleſſed by his Protection, that it has all along maintained its Ground, though it has had the Wit and Malice of Men combined againſt it. It is a Matter therefore deſerving our higheſt Gratitude, that this Knowledge of the Divine Nature has deſcended to us pure and uncorrupted, and what ought to be our utmoſt Care and Concern, [m] to preſerve this moſt valuable Depoſitum, which has been delivered to us, through the Ages that are paſt, worſhipping the Unity in Trinity, and collecting the Trinity into the Unity; all royal, all adorable, poſſeſs'd of the ſame Throne and Glory, above all Worlds, and before all Times, uncreated, inviſible, inacceſſible, incomprehenſible, which alone can underſtand its own Nature and OEconomy, but is equally by us, and without any Difference, to be worſhipped and adored.

PART II.

Of the Decrees of GOD, and the Works of Creation and Providence.

CHAP. I.

Of the DECREES of GOD.

WE have hitherto conſidered the Exiſtence of God, his Nature, and Attributes, and the Manner of his ſubſiſting in a Trinity of Perſons; and come now to contemplate him in his Works, his viſible Works of Creation and Providence, which comprehend all the reſt. But becauſe it is reaſonable to believe, that God does nothing, without previouſly deliberating and thence reſolving upon what his infinite Wiſdom perceives to be beſt; which Reſolves have obtained among Divines the Name of Decrees; it may not be amiſs (before we proceed to the Conſideration of his outward Actions) to premiſe ſomething concerning theſe Decrees, which are accounted the inward Operations of the Divine Mind. I ſay, premiſe ſomething, [a] for I take it to be great Folly to pry too buſily into the Counſels of God, which we call hidden, and yet ridiculouſly confute that Epithet, by pretending to know them.

The Decrees of God, what.

THE Decrees of God [b] then (according to the Definition of ſome, that have treated on the Subject) are the Acts of his Free-Will, or the wiſe and immutable Purpoſes of his Mind, concerning ſuch future Things, as are Subject to his Power, and may either be done, or left undone, accordingly as he thinks fit. For this Reaſon, they are called [c] ſometimes the Will, and ſometimes the [d] Counſel of God, a Term, that is never applied to natural and neceſſary Things, but ſuch only as proceed from the Efficacy of free Agents: And they are ſo called, with Analogy to the Counſels and Determinations of Men, only with this Difference; [e] that whereas the the Reſolves and Counſels of Men, by reaſon of the Blindneſs and Impotence of their Underſtanding, are attended with long and tedious Diſquiſitions, before they come to a final Concluſion, the Purpoſes of God ſpring from his Mind, in one ſingle Act, and are all conſidered and concluded on in an Inſtant.

THOSE indeed, that would make the Decrees of God (as moſt of the Schoolmen do) entirely and identically One with his Eſſence, deſtroy his Freedom in ſuch Decrees, and make them the Effects, not of deliberate Choice, but of the moſt abſolute Neceſſity; ſince, if God's Eſſence be neceſſary, (as all, that think worthily of him, muſt allow it is) and his Decrees be the ſame with it, then muſt they both have abſolutely one and the ſame neceſſary Foundation. 'Tis no hard Matter, however, to diſtinguiſh between the Decrees and the Eſſence of God, ſince theſe are the free Effects of the Divine Will, various, and different from one another, and when once executed, ceaſe to be; whereas the Divine Nature is not only One, in the moſt ſimple Manner, but eternally the ſame, without the leaſt Change or Contrariety. That they are not the Eſſence of God.

FOR the ſame Reaſon ſome have imagined that the Decrees of God are not eternal, in the ſame Senſe that his Eſſence is; becauſe they are the Effects of the Divine Will, and, conſequently, muſt be poſterior to their Cauſe. Though therefore they allow, that God, before the Foundation of the World, did determine to create, conſerve, and govern it, in the Manner we now perceive he does; that he did determine, from all Eternity, to ſend Chriſt upon Earth, to be a Propitiation for the Sins of Mankind; to preſcribe them Laws for the Government of their Lives, and to eſtabliſh theſe Laws upon the Sanction of Rewards and Puniſhments, which they call general Decrees; yet they cannot but believe, that God, as a wiſe Governor, reſerved to himſelf a Liberty of determining ſome Things ſpecially, as Occaſions preſented themſelves: And therefore they ſay, that, ever ſince the Foundation of the World, he has been making freſh Decrees, as he ſees Mankind behave; or (what is the ſame Thing) applying his general Decrees to particular Purpoſes; for if every Thing were eternally determined, without any Poſſibility of Variation, what Profit have we if we pray unto him, ſay they, upon any Occaſion; ſince he himſelf, like the Jupiter of the Poets, is unhappily bound up by an inſuperable Neceſſity? Whether they are eternal.

WHETHER the Decrees of God are all abſolute, or whether ſuch, as relate to his Dealings with Mankind, have a Condition annexed, on the doing or neglecting of which their Execution is ſuſpended, has been a Matter of great Debate among Divines. The Lutherans, and others, who plead for conditionate Decrees, tell us, that the Scriptures abound with Examples in Favour of their Opinion; that God's Words to Cain, [f] If thou doeſt well, ſhalt thou not be accepted? But if thou doeſt not well, Sin lieth at thy Door; that his Words to the People of Iſrael, [g] If ye will obey my Voice indeed, and keep my Covenant, then ſhall ye be a peculiar Treaſure unto me above all People; and thoſe, by the Mouth of his Prophet, [h] If ye be willing and obedient, ye ſhall eat the Good of the Land; but if ye refuſe and rebel, ye ſhall be devoured by the Sword, imply, at leaſt, thus much, that God's Intentions of Love or Hatred to Mankind, depend upon their good or ill Behaviour. In the Caſe of Eli's ſinfully indulging his Sons, [i] I ſaid, indeed, that thy Houſe, and the Houſe of thy Father, ſhould walk before me for ever; but now the Lord ſaith, be it far from me; for them that honour me, I will honour, and they that deſpiſe me ſhall be lightly eſteemed; In this Caſe, Saul's ſacrificing contrary to God's Command, [k] Thou haſt done fooliſhly, ſays Samuel to him; for the Lord would have eſtabliſhed thy Kingdom upon Iſrael for ever, i. e. by a former Decree, but now thy Kingdom ſhall not continue: In both Caſes, ſay they, 'tis apparent that the Decree was conditional, and that God reverſed it upon their Diſobedience and Miſbehaviour: [l] If the Wicked will turn from all the Sins that he hath committed, all his Tranſgreſſions ſhall not be mentioned unto him; in his Righteouſneſs, that he hath done, ſhall he live; and, on the other Hand, if the righteous Man turn from his Righteouſneſs, all his Righteouſneſs ſhall not be mentioned unto him; in his Sin, that he hath ſinned, ſhall he die. This is the ſtanding Condition, ſay they, of Man's Predeſtination in the Old Teſtament, and in the New: [m] If ye live after the Fleſh, ye ſhall die, but if ye, through the Spirit, do mortify the Deeds of the Body, ye ſhall live; [n] if thou ſhalt confeſs with thy Mouth the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and believe with thine Heart, that God hath raiſed him from the Dead, thou ſhalt be ſaved; [o] if we be dead with Chriſt, we ſhall alſo live with him; if we ſuffer, we Whether abſolute or conditional.

ſhall alſo reign with him; if we deny him, he alſo will deny us; the Conditions are much the ſame. So that the Decrees of God, relating to Man, depend always upon a certain Condition, and the Performance of it is the Cauſe of their Execution.

THE Calviniſts, who, on the contrary, are great Advocates for the Abſoluteneſs of God's Decrees, tell us, in Anſwer to this, [p] that theſe Paſſages in Scripture, which, they acknowledge, imply a Condition, do not relate to the Decrees, but only to the Threats and Promiſes of God, which are quite different Things; and thence they proceed to blame the contrary Opinion, as reflecting Diſhonour upon the Divine Attributes, by leaving God in Suſpence, as it were, and waiting to ſee what the Man will do, before he paſſes a firm and irrevocable Decree; which, according to them, implies a Want of Power and Preſcience in God, and bears very hard upon ſome other Divine Perfections.

TO this the Maintainers of the former Opinion reply, that [q] it makes no great Difference, whether the foregoing Teſtimonies of Scripture relate to the Decrees, or only to the Threats and Promiſes of God. The Difference between God's Threats and Promiſes, ſay they, and what we call his Decrees, is chiefly this,——That the latter, for the moſt part, are ſecret and unknown, whereas the former are open and revealed to all, that are acquainted with the Word of God. A Promiſe, ſay they, is nothing elſe, but the Declaration of a Man's Will to confer ſome Good; and a Threat is likewiſe a Declaration of his Will to inflict ſome Evil upon another Perſon. Now Will and Decree in God is, in a Manner, one and the ſame Thing; and therefore if his Threats and Promiſes (by which we come acquainted with his Will) do not give us true Intelligence of the Purport of his Decrees, we are utterly at a Loſs to come to the Knowledge of them any other Way; for, [r] who hath known the Mind of the Lord? Or, who hath been his Counſellor? But now, if his Promiſes and Threats (in Conjunction with his Precepts) are the true Indications of his Decrees, then muſt it follow, that conditionate Threats and Promiſes are no ways conſiſtent with an abſolute Decree; ſince, upon the Suppoſition that they are, God muſt neceſſarily offer Salvation to ſome, under the Condition of believing, whom he had reprobated by his abſolute Decree; and threaten others with Death and Damnation, upon the Account of Infidelity, whom, by the ſame Decree, he had elected to Salvation; neither of which can have any favourable Aſpect upon the Truth and Sincerity of God, beſides the Inſignificancy which they give to all the ſolemn Sanctions of his Will. They own therefore, that, when God preſcribes a Law to Men, under the Sanction of Rewards promiſed, and Puniſhments threatened, he does place himſelf, as it were, in Suſpence, expecting whether Man will obey the Law or not, before he decrees to him either Reward or Puniſhment; but then they think, that they have the Countenance of Scripture for this, and even that God intimates as much himſelf, when he tells us, [s] I looked that it ſhould bring forth Grapes, and it brought forth wild Grapes; [t] I ſtand at the Door and knock, if any Man hear my Voice; and again, [u] O that there were ſuch an Heart in them, that they would fear me, and keep all my Commandments always, that it might be well with them, and with all their Children for ever! For, tho' theſe Places are not to be underſtood of Expectation or Waiting, properly ſo called, which always implies an Uncertainty in the Event; yet thus much they evince, that there is ſomething in God analogous to ſuch an Expectation; which could never be, unleſs he could be ſaid to ſuſpend his irrevocable Decree concerning a Man, whoſe Obedience he waited for: And this they imagine (beſides its Conſiſtency with the Power, and Preſcience, and Majeſty of God) is ſuch a glorious Manifeſtation of his Goodneſs, and Long-ſuffering, and other endearing Attributes, as deſerves to be admitted into their Hypotheſis.

The Order of them.

WHETHER of theſe Opinions come nearer the Truth, we ſhall have Occaſion to determine hereafter: At preſent we have nothing more to remark concerning the Divine Decrees, as they relate to Mankind, but only the Order, into which ſome have thought fit to digeſt them. [x] They ſuppoſe then, that when God was about to create a World, he took into his Conſideration the Ideas of all poſſible Worlds, and at laſt concluded upon the preſent Syſtem, as, taking it all together, the moſt perfect: And, upon this Suppoſition, they proceed and tell us, that the firſt Decree concern'd the Creation of the World, and Man more eſpecially, as the Head and Governor of all other Creatures; the ſecond, the Conſervation and Government of the World, and particularly of Man, together with the Law proper to be preſcribed, for the Trial of

of his Obedience; the third, the Permiſſion of Man's Fall, or God's not preventing it by his Almighty Power; the fourth, the Miſſion of Chriſt into the World, in Caſe Adam, or any of his Poſterity ſhould tranſgreſs the appointed Law; the fifth, the various Diſpenſations of Divine Grace, from Adam to Moſes, and from Moſes to JESUS CHRIST; the ſixth, the Call of Mankind by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and other Preachers of the Goſpel, thro' Faith unto Salvation, and the Aſſiſtance of Grace ſufficient for that End; the ſeventh, the Election, Juſtification, Adoption, and (upon their Perſeverance) Glorification of the Faithful; and, on the contrary, the Reprobation of Unbelievers, their Dereliction in Blindneſs and Ignorance, and (upon their final Impenitence) everlaſting Perdition. As to the ſpecial Decrees, comprehended under this laſt general one, there is no Reaſon (as ſome imagine) to believe, that they were made before the Creation of the World; it being much more equitable to ſuppoſe, that God defers making any fixt Decree concerning particular Men, until he ſees the Thread of their Lives, either in a Courſe of Obedience or Diſobedience, quite run out.

AFTER all, it is to be obſerv'd, that there is no firſt or laſt in the Mind of God; and therefore this ſuppos'd Order of his Decrees is only accommodated to the Method of our conceiving them: [y] Nor can their Opinion be much amiſs, who ſuppoſe, that God, having view'd and examin'd all poſſible Syſtems, came at length to approve of the preſent; and thereupon made one Decree once for all, viz. a Decree to create ſuch a World, as he had then in his Thoughts, which equally includes all particular Decrees, and puts an End to that imaginary Order, which ſome Men ſo zealouſly contend for.

SECT. I.

Of the DOCTRINE of PREDESTINATION, and an Hiſtorical View of the CONTROVERSY.

"PREDESTINATION, according to the Senſe of the Church of England, is "the everlaſting Purpoſe of God, whereby (before the Foundations of the "World were laid) he hath conſtantly decreed, by his Counſel, ſecret to us, to de- "liver from Curſe and Damnation thoſe, whom he hath choſen in Chriſt out of "Mankind, and to bring them by Chriſt unto everlaſting Salvation, as Veſſels made "to Honour." Our Church, out of her great Tenderneſs, makes no mention of the Veſſels fitted for Diſhonour; but other Churches have carried the Matter farther, and ſay, that, beſides the Predeſtination to Life, there is a Predeſtination of a great Part of Mankind to everlaſting Miſery, antecedent to their Births, and without any Conſideration of their Actions; tho' others will have both their Election and Reprobation depend upon God's Foreſight, in what Manner each Man would behave in this preſent Life.

THE Supralapſarians (ſo called, as I conceive, becauſe they place the Loſs and Condemnation of a great Part of Mankind in the Decree of God, which was antecedent to the Fall of Adam) think that God, in every Thing he does, has nothing in Conſideration, but his own Glory: [z] That, with this Intent, he made the World, put a Race of Men in it, and conſtituted them under Adam, as their Head and Original: That he decreed Adam's Sin, the Lapſe of his Poſterity, and Chriſt's Death; together with the Salvation or Damnation of ſuch Men, as ſhould be moſt for his Glory: That to thoſe, who were to be ſaved, he decreed to give ſuch efficacious Aſſiſtance, as ſhould certainly put them in the Way of Salvation; and to thoſe whom he rejected, he decreed to give ſuch Aſſiſtances and Means only, as ſhould render them inexcuſable; and that all Men do continue in a State of Grace, or of Sin, and ſhall be ſaved, or damned, according to that firſt Decree; without any Conſideration had either to their Obedience or Diſobedience, merely to manifeſt his Grace and Mercy in thoſe that are ſav'd, and, in thoſe that are condemn'd, the Abſoluteneſs of his Power and Juſtice.

THE Sublapſarians are of Opinion, that Adam, having ſinned of his own free Choice, and his Sin being imputed to all his Poſterity, God did conſider Mankind, thus loſt, with an Eye of Pity; and, having determined to reſcue a great Number of

of them out of this loſt Condition, decreed to ſend his Son to die for them; to accept of his Death on their Account; and to give them ſuch Aſſiſtances, as ſhould be effectual to convert them to him, and to make them perſevere unto the End: But, as for the reſt, whether Infants or Adult, whether Heathens or Chriſtians, he fram'd no poſitive Act concerning them, only he left them in their laps'd Condition, without intending, either that they ſhould partake of the Benefit of Chriſt's Death, or of efficacious and perſevering Aſſiſtance.

THE Arminians and Remonſtrants think, that God intended to create, and to deal with Mankind according to the Uſe, that they ſhould make of their Liberty: That foreſeeing how every one would uſe it, he did therefore decree all Things, that concerned them in this Life, together with their Salvation and Damnation in the next: That Chriſt died for all Men; that ſufficient Aſſiſtance is given to every one; but every one being left to his own Opinion, whether he will make a proper Uſe of it or no, his Salvation or Deſtruction is only imputable to himſelf.

THE Socinians deny the certain Preſcience of future Contingencies, and therefore think, that the Decrees of God from all Eternity were only general; that ſuch as believe, and obey the Goſpel, ſhall be ſaved; but that ſuch, as live and die in Sin, ſhall be damn'd: That there were no ſpecial Decrees made at firſt concerning particular Perſons; but are only concluded on, from Time to Time, as Men come into the World, and God obſerves they acted their Part in it: That Man is not by Nature ſo corrupt, as ſome pretended, nor ſtands in ſuch Need of Spiritual Aſſiſtance; but may by his own Strength make himſelf good, and, if he be not wanting to himſelf, to work out his own Salvation. Theſe are the chief Opinions, that, in every Age of the Church, under one Denomination or other, have been current in the World; and it may not here be an improper Work, to enquire a little into the Riſe, and ſeveral Gradations of them.

An Account of the Controverſy in the firſt Ages.

IN the firſt Ages of Chriſtianity, the Gnoſticks fancied, that the Souls of Men were of different Ranks, and that they ſprung from different Principles, or Gods, that made them: Some were carnal, and devoted to Perdition, ſome ſpiritual, and certainly to be ſaved, and others animal, or of a middle Order, either capable of Happineſs or Miſery. In Oppoſition to this, Origen aſſerted, that all Souls were by Nature equally capable of being good or bad, and that the Difference among Men aroſe merely from the Freedom of the Will, and the various Uſes they made of it, whereby they became capable of Rewards or Puniſhments from the Hands of God. Pelagius, a Scottiſh Monk, and in great Repute at Rome both for his Learning and Strictneſs of Life, was a Diſciple of Origen, and carried theſe Doctrines further than the Greek Churches had done; for he aſſerted the entire Liberty of the Will, and withal denied, that we had ſuffered any Harm by the Fall of Adam, or that there was any Neceſſity for inward Grace and Aſſiſtance. St Auſtin had ſaid many Things on the Side of Liberty in his Diſputes with the Manichees, but he hated Pelagius's Doctrine, becauſe he thought it aſſerted a ſacrilegious Liberty, and therefore ſet himſelf up to decry it, and to vindicate the Neceſſity of ſupernatural Aid, with the utmoſt Vehemence. Caſſian (a Diſciple of St Chryſoſtom, but now remov'd from Conſtantinople to Marſeilles, about the Time that the Diſpute was hot) in order to accommodate the Difference, took a middle Way. He maintained, that all Things were decreed and done, according to the Preſcience of God, in which all future Contingencies were foreſeen; he aſſerted an inward Grace, but ſubject to the Freedom of the Will, inſomuch that the firſt Converſion of the Soul was merely the Effect of its own free Choice, ſo that he denied all preventing Grace, which afterwards came to be the peculiar Diſtinction of thoſe, that were afterwards called Semi-Pelagians. St Auſtin, being informed of his Opinion, wrote againſt it. Fauſtus Vicentius and others defended Caſſian; while Proſper and Fulgentius, and others vindicated St Auſtin: And in this State continued the Controverſy, when the Ruin of the Roman Empire, and the Diſorders that the Weſtern Provinces fell under by their new and barbarous Maſters, occaſioned a great Decay of Learning in thoſe Ages. After this Time, as there aroſe few Writers of any Note, St Auſtin's great Labour and Piety, and the many vaſt Volumes, he had left behind him, gave him ſo great a Name, that none durſt conteſt [a] what had been

[a] The chief Difference between St Auſtin's Doctrine, and that of the Sublapſarians, conſiſts in this, — that he, ſuppoſing an inward Regeneration to accompany the Sacrament of Baptiſm, made a Difference between the Regenerate and the Predeſtinate, which theſe do not: And he ſuppoſed farther, that Perſons, thus regenerate, might have all been ſo copiouſly and zealouſly defended by him, though ſuch a clear Thread of good Senſe, and ſuch an high Strain of Piety ran through Caſſian's Collations, as made them be admir'd by all that read them.

In the Popiſh Churches.

WHEN the State of Learning began to revive, and School-Divinity was come into great Credit, Thomas Aquinas, who was counted the chief Glory of the Dominican Order, aſſerted all St. Auſtin's Doctrine, and added this one Poſition to it,—that, as God's Providence extended itſelf to every Thing, it immediately concurred in the Production of our Thoughts, Motions, and Actions; and, by a phyſical Influence pre-determined our Wills to all Things, whether good or bad; but without being the Author of Sin, as he ſhews at large. Scotus, who was no leſs the Glory of the Franciſcan Order, denied this Pre-determination, aſſerting the Freedom of the Will; and Durandus denied this immediate Concourſe of God to all human Actions; but in this he had very few Followers.

WHEN Luther began to form his Opinions into a Body, he clearly ſaw, that nothing did ſo plainly deſtroy the Doctrine of Merits and Juſtification by good Works, as St. Auſtin's Doctrines. He found likewiſe many expreſs Authorities in his Works, againſt moſt of the Corruptions of the Roman Church; and being of an Order, that carried his Name, and was much accuſtomed to read and reverence his Works, it is no Wonder that he, without any ſtrict Examination of the Matter, eſpouſed all his Opinions. Moſt of thoſe of the Church of Rome, that wrote againſt him, ſeem to be of a contrary Perſuaſion; and though the Doctrines of St. Auſtin were at firſt received by the whole Order of the Jeſuits, and Bellarmine formed himſelf upon them; yet, in a very ſhort Time, they all came over to the other Hypotheſis, which differed from the Semi-Pelagians only in this, that it allowed of a preventing Grace, but ſuch, as was ſubject to the Freedom of Man's Will. Hereupon great Complaints were made of their Defection from what had been eſtabliſhed, and many Conferences were held at Rome, about what was the Doctrine and Tradition of the Church in this Regard; but when every one expected a final Deciſion, all Sides were commanded to be ſilent, and to quarrel no more upon thoſe Heads.

ABOUT forty Years after this, Janſenius, a Doctor of Louvain, being a zealous Diſciple of St. Auſtin, and ſeeing the Progreſs, that the contrary Opinions were making, publiſhed a voluminous Syſtem of St. Auſtin's Doctrine, in all the ſeveral Branches of the Controverſy, and not only ſet forth the Pelagians and Semi-Pelagians, in very black Colours, but compared the Doctrines of ſome modern Innovators with theirs. The Book was received by the whole Party with great Applauſe, but, at Rome, it was firſt prohibited, only as a Violation of that Silence which the Pope had enjoined; but afterwards, Articles were picked out of it, upon which it was condemned, and all the Clergy of France required to ſign its Condemnation. Hereupon enſued a very extraordinary Queſtion concerning the Pope's Infallibility in Matters of Fact; one Side affirming, that the Pope, having condemned theſe Articles as Janſenius's Opinion, the Belief of his Infallibility obliged them to conclude, that they were in his Book; while the other, with great Truth, maintained, that neither Popes nor Councils were ever yet eſteemed infallible in Matters of Fact: At laſt a new Ceſſation of Hoſtilities, upon theſe Points, was reſolved on; but the Hatred continues, and the War ſtill goes on, though ſomewhat more covertly, than it did before.

And in the Reformed.

IN the Reformed Churches, the like Contentions have all along happened: Luther, as was ſaid, ſet out with the Doctrines of St. Auſtin, but it was not long before he is reported to have changed his Mind; and, ſince his Time, the Lutherans have gone ſo entirely into the Semi-Pelagian Opinions, that they will neither tolerate, nor hold Communion with any of another Perſuaſion. Calvin not only taught St. Auſtin's Doctrine, but ſeemed to go on to the Supralapſarian Scheme, which was more openly eſpouſed by Beza, and is generally followed by moſt of the Reformed Churches abroad.

IN England, our firſt Reformers were generally for the Sublapſarian Hypotheſis; but Perkins, and others, aſſerting the Supralapſarian Points, Arminius, a Profeſſor in Leyden (and from whom the Followers of his Sentiments derived their Appellation) wrote againſt him; upon which Gomarus and he had many Diſputes, and all Grace, except that of Perſeverance; but being not predeſtinated, they were certain finally to fall away, and to forfeit the Grace of Regeneration. In other main Points, ſuch as the Abſoluteneſs of the Decree, the Extent of Chriſt's Death, the Efficacy of Grace, and the Certainty of Perſeverance, there is no mighty Difference between them.

their Opinions bred great Diſtraction over all the United Provinces, till at length a great Synod met at Dort, (to which Divines were ſent from England, as well as other Churches) which condemned the Tenets of Arminius, but the Difference between the Supralapſarians and the Sublapſarians was not meddled with. What contributed to the Condemnation of the Arminian Doctrine was a political Queſtion, that had ſome time been agitated, and occaſioned a Diviſion of Opinion, viz. Whether the War ſhould be carried on with Spain, or Propoſitions of a Peace entertained. The Followers of Arminius were almoſt all for a Peace, and the others (among whom the Prince of Orange was Chief) were as generally for a War: Hereupon the Aminians were repreſented as Men diſaffected to their Country, and whoſe Opinions inclined them to Popery, and therefore it is leſs Wonder to find them condemned in a Synod, which was convened in a Country, where ſuch Miſrepreſentations of them had been induſtriouſly ſpread.

WHEN theſe Diſputes croſſed the Sea, and came among us, they were ſoon carried to ſo great an Height, that a Proclamation was iſſued out, requiring Divines to preach no longer upon theſe Heads: But, as the Arminian Tenets were greatly encourag'd by Archbiſhop Laud, they very much prevail'd; until, unhappy Diſputes falling in, at that Time, concerning the Extent of the Royal Prerogative, and the Arminians declaring for it, though they were favoured at Court, yet they were cenſured in Parliament, which brought their Doctrine under a very hard Character all the Nation over. The Subverſion of the Government, that aftewards followed, gave a fatal Blow to the Arminian Doctrines. Moſt of the Sectaries, that then prevail'd, embrac'd Calvin's Notions in Point of Predeſtination, and held all other Opinions in great Deteſtation: But when the Government came to be re-eſtabliſhed, the exploded Doctrines reviv'd, and were the kindlier uſed and cultivated, for having ſuffered ſo hardly before. At preſent they are become the general Profeſſion of almoſt all the Clergy of the Church of England, as the others are made the favourite and diſtinguiſhing Opinions of moſt Diſſenters; and upon what Reaſons they ſeverally found their Sentiments, will be the Subject of our next Enquiry.

SECT. II.

A true STATE of the ARGUMENTS on both SIDES.

On the Calviniſts Side, taken from the Nature,

THE Calviniſts, who, as we ſaid, differ little, if at all, from the [b] Supralapſarians, lay down this for a Foundation, that God is eſſentially perfect, and independent in all his Acts, ſo that he can conſider nothing, but himſelf, and his own Glory; that himſelf can only be the End of all his Counſels, and therefore in every Thing he does, can intend nothing but the Manifeſtation of his own Attributes and Perfections; that Creatures in his Sight are nothing; by a ſtrong Figure, they are ſaid to be leſs than nothing; and, if we in our Deſigns, ſay they, make no Account of Ants or Inſects, of Straws or Grains of Sand, there is leſs Reaſon to think that God has any Regard to us, in all that he deſigns and does. This is the great Baſis of their Doctrine: And from hence they proceed to argue,——That there can be no

The Preſcience, certain Preſcience of future Contingents, becauſe Things, that are not certainly to be, cannot certainly be foreſeen; for if they are certainly foreſeen, they muſt certainly come to paſs. It ſeems therefore to imply a Contradiction to ſay, that a Thing may be, or may not be, and yet be certainly foreſeen by God. God cannot foreſee Things, but as he decrees them, and ſo gives them a Futurition; and therefore a Preſcience, antecedent to his Decree, they reject as a Thing impoſſible.

The Decrees, FROM the Preſcience, they go to the Decrees of God, and ſay,——that conditional Decrees are imperfect in their Nature, as ſubjecting the Will and Actions of God to a Creature; that they are Acts in Suſpence, whether they ſhall or ſhall not be, and are conſequently inconſiſtent with infinite Perfection; and that a general Deſire in God, that all Men ſhould be ſaved, looks as if he wiſhed for what he could not not accompliſh, and that his Goodneſs was more extenſive, than his Power. Though therefore the Decree of Reprobation may ſeem ſomewhat ſevere, yet we are not to meaſure the Puniſhment of Sin, ſay they, by our Notions of Juſtice; for God afflicts many good Men very ſeverely, and for many Years together, in this Life, purely for the Manifeſtation of his Glory, and yet none of us think that he is unjuſt: Now, if God may do that for a little Time, which is inconſiſtent with our Notions, and with our Rules of Juſtice, he may certainly do it for a longer Duration; ſince it is as impoſſible for him to be unjuſt for a Day, as for all Eternity.

[b] The Difference between the Supralapſarians and Sublapſarians, as I ſaid before, conſiſts in this,—— that the former aſſert God's Deſtination of ſome Men to Damnation, the other only his Preterition of them. But this is only a Difference in Words, and a ſofter Way of expreſſing the ſame Thing. For in Effect, 'tis all one, whether God deſtinate a Man to Damnation, or do a Thing whereby his Damnation will inevitably enſue: For whomſoever God does not elect, whether we call him reprobated or omitted, 'tis certain that he is excluded from the Grace of God, upon which Excluſion his Damnation neceſſarily follows, becauſe without the Grace of God there is no Salvation. Fiddes's Sermons.

The Providence of God.

FROM the Decrees of God, they proceed to his Providence, and tell us,——that the World was for many Ages delivered up to Idolatry, and, ſince the Appearance of Chriſtianity, Countries of vaſt Extent are ſtill in the ſame ſad Condition; that the State of Chriſtendom, in the Eaſtern Parts of it, is under ſo much Ignorance, and a great Part of the Weſt, under ſo much Corruption, that it muſt be acknowledged the major Part of Mankind has, in all Ages, been left deſtitute of the Means of Grace: Now, if God leaves whole Nations in ſuch Darkneſs and Corruption, while he freely chuſes others to communicate the Knowledge of himſelf to, then we need not wonder, that he ſhould hold the ſame Method with Individuals, that he does with whole Bodies: For the rejecting whole Nations by the Lump, for ſo many Ages, is much more unaccountable, than the ſelecting of a Few, and leaving others in a State of Ignorance and Brutality. This Argument, taken from common Obſervation, becomes much ſtronger, ſay they, when we conſider what the Apoſtle aſſerts, particularly in his Epiſtles to the Romans and Epheſians, even according to the Expoſition of thoſe of the contrary Side. For if God, according to the Purpoſe of his Election, [c] loved Jacob, ſo as to chuſe his Poſterity to be his People, and hated, or rejected Eſau and his Poſterity; and, if by the ſame Purpoſe, the Gentiles were to be grafted upon that Stock, from which the Jews were then to be cut off, then is there plainly an Election of Nations, previous to all other Conſiderations; and if God, as our Saviour [d] tells us, hides ſome Things from the Wiſe and Prudent, and reveals them unto Babes, even for this Reaſon, becauſe it ſeemeth good in his Sight, then is the ſame diſtinguiſhing Favour equally applicable to Particulars.

Election proved from Scripture.

THEY conclude therefore, that, though Chriſt's Death was offered to all Chriſtians, yet intentionally and actually he only died for ſuch, as the Father had, from all Eternity, elected. They cannot think that Chriſt could have died in vain, ſince [e] St Paul ſpeaks of it as a great Abſurdity; and yet had he died for all, he muſt have died in vain, with Relation to the far greater Part of Mankind, that are not to be ſaved by him: And therefore they infer, that he died for none, but ſuch as were elected, and that all thoſe, for whom he died, are certainly ſaved; which they think is implied in our Saviour's Limitation of his Interceſſion, [f] I pray not for the World, but for thoſe that thou haſt given me; for they are mine, and all thine are mine, and mine are thine. Univerſal Words, they own, are uſed concerning the Death of Chriſt; and the Merits of his Blood are ſaid to be a ſufficient Oblation for the Sins of all Mankind: But then theſe Expreſſions, they conceive, are to be underſtood in a qualified Senſe, viz. that no Nation, or Sort of Men are excluded from the Merits of Chriſt's Death, and that ſome of all Kinds ſhall be ſaved by him; but they cannot be extended farther without Imputation upon the Juſtice of God, ſince, if he has received a ſufficient Oblation for the Sins of the whole World, it is not reconcileable to Juſtice, that all ſhould not be ſaved by it; at leaſt, that all ſhould not have the Offer and Promulgation of it, that ſo a Trial might be made whether they would accept of it or not.

An efficacious Grace.

THE ſame they ſay of the Means of Salvation: That, ſince God (according to the Senſe of their Adverſaries) certainly foreſaw what Aſſiſtance would be ſufficient, and what not; it ſeems inconſiſtent with his Holineſs and Truth, to afford any Means, that would prove ineffectual; becauſe his Holineſs muſt needs carry him to do every Thing, in the moſt effectual Way, to make Men good and happy, and his Truth (if he ſincerely deſired the Salvation of all without any latent Purpoſes) muſt have called in his Almighty Power to have effected it. The Grace therefore, ſay they, that we aſcribe to God's Elect, is ſet forth in Scripture by ſuch Figures and Expreſſions, as do plainly denote its Efficacy, and that it does not depend upon us to uſe it, or not uſe it at Pleaſure; and for this Reaſon it is called a [g] Creation, a [h] Regeneration, or new Birth, [i] a Quickening and Reſurrection; God is ſaid, [k] to work in us both to to will and to do; we are ſaid, [l] to be led by the Spirit; to be kept by Grace unto Salvation, and though therefore we could not ſo well reconcile, ſay they, the Efficacy of God's Grace with the Freedom of Man's Will, yet, when theſe two ſtand in Competition, it is but decent to make Abatements on Man's Part, and not on God's. But there is no Need of this. Angels, and Saints in Heaven, ſay they, though they be made perfect in Glory, and are not capable of any farther Reward, yet it cannot be denied, but that they act with a more accompliſhed Liberty, becauſe they ſee all Things in a true Light: And, in like Manner, thoſe, that are predeſtinated to Life, act with as much, and more Liberty, than other Men, though they find a ſecret Inclination infus'd into their Minds, and a certain forceable Conviction ſtamped upon them, determining them to purſue what is acceptable unto God, and therein to perſevere unto their Lives End. And therefore, ſince all depends upon God, and [m] that of his own own Will he begat us; ſince with him is no Variableneſs, nor Shadow of turning; whom [n] he loves he loves unto the End, [o] and to whom he becomes a God, thoſe he will never leave nor forſake; from thence they conclude, that the Purpoſe and Calling of God muſt be without Repentance, and that, though good Men may fall into very grievous Sins, yet of all, that are given by the Father to the Son to be ſaved by him, none ſhall be loſt.

Conſiſtent with Free Will.

UPON the whole Matter, they believe, that God did, in himſelf, and for his own Glory, foreknow ſuch a determinate Number, whom he pitch'd upon to be the Perſons, in whom he would be both ſanctified and glorified; [p] that having thus foreknown them, he predeſtinated them to be holy, according to the Image of his Son; that theſe he called by a particular Call, aſſiſted with an irreſiſtible Grace, juſtified for their Obedience, and will, in the Concluſion, glorify them; but the reſt of Mankind he has predeſtinated to a contrary Doom. And for the Maintenance of all this, they think they have the Countenance of Scripture. For, beſides the famous Text [q] already alluded to, when all Mankind are repreſented in the Hands of God, as [r] Clay in the Hands of the Potter, who, out of the ſame Lump, hath Power to make one Veſſel unto Honour, and another unto Diſhonour; when, to ſilence all Murmuring at ſuch arbitrary Proceedings, the Queſtion is put, [s] nay, but, O Man! who art thou that replieſt againſt God? Shall the Thing formed ſay to him that formed it, why haſt thou made me thus? when it is declared in expreſs Terms, that [t] God will have Mercy on whom he will have Mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth; when on one Hand it is written, [u] that as many believed the Goſpel, as were appointed to eternal Life, and that [x] ſome were recorded in the Book of Life according to God's Purpoſe before the World began: When, on the other Hand, it is written, [y] God has made the wicked Man for the Day of Evil, and that [z] ungodly Men of old were given up to vile Affections; given over to a reprobate Mind, had their Hearts hardened, and their Eyes blinded, being ordained of old to Condemnation; and to ſilence all Objections, when the whole is concluded with this ſolemn Queſtion, [a] what, if God willing to ſhew his Wrath, and to make his Power known, endured, with much Long-ſuffering, the Veſſels of Wrath fitted to Deſtruction? When theſe, and many more Paſſages of the ſame Import, I ſay, occur to them in Scripture, they can hardly refrain thinking, that Reprobation is an abſolute free Act of God, as well as Election, to manifeſt his Holineſs and Juſtice in the one, as well as his Love and Mercy in the other: Beſides the Advantage, that this Doctrine has, of producing a religious Awfulneſs in us, as oft as we look up to God; and Humility, and Self-Annihilation, whenever we look down upon ourſelves.

Their whole Hypotheſis proved from Scripture.

THIS is the full Strength of the Arguments, that the Calviniſts make uſe of, in Defence of their Opinions; and we come now, with an equal Impartiality, to relate, what the Arminians, on the other Side, have to ſay in Vindication of theirs.

The Arminian Side argue from the Attributes of God.

THE Arminians begin with this,——[b] that God is juſt, holy, and merciful; wiſe in all his Counſels, and true in all his Declarations to the Sons of Men, To theſe, ſay they, he makes frequent Appeals; theſe he ſets before us as Patterns for our Imitation; and therefore in theſe his Nature cannot but be anſwerable to the common Notions we have of them, otherwiſe we are bid in vain to imitate, and examine them. And if the Caſe be ſo, then, what can we think of a Juſtice, that condemns us for a Fact, that we never committed, nay, what was committed many Years before we were were born? That makes it its firſt Deſign to be glorified by our being eternally miſerable, and determines us to the Commiſſion of Sins, merely to juſtify the previous Decree of our Reprobation? What can we think of an Holineſs, (which yet in Scripture is ſaid to be of purer Eyes than to behold Iniquity) that by an antecedent Decree fixes our Commiſſion of ſo many Sins, in ſuch a Manner, that there is no Poſſibility for us to avoid them? No one can think, ſay they, that that Man has a true Love for Holineſs, who will do nothing, that is in his Power to promote it in others: How can we then think that God, whoſe Love to Holineſs tranſcends what the moſt righteous Man has for it, has paſſed a Decree from all Eternity, which renders the Want of Holineſs in moſt Men an unfruſtrable Event, and yet eternally condemns them for it? God repreſents himſelf always in Scripture under other Lineaments, [c] as gracious and merciful, ſlow to Anger, and abundant in Goodneſs and Truth. 'Tis often ſaid, and ſaid ſometimes with the Solemnity of an Oath, [d] that he deſires that no Man ſhould periſh, and [e] that as he lives, he takes no Pleaſure in the Death of Sinners: In what Senſe then, ſay they, muſt theſe Words be taken, if we can believe, that, by an abſolute Decree, he did reprobate ſo many of them? If all Things, that happen, do ariſe out of the Decree of God as its firſt Cauſe, then, we muſt believe, that God takes Pleaſure both in his own Decrees, and in the Execution of them; and, by Conſequence, that he takes Pleaſure in the Death of Sinners, even in Contradiction to his moſt ſolemn Declarations in Scripture. Beſides, what can we think of the Truth and Wiſdom of God, and of the Sincerity of thoſe Offers of Grace and Mercy, with the Obteſtations, Exhortations, and Expoſtulations upon them, that occur ſo frequently in Holy Writ, if we can imagine, that, by an antecedent Act, he hath determined that all theſe Things ſhould be ineffectual? Does it become his Wiſdom to quarrel with his People for ſaying, [f] the Fathers had eaten ſour Grapes, and the Childrens Teeth were ſet on Edge, when his Decree had made it the ſad Doom, not of them only, but even of the greateſt Part of Mankind, to die eternally for the Sin of their Forefather Adam; and when the Apple, he had eaten ſo long ago, had ſet all his Childrens Teeth on Edge? Or does it become his Sincerity, to ſeem ſo earneſt in his Calls to them to repent, and to enquire, with ſuch an Appearance of Concern, [g] Why will ye die? Why [h] will ye not return, and live? When he himſelf has paſs'd an Act of Reprobation on them, which makes it impoſſible for them to repent, and turn from the Evil of their Ways, and therefore impoſſible they ſhould live? And yet, if we can but ſuppoſe God to be ſincere in this, he muſt neceſſarily have two Wills, repugnant to each other; the one commanding us our Duty, and requiring us, with the moſt ſolemn Obteſtations, to do it; and the other, putting a fatal Bar in our Way, by decreeing that we ſhould do the contrary: Which ſtill bears hard upon more Attributes than one, conſidering, that the Will for what is good is ineffectual, while the Will, that makes us ſin, is infallible.

From the Freedom of Man's Will.

FROM the Nature of God, they go to the Nature of Man; and him they ſuppoſe poſſeſs'd of ſuch an inward Freedom, as enables him to do, or not to do what he pleaſes; otherwiſe his Actions would neither be good nor evil, neither capable of Rewards or Puniſhments. All Virtue and Religion, ſay they, all Diſcipline, and Induſtry muſt ariſe from this, as their firſt Principle; that there is a Power in us to govern our Thoughts and Actions, and to raiſe and improve our Faculties. To this the whole Tenor of Scripture agrees, ſince it is full of Perſuaſions, Exhortations, Reproofs, Expoſtulations, Encouragements, and Terrors, which were all vain and theatrical Things, if there are no free Powers in us, to which theſe are addreſſed. 'Tis to no Purpoſe, we know, to ſpeak to the Dead, to perſuade the Blind to ſee, or the Lame to walk: and, if we are under the like Impotence, till the irreſiſtible Grace of God comes, what Occaſion is there for all theſe ſolemn Diſcourſes that can have no Manner of Effect upon us? They cannot render us inexcuſable, unleſs it were in our Power to be bettered by them: And to imagine that God gives Light and Bleſſings to thoſe, (whom he all along intended to damn) to make them inexcuſable when they could do them no Good, and to aggravate their Condemnation only, gives us ſuch a ſtrange Idea of God, as our Reverence to his moſt ſacred Majeſty will not ſuffer us to name.

THOUGH therefore it be no eaſy Matter to ſhew how theſe future Contingences, which depend upon the free Choice of Man's Will, ſhould be certain and infallible in the Sight of God; yet this they think proper to reſolve into the infinite Perfection of the divine Mind, and hold it more eligible to reject, what they apprehend to be contrary to the Nature of God, than what they only find above their Capacity to comprehend. They conceive however, that the Preſcience of God does not make Effects certain, becauſe they are foreſeen; but that they are foreſeen, becauſe they are to be; ſo that the Certainty of the Preſcience is not antecedent and cauſal, but ſubſequent and effectual. The divine Preſcience therefore, being only the Knowing all Things that were to come, does not infer a Neceſſity; for if it did, then all human Actions would be neceſſary, and the Freedom of Man's Will deſtroyed; all future Recompences would be diſcarded, and Virtue or Vice become empty Names; ſince there would be no Blame, no Puniſhment, due for doing what we could not help, nor any Praiſe, no Reward imputable, for doing what we could not avoid.

[c] Exod. xxxiv. 6. [d] 2 Pet. iii. 9. [e] Ezek. xxxiii. 11. [f] Ezek. xviii. 2.
[g] Ver. 31. [h] Ver. 23.

And Sufficiency of Grace.

THEY acknowledge indeed, that there is a Difficulty ſitting upon the Diſpenſation of Grace, nor can they conceive the Reaſon of God's not giving all Nations an equal Meaſure of Light, nor putting all Men into equally happy Circumſtances; but ſtill they aſſoil God's Juſtice and Goodneſs in this Reſpect, becauſe he gives to all Men what is neceſſary to the State, he has placed them in, and anſwerable to the Obligations, they are under; and that this Light and common Grace is ſufficient to carry them ſo far, that God will either accept of it, or give them farther Degrees of Illumination. And hence it comes to paſs, that all Men are inexcuſable in the Sight of God, and that he is always [i] juſt and clear, when he is judged; ſince every Man had what was ſufficient; if not to ſave him, yet at leaſt to bring him into a State of Salvation.

Election, how to be underſtood in Scripture.

ALL the Paſſages therefore in the New Teſtament, concerning the Purpoſe, the Election, the Foreknowledge, and the Predeſtination of God, relate, in their Opinion, not to particular Perſons, but to God's Deſign of calling the Gentile World to the Knowledge of the Meſſias. This was a Secret, (though ſome of the Prophets hinted at it) which was then only perfectly revealed, when our Saviour gave his Apoſtles Commiſſion to go, and teach all Nations, and conſequently, to preach the Goſpel to the Gentiles. It proved a Stumbling-Block to the Jews, and was a chief Controverſy between them and the Apoſtles, in the earlieſt Days of Chriſtianity; and therefore it was no Wonder, that St Paul eſpecially, who declares himſelf to be the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, ſhould be very frequent and copious upon theſe Topicks; but there was not that Need for his amuſing the People, in the very Infancy of Religion, with high and unſearchable Speculations, concerning the Decrees of God. They therefore conclude, [k] that all the Paſſages, cited from the ninth Chapter to the Romans, are nothing to the Purpoſe, becauſe they are not deſigned to determine any Thing concerning God's abſolute Decrees of dealing either with Mankind in general, or with particular Perſons, as to their final and eternal State; but only to juſtify his Dealing (as in his Providence he hath done) with the unbelieving Jews, upon their ſtubborn Infidelity and Hardneſs of Heart; and admitting the Gentiles to be his Church, and the ſpiritual Seed of Abraham, upon their Faith, and Submiſſion to the Terms, which he had propoſed for their Juſtification, and Acceptance with him. All which appears, ſay they, from the Recapitulation that is made in the Concluſion: [l] What do we ſay then? Or, what is the Subſtance of what I have intended in this whole Diſcourſe? It is even this, —— [m] that the Gentiles, which (before the Preaching of the Goſpel) followed not after Righteouſneſs, have yet (through Faith) attained unto Righteouſneſs; but the Jews, following after the Law of Righteouſneſs, (or after Righteouſneſs by the Law) have not attained unto Righteouſneſs, becauſe they ſought it not by Faith in Jeſus Chriſt.

BY the like Method of Interpretation, they clear that famous Paſſage, in the eighth Chapter of the ſame Epiſtle, from any Pre-determination in the Divine Will, concerning the Salvation of particular Perſons. [n] We know that all Things work together for Good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his Purpoſe, [o] according to his Purpoſe manifeſted in the Goſpel, i. e. to true Chriſtians: For whom he did foreknow, [p] thoſe whom God, from all Eternity, foreſaw would be, in Time, obedient to his heavenly Call, them he alſo predeſtinated; he determined, upon his Foreſight of their Obedience, that they ſhould be conformed to the Image of his Son, or be like Jeſus Chriſt in his State of Suffering, to which God

[i] Pſal. li. 4. [k] Whitby, upon Election and Reprobation. [l] Ibid. [m] Ver. 30, &c.
[n] Chap. viii. 28, &c. [o] Vid. Curcell. Inſtitut. [p] Fiddes's Sermons, and Whitby on Election and Reprobation.

God was pleaſed to appoint him, that he might be the Firſt-born among many Brethren; or, by his ſuffering firſt, [q] might leave them an Example that they ſhould follow his Steps. Moreover, whom he did predeſtinate, them he alſo called; thoſe, whom he thus deſigned to follow the Example of Chriſt, he actually called to profeſs the Doctrine of the Croſs, and, in Conſequence thereof, to a State of Suffering; and whom he called, them he alſo juſtified; upon their Patience under theſe Sufferings, he approved them as ſincere, (for ſo to juſtify in Scripture, ſignifies no more, than to expreſs our good Liking of any Thing) and whom he juſtified, them he alſo glorified, or will glorify: For an Enallage of Time, whereby that, which is future, is ſpoken of as already done, both Sides are ready here to admit.

ACCORDING to this Explication, they make the Senſe of the Words to run in ſome ſuch Strain as this: "It is the Will of God, that ſuch as love him, and "are admitted into the Chriſtian Covenant, ſhould undergo many Afflictions and "Perſecutions in this World. Thoſe therefore that he foreſaw fitly qualified for "a State of Suffering, he wiſely made Choice of, as the fitteſt Perſons to follow "the Example of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, who was made perfect through Suffering. "To this End he actually, and in his due Time, called them to ſuffer; and they "behaving themſelves under their Sufferings, as became them, were approved and "applauded by God, who will one Day crown their Patience and Fidelity with "Glory unſpeakable." And, to confirm this Interpretation, they obſerve, that the whole Purpoſe of this Chapter is to comfort Chriſtians againſt the Sufferings, they were expoſed to by Reaſon of their Profeſſion; that, to this Purpoſe, the Apoſtle admoniſhes them, that the Spirit, which they had received, was not the [r] Spirit of Fear, (of the Fear of Death, from which they [s] were delivered by the Death of Chriſt) but the Spirit of Adoption, which declared them Heirs of God, and ſuch as were to be glorified with Chriſt after their Sufferings; that this future Glory was a ſufficient Ground of Patience under all their Sufferings, ſince all [t] the Sufferings of this preſent Life were not to be compared to the Glory, that ſhould be revealed; and that, while they continued in this afflicted State, patiently waiting for this Glory, they had the Spirit of God to help their Infirmities, and the Promiſe of God aſſuring them, that all theſe Sufferings ſhould [u] work together for Good to them that loved him.

'TIS endleſs to enter into a Diſcuſſion of all the Paſſages, ſeeming to favour God's abſolute and irreſpective Decrees, that they interpret in this Manner. God's Love to Jacob, and Hatred to Eſau, they apply to their reſpective Poſterity, which he might favour leſs or more, without any Imputation upon his Juſtice, ſince that Favour was no more than of temporary Conſideration. In the ſame Manner is the Compariſon of the Potter's Power over the Clay to be underſtood, only as denoting ſome peculiar Diſtinction of God's Favours to Men in this World, (which he certainly has a Right to beſtow as he pleaſes) and his excluding others from ſharing in the Benefits of them. The Word Elect, ſay they, is of general Acceptation, denoting, in the Old Teſtament, all the Nation of the Jews, and in the New, the whole Body of Chriſtians: The Expreſſion ordained to eternal Life, means only ſuch as are fitted and pre-diſpoſed to it, and that by their own Inclinations, more than any Act of God; and [x] the Phraſe of being written in the Book of Life is Jewiſh, and does not ſignify an abſolute Election of any Perſon to eternal Happineſs, but only the preſent Right of the juſt Perſon (if he continues ſo) to enjoy it after Death.

IN like Manner they obſerve, that the Word ἀδόκιμος, which we render reprobate, (but might as well have been rendered diſapproved) has no Relation in Scripture to any abſolute Decree concerning Man's Damnation, but only to ſuch Actions of Men (corrupted as to Faith and Manners) as cannot, when done, but be diſapproved both by God and Man. Thoſe Gentiles therefore, ſay they, [y] who changed the Truth of God into a Lye, by worſhipping the Creature inſtead of the Creator, are ſaid to be given up to a reprobate Mind, i. e. which could not be approved, but utterly abhorred, both by God and Men, ſince it prompted them to do τὰ μὴ καθήκοντα, Things neither agreeable to Nature or Reaſon. Reprobation, how to be underſtood in Scripture.

THE blinding Men's Eyes, and hardening their Hearts, therefore, muſt not be underſtood of any poſitive Act of God, but only of his permiſſive Will; when he ſuffers Men, abuſing the Liberty he gives them, and the Clemency he ſhews them, to to go in ſuch Courſes, as will naturally darken their Underſtanding, and ſtupiſy their Conſciences. Men blind their own Eyes, and harden their own Hearts; but, by a common Form of Speech, the Act is imputed to God, [z] when, from his Clemency, or the Lenity of his Puniſhments, they take Occaſion to do ſo, tho' the Thing was never in God's Intention; juſt as when an undutiful Child makes an ill Uſe of the Indulgence of his Parents, they are apt to charge themſelves with having ſpoiled and ruined him, though it was the fartheſt Thing in the World from their Thoughts. God has no Need of the Wicked therefore, ſay they, nor has he made them for himſelf againſt the Day of Evil, in ſuch a Senſe, as thoſe Men intend, who ſuppoſe that he made ſome Perſons, with a direct Purpoſe to glorify his Juſtice in the Puniſhment of their Wickedneſs: The Words of Solomon relate to a quite different Purpoſe; they relate to the providential Diſpenſations of God in this Life, and are to be expounded accordingly, viz. "That God can ſerve the "Ends of his Providence by wicked Men, without being the Author of their Wick-"kedneſs; and make them the Inſtruments of his Juſtice, to puniſh other wicked "Men, or of his Fatherly Chaſtiſements, in the Day of Evil, i. e. in the Day of "Adverſity, to exerciſe the Faith and Virtues of good Men."

The reſt of their Hypotheſis proved from Scripture.

HAVING thus got over the Scripture-Difficulties, which their Adverſaries are known to object, they proceed to lay down theſe ſeveral Propoſitions:——That Chriſt died for all Mankind; that God deſires the Salvation of all; that he determines no Man to the Commiſſion of Sin, but leaves every one to his own free Choice, without the Coercion of irreſiſtible Grace, or the Neceſſity of final Perſeverance: And for this they think they have the Authority of Scripture to alledge. For when they read it recorded of Chriſt, [a] that he is a Propitiation for our Sins, and not for our Sins only, but for the Sins of the whole World; [b] that he came into the World to ſave Sinners; [c] that by the Grace of God he taſted Death for every Man; and that his Death, as to its Extent, is ſet in Oppoſition to the Sin of Adam; for, [d] as by the Offence of One, Judgment came upon all Men to Condemnation, ſo, by the Righteouſneſs of One, the free Gift came upon all Men to Juſtification; they cannot but conclude, that Chriſt's Death was intentionally of univerſal Benefit. When they perceive the Reaſons of God's Diſpenſations, [e] that he is long-ſuffering to us-ward, not willing that any ſhould periſh, but that all ſhould come to Repentance; and hear him declaring himſelf with ſuch Solemnity, [f] As I live, ſaith the Lord God, I have no Pleaſure in the Death of the Wicked, but that the Wicked turn from his Way and live: Turn ye, turn ye, from your evil Ways; for why will ye die, O Houſe of Iſrael? They muſt needs ſuppoſe (unleſs they will charge God with Fallacy) that his Deſire of Man's Salvation is both ſincere and unlimited. When they hear our bleſſed Saviour complaining, [g] Ye do always reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt; as your Fathers did, ſo do ye; [h] How often would I have gathered you under my Wings, and ye would not? And his Father making the ſame Declaration, [i] What more could have been done in my Vineyard, that I have not done in it, and yet it ſtill brought forth wild Grapes? They cannot but perceive plain Intimations of a Power in Mankind, by which they not only can, but too often do, reſiſt the Motions of Grace: And, laſtly, when they find God, by the Mouth of his Servant Moſes, ſo loudly appealing to their Choice, [k] I call Heaven and Earth to record this Day againſt you, that I have ſet before you Life and Death, Bleſſing and Curſing, therefore chuſe Life; and, by the Mouth of his Holy Prophet, ſo kindly admoniſhing them, that when the Righteous turneth from his Righteouſneſs, and committeth Iniquity, all his Righteouſneſs, that he hath done, ſhall not be mentioned; in his Sin, that he hath ſinned, ſhall he die, with many more Intimations of the like Strain, frequently occurring in the Book of God; they cannot but believe, that a great deal depends upon the Liberty of their Will; that their future Ruin or Felicity is chiefly chargeable upon themſelves; and that, in this State of their Probation, nothing can have ſuch a determining Influence upon them, but that, as a wicked Man may turn to a good Courſe of Life, ſo a good Man may ſometimes fall into a bad one; and therefore they think, that the Apoſtle's Admonition is, at all Times, very ſeaſonable, [l] Let him that thinketh he ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall.

UPON the whole they conclude, that if theſe Poſitions are true, and ſupported by Scripture, then in the contrary Doctrine of abſolute and irreſpective Predeſtination, whether to Life or Death, deſtitute of all real Foundation; beſides the pernicious Effects, Effects, that this Doctrine may chance to have, by making Men careleſs of their Actions, negligent of their Prayers; and, in a ſmall Proceſs of Time, either lulling them into Security, or plunging them into Deſperation.

SECT. III.

Some REFLECTIONS upon theſe different OPINIONS.

WE have hitherto ſtated the Arguments on both Sides in their full Force and Latitude; and ſhall now proceed to make ſome Reflections upon the whole, in order to determine our Sentiments to that Opinion, which ſeems more eligible for us to adhere to; after we have have firſt taken a brief Review, wherein they agree, and wherein they differ.

Wherein they agree and diſagree.

THEY both agree in the Reality of God's Decrees relating to Man's final State, becauſe it is preſumable, that infinite Wiſdom does nothing without previous Determination; but then the Calviniſt ſays, that theſe Decrees are prior to his Preſcience, abſolute, and dependent on the ſole Will of God; whereas the Remonſtrant aſſerts, that they are ſubſequent to the Divine Preſcience, conditionate, and reſpective of the Behaviour of Man. They both agree that theſe Decrees are the ſecret Will of God; but then this ſecret Will (in the Points of Election and Reprobation) is ſometimes contrary to his revealed Will, ſays the Calviniſt, which the Remonſtrant abſolutely denies. They both agree in laying the Baſis of theſe Decrees in the Nature and Attributes of God; but then the Calviniſt makes the Independency, and abſolute Sovereignty; whereas the Remonſtrant thinks it better to make the Juſtice, and Goodneſs, and Holineſs of God, the Foundation thereof. They both agree, that there is mention made in Scripture of the Election of ſome, and the Election of ſome, they both conclude, implies a Rejection of the reſt; but this Election, ſays the Calviniſt, relates to particular Perſons; to Churches and Nations, ſays the Remonſtrant: 'Tis abſolute, and without any Condition at all, ſays the Calviniſt; 'tis upon the Condition of Faith, and Holineſs, and a final Perſeverance therein, ſays the Remonſtrant. They both agree that the Number of theſe Elect will comparatively be but few, but the Calviniſt imputes this to the Divine Decree, which will have it ſo; the Remonſtrant to the Sin and Corruption of Mankind, which make it ſo. They both agree in the Reality of Adam's Tranſgreſſion, but, in the Effects and Imputation of it, they differ; the Calviniſt accounting it a Crime, chargeable upon his Poſterity, and deſerving the Condemnation of ſo many Millions; whereas the Remonſtrant thinks every Crime perſonal, without a ſpecial Compact, and Adam's Poſterity not culpable, without their own Conſent. They both agree in the Merits of Chriſt's Death, and in God's accepting it as a Propitiation for the Sins of Mankind; but the Calviniſt limits the Intention of it to ſuch as are predeſtinated to Life, while the Remonſtrant ſuppoſes that God deſigned the Benefit of it to be extended to all. They both agree in the Diſpenſation of Grace, and other Means of Salvation, ordained by God to help us out of the Corruption of human Nature; but then theſe Means the Calviniſt applies efficaciouſly to none, but the Elect; this Grace he accounts irreſiſtible, and indefectible in thoſe that are called; whereas the Remonſtrant, thinks it conſiſtent with God's Juſtice, in Matters of eternal Salvation, to deal out his Aſſiſtance with a more impartial Hand; to give every Man at leaſt a ſufficient Meaſure thereof, (but what will not be effectual without his own Co-operation) and then leave him to his own Choice, whether he will work out his own Salvation, or not. Laſtly, they both agree, that in the Concluſion of all Things, God's Glory and Honour will be conſpicuous; but then the Calviniſt places his Glory chiefly in the Manifeſtation of his abſolute Power and Dominion; the Remonſtrant in the Diſplay of his Mercy and Goodneſs, and other more amiable Attributes. Both Opinions, in ſhort, have ſome Difficulties, both ſome Advantages attending them, and do, in ſome Meaſure, depend upon the Turn that is given to Mens Minds.

[m] THE Man that has long mixed his Thoughts of God's infinite Perfection with the Notions of abſolute and unchangeable Decrees, of carrying every Thing by a poſitive Will, of doing every Thing for his own Glory, cannot comprehend Decrees depending on a foreſeen Free-Will, a Grace ſubject to it, a Merit of Chriſt's Death that is loſt, and a Man's being at one Time loved, and yet finally hated of God, without being ſhock'd: And, on the other Hand, he, that has accuſtomed himſelf to think often on the infinite Goodneſs and Mercy, the Long-ſuffering, Patience, and Slowneſs to Anger, that appears in God, cannot let the Thought of abſolute Reprobation, of determining Men to Sin, or of not giving them Grace neceſſary to keep them from Sin and Damnation, enter into his Mind without the ſame Horror, that another feels in the Reverſe of all this.

[m] Burnet, on the Articles.

IF ever therefore we would bring our Minds to a right Temper for examining a Controverſy of this intricate Nature, we muſt, above all Things, diveſt them of all that Prejudice and Partiality, which the Courſe of our Education, the Books we have read, and the Company we have kept, are too apt to infuſe, and then, (to determine our Sentiments) our firſt Enquiry muſt be, which of the two Opinions is built upon the truer Foundation, and has fewer Difficulties attending it.

Whether Opinion is better founded.

NOW the Foundation, as we ſaid, that the Calviniſts build their Hypotheſis upon is this,—that God, in all his Dealings with Men, conſiders nothing but himſelf, and his own Glory; whereas the Remonſtrants ſuppoſe that he takes Man's Happineſs all along into his Concern and Deliberation. Let us then ſee whether of theſe Sentiments better comports with the Nature of God. God, we know, as an infinitely perfect Being, muſt be infinitely happy within himſelf; can have no Self-End without himſelf; and, conſequently, the End, for which he requires any Thing from us, or decrees any Thing concerning us, is not, cannot be, any Advantage he expects to reap for it, (becauſe, from all Eternity paſt, he was as compleatly happy, as he can be for all Eternity to come) but merely to do us good. [n] If it be ſaid, that God may act to manifeſt his Glory, viz. the Glory of his Mercy, Juſtice, Holineſs, and Truth; this may be admitted: But then, it muſt be conſidered, that he manifeſts theſe Attributes, either for no Good, or for his own Good, or for our Good. To ſay that he does it for no Good, is to impeach his Wiſdom; to ſay that he does it for his own Good, is to reflect on the Perfection of his Nature; and therefore it remains that he muſt do it for our Good, which is the Thing contended for. 'Tis a vain Imagination therefore, that the great Deſign of any of God's Actions is to be admired and applauded by his worthleſs Creatures, and to gain himſelf an Eſteem and good Word from ſuch creeping Worms as we are. We take too much upon us, if we imagine that the all-wiſe God can be concerned, whether ſuch blind Creatures as we approve or diſapprove of his Proceedings, or that he can really ſuffer any Diminution of his Glory by our Diſlike, or is advanced to Honour, by our Approbation of his Diſpenſations. We detract from his ſelf-ſufficient Majeſty, if we conceive that he can be tickled with Applauſe, or aim at Reputation from us, in his glorious Deſigns: That therefore ſuch, as we, ſhould think well of him, or have due Apprehenſions of thoſe Attributes, by the Acknowledgment of which we are ſaid to glorify him, can be no farther his Concern, than as it ſerves the noble Ends of his great Goodneſs, viz. that theſe Conceptions may engage us to that Affection, to that Imitation of him, and Obedience to him, as tends to the Promotion of our Happineſs.

THE Hypotheſis in this Manner ſetting out wrong, it is not to be wondered at, that the Difficulties, in ſupporting it, are ſo many; and that, whereas the other Opinion is only pinched in one Place, viz. in accounting for God's certain Preſcience of ſuch Contingencies, as depend upon Man's Free-Will, (which yet may be reſolved into the [o] infinite Perfection of the Divine Mind) the Patrons of abſolute Predeſtination are forced to ſet up a ſecret Will in the divine Decrees, which, with all their Art, they cannot reconcile with his revealed Will, that is delivered in his Word; [p] forced to deviſe a certain Compact between God and Adam, (which the Scripture knows nothing of) in order to juſtify the Imputation of his Sin to his Poſterity; and forced to aggravate Adam's Offence to an unreaſonable Degree, in order to vindicate the Decrees enſuing upon that Imputation; are under Difficulties to ſay, why Adam's perſonal Sin was every Man's Sin, and conſented to by every Man's Will, before any Man, but he, had either Will or Being; under Difficulties to tell us, why all Men ſhould be charged with his firſt, more than his following Faults, and have his Guilt imputed to them, more than his Repentance; under Difficulties to deviſe, why God, who is the common Father of all, ſhould (contrary to his Declarations,) become ſo ſtrange a Reſpecter of Perſons, as to make ſome eternally happy, and others eternally miſerable, for no other Reaſon, but to ſhew the Abſoluteneſs of his Will; and (to name no more) under Difficulties, to account for the Reaſon

Reaſon of the Promiſes and Threats, the Cautions and Exhortations, the tender Intreaties and Expoſtulations ſo frequently proceeding from his Divine Mouth, if Mens Doom be fixed before they are born, and all Incitements and Endeavours can be of no Avail.

Whether more agreeable to the Notions of God.

2. ANOTHER Enquiry, proper to be made in this Caſe is, whether of the Opinions repreſent God in a Manner more congruous to the Notions we have of him. The Calviniſts, we obſerved, ſet out with high Conceptions of God's Sovereignty, his abſolute Will, and irreſiſtible Power: The Remonſtrants, on the other Hand, with more favourable Notions of his Juſtice, and Goodneſs, and other moral Perfections; and hence it comes to paſs, that as each Hypotheſis advances, the wider it ſeparates from the other. Let us then ſee whether of theſe Notions of God (for both are undoubtedly true) are more worthy of him, in the Queſtion now before us. [q] God, we know, who is infinitely exalted above all other Beings, can be ſubject to no other Law, but that of his own Perfections. Now the Perfections of God, which lay a Reſtraint upon him, are thoſe, which, for Diſtinction's Sake, we call moral, ſuch as his Wiſdom, and Juſtice, and Goodneſs, and Truth, which, by being eſſential to him, are as much a Law to his Will and Power, as moral Laws are to ours. To ſecure our Minds therefore againſt any injurious Apprehenſions of God, this we may lay down as a moſt neceſſary Rule, that he is ſuch a Being, as can neither will, nor act any Thing, but what his own eſſential Wiſdom, and Goodneſs, and Juſtice do approve; that in all his Decrees, Purpoſes, and Actions, he conſults his moral Perfections, and regulates himſelf by them; and, conſequently, that he neither chuſes nor refuſes, elects nor reprobates, ſaves nor damns, without their full Conſent and Approbation.

IF this be admitted as a Rule, then the Queſtion is, whether he thinks more worthily of God, [r] who knowing that all the laps'd Sons of Adam were equally the Objects of his Pity and Compaſſion, equally capable of his Mercy, and equally his Offſpring, believes, that his Decrees of governing and diſpoſing of them are wholly founded on ſuch an abſolute Will, as no rational or wiſe Man acts by; ſo that he determines of the everlaſting Fate of the Souls, he daily creates, without Reſpect to any Good or Evil done by them, and, conſequently, without any Reaſon, why he puts this Difference between them; and yet afterwards, in all his Revelations made for the Regulation of their Lives, ſuſpends their everlaſting State upon Conditions; or that he hath placed the greater Part of them under an abſolute Decree of Reprobation, which leaves them incapable of Salvation, and then not only bids them ſave themſelves, but invites, encourages, and conjures them to turn to him, when, all the while, he's reſolved they ſhall not, and then eternally torments them for neglecting that Salvation, which he knows they never can attain, without that Grace, which he hath abſolutely reſolved for ever to deny them: Whether this Perſon, I ſay, thinks more worthily of God; or he, who looks upon him as an univerſal Lover of the Souls of Men; that therefore he would have all Men be ſaved, and gives them all Things neceſſary unto Life and Godlineſs, draws them to him with the Cords of a Man, with the Cords of Love, by the moſt alluring Promiſes, and by the Strivings of his holy Spirit; ſwears to them, that he would not they ſhould periſh, warns them of, and conjures them to avoid the Things, that would tend to their eternal Ruin; directs them to the Means, by which they may moſt certainly eſcape it; rejoices more at the Converſion of a Sinner, than at the Righteouſneſs of ninety-nine Perſons, that need no Repentance; and, when all Methods of his Grace are loſt upon them, breaks forth into compaſſionate and melting Wiſhes, that they had known the Things, which did belong to their eternal Peace.

AGAIN, whether he conceives more truly and honourably of God, who thinks, he chuſes his Favourites without Reaſon, and rewards them without any Qualifications, but what he irreſiſtibly works in them; or he, who looks upon him as one, that deals with all Mankind, not according to his, but their own Works, as they are willing and obedient, as they make themſelves fit Objects of his Love; and rewards them, as they improve the Talents he has given them, or hide them in a Napkin. Whether, laſtly, he repreſents God honourably, who believes that by his revealed Will, he hath declar'd he would have all Men to be ſaved, and yet, by an antecedent ſecret Will, would have the greateſt Part of them periſh; he hath impoſed a Law upon them, which he obliges them to obey on Pain of his eternal Diſpleaſure, tho' he knows they cannot do it, without his irreſiſtible Grace; and yet is abſolutely abſolutely bent to with-hold his Grace from them, and then to puniſh them eternally for what they could not do without it; and yet after all aſks, Why will ye die? When wilt thou be made clean? How long will it be, ere this People obey me? Or he, who believes it more agreeable to the Truth and Sincerity of the Divine Nature, to deal plainly with his Creatures, and mean what he ſays; when he lays their Duty before them, ſhews them its Weight, and their Ability to bear it, encourages them to undertake it, promiſes them ſufficient Aid to ſupport them under it, and in the Concluſion (if they hold out to the End) to crown their Labour with eternal Reſt.

The Senſe of Scripture.

3. A FARTHER Enquiry, proper to be made upon this Occaſion, is, which of the two Opinions ſeems to be more agreeable to the genuine Senſe of the Word of God. And this is a Queſtion the harder to be determin'd, becauſe both Sides claim the Authority of the holy Scriptures, and think that their Notions are expreſſly contain'd in them. The Decretaliſts lay great Streſs upon the ninth Chapter to the Romans. They imagine, that [s] God's loving Jacob, and hating Eſau; [t] his hardening the Heart of Pharaoh; [u] his Dealing with Mankind, as the Potter does with his Clay; [x] his arbitrary Diſpenſation of Mercy; [y] his manifeſting his Juſtice in the Veſſels of Wrath, and [z] the Riches of his Glory in the Veſſels of Mercy; together with ſome Implications of the [a] Inſignificancy of any Endeavours in Man, without the Extenſion of efficacious Grace, relate to particular Perſons, and ſtate the whole Caſe of their Reprobation: And, in [b] another famous Paſſage of the ſame Epiſtle, they think they have found out the Golden Chain, as they call it, of Predeſtination to Life, wherein the Decrees and Means of Salvation are ſo inſeparably link'd together, that, whoſoever hath obtain'd the one, muſt neceſſarily be Partaker of the other.

THEIR Adverſaries, on the other Hand, compile all the Paſſages in Scripture, wherein the Impartiality and juſt Dealings of God, his Love to his Offspring, and univerſal Concern for their Souls, his Deſire that all ſhould be ſaved, his ſending his Son to die for all, his affording every Man ſufficient Means, his ſtriving with Sinners for their Converſion, his appealing to their Senſes, their Reaſon, their Choice, and uſing ſo many kind Entreaties and Obteſtations to reclaim them, are ſet forth: And from thence they infer, that, ſince there can be no Repugnancy in the Word of God; ſince their Texts are plain, and their Adverſaries obſcure, the Attributes of God muſt, by all Means, be preſerv'd, and therefore theſe Predeſtinarian Paſſages (as is pretended) muſt come under another Form of Interpretation.

Rules to interpret Scripture.

NOW the chief Rules to be obſerved in the Interpretation of the Holy Scriptures (ſuch, I mean, as are applicable to our preſent Purpoſe) [c] are ſuch as theſe: 1. To judge of the Senſe of a Paſſage by the Deſign of the Writer, and the Scope he propoſes to himſelf. 2. To conſider, whether the Paſſage explain'd in ſuch a Senſe, has any, or no Connection with the preceding, or following Diſcourſe. 3. To compare one Paſſage in Scripture with another, and, from the Compariſon, obſerve what the right Senſe is; and, 4. To remark whether a Paſſage explain'd in ſuch a Senſe, is agreeable to the Analogy of Faith, i. e. whether it be not contrary, either in itſelf, or in the Conſequences that may be drawn from it, to the known Attributes of God, or ſome Article of Faith, eſtabliſhed in other Places of Scripture.

IF then the Deſign of St Paul, in that Chapter to the Romans, was, not to treat of the Doctrine of Predeſtination, but only to vindicate God's Righteouſneſs from any Violation of the Covenant made to Abraham, in rejecting the Jews for their Infidelity, and receiving the Gentiles, that believed in Chriſt into the ſaid Covenant, (as both the Beginning and Concluſion of that Diſcourſe, and [d] ſeveral other Places in that Apoſtle's Writings ſeem to denote) and if, in that famous Paſſage before-mention'd, the Apoſtle's Intent was, not to lay down the Scheme of Mens final Election, but only to encourage Believers, under thoſe ſore Afflictions, which they were to undergo for the Name of Chriſt, from the Conſideration of their being under the Appointment, the Approbation, the Protection, and Retribution of Almighty God; (for ſo the Concluſion immediately following the Words runs, [e] If God be for us, who can be againſt us?) If, I ſay, the Words may be fairly taken in this Senſe, (and herein every Man is to be Judge for himſelf) then have we theſe weighty Reaſons for embracing

[s] Ver. 13. [t] Ver. 17. [u] Ver. 21. [x] Ver. 15. [y] Ver. 22. [z] Ver. 23.
[a] Ver. 16. [b] For whom he foreknew, he alſo did predeſtinate to be conformed to the Image of his Son, that he might be the Firſt-born among many Brethren. Moreover, whom he did predeſtinate, them he alſo called; and whom he called, them he alſo juſtified; and whom he juſtified, them he alſo glorified, Rom. viii. 29, 30. bracing it, viz. that the [f] contrary Conſtruction bears hard upon the Wiſdom of God, to predeſtinate Men, without any Conſideration of their Faith and Obedience, to eternal Life; bears hard upon the Holineſs of God, to leave the greateſt Part of Mankind in ſuch a Condition (and that not occaſioned by their own Fault) wherein they are under a Neceſſity of ſinning; bears hard upon the Juſtice of God, to determine eternally to puniſh Sinners, for their Diſobedience to thoſe Laws, which they were never in a Capacity to obey; and, inſtead of recommending to them his Mercy and Goodneſs, fills their Minds with anxious Thoughts of his cruel Deſigns againſt them, and makes him the Object of their perpetual Terror.

The Senſe of Antiquity.

4. AFTER the Scriptures, our next Enquiry is, what the Senſe of the ancient Fathers was concerning this Queſtion: And herein the Anti-Predeſtinarians have manifeſtly the Advantage; ſince, according to the Confeſſion even [g] of Calvin himſelf, all the firſt Fathers of the Church do unanimouſly agree, [h] that God hath left it in the Power of Man to turn to Vice or Virtue; to believe or not believe; and to chuſe or refuſe Faith and Obedience; that our Happineſs or Miſery depends upon our own Choice; that, by Virtue, we may be God's, and by Wickedneſs, the Devil's Children; and that every one gives Occaſion to his Maker to render him a Veſſel of Honour or Diſhonour. Nay, [i] Voſſius, if we will believe him, declares, that all the Fathers, before St Auſtin's Time, were of Opinion,—that God predeſtinated Men to Life, from a Preſcience, that they would live piouſly, and perſevere unto the End: And therefore Proſper, in his Epiſtle to St Auſtin, confeſſes, [k] that even they, who condemn'd Pelagius, rejected St Auſtin's Doctrine of an abſolute Decree of Salvation, as a mere Novelty: "For, ſays he, many of the Servants of Chriſt, in the City of "Marſeilles, think that what you ſay concerning the calling of the Elect, accord-"ing to Purpoſe, is contrary to the Opinion of the Fathers, and the Senſe of the "Church: They affirm obſtinately, that the Things you gather from St Paul's "Epiſtle to the Romans, were never ſo underſtood by any Eccleſiaſtical Man." And himſelf acknowledges, that, having reviſ'd the Opinions of thoſe, that had wrote before of this Matter, he found almoſt all of them to be of one and the ſame Judgment, viz. that the Purpoſe and Predeſtination of God was according to his Preſcience, and that he therefore made ſome Veſſels of Honour, and others of Diſhonour, becauſe he foreſaw the End of every One, and what would be their Will and Actions under the Divine Aſſiſtance.

The Doctrine of the Church.

5. THE Church of England, it muſt be confeſs'd, (and ſome Regard ſhould be paid to her Authority) has founded [l] her Article upon the Doctrine of St Auſtin. She ſuppoſes Man to be under a Curſe and Damnation, antecedently to Predeſtination, which delivers him from it. She ſpeaks very advantageouſly of the Efficacy of Grace, and makes it the principal Agent in whatever belongs to our ſpiritual Condition. [m] In her other Articles ſhe imputes a great deal to Original Sin, making it deſerve God's Wrath and Indignation; and thinks that the Freedom of Man's Will was ſo ſadly impair'd by the Fall, that he cannot turn himſelf to God: But that, wherein the main Difficulty of the Queſtion lies, viz. whether God's eternal Purpoſe or Decree was made according to what he foreſaw his Creatures would do, or purely upon an abſolute Will, in order to his own Glory, ſhe no where pretends to define, on Purpoſe ([n] as ſome think) not to exclude any, whoſe Sentiments may poſſibly vary in the Expoſition of this Matter, from her Communion.

To ſum up the whole Evidence in one Word. The Remonſtrants have choſe a better Foundation for their Opinion, and, in the Purſuit of it, repreſented God in a more agreeable Dreſs: The Calviniſts have ſtrong Pretenſions to Scripture, but perhaps may be miſtaken in the Interpretation of it. The Remonſtrants have clearly the Advantage, as to the Opinion of the antient Church; but the Calviniſts, it muſt be acknowledg'd, have a much nearer Conformity to the Doctrines of our own. In ſuch abſtruſe Points, each Man, I ſuppoſe, is left to his own Perſuaſion; for no Church, I am ſatisfied, has Authority enough, to make Men [o] believe and hold what is not agreeable to the Doctrine of the Old and New Teſtament, and to what the Catholick Fathers and antient Biſhops gathered from that very Doctrine.

CHAP. II.

Of CREATION in General.

Creation, what, and why we conceive it impoſſible.

AFTER the Decrees of God, we come now to conſider the viſible Effects of them, in the wonderful Works of Creation and Providence. Creation, according to the proper Acceptation of the Word, is the Production of ſomething, which, before that Production, had no Exiſtence, either in Whole, or in Part, either in its Form or Matter, but in reſpect of both was abſolutely nothing: Which, how difficult ſoever in our Conceptions, is not impoſſible to Almighty God. We indeed, becauſe we are only acquainted with the Works of Art and Nature, cannot ſo eaſily imagine how any Thing can be effected without Materials: [a] When we diſcourſe of the Manner, whereby God produced the World, we are too apt to run into the Enquiries of the Epicurean in Tully, [b] Quæ molitio? Quæ ferramenta? Qui vectes? Quæ machinæ? Qui miniſtri tanti operis fuerunt? We look upon God only as an Artificer, that contrives the World firſt into a Platform, and then uſes Inſtruments to erect it; and conſequently, we ſtill ſuppoſe the Matter ready for him to work upon. [c] We perceive that a Carpenter cannot build a Ship or a Houſe without pre-exiſtent Materials, and thence we are apt to conclude, that God himſelf can do no more, becauſe we cannot conceive how he ſhould do it, or becauſe he muſt do it by other Methods, than what we are acquainted with; [d] ſo difficult a Thing it is to abſtract our Minds from the Obſervations of this viſible World, when they ſeek to apprehend the Operations of God!

The Unreaſonableneſs of ſuch a Conception.

BUT now [e] what can be more irrational, than from the Weakneſs of the Creature to infer the ſame Imbecillity in the Creator, and to meaſure the Arm of Almighty God, from the Finger of impotent Man? Whatever implies an Excellence in the Artificer may be aſcribed to him; but whatever denotes any Infirmity muſt be ſeparated from the Notion of him. That Wiſdom, Contrivance, and Pre-conception, that Regularity, and Beauty of Operation, which are required in an Artiſt, moſt eminently center in him, who hath ordered all Things in Meaſure, and Number, and Weight; but if the moſt exquiſite Idea in the Artificer's Underſtanding be not ſufficient to execute his Deſign without Hands to work, and Materials to employ; it will therefore no more follow, that God, in his Productions, is obliged to make uſe of pre-exiſtent Matter, than that he is compounded of corporeal Parts.

IT is only, therefore, becauſe we are unacquainted with the primary Productions of God, and take our Specimen of his Power from the preſent Order of the Univerſe, and what we ſee others do before us, that we run into this Miſconception; but, by the ſame Rule, were we equally ignorant of the moſt ordinary Productions of Nature, we ſhould be apt to conclude, that they were equally impoſſible, and, for the Illuſtration of this, [f] Maimonides has furniſhed us with an excellent Similitude. Shewn from an apt Compariſon.

" if one of us, ſays he, ſhould ceaſe breathing but for an Hour, our Life and Motion " are gone; how then is it poſſible for any, tho' never ſo ſmall, to live, and move " in the Womb for ſo many Months, ſeeing it is ſo cloſe ſhut up, and in the Mid- " dle of the Body? If one of us ſhould ſwallow a little Bird, it would preſently die, " as ſoon as it came into the Stomach; how much more, if it were in the Belly? " If we ſhould be, but a few Days, without eating and drinking, we could not " live; how then can a Child continue ſo many Months without it? If it be reply'd, " that there is a Paſſage open in the Belly, at which the Child receives its Nouriſh- " ment: This he accounts as Romantick as the other; for if our Bellies were ſo " open, ſays he, we ſhould quickly be deſtroy'd, and therefore he concludes, [g] that " it is impoſſible Mankind ſhould ever be born in this Manner." And for the ſame Reaſon, as that excellent Author infers, do ſome Men argue againſt the Production of the World out of nothing, becauſe it croſſes their common Conceptions, and anſwers not the Courſe of Things, that Nature has eſtabliſh'd: Never conſidering, [h] that the Creation of the World is a ſupernatural Production, antecedent to all the Laws of Nature, which, after the firſt Production, were to be obſerv'd, but were impoſſible to be obſerv'd before.

Creation in a proper Senſe.

WE readily grant, that the Words Creation and create do not originally, and in their proper Senſe, ſignify, in any Language whatever, the Production of all Things out of nothing, i. e. out of no pre-exiſtent Matter. They denote, indeed, any Kind of Production or Formation; [i] ſometimes the making of one Subſtance out of another; [k] ſometimes the reſtoring a Thing to its former Perfection; and [l] ſometimes the doing of a ſtrange and wonderful Work; but, notwithſtanding this, [m] when we conſider, that the Hebrew Language has no other Word to ſignify a Production out of nothing, but BARAH, and that other Places in Scripture enforce that Acceptation; when we are called upon, in the Words of [n] that zealous Mother to her youngeſt Son, to look upon the Heaven and the Earth, and all that is therein, and to conſider, that God made them of Things that were not; when by Faith we underſtand, [o] as the Apoſtle argues, that the Worlds were framed by the Word of God, ſo that Things which are ſeen, were not made of Things, which do appear; and, by the leaſt Glance of Thought, can perceive, that nothing can be co-eternal with God; that Matter, if it be uncreated, muſt be ſelf-exiſtent, immenſe, independent, and, in ſhort, the very ſame with God, and conſequently God muſt undergo all the Forms and Changes of Matter; be this and that Thing, have this and that Quality, be hot and cold, moiſt and dry, be a Man and an Horſe, a Tree and a Fiſh, or any Thing elſe; when we conſider this, I ſay, we cannot but perſuade ourſelves, that Creation (as it relates to the Production of the World) muſt be underſtood in a ſtrict and proper Senſe: And, being agreed in the Thing itſelf, there needs be no Scruple in giving a new and heightening Signification to the Word, [p] eſpecially, ſince it is plain from a Paſſage in [q] Galen, where he compares Moſes and Epicurus together, that not only Jews and Chriſtians, but even Heathens themſelves, underſtood Moſes in this Senſe.

WERE there indeed any Impoſſibility in the Thing, the Multitude of Authorities would be no Sanction to this Opinion: But when we call in the Almighty Power of God to the Work, nothing, I conceive, can be ſaid to be impoſſible, except it implies a plain Contradiction, and what Contradiction, I pray, can there be in this, ——that God ſhould give Exiſtence to that, which had none before? For that is all we underſtand by Creation. [r] To be, indeed, and not to be at the ſame Time, implies a Contradiction; but to be, and not to be, at divers Times, does not; and the Reaſon is obvious, becauſe, tho' the Exiſtence of a Thing, in any one Inſtant, does perfectly exclude all Poſſibility of Non-exiſtence, for that Inſtant; yet the not being of a Thing in any Inſtant does not exclude all Poſſibility of it's being afterwards, when God Almighty pleaſes. [s] We can hardly think it a Repugnancy to Reaſon, that infinite Power ſhould raiſe an Inſect into Being without any paſſive Matter to work upon: And yet, if we can ſuppoſe that infinite Power can make an Inſect, it may as well produce a World out of nothing; [t] to ſay therefore, that the Power of God is infinite, and yet that he cannot exert it without a previous and paſſive Principle to [p] Stilling fleet, ibid. [q] Galen de Uſu Part. Lib. xi. where he ingenuouſly confeſſes, that the Opinion of Moſes, which attributed the Production of all Things, out of no pre-exiſtent Matter, to God, was far more rational, than that of Epicurus, which aſſign'd it to a mere caſual Concourſe of Atoms. [r] Nicholls, ubi ſupra. [s] Stilling fleet, ubi ſupra. [t] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. I.

to work upon, is to confound the Ideas of finite and infinite, and really to diveſt him of that Power, which we would appear, at the ſame Time, to attribute to him. For, if any Subſtance, actually in Being, is of Neceſſity pre-required to his Operation, then is his Power not infinite, but limited; foraſmuch as it depends, as to the Exerciſe of it, upon that Subſtance. A Power of Creation therefore is implied in the very Notion of a Deity; and tho' we cannot perfectly conceive how this mighty Work is effected, yet, in ourſelves, we find ſomething that gives us a faint Emblem of it, and ſee enough in the World to convince us of the Poſſibility of the Thing. [u] The Mind, we perceive, produces Thought, the Fire Heat, and the Sun Light, which are all diſtinct from the Subſtances that produce them; and yet, both Thought, Light, and Heat, are real Beings, that properly exiſt, tho' formed out of no pre-exiſtent Matter, and muſt therefore be produced out of nothing, either by the immediate Power of God continually acting, (which is moſt reaſonable) or by a ſubordinate Power, communicated to the Creature along with his Being. Now why is it not as eaſy for the Deity to produce Subſtances out of nothing, by his Almighty Power, as it is for a Creature to produce Accidents, by his finite and limited one? And why ſhould not God produce all Things out of nothing at firſt, as well as produce theſe Accidents, Modes, or Appearances, every Moment? The Philoſopher, who, from a lucky Concourſe of Atoms, or the more regular Diſpoſition of Matter and Motion, raiſes his Hypotheſis, forms an imaginary World to himſelf, and, by a Kind of mental Creation, makes every Thing riſe, as he calls for it; move, as he directs it; and take up the Place, that he aſſigns it in the Syſtem. And, if he perceives in himſelf, that he can do this, he ought, in all Modeſty, to acknowledge that God can form a Deſign, as well as he; can deviſe Means and Inſtruments for executing it, as well as he; and, after that is done, can, by the Word of his Power, ſtamp it into Being when he pleaſes: For why ſhould not God be as able to create a World in Reality, as the Philoſopher is to do it in Imagination?

Proved from natural Agents.

Ex nihilo nil fit, how applied.

'TIS a wrong Application therefore [x] of that famous Axiom, ſo much talked of among the Ancients, Ex nihilo nil fit, that [y] Lucretius, and others make, when they endeavour to carry it farther, than the Intention of the firſt Atomiſts, viz. to the diſproving of a Divine Creation of any Thing out of nothing, and conſequently, the Denial of a Deity. [z] The Ancients applied it only to natural Productions, and made the Senſe of it to be,——that whatever was brought into Being, which did not exiſt before, muſt have ſome Cauſe of its Exiſtence, and a Cauſe of ſufficient Power and Perfection to produce it. [a] The Corpuſcular Philoſophers made uſe of it afterwards, to decry the Doctrine of ſubſtantial Forms and Qualities, (which Ariſtotle and his Followers maintained) by aſſerting, that theſe Forms were nothing, and that all Alteration in Bodies depended upon the Figure and Motion of their Parts; but they no where extended it (till ſuch as denied the Exiſtence of a God ſtarted up) to the primary Production of Things, nor meant it as an Argument againſt the Divine Power of creating the World,

IN a Word, 'tis one of the natural Notions belonging to the ſupreme Being, to conceive of him, that he is omnipotent; and 'tis very reaſonable for us to believe, that our finite Underſtandings cannot comprehend the utmoſt Extent of Omnipotence. Tho' therefore the making of ſomething out of nothing does argue an inconceivable Power, yet ſince there is no Contradiction in it, and we find ſomething ſimilar in ourſelves that makes it ſeem credible, we ought to acquieſce in this Perſuaſion, without diſputing the Power of God, which we certainly cannot comprehend.

Creation in an improper Senſe.

THIS is what we call a proper Creation: And in this Manner, we may ſuppoſe, that the Chaos, or firſt Matter, all immaterial Subſtances, and ſimple or elementary Bodies were produced, But beſides this, there is another Kind of Creation, which is commonly called improper, becauſe it is the Production of Things out of ſome pre-exiſtent Matter; but out of ſuch Matter, as is ſo unfit to receive the Form and Impreſſion preſſion put upon it, that it may, in a Manner, be looked upon as no Matter at all, and its Aſſumption of that Form be called a Creation, but ſtill an improper one, becauſe it had a Medium. And in this Manner, we conceive, that the ſeveral Species of corporeal Beings, which furniſh and adorn the World with ſo much Luſtre and Variety, were compos'd; as we ſhall have Occaſion to ſhew, when we come to relate, with Moſes, how, at the Call and Command of God, every Thing aroſe from the Primordial Maſs.

SECT. I.

The ARISTOTELIAN Hypotheſis rejected.

" BUT if the World be eternal, ſays the Ariſtotelian preſently, what becomes " of the Creation then? If Things have, all along, continued in the ſame " Condition they are at preſent, and from all Eternity there has been a conti- " nued Succeſſion of Men and other Creatures, [b] without any firſt Cauſe of their " Being, what a piteous Figure does the Jewiſh Hiſtorian make, with ſo groſs a " Miſtake at his firſt ſetting out? And yet, that the World is eternal, we have ſe- " veral good Reaſons, together with the Teſtimony of many ancient Philoſophers, " to convince us."

THIS is what we call the Ariſtotelian Hypotheſis: And to obſerve a little how it came to be introduced (after the World, for many Ages, had been in Poſſeſſion of a contrary Opinion) we are to conſider, that, after the Death of Thales, the firſt Founder of Natural Philoſophy among the Grecians, (who [c] made God the eldeſt of Beings, becauſe unbegotten; the World the moſt beautiful, becauſe God's Workmanſhip; and the Water the only Material, from whence it was created) that, after his Death, I ſay, [d] his Succeſſors began to differ with one another, and, every one making it his Glory to contradict his Maſter, ſome ſet up Air, and ſome Fire, for the Principle of the World's Production; which occaſioned a Multiplicity of Sects preſently, and turned that Philoſophy, which at firſt went much upon the original Tradition of the World, into Diſputes and Altercations, tending as much to the finding out of Truth, (as one expreſſes it) as the fighting of two Cocks on a Dunghil does to the finding out of the Jewel that lies there. The Riſe of the Ariſtotelian Hypotheſis.

IN this Degeneracy of Philoſophy aroſe the Opinion of the World's Eternity. For the certain Tradition of the World being now loſt in a Crowd of Philoſophers, affecting to amuſe all Mankind with novel Notions, and ſpruce Theories, inſomuch, that no convictive Proof or Evidence could be given, that Things were ever otherwiſe, than they are now; it was thought at laſt the moſt defenſible Tenet, to aſſert, that the World never had a Beginning, nor would have an End, but that it always did, and always would continue in the ſame Condition it was in. This Opinion, tho' Ariſtotle ſeems to make himſelf the Author of it, was firſt broached by [e] Ocellus Lucanus, to whom the Stagyrite has not been a little beholden, tho' he wanted the Ingenuity to acknowledge it.

THE only Argument however of any Weight, that the Admirers of this Hypotheſis have to truſt to, is taken from the Nature and Attributes of God. 'Twas a worthy Saying that of [f] Plato, that the Goodneſs of God was the Cauſe of the Production of the World; but from this Saying, ſome modern Platoniſts have inferred the Neceſſity of the World's Eternity: " For, if God be always good, ſay they, he muſt always " have an Object to exerciſe his Goodneſs upon, as the Sun diſperſes his Light, as " ſoon as he is himſelf." [g] Were God indeed of the Nature of the Sun, it would be ſo with him; but there is this vaſt Difference between them, that, tho' God be eſſentially and neceſſarily good, yet the Communications of his Goodneſs are the Effects of his Will, and not merely of his Nature. Tho' therefore it be proper to aſſert An Argument for the World's Eternity anſwered.

[b] Tho' the Philoſophers we now ſpeak of did aſſert a Deity, which, in ſome Senſe, might be called the Cauſe of the World, yet they withal aſſerted, that the World was co-equal with God himſelf; and ſo, though there might be ſome Priority in the Order of Cauſes between them, yet there was none in Order of Time and Duration; as we ſee the Light, though it flows from the Sun, yet the Sun is never without Light. Stillingfleet's Orig. Sacræ, page 275. [c] Diog. Laert. Vit. Thal. [d] Stillingfleet's Orig. Sacræ. [e] This Ocellus Lucanus is the Only Author of any great Antiquity, that theſe Eternaliſts have to boaſt of; and yet he lived not long before Plato, and wrote about the Year of the World 3580, which is eleven hundred Years later than Moſes, and almoſt forty Years later than the lateſt of the Prophets: Beſides the manifeſt Suſpicion that his Book Of the Nature of the Univerſe, ſo much talked of, was of a much later Date, and perhaps the Compoſition of ſome Ariſtotelian Philoſopher, not much older than Simplicius or Philoponus. [f] Plato's Timæus. [g] Stillingfleet's Orig. Sacræ.

ſo much Goodneſs in God, as none can be imagined greater, and from the Communication of his Goodneſs to aſſert, that the World had its Being; yet it muſt be acknowledged, that God is an Agent infinitely wiſe and free, who could have refrained from making the World, or could have made it otherwiſe; and therefore thoſe, that make the Expreſſions of the Divine Bounty neceſſary, in order to ſettle the World's Eternity, and that he might always have an Object, whereon to exerciſe his Goodneſs, take as much from his Self-Sufficiency, as they would ſeem to flatter his Goodneſs. For God cannot be himſelf without his Goodneſs; and therefore if his Goodneſs cannot be without ſome Creature to ſhew and diſplay itſelf upon, God cannot be perfect or happy without his Creatures; becauſe theſe are neceſſary Iſſues of his Goodneſs, and conſequently, the Being of the Creature becomes neceſſary to the Being of God; which is the higheſt Derogation imaginable from the abſolute Perfection of the Divine Nature.

THIS being premiſed, we come now to conſider the grand Queſtion, whether the World was created, and had a Beginning or not? And becauſe this is a Queſtion concerning an ancient Matter of Fact, which can only be decided either by Teſtimonies, or by Probabilities of Reaſon, let us in the firſt Place ſee, how far Teſtimony, I mean human Teſtimony (for we ſhall hardly be allowed to make uſe of Divine, in this Caſe) makes for the World's Creation.

1. The World's Creation prov'd from Teſtimony.

[h] THAT there was a general Tradition, concerning the Beginning of the World, and its Creation by the Power of God, we have the concurring Teſtimony of the moſt ancient Nations, [i] the Egyptians, Chaldeans, and [k] Phœnicians, from whom the Grecians derived their Learning; as well as the Teſtimony of the moſt barbarous Nations, the [l] Indians, who believed that the World did begin, and would have an End, and the People of Peru, [m] who, upon the firſt Diſcovery of America, were found to worſhip one chief God, under the Name or Title of The Maker of the Univerſe.

THAT this was not a blind Tradition, but the juſt Reſult of Reaſon and Enquiry, we have the joint Opinions of the moſt ancient Philoſophers, that were Heads and Leaders of Sects, ſuch as Thales, Anaxagoras, Pythagoras, &c. and the Profeſſion of the moſt eminent Writers, that ſucceeded them, ſuch as Socrates, Plato, Tully, Seneca, &c. to convince us. Particularly of Thales, [n] Tully tells us, that he was the firſt of all the Philoſophers, who enquired into theſe Matters, and that, according to him, Water was the Beginning of all Things, out of which God faſhioned the World: Of the Brachmans, a chief Sect of Philoſophers among the Indians, [o] Strabo informs us, that they were of the ſame Sentiments with the Grecians, that the World was made of Water; and in this they agreed with the Scripture-Account, for Moſes tells us, that the Spirit of God moved upon the Face of the Waters, which [p] St Peter expreſſes thus, that by the Word of God the Heavens and the Earth (for ſo the Hebrews call the World) were of old ἐξ ὕδατος συνεστῶσα, made, or conſtituted of Water, not ſtanding out of the Water, as our Tranſlation renders it. Nay, even [q] Ariſtotle himſelf, who was the great Aſſerter of the Eternity of the World, gives us this Account why the Gods were anciently repreſented by the Heathens, as ſwearing by the River Styx, becauſe Water was ſuppoſed to be the Principle of all Things; and in the Book [r] de Mundo, he acknowledges it to have been an ancient Saying, and general Tradition among Men, that all Things are of God, and were made by him: And therefore we may conclude this Article with the Teſtimony of [s] Maximus Tyrius, to the ſame Purpoſe. "However Men differ, in other Points, "ſays he, yet they are all agreed in this Principle, that there is one God, King "and Father of all Things, &c. This the Greeks ſay; this the Barbarians; this, "thoſe that live upon the CONTINENT, and thoſe that dwell by the Sea; the "Wiſe, and the Unwiſe."

WE have likewiſe an Hiſtory, [t] that has generally been owned to be the moſt ancient Book in the World, and has always been eſteemed of great Authority, even amongſt thoſe Heathens, who do not believe its Divine Inſpirations, I mean, the Hiſtory of Moſes; to which no Man of Learning will deny, at leaſt, the ordinary Credit of other ancient Writings. Now Moſes gives us ſuch a plain, eaſy, and unaffected

[h] Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. I. [i] Wilkins, of the Principles of Natural Religion. It appears from Diogenes Laërtius, that the Egyptians did conſtantly believe that the World had a Beginning, and was corruptible; that it was ſpherical, and the Stars of the Nature of Fire, and that the Soul was of an immortal Nature, &c. Stillingfleet's Orig. affected Account of the Original of the World, and the moſt remarkable Paſſages of the firſt Ages, (particularly of the Plantation of the Earth by the Diſperſion of Noah's Family) ſo agreeable to the moſt ancient Remains of Heathen Writers, as muſt needs recommend it to every impartial Man's Belief. They indeed, [u] in their Computation of ancient Times, differ very much from the Account of Moſes: The Chaldeans, for Inſtance, reckoned forty-three thouſand Years, from the Beginning of the World, to the Time of Alexander; but this Way of Computation is acknowledged by Diodorus Siculus, and Plutarch, (very credible Perſons, and great Searchers into ancient Books) to be meant of Lunar Years or Months, which, being reduced to Solar Years, will fall out to be much about the ſame Time, aſſign'd by Moſes for the Creation.

THUS it appears that, as far as Teſtimony is an Argument in this Caſe, we have the Tradition of all Nations, both civiliz'd and barbarous, the general Opinion of the moſt antient Philoſophers, and the common Conſent of the moſt conſiderable Writers, to convince us, that the World had a Beginning from God. Let us now in the next Place ſee, what are the Arguments that Reaſon offers in Confirmation of this Point. II. From Reaſon.

[x] THE Creation, we know, is a prodigious Collection of an infinite Number of Things, all different, and without any eſſential Connection of the Exiſtence of one with the Exiſtence of another. The Heavens can exiſt without the Stars, and every Star exiſts independent on any other; the Air might be without the Heavens, without the Stars, without the Firmament, without the Earth, and without the Sea. The Exiſtence of the Earth does not depend on that of the Air, nor the Exiſtence of the Sea upon that of the Earth, the Air, or the Stars. Nay, one Part of the Earth may exiſt without another Part, and every Thing, to the ſmalleſt Atom, has its proper Exiſtence, independent on that of the reſt of the World. To prove then that the World has exiſted from all Eternity, as it is now, we muſt ſay, that it had its Exiſtence from itſelf; and (ſince it never was made) that it could not receive it from any other. Now, as it cannot have its Exiſtence in itſelf, without having it in all its Parts, even to the moſt minute Atom, we muſt own, that there are as many ſelf-exiſtent and eternal Beings, as there are, not only viſible Parts, but even Atoms in the Univerſe; and ſo, by aſſerting the World's Eternity, we plunge ourſelves, the very firſt Step we take, into a Gulf of Abſurdities, which we cannot get out of, without acknowledging that the World, in its Whole, as well as its Parts, has had a Beginning. From the Independency of Bodies one upon another.

BUT farther; [y] It is natural to the Mind of Man to conſider any compounded Thing, as having been once more ſimple, whether the Compoſition be a Mixture of many Ingredients, (as moſt terreſtrial Bodies are) or whether it be organical, but eſpecially if it be organical: For a Thing, that conſiſts of a Multitude of Pieces aptly compacted, we cannot but conceive, that it had thoſe Pieces, at one Time or other, put together. 'Twere hard to conceive an eternal Watch, whoſe Pieces were never ſeparate, nor in any other Form than a Watch; or an eternal Houſe, whoſe Materials were never aſunder, but always in the Shape of an Houſe; and much harder is it then to conceive an eternal World, which is made up of more Ingredients, and more various Subſtances, the living Part of it eſpecially, having much more Variety of Parts, and multifarious Conſtruction, than any Houſe, or any artificial Thing. So that by Nature and Neceſſity we ſeem to be led, as much to conceive this great Machine of the World to have been once in a State of greater Simplicity, than it is now; as to conceive a Watch, an Houſe, or any other Structure, to have been once in its firſt, and ſimple Materials. From their Compoſition.

'TIS natural for us to conceive farther, that whatever we ſee finite and liable to Corruption, (as the ſeveral Parts of the World, we are acquainted with, ſeem to be) [z] cannot Their Corruptibility.

[u] When Alexander entered Egypt with his victorious Army, the Prieſts, who pretended to have an exact Chronology of other Nations, as well as their own, for ſome Myriads of Years, preſented him with an Account of the Perſian Empire, which he gained by Conqueſt, and the Macedonian, which he received by Birth, of each 8000 Years: Whereas nothing can be more certain, than that the Perſian Empire, whether we ſuppoſe it to begin in Cyrus, or in Medus, was not then 300 Years old, and the Macedonian, which began in Coranus, not 500. They therefore, who made ſo large Additions to advance the Antiquity of other Nations, may very well, without any Breach of Charity, be ſuſpected to have extended their Account much higher, for the Honour of their own Country. Pearſon on the Creed. [x] M. Martin's Diſcourſe of Nat. Rel. [y] Burnet's Theory of the Earth. [z] This Lucretius urges as a convincing Proof that the World was not eternal:

Quare etiam nativa neceſſe eſt conſiteare
Hæc eadem; neque enim, mortali corpore quæ ſunt
Ex infinito jam tempore adhuc potuiſſent
Immenſi validas ævi contemnere vires.

cannot have exiſted from all Eternity: For whatever is finite, and tending to its End, had a Beginning; whatever is corruptible, had its Nature limited by the Hand that made it, and what is not immortal was not eternal. If then we caſt our Eyes upon the Surface of the Earth, there we meet with Hills, Mountains, and Promontories, none of which could have been viſible, and extant at this Day, if the World had been from Eternity; for then, Millions of Ages ago, they muſt have ſunk down into the Valleys, and been loſt in the Bottom of the Sea. That the Mountains and higher Parts of the Earth are continually ſinking, being blown and waſh'd away by the Winds and Rains without, and waſted within by Streams and Currents, in their Veins and Crannies; and that the ſtrong and rocky Parts of it are ſometimes weakened by ſubterraneous Fires, or torn and tumbled down by Storms and Earthquakes, and ſo buried in the Caverns, that are under them; this is obvious to common Obſervation. If then the World had been eternal, long ago muſt the higheſt Eminences have been brought to a Level, and laid under Water. For whatever moulders, or is waſh'd away from them, is carried down into the lower Grounds, and into the Sea, never to be brought back again by any Circulation; ſo that while the higher Parts are continually waſting, and the lower continually gaining, the ſubſiding Earth will, in Proceſs of Time, not only make an Equality, but even choak up the very Channels of the Sea; and raiſing the Waters every where upon the Surface of the Earth, turn that into one confus'd Ocean, or at leaſt, a noiſome and uninhabitable Marſh. I do not ſay that this would be effected in ten thouſand Years Time; but take twenty if you pleaſe, take an hundred Thouſand, take a Million, 'tis all one; for you take the one as eaſily as the other from Eternity: Nor is it of any Moment, how little you ſuppoſe the Mountains to decreaſe; 'tis but taking more Time, and the ſame Effect ſtill follows. For ſuppoſe them to waſte but as much as a Grain of Muſtard-Seed every Day, yet (what is nothing to Eternity) in ſome Thouſands of Ages there muſt be an End of them. The Air alone, and little Drops of Rain have defaced the ſtrongeſt and proudeſt Monuments of the Greeks and Romans; and allow them but Time enough, and they will, of themſelves, beat down the Rocks into the Sea, and the Hills into the Valleys: But then, if we take in the above-mentioned Cauſes, that work with more Violence, we both ſhorten the Time, and make the Effect more ſure.

The Earth's Surface.

Its Petrefaction.

IF we look into the Bowels of the Earth, we there meet with Stones, and other hard Subſtances, which, if the World were eternal, would, long ago, have overſpread the Surface of the Earth, and made it uncultivable. [a] That Stones do grow is granted by all; and Philoſophers have made it clear, that the Way of their Augmentation is by the Concretion of ſaline Particles, which according to their Contexture with more or leſs terrene Matter make them either fine as Adamants, or coarſe as Pebbles, and Freeſtone. By Experience likewiſe we find, that theſe Concretions are ſo ſtrangely durable, that hardly any Time is able to diſſipate and diſſolve them; for the Marbles, in the great Pyramid of Egypt, that lie inwards, and are not expos'd to the Waſhings of the Rain, and the Frettings of the nitrous Air, are not in the leaſt decay'd, tho' they have ſtood there ſo many thouſand Years. Now, if Stones do continually increaſe without any ſenſible Decay; upon Suppoſition that the World has continued from Eternity, it would, by this Time, have been turned into one maſſy Rock by this eternal Petrefaction, and the Huſbandman been forced to uſe Mattocks inſtead of Ploughs for its Cultivation. As yet indeed, I do not ſay that this Increaſe of ſaxeous Matter is any great Inconveniency to the Earth, and therefore, I reckon it an Argument of its late Creation; nor can I think it any Imperfection in this great Work of the Deity, which is well enough contrived for a World of ſome thouſand Years Duration, but not of an eternal one: And therefore I am apt to believe, that his infinite Power made it in this wiſe, to give us a phyſical Proof of its daily Decay and Tendency to a Diſſolution; and that his infinite Wiſdom thinks not proper to amend theſe Decays, in the ſame Manner as we, when we have but a ſhort Time in an Houſe or Eſtate, take not much Care to repair it, if it will but continue for our Time.

Its Inhabitants, and late Cultivation.

IF we conſider the ſeveral Countries of the Earth, their late Diſcovery, and Want of Cultivation, the Manner of their being peopled, and the gradual Increaſe of their Inhabitants, we ſhall likewiſe perceive, that the World, inſtead of being eternal, is but a very novel Exiſtence. [b] From Writers of ſo late a Date, as Homer and Heſiod, it it plainly appears, that, in the early Ages of the World, Mankind led generally a Sort of paſtoral Life, and oftentimes chang'd their Abode from one Country, or one Part of the Country to another, which could not have been done, if the World had been populous; for then, each Parcel of Land would have had a proper Poſſeſſor, who would not have given up his Right to any new Comers. But, in thoſe Days, Countries had ſo thin a Stock of Inhabitants, that there was Land ſufficient, not only for ſingle Perſons, but alſo for vaſt Colonies of Men, which, before it was occupied by them, lay for any Body that would take it. Nothing is more famous in ancient Hiſtory, than theſe Tranſmigrations of Inhabitants from one Country to another; nothing more notorious, than their leaving the Land uncultivated, and immenſurable Deſerts behind them; nothing more certain, than their Ignorance how other Nations lived, and very late Diſcoveries of diſtant Countries; all which can be imputed, not ſo much to a Want of Genius, as the Want of Men and proper Inſtruments, which Time had not yet produced. In the Writings of thoſe, who have ſearched into Antiquity, we find, [c] ſays Tertullian, "that Mankind has, by little and "little, increaſed and multiplied; that the Aborigines (thus the Men were called, whoſe "Original was not known) went to inhabit, ſome one Country, and ſome another; "——that afterwards being become more numerous, they ſpread themſelves by "Colonies into other Places.——Thus did the World, from Day to Day, become "more inhabited, and more cultivated: —— That, which aforetime had been "frightful Deſerts, was changed into fruitful and delicious Countries; Foreſts gave "way to Agriculture, and ſavage Beaſts to Flocks of Sheep; Rocks have been "levell'd; Marſhes drain'd, and, in Proceſs of Time, Towns have been built, "ſurpaſſing in Number the Cottages and rural Huts that were before."

'Tis not yet two thouſand Years, ſince the Iſland, we live in, was found out by People of no great Diſtance in the Continent, to be inhabited: 'Tis not a great deal more than two hundred Years, ſince one half of the Globe, that we now know, and ſail ſo often to, lay undiſcovered; and 'tis not unlikely, that a very conſiderable Part of it is yet unknown: But now, had the Earth been from everlaſting, every Corner of it had been found out, every Waſte cultivated, every Foreſt made plain; for the Inhabitants of it would have ſwarmed, and been more numerous, than the Sand on the Sea-Shore, many Ages ago; whereas we find that it is not yet ſufficiently ſtocked, and, notwithſtanding the daily Increaſe of its Inhabitants, there is Room ſtill left for many Millions more.

The Lateneſs of Hiſtory.

[d] If we look again into the Records, that give an Account of ancient Times; nay, if we peruſe the Fictions of the Poets, we ſhall find not the leaſt Footſtep of any Thing, exceeding the received Opinion of the Time of the World's Beginning. Now 'tis very wonderful, that, if the World was eternal, we ſhould have no Hiſtory of above three thouſand Years ſtanding; nay, even that Greece itſelf, in ſo many Myriads of Ages, ſhould offer us nothing of this Kind, until the Time of Herodotus and Thucydides; and Egypt, the School of Greece, not long before, ſhould know nothing but a little romantick Chronology, and ſome myſtical Hieroglyphicks. [e] Had the Race of Men been from everlaſting, or even as old, as the Chaldeans and Egyptians make it, how ſhould it come to paſs, that the Invention of Poetry ſhould find no Actions worthy its heroick Verſe, before the Trojan or Theban War, or the fam'd Adventure of the Argonauts? For whatſoever the Muſes (thoſe Daughters of Memory) rehears'd before thoſe Times, is nothing elſe, but the Creation of the World, and the Nativity of their Gods. Were there, from all Eternity, no memorable Actions done, till about this Time? Or, had Mankind no Way, till of late, to record, and propagate them to Poſterity? It is much, that, if Men were from Eternity, they ſhould not, in all that long Duration, find out the Way of Writing. Writing, it muſt be owned, is no eaſy Invention: 'Tis the Repreſentation of an Image, or the Picture of another Repreſentative; (for as Letters are the Repreſentation of

[e] This Argument to me is the ſtronger, becauſe it comes from Epicurus, who can be thought no Favourer of any Religion, as his Senſe is delivered by Lucretius:

Præterea, ſi nulla fuit Genitalis Origo
Terraï & cœli, ſemperque æterna fuere:
Cur, ſupra, bellum Thebanum, & funera Trojæ,
Non aliis alii quoque Res cecinere Poëtæ?

Words, ſo Words are the Repreſentation of Thoughts) and therefore it required no ſmall Penetration, to deviſe a Method of doing this; but then, that among ſo many Millions of ingenious Men, in ſo many Millions of Ages, an Invention, even more difficult than this, ſhould be happily hit on, and ſucceſsfully purſued, is no wonderful Thing at all.

Of Arts and Sciences.

IF we look into Arts and Sciences, whether ſuch as be uſeful, or ornamental to human Life, we ſhall find their Invention and Origin too late to give any Sanction to the World's Eternity. [f] How imperfect was the Geography of the Ancients! How imperfect their Knowledge of the Earth! How imperfect their Navigation! Can we imagine, if there had been Men from everlaſting, a Sea as now, and all Materials for Shipping, as much as we have, that Men could have been ſo ignorant both of the Land and Sea, as 'tis manifeſt they were, until theſe later Ages? They had very different Fancies concerning the Figure of the Earth. They knew no Land beyond the Continent, and that but imperfectly too, for the Torrid Zone they thought uninhabitable; and yet they were Men, that had the ſame Wit and Paſſions, the ſame Motives and Incitements, that we have. How then is it poſſible, that neither the Ambition of Princes, nor Hopes of Gain in private Perſons; neither the Deſire of Knowledge, nor the Glory of Diſcoveries, nor any other Paſſion or Conſideration, could ever move them, in that endleſs Time, to try their Fortunes upon the Sea, and know ſomething more of the World they inhabited? They were generally ſtupid, it may be thought; yet, in the Courſe of infinite Generations, 'tis ſtrange that there ſhould be no great Geniuſes, no Perſons of extraordinary Parts and Reſolution, to attempt Things above the reſt. They knew not the Uſe of the Load-ſtone, 'tis true, nor had they [g] the Mariner's Needle; but then this is the Wonder, that, neither that Invention or any other ſhould be brought to Light, 'till t'other Day, as it were, if the World had ſtood from Eternity: I ſay this, or any other practical Invention; for ſuch Things, when they are once found out and known, are not eaſily loſt again, becauſe they are of daily Uſe.

To bring the Matter home; Seneca tells, that the Beginning of Arts and Sciences was not above a thouſand Years before the Time he lived in; and indeed the Original of them is ſo very recent, that there are ſcarce any, whoſe firſt Inventor is not recorded in Story. How could the World then, or at leaſt how could Greece, be, from all Eternity, without the common Tools of Carpentry, the Saw, the Augre, the Plane, and the Plumb-Line, till Dedalus had the Happineſs to invent them? Did Mankind for ever live upon Roots, and Herbs, and Acorns, till Ceres, or (which is all one) the Egyptian Iſis found out the Method of ſowing Wheat and Barley? How could they be Strangers to ſuch eaſy Inventions, as thoſe of Wine and Honey, till Bacchus ſhewed them to the World? Could no one know how to cut and poliſh Stone, till Cadmus taught the Way? And (to be ſhort in our Inſtances) how came the Art of Dialling to be ſo lately found out, to mention nothing of Clocks and Watches, of the Invention of Guns and other military Engines, of Coining, and the like? The Romans had not ſo much as a Sun-Dial, till the ſecond Punick War; and when they had one, they placed it in the [h] Forum, and were forced to make uſe of it alone, for above an hundred Years, as Pliny tells us, tho' it never went right all the while. [i] Now it is not imaginable, that ſo ſagacious, ſo buſy a Creature as Mankind is, could all of them have lived, an Infinity of Ages, deſtitute of theſe Arts, ſo advantageous to the Benefit of human Life, without ſome ſucceſsful Attempts, to ſupply their Wants by them.

AND if they were ſo tardy in the Invention of practical Arts, ſo neceſſary and beneficial to human Life, 'tis the leſs Wonder that we find ſo ſmall Advances made, in all natural and experimental Philoſophy, in Aſtronomy, Chymiſtry, and other theoretical Sciences. How little has been diſcovered, till of late, either of our own Bodies, or of the Body of the Earth, and of the Functions or Motions of Nature in either! What more obvious, would one think, than the Circulation of the Blood? What Others aſcribe it to the Chineſe, who diſcover'd it to Paulus Venetus; while others make it as ancient as King David: But Gaſſendi (Animad. page 364.) is of Opinion, that it was found out by a French Man, about the Year MCC, ſince it is mentioned by one Guyotus Provineus, a French Poet of that Time, who calls the Compaſs Marineta: To which Gaſſendi alſo adds, that it was moſt probably a French Invention, becauſe the North Point is, by all Nations, mark'd in their Compaſſes by a Flower-de-Luce, which is the Arms of France. What can more excite our Curioſity, than the flowing and ebbing of the Sea? than the Nature of Metals and Minerals? And yet theſe are either yet unknown, or [k] were at leaſt unknown, before this laſt Age, which has made greater Progreſs in Diſquiſitions of this Nature, than all Ages put together: Nor does the whole Maſs of Knowledge in this Earth ſeem to be ſo great, but that a few Ages more, with ſome happy Geniuſes in them, may bring to Light all that we are capable to underſtand, in this State of Mortality.

I MIGHT farther proceed, and ſhew the Novelty of the World's Original, [l] from the firſt Foundation of Kingdoms and Empires; from the firſt Inſtitution of religious Worſhip among the Heathens; the Plantation of particular Countries and Iſlands; the Hiſtory of Families, and the Account of our own Succeſſions, which, [m] upon a moderate Computation, are not yet an hundred and thirty-two Generations from Adam: But I have been long enough in this Argument, and indeed have dwelt the rather upon it, becauſe the contrary Hypotheſis has been, of late, made the Retreat of ſuch, as diſlike the Being of a God; and is thought a Fort more tenable, than that giddy and fantaſtical one, which we come next to conſider.

SECT. II.

The EPICUREAN Hypotheſis expos'd.

"THE Opinion of the Epicurean in Subſtance is this:——[n] "They ſuppoſe the "Matter, of which the World is conſtituted, to be eternal and ſelf-exiſtent; "and that, before it was brought into the Form and Order wherein we now ſee it, "there was an infinite empty Space, wherein an infinite Number of the little Parts "of this Matter of various Figures, but equally ponderous and ſolid (for which Rea- "ſon they are called Atoms) did move and play; and being always in Motion, did, "after infinite Trials and Encounters, without any Counſel or Deſign, and without "the Diſpoſal of any wiſe and intelligent Being, at laſt, by a lucky Caſualty, en- "tangle and ſettle themſelves in this beautiful and regular Frame of the World. For "they ſuppoſe, not only that the Earth and all its living Creatures, but even the great "Syſtems of the heavenly and elementary Bodies, as well as the Souls and Bodies of "Men, were formed by Chance, or by the fortuitous Concourſe and Coheſion of "theſe Atoms."

[o] THIS was their Hypotheſis: And what gave Occaſion to it, was a Diſguſt taken at the Doctrine of Forms and ſubſtantial Qualities, wherewith Ariſtotle, and ſome others before him, were wont to explain the Phenomena of Nature. If a Room was but enlightened by bringing in a Candle, the Ariſtotelian uſed to ſay, that this was done by the Generation of the Form of Light; if Fire was extinguiſh'd by throwing on Water, that this was done by the Corruption of the Form of Fire; and in this trifling Way they accounted for moſt Things. [p] Democritus was the firſt, that found Fault with theſe Solutions, and, obſerving what was done in the World by the Strength of Matter and Motion, he introduced the Doctrine of Atoms; and Epicurus, lighting accidentally on his Book, fell in Love with his Philoſophy, and ran entirely into his Sentiments. 'Tis very probable, that their firſt Inſtitution of theſe Atoms was only to give a better Solution of the Appearances of Nature, than what the Doctrine of Forms and real Qualities had done: And therefore they aſſerted (not unjuſtly) that Generation and Corruption were cauſed by nothing elſe, but the Coalition or Separation of The Riſe of it.

[k] The Circulation of the Blood, which to us is a modern Diſcovery, and aſcrib'd to Dr Harvey, has been known in China, according to Voſſius, 4000 Years, which ſeems to be a Miſtake, tho' 'tis certain that that People have wonderful Skill in Pulſes. Baker's Reflect. on Learning. Soliſque & Lunæ Curſus, ex Ordine ponam.
Nam certè neque Conſilio Primordia Rerum

Nec quos quæque darent Motus pepigere profectò:
Sed quia multa modis multis Primordia Rerum
Ex infinito jam tempore percita plagis,
Ponderibuſque ſuis conſuêrunt, concita ferri, of the Particles, whereof a Body was compoſed, and that all the various Affections of Things proceeded from their different Figure, Order, and Poſition. But finding the Succeſs of their Invention, they gave their Fancies a Range, and, in the Concluſion, came to affirm, that there was nothing but Matter and Motion in the World, and that the Origin of the Univerſe proceeded from no wiſer Principle, than Chance, or the caſual Concourſe of their Atoms: Therein giving the World a ſad Inſtance of the Proneneſs of our Minds, to be intoxicated with thoſe Opinions we are once in Love with, for otherwiſe we could ſcarce ſuppoſe, that Men of Learning and ſober Conſideration would ever embrace a Scheme, that had no other Foundation, but a Set of ſuch precarious and abſurd Suppoſitions, as were ſcandalous for Philoſophers to make uſe of.

The Confutation of it.

[q] THEIR very Principia, or Atoms of infinite Number, floating in an infinite Vacuity, is a mere Fiction, that has neither Truth, nor Evidence, nor Probability in it. [r] The Gravity of theſe Atoms, in ſuch an empty Space, where there can be no Impulſion from other Bodies, nor any Attraction from any magnetic Principles (which ſome account the Cauſe of Gravitation) is abſurd. [s] The Motion of theſe Atoms, in this great Vacuum, unleſs firſt excited by ſome intelligent, active Principle, is intirely fabulous, and impoſſible. [t] The Declination of their Motion is a childiſh Fiction; for either they all decline, and then they will no more meet, than if they deſcend perpendicularly; or ſome decline, and others fall perpendicularly; but then (as [u] Tully derides this Conceit) [x] "What Cauſe is there in Nature, that turns them "aſide? Or do they caſt Lots among themſelves, which ſhall decline, which not? "Or why do they decline the leaſt Interval that may be, and not a greater? 'Tis "ridiculous to aſſign different Taſks and different Offices to Bodies, that are all of "the ſame Nature and Solidity."

BUT ſuppoſing this Difference of Motion, and other Poſtulata to be granted them; yet they will never be able to ſhew us how a turbulent Concourſe and Concretion of Atoms ſhould produce thoſe Things that are in the Univerſe. [y] Were the World indeed no better than Heſiod's Chaos, we might probably believe that an Agitation of Particles (ſuppoſing Matter created) might ſettle it in ſuch a confuſed Manner; but that there ſhould be nothing elſe but a blind Impetus of Atoms, to produce thoſe vaſt and regular Motions of the heavenly Bodies; to order the Paſſage of the Sun for ſo great a Conveniency of Nature, and the alternate Succeſſion of the Seaſons of the Year; to caſt up ſuch Channels for the Ocean, and keep that vaſt Body of Water (whoſe Surface is higher than the Earth) from overflowing it; to furniſh the Earth with ſuch ſeminal and prolific Principles, as to produce Food and Nouriſhment for thoſe Animals, which live upon it, and to ſupply every Thing neceſſary for the Comfort and Delight of Man's Life; nay, to make Man himſelf, with all his Faculties of Senſation, Memory, Intellection, and Volition, [z] riſing out of little Bags, (as the great Philoſopher deſcribes it) which our teeming Mother the Earth caſt forth upon her Surface: To believe, I ſay, that all theſe Things came only from a blind and unguided Chance, is the moſt prodigious Piece of Folly and Credulity, that can enter into an human Breaſt.

A VERY learned and ingenious * Author has, in a very fit and lively Compariſon, juſtly expos'd the Folly of this Hypotheſis. What would you do, ſays he, to a Man, who, ſetting up for a great Philoſopher, and coming into a ſtately Houſe, ſhould maintain, that it was all made by Chance, and that Art had no Hand

That Man's Body was formed out of the Duſt of the Earth we believe, becauſe we have Reaſon ſo to do; but that the Earth ſhould caſt forth ſuch Follicula (as the Poet expreſſes it) and then Men ſhould be brought up in ſuch a Way, as he deſcribes it, deſerves a Place among the moſt incredible Fables. Stillingfleet's Orig. Hand in the whole Contrivance? Why; you would carry ſuch a one about, and ſhew him the Parts of the Houſe, and tell him, for Inſtance, Do you ſee this great Court-Gate? It is larger than any other Door, that Coaches may enter in at it. The Stair-Caſe is made up of low Steps for the eaſier Aſcent, and turns according to the Apartments and Stories, it is to ſerve. The Windows open at certain Diſtances, and enlighten the whole Building: They are glazed, leſt the Wind ſhould enter in with the Light; but they may be opened at Pleaſure, to take in the ſweet Air, when the Weather is fair. The Roof is contrived to defend the whole Houſe from Injuries of the Weather. The Timber-Work is laid ſlanting, and pointed at the Top, that the Rain and Snow may eaſily ſlide down on both Sides; and the Tiles bear one upon another, that they may cover the Timber-Work. The ſeveral Floors ſerve to make different Stories, in order to multiply Lodgings within a ſmall Space. The Chimnies are contrived to light the Fire in, and let out the Smoak, leſt it ſhould offend thoſe that warm themſelves. The Apartments are diſpos'd in ſuch a Manner, as to receive a numerous Family, without being obliged to paſs through one another's Rooms; and the Maſter's Apartment is the principal. Beſides, there are Kitchens, Offices, Stables, Coach-Houſes, and other Appendages, all fitted to their proper Uſe. Sure, ſhould one urge to the Philoſopher, this Work muſt have been directed by ſome ſkilful Architect, for every Thing in it is agreeable, pleaſant, uniform, and commodious; beſides, he muſt needs have had excellent Artiſts under him. "Not "at all, would ſuch a Philoſopher anſwer, you love to deceive yourſelf. This Houſe, "'tis true, is uniform, pleaſant, and commodious, but yet it made itſelf, with all "its Proportions. Chance put together all the Stones in this excellent Order; it "raiſed the Wall; it laid the Timber-work; it cut open the Windows; it placed "the Stair-caſe, and no human Hand had any Thing to do with it."

WHEN we read the fabulous Story of Amphion, (continues that excellent Author) who, by a miraculous Effect of Harmony, cauſed the Stones to riſe, and place themſelves in juſt Symmetry, one upon another, in order to form the Walls of Thebes, we make ourſelves merry with the poetical Fiction; and yet the Extravagance of our Philoſopher, that ſuppoſes an Houſe to be made without Hands, or a World without a wiſe Agent, ten thouſand Times excels the Poet. The Confutation therefore, that the Roman Orator gives to this Hypotheſis, is not very different to that our Author had deviſed, and well deſerving our Obſervation. "If this "Concourſe of Atoms, ſays he, could make a whole World, why may it not ſome "Time make, and [a] why has it not already made, a Temple, or a Gallery, or a "Portico, or an Houſe, or a City? And yet it is ſo far from doing this, and every Man ſo far from believing it, that ſhould any one of us be caſt, ſuppoſe upon a deſolate Iſland, and find there a magnificent Palace, fitly contrived according "to the exacteſt Rules of Architecture, and curiouſly adorned and furniſhed, it "would never once enter into his Head, that this was done by an Earthquake, "or the fortuitous ſhuffling together of its competent Materials; but immediately "he would conclude that there had been ſome intelligent Architect there, the Effect of whoſe Art and Skill it was. Or ſhould he find there, but one ſingle "Sheet of Paper, an Epiſtle or Oration written, full of profound Senſe, expreſſed "in proper and ſignificant Words, and adorned with elegant Phraſe and Diction; "it would be beyond the Poſſibility of Man to perſuade him, that this was done "by the careleſs Daſhes of an unguided Pen, by the rude ſcattering of Ink upon "the Paper, or by the lucky Projection of ſo many Letters at all Adventures; but "he would be convinced by the Evidence of the Thing at firſt Sight, that there "had been not only ſome Man, but ſome Scholar there." The Application is eaſy; and there need no more Words to confute an Opinion, that is not ſo much the Production of Reaſon and Philoſophy, as the extravagant Reſvery of a ſelf-conceited Fancy.

SECT. III.

The CARTESIAN HYPOTHESIS cenſured.

The Sum of Des Cartes's Hypotheſis.

DES CARTES agrees with Epicurus in making Matter and Motion the Principles of Nature; [b] he ſuppoſes, however, the Being of a God, who created this Matter, and impreſſed the firſt Motion upon it; but then, after this Motion is impreſſed, and the Wheels ſet a going, he leaves this vaſt Machine to the Laws of Mechaniſm, which effect all Things, both celeſtial and terreſtrial, without any farther Aſſiſtance from the firſt Impreſſor: [c] And thereupon he forms his Hypotheſis thus:—He takes it for granted, that all the Matter of the World was at firſt of one uniform Nature, diviſible into innumerable Parts, and divided into many, which were all in Motion; and from hence he ſuppoſes, "1. That all the Matter, "of which the Univerſe is compos'd, was, at firſt, divided into equal Particles, of "a moderate Size, and had all ſuch a Motion, as is now found in the World. "2. That all theſe Particles were not, at firſt, ſpherical, becauſe many ſuch little "Globes, join'd together, will not fill up a continued Space; but that, of whatever "Figure they were at firſt, by their continual Motion, and frequent Occurſions "againſt each other, their Angles would be cut off, and they become ſpherical. "3. He aſſerts, that there is no Space left empty; and therefore when theſe round "Particles, by being join'd together, leave ſome Intervals between them, he ſup-"poſes that there are other leſſer Particles, ariſing from thoſe Angles, that were cut "off, which, by the Force and Celerity of their Motion, will be divided into innu-"merable ſtill leſs Fragments, proper to fill up all the Interſtices. 4. He ſuppoſes, "laſtly, that ſome of theſe Fragments, taken from the Angles of ſpherical Particles, "will neceſſarily have very angular Figures, and, upon that Account, being not ſo "fit for Motion, will be apt to ſtick together, and transfer a great Part of their "Motion to ſuch Particles, as are leſs, and conſequently move ſwifter." Now theſe Things being ſuppos'd, he undertakes to give us a very regular Account of the Formation of the World; and the three Sorts of Particles above-mentioned, he makes his three Elements. The ſubtile Matter, cut off from the Angles of the greater Particles, is that which compoſes the Sun and fixed Stars: The ſecond Element conſiſts of the ſpherical Particles themſelves, which make up the Heavens: And from the third Element, which conſiſts of thoſe angular Particles, he gives an Account of the Formation of the Earth, Planets, and Comets, and other Phenomena of Nature, by the Help of the common Affections of Matter, Size, Figure, and Motion; God, in the mean Time, as [d] Dr Cudworth expreſſes it, ſtanding by, as an idle Spectator of this Luſus Atomorum, and the various Reſults of it.

The Confutation of it.

THERE is one Thing however (as this learned Author obſerves) wherein our mechanick Philoſopher has been more extravagant, than ever any Atomiſt was of Old: For, whereas the boldeſt of them never durſt venture to affirm, that this regular Frame of Things reſulted from the fortuitous Motions of Atoms at the very firſt, before they had, for a long Time together, produc'd many inept Combinations of particular Things, and nonſenſical Syſtems of the whole; our Philoſopher will have his Atoms never ſo much as once to have blunder'd in their Motions, but, from the very firſt, to have taken up their Places, and rang'd themſelves as orderly and methodically, as they could have done, had they been directed by the moſt perfect Wiſdom. In the mean Time, his aſſerting a Plenum, and inventing his ſubtile Matter to fill every Space, was done in Compliance with the Humour of the Age; and [e] had his Friend Merſennus told him, that a Vacuum had been as much in Faſhion, as a Plenum then ſeem'd to be, we ſhould have had an Hypotheſis grounded upon a Vacuum, and, no doubt, as ſpecious and plauſible, as what we have now. [f] His Laws of Motion have been evidently ſhewn to be falſe, and his Notion of Matter is inconſiſtent with any Motion at all; for, as Space and Matter are, with him, the ſame Thing, (upon the Suppoſition that there is no Vacuum) there can be no Motion; ſince Motion is only the Succeſſion of Bodies from one Place to another, which cannot ſucceed from one Place, if there be no room to receive them in the next, as there cannot be, if every Place be FULL.

[g] THAT all the Motion now in the World was created in the Beginning of Things, and that there is no new Motion produced, but the old communicated, and transmitted from one Body to another; that the Impulsion of subtile Matter is the Cause of all Gravity and Levity in Bodies; that the Acceleration of heavy Bodies, in their Motion towards the Center, proceeds from the same Impulsion; that Heat is nothing, but the Motion of the Particles of the Air, agitated by this subtile Matter; that the Vegetation of Plants, and the Generation of Animals, were caused only by the fortuitous Motion of little Particles, as if Stones, by a Chance-Leap, should range themselves into a regular Palace; that Brutes are utterly destitute of all Sensation; that the Tokens, which they sometimes discover, of Joy or Sadness, of Pleasure or Pain, are but the Result of certain Springs, that play in the Machine, according as the Matter is disposed; that Heat is not in the Fire, nor Hardness in the Marble, nor Moisture in the Water; but that all this is in the Soul, which, by Thought and Reflection, finds the Fire to be hot, the Marble hard, and the Water moist: These are some of the Paradoxes, that our Philosopher has advanced, incongruous to Sense, and refuted by Experience. In the mean Time, his Explanation of the Nature of Things is not so satisfactory. His Hypothesis of the Load-Stone, with those little hooked Bodies, that attend it, is arbitrary and groundless. His Account of the ebbing and flowing of the Sea, by the Impression of the Moon's Atmosphere, is found to be false. [h] His Explication of the Pulse of the Heart, which he attributes to an Ebullition, and sudden Expansion of the Blood, by a nitro-sulphureous Ferment in its Ventricles, is contrary to Experience; and his Explication of the Motion of the Soul in the several Passions, by the Conjunction of Nerves and Fibres terminating in the Glandula Pinealis, is a pure Chimera. 'Twas prudently done therefore, to break off his System, just as he came to treat of the Formation of Animals, being very conscious, that (whatever he had done in Relation to the Heavens and the Earth it) would be impossible for him to form the Bodies of Men, and other living Creatures by the necessary Motion of Matter, without the Guidance and Superintendency of an all-wise and all-powerful Agent [i].

THE Truth is, all the Hypotheses, that the World has yet seen, cannot give an inquisitive Mind any Satisfaction. They seem to be wrote more for the Ostentation of their Authors Wit, than the Evidence of Truth; and have therefore little or no Foundation, but what a fruitful Invention gives them. And indeed how can it otherwise be? For since the particular Manner of the first Origination of Things is such a Matter of Fact, as cannot possibly lie within the Compass of human Discovery, Men must necessarily be ignorant of it, or have as confused Conceptions about it, as a blind Man has of Colours, unless it be revealed unto them, by some one that certainly knows the Fact itself.

The Folly and Impiety of all such Hypotheses.

[k] SUPPOSE in a Country abounding with Scholars, but unacquainted with mechanical Engines, a curious Artist (on purpose to try the Speculations of the Learned) should leave, in a Field or Forest, a Clock or a Watch, with the Configurations of the various Phases of the Moon, the Motion and Place of the Sun in the Ecliptick, and several other curious Indications of celestial Motions, as well as the Hours of the Day, nicely expressed; and that some of the Scholars of the Philosophical Sects should happen, in their Walk, to find it: What sad Work would they make in giving an Account of this Phenomenon? The Epicurean (according to his Hypothesis) tells us, that this Watch was nothing else but an accidental Concretion of Atoms, that, having happily fallen together, did, by a little innate Motion, and lucky Chance, make the Index, the Wheels, the Balance, and all. The Cartesian agrees with him, as to the main of the Supposition; but thinking he has not sufficiently explained how the Watch came to be put in Motion at first, talks a great deal of a certain subtile Matter, that pervades it, and gives Motion to its moveable Parts, which consist of certain globular Atoms, apt for Motion. A third, finding Fault with the two former, tells them immediately, that he has a more evident Solution of the Phenomenon, viz. the universal Soul of the World, that, having formed so many Sorts of Insects, with so many Organs and Faculties, and such Congruity in their whole Composition, has made this wonderful Automaton likewise, with all its Motions

[g] Rapin's Reflections. [h] Ray's Wisdom of God in the Creation. [i] There is indeed a posthumous Piece extant, imputed to Cartes, and entitled, De la Formation du Fœtus, wherein there is a Pretence made to solve it all by fortuitous Mechanism; but as the Theory thereof is built wholly upon a false Supposition, sufficiently confuted by Dr. Harvey, in his Book of Generation, so is it all along precarious and exceptionable; besides that it extends not at all to the Differences there are in Animals, nor offers any Reason, why an Animal of one Species might not be formed out of the Seed of another. Cudworth's Intellectual System. [k] Hale's Origination of Mankind.

Motions and celeſtial Appearances: When immediately ſteps in an Ariſtotelian, and, being diſſatisfied with all the former Solutions, tells them, "Gentlemen, you are all "miſtaken; all your Hypotheſes are impertinent, and the thin Cobwebs of your own "Brains. This Machine, I tell you, is eternal, and ſo are all its Motions; for as "a circular Motion has no Beginning or Ending, this Motion, that you ſee both "in the Index and Wheels, is eternal, had no Beginning, and ſhall have no End: "This is the only Way of ſolving the Phenomenon."

WHILE theſe ſeveral Philoſophers are thus debating the Matter, in comes the Artiſt that made the Watch; and, having heard all that paſt, "Gentlemen, ſays "he, you have ſhewn a great deal of Invention about this Piece of Work, but "you are all out in your Gueſſes. I myſelf made it, and brought it hither; and, if "you pleaſe to give me Leave, will tell you how I made it. Firſt I wrought the "Spring, and the Fuſee, and the Wheels, and the Balance, and the Caſe, and the "Table; I fitted them one to another, and placed theſe ſeveral Axes, that are to "direct the Motions of the Index, to diſcover the Hour of the Day, the Figure, "that ſhews the Phaſis of the Moon, and the other various Motions that you ſee; "and then I put it all together, and wound up the Spring, which gives Motion to "the Whole. In this Manner I made it: And that you may be ſatisfied I ſpeak "Truth, I will tell you the whole Order and Proceſs of my making it, the ſeveral "Materials that it conſiſts of, how every individual Part of it is formed, and how "long I was about it." This plain and undiſguiſed Diſcovery, at the very firſt naming of it, makes all the fine Suppoſitions of theſe philoſophical Heads vain and ridiculous: And, in like Manner, the plain unaffected Narrative of the World's Original, given us by the Hand of Moſes, is ſo full of good Senſe, Congruity, and Reaſonableneſs in itſelf, (as we ſhall afterwards ſhew) that it gives us at once a clear Diſcovery of this great Myſtery, and ſhews, that the Eſſays of Philoſophers to explain it are but empty Theories, the Creatures of Fancy and Imagination, and nothing elſe.

[l]NOR are the Eſſays of ſuch Philoſophers only vain in themſelves, but in ſome Senſe criminal: For ſince God, in the Holy Scriptures, repreſents the Structure of thoſe ſeveral Parts that compoſe the World, as the immediate Effect of his Will, in order to impreſs on our Minds a more lively and awful Senſe of his infinite Power; our Senſe of his Power is impaired, when we find it accounted for any other Way: Nor is the Awfulneſs of the Divine Majeſty near ſo great, when we hear a Philoſopher gravely recounting, how God having put certain Particles of Matter in Motion, they, by Degrees, ranged themſelves according to their preſent Order and Situation; as when we heard it ſaid, [m]that he ſpake, and it was done; he commanded, and it ſtood faſt; which not only expreſſes the Truth of the Hiſtory, but the general Senſe of Mankind, who have always had this Notion of God, that to command, and to do it, is the ſame Thing with him. [n]It was in this Deſcription of the Creation of the World, that Longinus obſerved the ſublime Stile of Moſes; and if the Relation of it be juſtly admirable, the Creation itſelf, in ſuch a Manner as is there related, muſt be much more wonderful. But now, what would Longinus have ſaid, if the Creation had been related to have been performed, not by any Command which had its immediate Effect, but by the tedious Proceſs of mechanical Cauſes? What Grandeur, what Evidence of the Divine Power and Majeſty is there in this, more than in any chymical Operation, if the mechanical Hypotheſis were true; 'Tis not eaſy to determine therefore, whether the Vanity or Impiety of Men be really greater, in pretending to draw a particular Proceſs of the Manner, wherein the ſeveral Parts of the World were formed, without the Divine Interpoſition; and 'tis to reprove ſuch bold and impious Eſſays of human Wit, (for [o]next to attempt the making of a World, I know no Undertaking more daring than to pretend to diſcover how it was made) that we find God repreſented in Scripture, as demanding of Man what Anſwer he can give to the Queſtions, there propoſed concerning the Origin and Formation of Things: [p]Where waſt thou, when I laid the Foundation of the Earth? Declare, if thou haſt Underſtanding. Who hath laid the Meaſures thereof, or who hath ſtretched the Line upon it? Whereupon are the Foundations thereof faſtened, or who laid the Corner-Stone thereof? And that we find Solomon himſelf, whoſe Knowledge of natural Cauſes was the moſt conſummate, and of the greateſt Extent, of any Man's that ever appeared in the World, World, declaring to all Poſterity an Incapacity in Mankind, to attain a Perfection in it: [q] I beheld, ſays he, all the Work of God, that a Man cannot find out the Work that is even done under the Sun; becauſe though a Man labour to ſeek it out, yet he ſhall not find it; yea farther, though a wiſe Man ſeek to know it, yet ſhall he not be able to find it.

'WE may therefore eſteem the Learning, and admire the Sagacity, and allow the good Intentions of theſe Authors, that make it the Matter of their Enquiry; but when any one advances an Hypotheſis in Contradiction to all others; propoſes it not as probable, but as certainly true; and maintains poſitively, not only that Things might be ſo, if God pleaſed, but that they were ſo, and could be no otherwiſe: This to me is an Extravagance of Conceit, highly repugnant to the royal Philoſopher's Sentiments. We know nothing, in ſhort, of the Way and Manner, how God has been pleaſed to do any Thing, but by his own Revelation. If therefore each Hypotheſis were poſſible, yet it could not be affirm'd that any one was right; becauſe God might act by quite contrary Means, than what any Man can imagine. But when theſe ſeveral Hypotheſes deſtroy one another; when every one pretends to ſet up his own, in Contradiction to all the reſt, and none can maintain its Ground any longer, than till another is brought to confute it, it were very ſtrange if Men ſhould content themſelves with ſuch Uncertainties, rather than rely on the plain Word of God.

THE Word of God has aſſured us, that [r] the inviſible Things of him from the Creation of the World are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the Things that are made, even his eternal Power and Godhead. His Power, in being able, with ſo much Eaſe and Expedition, to rear and uphold ſo vaſt a Fabrick; his Wiſdom, in contriving ſuch a beautiful Syſtem of Things, digeſting them ſo fitly, and connecting them ſo firmly, and in ſuch an harmonious Order; and his Godhead, in being the Author of all thoſe Beauties and Perfections, all thoſe Splendors and Magnificences, which we behold with ſo much Pleaſure and Wonder, and which, the Heathens themſelves, in the Contemplation of, were carried away with a poetick Rapture, and fell into Fits of compoſing Hymns and Eulogies to the World's Creator: And therefore [s] Bleſſed be thy glorious Name, which is exalted above all Bleſſing and Praiſe. Thou, even thou, art Lord alone, thou haſt made Heaven, the Heaven of Heavens, with all their Hoſt; the Earth, and all Things that are therein, the Seas, and all that is therein, and thou preſerveſt them all.

CHAP. III.

Of the CREATION of HEAVEN and ANGELS.

THE World, or Univerſe, conſiſts of two Parts; the one inviſible and inacceſſible to us, which is the ſupreme Heaven, together with the Angels, that there inhabit: The other viſible, which comprehends the Firmament, wherein the Stars do ſhine; the ſeveral Planets, that we behold with our Eyes; and this terraqueous Globe, whereon we live. This ſupreme Heaven [a] St Paul has called the third Heaven, in reſpect to our Diſtance from it; in which Senſe, the firſt Heaven is the Air, or Atmoſphere of the Earth, wherein Birds do fly, and Meteors are ingendered; the ſecond is the ethereal Region, wherein the Stars, and other luminous Bodies are fixed; and the third, the empyreal Heaven, where God himſelf reſides, and more immediately diſplays his majeſtick Preſence. Now he, that at all conſiders the vaſt Bulk and Extent of the Univerſe, and how many thouſand Miles Circumference that Part of the World, which lies open to our Sight, muſt be allowed to take up, will find himſelf, upon the firſt Reflection, compelled to acknowledge, [b] that the Heavens declare the Glory of God, and the Firmament ſheweth his Handy-work. The Sun, according to the common and loweſt loweſt Computation, is one hundred and ſixty-ſix times bigger than the Earth: [c] The Diſtance of the fixed Stars from us, [d] according to the beſt Calculations, is ſix hundred and forty-eight thouſand Millions of Engliſh Miles; and if ſo, what a prodigious Extent muſt the whole be? And what muſt we think of that inviſible World above, which ſtill increaſes, and enlarges its Circumference, in Proportion to its Diſtance? I make no Wonder at all therefore, that, upon ſuch a Contemplation as this, ſome Philoſophers of old have been tempted to believe the World infinite; and without doubt they would have believed it ſo, had not Reaſon come in to their Aid, and ſhewn them, that every Thing, compoſed of Number and Parts, muſt neceſſarily be finite, and can have no more than an indefinite Extenſion, i. e. an Extenſion ſo large, that we cannot conceive it, nor ſet any Bounds to it. But now, what Mind, leſs than infinite, what Hand, leſs than omnipotent, could have laid a Deſign ſo immenſe, and executed it ſo ſucceſsfully? We juſtly admire the Compaſs of the Heavens, the Vaſtneſs of their Diſtance, and the Regularity of their Motions; and when we behold the ſtarry Region, ſet forth in all its Pride and Glory, we cannot forbear extolling its great Creator: But could we draw aſide the Veil, and look into the Sanctuary; could we mount above this ſpangled Firmament, which is but the Outwork, as it were, to that new Jeruſalem, [e] whoſe Streets are of pure Gold, and the very Foundations of whoſe Walls (to accommodate its Luſtre to our Apprehenſion) are of precious Stones, which God has prepared for his own Habitation; we ſhould ſoon forget our boaſted Laws of mechanical Motion, and bluſh, and fall down, and join our Acknowledgments with thoſe bright Intelligences, that ceaſe not Day and Night, bleſſing God, and ſaying, [f] Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive Glory, and Honour, and Power; for thou haſt created all Things, and for thy Pleaſure they are, and were created.

Whether Moſes's Account extends to them.

'Tis a great Diſpute both among Aſtronomers and Divines, [g] whether the Hiſtory of the Creation, as it is delivered by Moſes, includes the higher Heavens, or is only intended to deſcribe the Formation of the Earth, and its Dependencies. Thoſe that take his Words, In the Beginning God created the Heaven and the Earth, for a ſummary Propoſition, are of Opinion, that the entire Univerſe is comprized in the ſix Days Works; but others, who rather think them a general Preface to his Hiſtory, imagine, that they extend no farther than to this habitable World; at the moſt, no farther than this Planetary Syſtem. They ſuppoſe then, that the Creation of the Heavens was precedaneous to that of the Earth, ſome think, to that of the Chaos; that they were made for the Reception of Angels, who were created many Ages before the Formation of Man; and that it is agreeable to the Notions we have of God, that he ſhould have Creatures to communicate his Goodneſs to, and a Place to diſplay his Glory in, long before the Moſaick Account of Time. Tho' therefore the holy Penman mentions Heaven as well as Earth, in his Introduction; yet it does not therefore follow, ſay they, that he means the ſupreme Heaven, becauſe the Word Heaven, in Scripture-Language, is often known to ſignify no more, than the Region of the Air. Thus we read of the [h] Firmament of Heaven, [i] the Windows of Heaven, [k] the Bottles of Heaven, and [l] the hoary Froſt of Heaven; none of which extend beyond our Atmoſphere; and therefore, when God is ſaid to create the Heaven and the Earth, we cannot from thence neceſſarily conclude, that he did, at one and the ſame Time, create every Thing in the vaſt extra-mundane Spaces: Nay, tho' we ſhould allow Heaven, in this Place, to be taken in its moſt exalted Senſe, yet all that can be inferr'd from hence is, that Moſes is here inſtructing the Jews, not only that the little Globe, whoſe Formation he was going to deſcribe, but even the Frame of univerſal Nature, and the Heavens, with all their Hoſts, both viſible and inviſible, were effected by the ſame Almighty Hand: But, at what Point of Time they were effected, he no where determines; only he intimates, in the very next Words, that they were of an antienter Standing than the Earth; for the Earth, ſays he, (or the Chaotick Maſs, out of which the Earth was formed) was without Form, and Void, and Darkneſs was upon the Face of the Deep, even after he had told us, that God had created the Heaven. Tho' therefore we are told indeed, that in the fourth Day [m] God made two great Lights, the greater Light to rule the Day, and the leſſer Light to rule the Night, and that he made the Stars alſo; yet the Text, they ſay, does not neceſſarily denote ſo much. [n] Our Engliſh Tranſlation interpolates the Words (he made) made) which are not in the Original; for the ſimple Tranſlation of the Hebrew is only this,——And God made two great Lights, the greater Light to rule the Day, and the leſſer Light to rule the Night, and the Stars; which laſt Words (and the Stars) are not to be referred to the Word (Made) in the Beginning of the Verſe, but to the Word (Rule) which immediately goes before them; and ſo this Sentence, the leſſer Light to rule the Night and the Stars, will denote the peculiar Uſefulneſs and Predominancy of the Moon above all other Stars and Planets, in reſpect of this Earth of ours: For it ſhines out, when they only twinkle, and affords a mighty Influence in the Production and Growth of all Plants and Vegetables; ſo that it may not improperly be called the [o] Ruler of the Night, and a Prince, as it were, among other Stars.

THOSE that take in the whole ſolar Syſtem, allow of this Interpretation; but ſuch, as confine the Moſaick Creation to this ſublunary World only, have invented another, viz. [p] that the Heaven and heavenly Bodies were not created on the fourth Day, (for that they were long before) but were only then brought to Sight, and made apparent to the Earth, after the ſuperior Region of the Chaos, which obſcur'd them before, was ſo far defecated, and made clear, as to admit of the Rays of the Sun. [q] Tho' therefore the Subſtance of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, was certainly before; yet they are ſaid not improperly then to be made, when, the Darkneſs of the intermediate Air being diſſipated, they became conſpicuous to the Earth, and began firſt to ſerve it in the Capacity of Sun, Moon, and Stars. To countenance this Expoſition, they think it unaccountable, that the Earth, with its Furniture, ſhould take up four entire Days, at leaſt, of thoſe ſix, which were allotted for the whole Creation; while the Sun, Moon, and Stars, Bodies ſo immenſely large, beſides the unknown Regions of the Empyreal Heaven, are crouded together into one ſingle Day; whereupon they conclude, that theſe innumerable celeſtial Bodies were made at another Time. When they were created.

WHETHER Heaven was created gradually or inſtantaneouſly; out of nothing, or out of ſome pre-exiſtent Matter; and, in the Production of it, whether God proceeded in the ſame Method, that he did in the Formation of the Earth; are Queſtions, wherein we have no poſitive Evidence, and may therefore admit of no ſmall Debate. It ſeems more agreeable to Scripture, however, to imagine, that all celeſtial Beings were originally produced out of nothing, becauſe there was not that Reaſon for God's gradual Procedure (as we ſhall ſee preſently) in the Formation of them, as there was in the Diſpoſition of the Parts of the Earth: [r] And if they were made out of nothing, there is no Queſtion but that they were made inſtantaneouſly, and all in the ſame Moment; for when God commanded that they ſhould exiſt, (there being nothing either to oppoſe his Command, or retard the Execution of it, nor any Medium between Non-exiſtence and a State of Exiſtence) they muſt immediately have exiſted, in the Form that the Scripture repreſents his Almighty Fiat: [s] He ſpake the Word, and they were made; he commanded, and they were created; for by the Word of the Lord were the Heavens made, and all the Hoſt of them by the Word of his Mouth. Whether out of nothing.

WHEN the Angels firſt received their Being; whether they exiſted before, or were themſelves a Part of the Hexameron, or ſix Days Work of God, is another Queſtion much diſputed among the ancient Doctors, eſpecially thoſe of the Greek Church. [t] Some have thought that theſe illuſtrious Spirits are mentioned by Moſes under the Name of [u] Light, and ſo were the Production of the firſt Day; but 'tis viſible that, in that Place, Light is oppoſed to Darkneſs, and called [x] Day; which is enough to convince any one, that it is not to be underſtood of Angels, but ſtrictly and properly of ſome luminous Body. Angels when created.

OTHERS have imagined that they were not made [y] until the ſixth Day; and that as other Parts of the Creation roſe by Degrees, from the Leſs to the more Perfect, until they came to Man, who was not created until the laſt Day; ſo Angels, who are [o] This Senſe of the Words ſeems more natural, becauſe the Moon's being Prince and Ruler amongſt the Stars, and Goddeſs of the Night, is the common Language of the Ancients. Thus Tully tells us, that ſhe was called Diana, becauſe ſhe made a Day of the Night. De Nat. Theb. [p] Whiſton's Theory. [q] This Expoſition is thought the more feaſible, becauſe the Word facere, in the Latin Tongue, has its Derivation from novam faciem induere; ſo that a Thing is then ſaid to be made when it has another Appearance, than what it had before: Nor is the original Word (Gnaſah) which is uſed here, much different; for it ſignifies, not only any new Formation, but any new Uſe, or outward Appearance of a Thing; as might be ſhewn from ſeveral Inſtances. Nicholls's Conference, Vol. I. are the ſupreme Order of created Beings, and many Degrees more perfect than Man, were made (but made after him) the ſame Day, to crown and conſummate the Work. But this Conjecture, how plauſible ſoever, has not the Fortune to be countenanced by Scripture; for if the [z] Morning-Stars ſung together, and all the Sons of God ſhouted for Joy, when God laid the Foundations of the Earth; [a] then were the Angels exiſtent, at leaſt on the third Day of the Creation, [b] when God ſeparated the Waters from the dry Land.

[c] OTHERS again are poſitive, that Moſes himſelf (though he does not expreſs on what particular Day the Angels were made) does nevertheleſs intimate, that they were created ſome Time within the Compaſs of the Six, when he tells us that, [d] Thus the Heaven and the Earth were finiſhed, and all the Hoſt of them, and on the ſeventh Day God ended the Work, which he had made: But then, what we are to underſtand by the Hoſt of them, this is the Queſtion. [e] The whole Hoſt of Heaven (taking it in that Senſe) conſiſts of two Parts, the viſible and intelligible Hoſt of Heaven. The viſible Hoſt of Heaven are the Sun, Moon, and Stars, thoſe glorious Lights of Heaven, which we behold with our Eyes, and ſo they are called [f] in ſeveral Places of Scripture. The intelligible Hoſt of Heaven are the Angels; and wherever we meet with this Hoſt [g] bleſſing the Lord, [h] praiſing the Lord, and [i] worſhipping him, there we may conclude, that it is commonly to be taken in this Senſe; but in the Place before us there is no Intimation given us how we are to take it, only, as Moſes makes mention of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, but never of the Angels, it ſeems more probable that the Words ſhould relate to them: And this Probability is farther heightened, if we conſider [k] how, from the Fall of the Angels, and their ſeducing Man ſo ſoon into Sin, it ſeems not a little credible, that they had an Exiſtence ſome Time, at leaſt, before the Creation of the material World. It does not ſeem reaſonable, that thoſe glorious Beings (as they confeſſedly were in their original State) ſhould immediately have formed, and executed a Deſign againſt their Maker; eſpecially conſidering the Nature of ſuch an Attempt, the Preparations to be made, the Numbers to be gained over, and the many previous Arts to be practiſed (all which muſt take up ſome Time) in order to inflame the Rebellion. For theſe and ſuch-like Reaſons then, ſay they, it ſeems expedient, that thoſe bright and heavenly Beings ſhould precede all material Things in the Time of their Creation, as well as they do in the Honour and Dignity of their Nature and Employment; which are the next Things we are to look into.

SECT. I.

Of the BEING and NATURE of ANGELS.

The Signification of the Word Angel.

ANGELS (in the proper Signification of the Word) [l] do not import the Nature of any Beings, but only the Office to which they are appointed, eſpecially in the Way of Meſſage or Intercourſe between God and his Creatures; in which Senſe they are called [m] the Miniſters of God, that do his Pleaſure, and [n] miniſtering Spirits, ſent forth to miniſter for them, who ſhall be Heirs of Salvation. That there are ſuch Beings in the Regions above, as we call Angels, i. e. [o] certain permanent Subſtances, inviſible, and imperceptible to our Senſes, endow'd with Underſtanding, and Power, ſuperior to that of human Nature; created by God, and ſubject to him, as the Supreme Being; miniſtering to his Divine Providence, in the Government of the World; and, by his Appointment, more eſpecially attending the Affairs of Mankind, is a Truth ſo fully recorded in the Scriptures, that no one can doubt of it, who believes their Divine Authority. [p] Nay, in thoſe very Books of Moſes, which the Sadducees looked upon as ſacred, there is ſuch expreſs Mention made of their frequent Intercourſe with Mankind, that we can hardly believe that theſe Sadducees utterly denied their Exiſtence, (for then they muſt deny the Truth of the Pentateuch) only that they had no Notion of their appearing at that Time, or perhaps ſome Ages before; in like Manner, as ſome among us, though they do not abſolutely impugn the Being of Spirits, yet are far from giving into the many Accounts of Apparitions

Their Exiſtence proved from Scripture.

Apparitions, and in ſome Diſpoſition to explode them all, becauſe they relate to inviſible Subſtances.

'TIS a groſs Notion however not to believe the Reality of a Thing, becauſe we cannot ſee it; and we may with the ſame Propriety call in Queſtion the Being of a God, or the Operations of our own Minds, as we may the Exiſtence of Angels, becauſe our mortal Eyes are too groſs to diſcern their Subſtance, and remark their Attendance about us. 'Tis Argument enough to engage our Belief, that God has revealed the Thing to us, and 'tis perhaps an Inſtance of his Loving-Kindneſs, that he does not open our Eyes, to ſhew us the Beings, that do ſurround us; which, conſidering the Mixture of good and bad Spirits, differently obſerving our Ways, and differently affected with our Behaviour, might affright and diſtract us; at leaſt, determine the Freedom of our Will, and deprive us of the Honour of ſerving God by Choice.

'TIS none of our Ambition then, to be convinced by ocular Demonſtration: We know that the Word of God is true, and that, both in the Old and New Teſtament, this Doctrine of Spirits is ſo often declared and exemplified, that nothing but a Mind, highly prejudiced, and deeply tinctured with Infidelity, can reſiſt its Evidence. Nay we know, that the wiſeſt of the Ancients, both Philoſophers and Poets, always acknowledged the Exiſtence of Angels, [q] and, though they gave them different Appellations, that of Demons among the Greeks, and Genii among the Latins, yet they were full of this Perſuaſion, that they were a Sort of middle Beings, ſent upon gracious Meſſages, and employed as Miniſters and Interpreters between God and Man; and from this Perſuaſion, the Account of their Mercury, who, upon every Occaſion, was diſpatched from the ſupreme Jupiter with Meſſages to the World below, without all Controverſy, did ariſe.

'IT is not worth our while to enquire, by what Means the Heathen World was led into this Perſuaſion; whether it was by a certain natural Inſtinct, and Force of human Reaſon; by a prevailing Tradition, that obtained in the earlieſt Ages of the World; or by the Experience of ſuch Effects, as could not be accounted for without the Suppoſition of ſuch Beings. Which way ſoever they came into this Opinion, 'tis certain, that we cannot be miſtaken in it, becauſe we have both Reaſon and Revelation, for the Confirmation of our Faith in this Particular.

IF we look upon ourſelves, we cannot but perceive, that we are Creatures com- From Reaſon.
pounded of two different Natures; that, in our animal Nature, we reſemble the Beaſts that periſh; and in our rational, find too many Impediments, and Imperfections, ever to think ourſelves the Top of God's Creation. [s] If we look upon the Earth, we ſee a Gradation of ſeveral Creatures, one above another; ſome, that have barely Being, as Earth, Air, and Water; ſome, that, beſides Being, have Life, as Plants, Trees, and other Vegetables; ſome, that, beſides Life, have Senſe, and Perception, as brute Animals; and ſome, that, beſides Senſe, have Reaſon and Cogitation, as Men: And, as we ſee our ſenſitive Part exiſts in Beings, that are beneath us, ſo it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that our more noble and intellectual Part exiſts in Beings, that are above us: Exiſts ſeparate from all Incumbrance of Fleſh, and moves in a Sphere of Activity, as much ſuperior to us, as we are to Brutes.

NAY, as we perceive, that there are ſeveral Steps and Degrees, whereby Nature aſcends to the Top of that Species, which has ſome Reſemblance to the next Claſs of Beings, that are above it; (for ſome Brutes are more ſenſible and apprehenſive than others; ſome Plants more beautiful, and approaching nearer to Senſe; and, of inanimate Things, ſome are more ſplendid and amazing than their Neighbours) ſo it is no improbable Conjecture, that there is the like gradual Aſcent in this celeſtial Hierarchy, from the loweſt Rank, that borders upon Man, to the higheſt, that comes as near, as a finite Creature can, to an infinite Deity.

THIS Earth, which is but a Spot, in Compariſon of the Heavens, is repleniſhed, we ſee, with Men innumerable, capable of knowing, and conſequently of ſerving, and adoring their Creator. Heaven, we conceive, muſt be a glorious Place indeed, when the Firmament, that hangs over our Head, is but the Floor, and Pavement, as it were, of that bright extended Region, which the Glory of the Lord inhabiteth; and can we think, that this Region [t] is like an empty Wilderneſs, or barren Deſert, deſtitute of intelligent Beings, to admire the Wonders of the Place, and do Homage to the great Author of the Univerſe? When we ſee ſo many proſtrate at his Footſtool, and paying their Devotions to him at such a Distance here below, can we suppose, that he has no Servants to wait on him in his Presence-Chamber, none to attend his Commands, none to resound his Praise, and tell forth his noble Acts, within the Circumference of his Throne?

WE sadly mistake ourselves, if we think, that the great God of Heaven and Earth is (what the Epicureans paint him) an idle, solitary Being, wrapped up in Indolence and Ease, and contenting himself with the dumb Contemplation of his own Excellencies. His Character is to be good, and to do good; he takes delight in viewing the Works of his Hands; he is pleased with the Praises, and joyful Acclamations of his Creatures; and perhaps, in Heaven, has as great a Variety of them, as we see upon Earth, and has put as large a Difference between their respective Powers and Abilities, as he has done, not only between Man and Man, but even between Men, and other inferior Creatures.

Their Number and Orders.

TO this Purpose, we may observe, that, not only the Number of the celestial Inhabitants is said to be [u] ten thousand Times ten Thousand, and Thousands of Thousands; but that the Conjectures of some speculative Men have distributed them into [x] nine Orders, according to the Number of the Words, whereby they are expressed in Scripture, and reduced these Orders into three Hierarchies, as they call them; to the first of which belong, Seraphim, Cherubim, and Thrones; to the second, Dominions, Virtues, and Powers; and to the third, Principalities, Arch-Angels, and Angels. They imagine farther, that in each Hierarchy, there is an exact Subordination; some are † Assistentes, [y] what we may stile, the Residentiaries of Heaven, who stand always before the Throne of God; and others, [z] Ministrantes, what we may call the Missionaries of Heaven, that are sent forth, as Need requires, to minister to the Faithful upon Earth; that the Province of the one is to receive all Orders immediately from God, and the Business of the other is instantly to execute them.

HOWEVER this be with Relation to the standing Polity of that invisible Kingdom, yet, at least, upon Occasions of more Importance, we are assured, that the highest of these heavenly Courtiers are sometimes dispatched with Embassies to the lower World; as the Angel Gabriel (who [a] stands in the Presence of God, as himself testifies) was first sent to Zacharias, to notify the Approach of the Messias; and afterwards, to the Virgin Mary, to congratulate her Conception of him; at which you find, with this Angel (as I suppose) a Multitude of an heavenly Host, i. e. of lower Angels, under the Command of this [b] Prince of the Host, praising God, and saying, Glory be to God in the highest.

Their Nature.

[c] THAT they are Spirits, the Apostle tells us; but whether they are pure Spirits, divested of Matter and all corporeal Vehicle, (as Philosophers term it) has been a Controversy of a long standing. Not only the ancient Philosophers, but some of the ancient Christian Fathers, were of Opinion, that Angels were cloathed with some Kind of Bodies, consisting of the purest and finest Matter, which they called Æthereal;

[u] Rev. v. 11. [x] Some of the Hebrew Doctors tell us, that there are four Orders of Angels; the first is of Michael, the second of Gabriel, the third of Uriel, and the fourth of Raphael; but, according to Maimonides, there are ten distinct Degrees of these heavenly Ministers. Among Christian Writers, Dionysius the Areopagite, (as he is called) was the first that positively asserted nine Orders of Angels; and in this he was followed by the Schoolmen, and most of the Doctors of the Church of Rome. Edwards's Body of Divinity.

† This Distinction of Assistentes and Ministrantes seems to imply, that the principal Angels are wholly exempt from the Ministry, that we are now discoursing of; for which it is alledged, that some of them are said always to behold the Face of God, and to stand before him; and, consequently, never go forth themselves upon external Missions, but only give the Orders, which they receive from God, to such inferior Angels, as minister under them, to be by them executed upon Earth. It is to be observed however, that the Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews makes no Distinction among them in this Regard; for his negative Interrogation (which is equivalent to a strong Affirmation) is universal and unlimited, Are they not all ministring Spirits? Heb. i. 14. Nor should it be forgot, that the main Scope of the Author in this Chapter is, to assert the Pre-eminence of the Son of God, not above some inferior Angels only, but over the Angels universally, even those of the highest Rank and Dignity; and therefore he asserts, that, whereas the Scripture speaks of the Son as sitting on the Throne of God the Father, and so as Co-Partner with him in the Divine Empire; the Angels all of them are confessedly ministring Spirits, sent forth, at God's Pleasure, to execute his Commands on Earth. As certain therefore as it is, that the Son of God is superior to all Angels, none excepted, so certain it is, that all the Angels, without Exception, are ministring Spirits, sent forth to minister for the faithful on Earth. Their standing before God therefore, or seeing his Face, are only metaphorical Phrases, which mean no more, than their being ready at Hand to do what he commands them; and therefore, if the Son of God himself, when sent by the Father, vouchsafed to come down from Heaven, and to be incarnate for us Men, and for our Salvation; it cannot be thought beneath the Dignity of the most excellent of that celestial Hierarchy, to be sent down upon Earth, in order to do good Offices to Mankind. Bull's Sermons, Vol. II.

[y] Norris's Sermons, Vol. II. [z] This Distinction, inter assistentes & ministrantes angelos, was first made by Aquinas, and his Followers, being led into it by the Authority of Dionysius. Bull's Sermons. [a] Luke i. 11——19. [b] Dan. x. 21. [c] Tillotson's Sermons, Vol. II

Æthereal; and this Perſuaſion ſeemed to be grounded upon a pious Belief, that it is the peculiar Excellency and Prerogative of God himſelf, to be a pure and ſimple Spirit. The more current Opinion however of the Chriſtian Church (eſpecially of later Times) has been, that Angels are Subſtances entirely ſpiritual, though infinitely inferior to their Creator's Eſſence, and have nothing material or corporeal belonging to them; tho' they can, at any Time, form and aſſume Bodies, and, as the Scripture acquaints us, have, on certain Occaſions, appeared in human Shape.

Their Powers and Abilities.

[d] WE indeed, that are compounded Creatures, find a great deal of Obſtruction both in our ſpiritual and corporeal Acts, from this Load of Matter, that we carry about with us. The Weight of the Body preſſes down the Soul in all its nobleſt Sallies; and Maims and Sickneſs weaken and retard the Body, even in its moſt ordinary Operations: But now the holy Angels have none of theſe Impediments to contend with, they have no Weight or Load upon their Faculties; nothing to deaden or relax the Spring of their Motion; no Concupiſcence to darken their Underſtandings, or pervert their Wills; no Indiſpoſition, Languor, or Wearineſs, occaſioned by lazy or ſickly Vehicles; but are always freſh, vigorous, and bright, like the Sun, riſing in the Morning to run its appointed Courſe: [e] Are always ſtrong, quick, and penetrating, as the Wind, as Lightning, as a Flame of Fire, and are therefore very often, in Scripture, expreſſed by theſe Metaphors.

NAY, ſo ſtrong and powerful, ſo ſubtile and penetrating are they, that no Darkneſs can hinder their Sight; no Reſiſtance of material Bodies can obſtruct their Paſſage; no bodily Quality can have its Effect, if they pleaſe to ſuſpend or controul it: For they could ſee [f] Sarah laugh, though ſhe was in another Tent; [g] could paſs through the Priſon-Door, to viſit and releaſe St Peter; and [h] with-hold the Violence of the fiery Furnace, to reſcue the three Iſraelites. That they can collect, and manage to their Uſes, all Meteors and Exhalations; can diſpoſe the Temperature of the Air, and order the Influence of the Elements, ſo as to produce ſtrange Sights in the upper Regions, and occaſion either publick Bleſſings or Calamities here below; [i] the Thunder and Lightning, and Earthquakes, at the Delivery of the Law, ſaid to be raiſed by them; and the many ſore Judgments of [k] War, Famine, and Peſtilence, ſaid to be of their Infliction, are a ſufficient Indication.

[l] WHAT Influence they have over human Bodies, either to improve, or impair their State of Health; what Power they have over their animal Spirits, ſo as, by fixing, or accelerating them, to produce either Joy or Sadneſs in us; and what Acceſs they have to our Minds, by the Help and Mediation of our Fancies; [m] the Death of Herod, who was ſtruck with an Angel, and his Bowels putrified into Worms; [n] the Caſe of Saul, who, by the Faſcination of an evil Spirit, was at Times run into a deſperate Melancholy; and the Caſe of ſome primitive Martyrs, who, by the Miniſtry of good Spirits, were, in their Sufferings, exhilarated to a wonderous Degree, are abundant Conviction. Nay, I cannot ſee, why theſe lofty Beings, who are ſaid to excel in Knowledge, and Wiſdom, as well as Strength, may not ſo perfectly know the Texture of our Nature, as to find a more immediate Acceſs to our Souls; as to be able to ſuggeſt Thoughts by Day, as well as Dreams by Night; and, in the Courſe of their Attendance upon us, to inform or warn, to encourage or dehort, to comfort or affright us, in ſome of our moſt momentous Undertakings, whenever God's Commiſſion, or their Charity to our Souls, ſhall direct them ſo to do. This I am certain of, that the Scripture tells us expreſsly, that Satan put it into the Heart of Judas to betray Chriſt; and, if an evil Angel had Power to do this, there is no Queſtion to be made, but that an equal Ability is committed to thoſe, that watch over us for our Good. Theſe are ſome of the Powers and Faculties of Angels, that the ſacred Oracles have declared unto us; and more than theſe we muſt not expect to know, until we arrive at that happy State, where, by the infinite Power and Goodneſs of God, our Natures ſhall be transformed, and be made like unto them.

[o] IN what Manner theſe Angels come to the Knowledge and Perception of Things; whether it be by immediate Intuition, or by having the Images of them impreſſed upon their Minds, or by ſeeing the exemplary Reaſons of them in the Divine Nature: In what Manner they perform their Motions; whether it be by a continued and gradual Succeſſion, or by making long Intervals, and bounding, as it were, were, from one Part of the World to another in an Inſtant: In what Manner they occupy Space, and whether two, or any other Number of them, may not be preſent in one individual Spot, at one and the ſame Time; theſe are Queſtions, that ſavour more of Subtlety, than Edification; but what, ſuch as love to amuſe themſelves with ſuch Enquiries, may find Abundance of, and Scope enough to entertain their Curioſity, in the Lucubrations of the Schoolmen. In the mean Time, this Argument, thus far purſued, may be of Uſe to diſpel and ſcatter thoſe dark and cloudy Thoughts of the Divine Providence, which are apt, ſometimes, to ariſe within us, when we behold the lamentable Corruption and Apoſtacy of Mankind.

Inferences from the Doctrine of Angels.

1. IF we take a View of the Hiſtory of the World, ſince the firſt Time of its Creation; [p] how Man, as ſoon as he was made, rebelled, and Angels themſelves fell from their Station in Heaven; how the whole World was ſo polluted with Wickedneſs, that nothing, but an univerſal Deluge of Water, could cleanſe it; how the new World ſoon ran into the ſame Exceſs of Impiety, and, in a ſhort Time, was totally overſpread with Idolatry, and Polytheiſm, except one Family; how that one Family perverted their Ways many Times, and provoked the Holy One of Iſrael to Anger, ſo that he ſwore in his Wrath, he would have deſtroyed them, had not Moſes his Servant ſtood in the Gap: If we conſider, that, even ſince the Coming of his Son to enlarge the Bounds of the Church, and collect all Nations under one Shepherd and Biſhop of their Souls, the greater Part of the known World lies in Darkneſs, and the Shadow of Death; that Satan has a large Empire, and many Subjects ſubmitted to his Tyranny; that a vile Impoſtor has many Followers, and has ſet up a falſe Light where the famous [q] Candleſticks of the Lord were once ſituate; and that the ancient People of God continue obdurate, and, even to this Day, [r] when Moſes is read, have their Minds blinded, and the Veil remaining upon their Hearts; if we conſider, among thoſe, that profeſs the Goſpel of Chriſt, how few there are, that, in their Hearts and Lives, conform to its fundamental Precepts; how many, that in Works, if not in Principles, deny God, crucify afreſh his Son, and, by their Abominations, put him to open Shame; how ſmall a Senſe of Virtue and true Goodneſs, how ſtrong a Bent to Profaneneſs, and all Manner of Wickedneſs there is in the World; we can hardly forbear thinking, that the Wiſdom of God in forming this viſible Syſtem (ſuppoſing him to foreſee this general Depravity) is not ſo very manifeſt; and that the Production of human Race was not deſerving his Pains, ſince the End of creating them (which muſt be his own Glory) was in a Meaſure totally defeated.

BUT then, on the other Side, if we conſider, that, in every Age of the World, there has been a Remnant, that have ſerved the Lord with Fear and Reverence, and are kept by Grace unto Salvation; which, though they be few, in Compariſon of thoſe, that by their Diſobedience have brought upon themſelves Perdition; yet, when met together in one Body, will make a glorious Appearance: If we conſider farther, that, beſides this Houſhold of Faith, collected out of every Generation, God has provided himſelf with an innumerable Multitude of more excellent Creatures, who, from their firſt Production, have been always ſerving and adoring him; who never ſinned, nor ſhall ſin, as long as he endures; that they, together with us, ſhall make up one general Aſſembly; that we, together with them, ſhall enter [s] into the City of the living God, the new Jeruſalem, and there ſing Praiſes unto him, that ſits upon the Throne, and unto the Lamb for evermore: If we conſider this, I ſay, our Notions of Providence, in the Creation of the World, will begin to clear up; the Number of elect Saints and Angels will be found ſufficient to celebrate the Supper of the Lamb to all Eternity; and the Number of the Reprobate will put no Damp upon the heavenly Joy; for the Remembrance of them, upon the full and raviſhing Employ of our Faculties, will be quite loſt and extinguiſhed.

WHEN therefore we are troubled at any Time, and offended, to ſee how badly Things go here below; how Vice triumphs, and Virtue is deſpis'd; how the great and good God is diſhonoured and affronted, and his Laws ſlighted, by the Generality of Men; what a vaſt Train of deluded Mortals the Prince of Darkneſs draws after him to Perdition; and how ſmall the Number is, that the bleſſed Precepts of the Prince of Life do retrieve; let us then look upwards, and view the heavenly Regions above us, where Millions of Millions of holy Angels dwell. There the Kingdom of God is in its Glory; there Virtue ſhines in its full Luſtre and Brightneſs:

Brightneſs: There no unclean Thing can enter, no Sin, no Uneaſineſs, no Diſorder is to be found there; but all Things go according to the great Creator's Will: And when, in a ſhort Time, the Spirits of juſt Men made perfect ſhall meet theſe Spirits above, and ſo enter into a joyful Eternity; how muſt the Senſe of this pacify our Minds, and reconcile all preſent Inconſiſtencies to us, if ſo be we do in earneſt look for [u] a new Heaven and a new Earth, where Righteouſneſs, and nothing but Righteouſneſs, is to dwell!

2. WHAT has been ſaid of [x] the Powers and Faculties of theſe celeſtial Creatures, will afford a Chriſtian, at any Time, a delightful Contemplation, to conſider, how immenſely great, as well as good, their heavenly Creator muſt be. We juſtly admire the Wonders of God in the Formation of Things, which we ſee upon the Surface of the Earth: A Plant, a Flower, a Pile of Graſs, the leaſt Inſect, and the meaneſt Reptile, if duly conſidered, give us great Notions of his Almighty Power: We juſtly commemorate his Greatneſs, in the Obſervations we make upon our own Compoſition; in every Joint, and Muſcle, and Fibre, how fearfully and wonderfully we are made; and (what is the Wonder of all) how our Soul is united to this Maſs of Fleſh and Bones: We juſtly adore his Immenſity, in ſurveying the Heavens, even the Work of his Fingers, and thoſe vaſt luminous Bodies, that he has placed over our Heads, [y] to divide the Day from the Night, and to be for Signs, and for Seaſons, and for Days, and for Years. But if we could turn aſide the Curtain, and look into the Holy of Holies; if we could penetrate this outward Firmament, and paſs, with St Paul, into the third Heaven, with Eyes impregnated to bear the Sight; we ſhould there behold ſuch an infinite Number of Things unutterable, as would quite eclipſe the other Parts of the Creation, and make us wonder at ourſelves, that we ever admired any Thing elſe.

WHAT then we cannot attain to by Sight, at this Diſtance from the other World, let us endeavour to bring Home to us by Contemplation. Let us imagine ourſelves in the ſame Place and Situation with Daniel, to whom was repreſented [z] the Antient of Days, ſitting upon his Throne, a thouſand thouſand miniſtring unto him, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand ſtanding before him, the leaſt of which was fairer than Light, ſwifter than Thought, and brighter than the Sun ſhining in its Meridian Strength; having, as he tells, [a] his Eyes like Lamps of Fire, his Arms and his Feet like poliſhed Braſs, the Voice of his Words like the Voice of a Multitude, and his Awfulneſs and Power ſo vaſtly great, that, at one Look, [b] he ſtruck the Prophet dead, and, [c] at one Touch, raiſed and revived him again; and then let us conſider, how inexpreſſibly powerful the Author and Giver of Life muſt be, who, with one Almighty Fiat, could ſpeak ſo many Myriads of immortal Spirits, all excelling in Strength, all ſurpaſſing in Wiſdom, into Exiſtence out of nothing; how inexhauſtible muſt the Fountain of that Omnipotence be, that could communicate ſuch prodigious Abilities to ſo many, without any Diminution of his own? [d] how unſearchable are thy Works, O Lord, and thy Ways paſt finding out!

SECT. II.

Of the EMPLOYMENT and OFFICES of good ANGELS.

THE Prophet Iſaiah has given us a very lively Deſcription of the ſupreme Majeſty of God, and of the Behaviour of his Angelical Miniſters: [e] I ſaw the Lord ſitting upon a Throne, high and lifted up, and his Train filled the Temple; above it ſtood the Seraphims, and each one had ſix Wings; with twain he covered his Face, and with twain he covered his Feet, and with twain he did fly; and one cry'd unto another, and ſaid, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of Hoſts, the whole Earth is full of his Glory; and the Poſts of the Door moved at the Voice of him that cried, and the Houſe was filled with Smoak. With twain he covered his Face, [f] to ſhew he was ſenſible of his Imbecillity; and with twain he did fly, to indicate the Speed and Alacrity, wherewith he executed the Divine Commands: So that, according to this Repreſentation, the firſt, and moſt immediate Employment of Angels, is to attend about the Throne of God. repreſent God, as the ſupreme Majeſty of Heaven and Earth, the Lord and Governor of all Things, who, although he be every where, yet exhibits his glorious Preſence more eſpecially in Heaven, which is therefore called his Throne. There his Majeſty does, as it were, keep his Court; from thence he iſſues out his Orders concerning the Government of the World, and the Preſervation or Puniſhment of all his Subjects; and there, conſequently, the Divine Majeſty and Glory is attended by the moſt noble and excellent of them all; as a King, among us, has always thoſe about him, that are of the higheſt Quality, and moſt eminent Rank in his Dominions. Now, as Perſons of this Quality wait upon an earthly Prince, and are ready by him, to be ſent as his Embaſſadors, or Meſſengers in any Employment, wherein he has Occaſion to make Uſe of their Service; juſt ſo are the Angels repreſented, as the glorious Miniſters of Almighty God, who, attending upon him in his Celeſtial Court, are always at Hand, to be diſpatched about ſuch Buſineſs, and to take upon them ſuch Charges, as he thinks fit to commit to them, through the whole World, for the Good of his lower Sort of Subjects, and eſpecially of us, the Children of Men. The Meaning of our Saviour's Expreſſion therefore, ſpeaking of little Children, [h] that in Heaven their Angels do always behold the Face of God, is the ſame, as if he had ſaid, "They ſtand in the Preſence of God, as his Miniſters and Servants; they wait "upon him in Heaven, where they behold the Majeſty of his Glory; and they "look up unto him, to ſee what Orders he will give them, and on what Meſſages "he will be pleaſed to ſend them, for the Good of my Diſciples." Nay, they are ſo ready to execute his Pleaſure, and fulfil his Commands, that the leaſt Signification of his Will is enough to determine theirs, and diſpoſe them to a chearful Obedience: For theſe Words, behold his Face, ſeem to be a Metaphor, borrowed from good Servants, who, being well acquainted with their Maſter's Inclinations and Deſires, have their Eye continually upon him, and preſently, upon the leaſt Motion of his Head or his Eye, go, and diſpatch what they know to be his Pleaſure.

2. They worſhip and adore him.

BUT while they are thus attending, they cry one to another, and ſay, Holy, holy, holy Lord God of Hoſts, the whole Earth is full of thy Glory: So that the next Employ, wherein we may ſuppoſe the bleſſed Angels to ſerve, is in celebrating the Praiſes of the great Creator, and kind Redeemer of the Univerſe; in performing the Service, and chanting over the Liturgy, as we may call it, which at ſtated Times (as ſome Maintainers of ſtated Forms contend) is conſtantly ſung in Heaven. [i] How theſe heavenly Miniſters acquit themſelves in this Capacity, we have an Account given us by one, that was admitted within the Sanctuary, and ſaw the Solemnity of their Worſhip: [k] And all the Angels ſtood about the Throne, and fell before the Throne on their Faces, and worſhipped God, ſaying, Amen, Bleſſing, and Glory, and Wiſdom, and Thankſgiving, and Honour, and Power, and Might, be unto our God, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever, Amen. This is the Angels Employment about the Throne of God's Preſence: Nor is it ſimply their Employment, but their Happineſs too; for as the Wind, that fans the Flowers, returns from them with a Tincture of their Sweetneſs; ſo all the Breath, that the heavenly Hoſt ſpends in the Praiſes of God, returns to them accumulated with Joy and Bleſſing; God having order'd it ſo, that there ſhould be an inſeparable Connection between their Duty and Beatitude; and that, the more they admire, and praiſe, and adore, the more they ſhould participate of the Perfections, that do engage them in the Work.

3. To adminiſter to his Providence.

ANOTHER Branch of the Office of Angels, is to effect the Iſſues of Providence, in the Government of the World; and for this Reaſon, they are called [l] the Eyes of the Lord, that run to and fro through the whole Earth, to ſhew himſelf ſtrong, in Behalf of them, whoſe Heart is perfect towards him [m]: For [n] though God's infinite Power be ſuch, that he can do all Things, both in Heaven and Earth, immediately by himſelf; can rule the Univerſe, and ſteer its Affairs, and turn them which Way he pleaſes, by the leaſt Beck of his Will; yet his Wiſdom and Goodneſs have thought fit to honour his Creatures, eſpecially this higher and more perfect Rank of Beings, with his Commands, and to make them, according to their ſeveral Degrees and Capacities, the ordinary Miniſters of his Affairs in the Rule and Government of this inferior World.

THE Princes of the Earth have Deputies and Vice-Roys, to govern ſuch Dominions, as are too diſtant from the Circle of their Inſpection: And, in like Manner, [h] Matth. xviii. 10. [i] Young's Sermons, Vol. II. [k] Rev. v. 13. and vii. 11, &c. [l] Zech. iv. 10.

[m] The Jews interpreted this Paſſage of the Angels, as we may learn from Philo, who ſays, that the Eyes of God are his Angels. Young's Sermons, Vol. II. [n] Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. II.

ner,) the Opinion is pretty general, both among Jews and Chriſtians, that God Almighty has appointed particular Angels, to preſide over Empires and Kingdoms, to ſway the mighty Affairs thereof, and, by ſecret and inviſible Means, to bring about their Changes and Revolutions. [o] The only Difference is, that the Rulers of this World have their Deputies out of Neceſſity, becauſe they cannot govern without them; whereas the great King of Heaven and Earth has his Miniſters out of Choice, and employs them in his Service, that they may have an Opportunity of expreſſing their Affection, and engaging his Favour and Reward.

And to his Church.

ANOTHER Branch of the Office of Angels, is to adminiſter the Affairs of God's Church, and to guard it againſt the Violence of its Adverſary, the Devil. That Michael, the Archangel, was the Prince, or Tutelar-Angel of the Jewiſh Church and People, we may, when we pleaſe to be curious, collect [p] from the tenth Chapter of the Book of Daniel; [q] and that he, and the heavenly Hoſt under his Command, are, in the ſame Capacity, [r] related to the Chriſtian Church, is more than probable, from that Paſſage in the Revelations, where we are told, [s] that Michael and his Angels fought againſt the Dragon, and the Dragon fought, and his Angels, but did not prevail, i. e. [t] Michael defeated all his cruel Plots and bloody Enterprizes for the Deſtruction of Chriſtian People, by the Tyranny of the Roman Emperors, whom this inveterate Enemy of true Piety inſtigated againſt them. That every National Church of Chriſt has the Preſidence and Guardianſhip of an Angel, we may fairly infer from the Meſſages and Monitions ſent by Chriſt in the Beginning of the Revelations, [u] and directed to the Angels of the ſeveral Churches of Aſia: For though by Angels we are to underſtand no more than the Biſhops, yet the very Ground of the Metaphor implies thus much, that there were Angels, to ſuperintend the Affairs of each Church, as well as Biſhops. That every particular Congregation of Chriſtians is attended with the Preſence and Inſpection of Angels, is plain from that Paſſage of St Paul, [x] where he enjoins Women to have their Heads cover'd, as a Matter of great Decency in religious Aſſemblies, becauſe of the Angels, i. e. becauſe Angels are preſent in our Churches, obſerving the very Decency of our Dreſs, as well as the Devoutneſs of our Behaviour.

Their Diligence herein.

HOW the Angels acquit themſelves in all the Offices, wherein the Affairs of God's Providence and his Church are concern'd, we are inſtructed by the Repreſentations that are made of them in Scripture, all teſtifying the Perfection of their Obedience. [y] To this Purpoſe they are repreſented as ſtanding about the heavenly Throne; a Poſture that denotes their Readineſs and Preparation for their Employment: They are repreſented, as full of Eyes; a Circumſtance, that ſignifies their Ambition to know every Inſtance of the Divine Will: They are repreſented, as furniſh'd with many Wings; a Symbol, that intimates their Speed and Chearfulneſs in executing their Charge: And, finally, their Aſſiduity and Perſeverance in this Courſe are repreſented to us, when we are told, that they ceaſe not Day nor Night; are ever praiſing, ever ſerving; for to do the Will of God is their Meat and Drink, their great Refreſhment, and eternal Feaſt.

[z] THE Jews indeed have a Proverb, that the Angel of Juſtice flies but with one Wing: But hereby, I conceive, they intend only the Slowneſs of God, in iſſuing out Commiſſions of Vengeance, and not the Backwardneſs of Angels, in putting them in Execution: For they, who ſee the Reaſon, as well as the Letter of the Command, who have ſo clear a Viſion of the Divine Eſſence and Perfections, as will not ſuffer them to doubt of the Equity and Reaſonableneſs of all his Injunctions, are as well ſatisfied with the Decrees of his Severity, and perform them as chearfully, as they do the milder Emanations of his Love. To this Purpoſe we may obſerve, that the Angel, who was [a] ſent to expel lapſed Man out of Paradiſe with his flaming Sword, betook himſelf as readily to that ungrateful Office, as he, that was to carry the welcome Tidings of Man's Salvation, [b] of Peace on Earth, and good Will towards Men:

[o] Bull's Sermons, Vol. II. [p] In this Chapter, Daniel gives an Account, that an Angel, appearing to him, told him, that he had been contending a great while with the Prince of the Kingdom of Perſia, i. e. with that mighty Angel, which abetted the Perſian Intereſt againſt the Iſraelites: And lo, Michael, one of the chiefeſt Princes, or greateſt Angels, came to help me, Ver. 13. to lend him his Aſſiſtance to enable him to overcome the Angel, that contended with him; and therefore he ſays, (Ver. 20.) that being thus reinforc'd, he would return, and fight with the King of Perſia; and, in the very next Words, he tells him, that this Michael was the Prince of the Jewiſh Nation, or the Angel that had the Care and Protection of their Affairs committed to him. From hence the Jews have entertain'd a conſtant Opinion, that every Country has a great and potent Angel, with others ſubordinate, preſiding over it, and that till this Angel, and thoſe under his Command, be overcome, or go away, there is no prevailing againſt that Nation. Patrick's Sermons. Men: And I make no doubt, but that thoſe Sons of God, who ſhouted for Joy, at the Formation of this World's Fabrick, will hereafter, upon a Signal given, be full as ready to aſſiſt (as the Scriptures tell us they are to aſſiſt) in its Deſtruction, and fiery Diſſolution.

II. Their Office, with Regard to Men.

IN this Capacity are the holy Angels appointed to be the Miniſters of the moſt High God. We come now to conſider their Office and Employment, with regard to the Children of Men, thoſe eſpecially who comport themſelves well, and thereupon (as the Apoſtle expreſſes it) ſhall be Heirs of Salvation.

1. To attend on good Men.

[c] THAT every Man, at leaſt every good Man, has a Guardian-Angel appointed him by God, to take ſpecial Care of him and his Concernments, both ſpiritual and temporal; to proſper him in his Undertakings, and comfort him in his Sorrows, has been a common Opinion among the Heathens, and a conſtant and firmly believed Tradition among the Jews. The Jews found their Belief upon ſeveral Paſſages in Scripture, which they account of undeniable Conſequence; Jacob, at his Death, wiſhes [d] that the Angel, which had redeem'd him from all Evil, might bleſs the two Sons of Joſeph: Iſaiah acknowledges, that when the Iſraelites were in an afflicted Condition, [e] the Angel of God's Preſence ſaved them: David profeſſes himſelf to be of this Perſuaſion, that the Angel of [f] the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him; the Royal Preacher teſtifies the ſame, when he gives his Hearer this Caution, [g] Suffer not thy Mouth to cauſe thy Fleſh to ſin, neither ſay thou † BEFORE THE ANGEL, it is an Error; and our bleſſed Saviour himſelf ſeems to be of the like Sentiment, when, cautioning all Men to take heed how they offend any of his little Ones, i. e. any humble and devout Chriſtian, he ſubjoins this Reaſon, that [h] THEIR ANGELS do always behold the Face of my Father, which is in Heaven, i. e. [i] "Thoſe "bleſſed Spirits, which are appointed by God to be their Guardians upon Earth, "have, nevertheleſs, their Returns and Recourſe to God's glorious Preſence in Hea- "ven, and a conſtant Acceſs to him, to offer up Complaints and Requeſts in their "Behalf; and therefore it muſt needs be a very dangerous Thing for a Man to "deſpiſe or offend any of them, leſt thereby he provoke thoſe mighty Spirits, to "ſue out, and execute ſome Commiſſion of Vengeance upon him:" For theſe Words of our Saviour, we muſt remember, were ſpoken to the Jews, and muſt conſequently be interpreted in a Senſe, agreeable to their Notions and Apprehenſions, whereof the Guard and Tutelage of Angels was not the leaſt conſiderable.

NAY, not only the Jews, [k] but the Heathens likewiſe, were of this Perſuaſion; and they, indeed, ſeem to carry the Notion too far, by aſſigning a good Genius to every one indiſcriminately: Thus [l] Menander tells us, that every Man, as ſoon as he is born, has his Genius to attend and aſſiſt him, as the good Guide of his enſuing Life; and [m] Arianus, upon Epictetus, ſpeaking of God, aſſures us, that he hath given to every Man his peculiar Genius, as his Keeper and Guardian, who is a watchful Guardian, and cannot, by any Means, withdraw from the faithful Diſcharge of his Office. We need therefore leſs wonder, [n] that we find this Sentiment ſo generally received in the Chriſtian Church, that Men, from their Birth, at leaſt from their new Birth, i. e. their Baptiſm, have an Angel, commiſſioned from Heaven, to attend them, and, as they go on in the Chriſtian Courſe, that this Angel is παρεζευγμένος yoked together with them: "For Angels (as Origen expreſſes it) look upon thoſe, who, "from the Time of their Baptiſmal Engagement, imitate God, together with them- "ſelves, as their Friends and Kinſmen; and, upon that Account, hold themſelves "obliged to work together for their Safety, and come daily to do them Favours "and good Offices, as if there were a League and Covenant between them for "that Purpoſe."

2. To defend us from evil Angels.

[o] 'TIS very remarkable in the Caſe of righteous Job, that, before he was ſubmitted to the Temptations of the Devil, the Devil ſeems to be envious of his outward

† Here we have Angel in the ſingular Number, not Angels in the plural, to denote ſome one certain Angel, and then this Angel is deſcrib'd, as the Angel before whom, and in whoſe Preſence, the Perſon, who makes the Vow referr'd to, is; and as he is repreſented as the Inſpector and Obſerver of his Words and Actions, this gives us the plain Notion of a Guardian-Angel; and, by the Way, we muſt farther obſerve, from this Text, that if it belongs to the Office of our Guardian-Angel, not only to ſecure us from Dangers, but to inſpect and govern our Actions, yea, and if Need be, to chaſtize us, when we tranſgreſs and prevaricate. Bull's Sermons, Vol. II.

outward Security, and happy Condition, [p] Does Job fear God for nought? Haſt thou not made an Hedge about him, and about his Houſe, and about all that he has on every Side? Thou haſt bleſſed the Work of his Hands, and his Subſtance is increaſed in the Land. The good Man, it ſeems, was ſo fenc'd and ſecur'd on every Side, in his Perſon, in his Goods, and in his Relations, by the Angels of God encamping round about him, that all the Power and Policy of the Devil could not make a Breach upon him, until God himſelf was pleas'd to prepare the Way: And tho', for the Trial of Men's Faith, and for the Prevention and Chaſtizement of Sin, that they may be found acceptable in the Day of the Lord, God may ſometimes withdraw this Guard of Angels from his faithful Servants, and ſubmit them and their Concerns to Satanical Aſſaults; yet, at the ſame Time, that theſe Purpoſes are thought neceſſary, he never fails to ſend them Auxiliaries from above, to aid and aſſiſt them in the unequal Conflict, and to prevent their ſinking under the Load of their Temptation: For ſo we read, that, after our Saviour had been violently ſet upon by the Devil in the Wilderneſs, [q] good Angels came and miniſtered unto him. [r] And tho' it does not appear by Words, that they came to his Aſſiſtance, while he was actually engag'd, as knowing his Virtue to be impregnable, and in no Danger of being ſeduc'd to ſo foul an Act, as falling down and worſhipping the Devil; yet, from this Paſſage, we have good Grounds to hope, that in all our Encounters of this Kind, we, who cannot ſtand the Shock ſo well, we, who unaſſiſted cannot ſtand it at all, ſhall not fail to receive timely Relief by the charitable Supplies of thoſe heavenly Hoſts, whoſe Joy and Triumph it is, to manifeſt God's Strength in our Weakneſs.

Evil Accidents.

IN what Security the good Man lives, fenc'd againſt the evil Accidents of Life, and protected from the Malice of wicked Men, the Royal Pſalmiſt has given us a very elegant and comfortable Deſcription: [s] He will not ſuffer thy Foot to be moved, and he that keepeth thee will not ſleep: The Lord himſelf is thy Keeper, the Lord is thy Defence upon thy right Hand, ſo that the Sun ſhall not burn thee by Day, neither the Moon by Night; the Lord ſhall preſerve thee from all Evil, yea it is even he that ſhall keep thy Soul, and preſerve thy going out and coming in for evermore; and by what Means and Inſtruments he does all this, the ſame Royal Author has inform'd us; [t] for he ſhall give his Angels charge over thee, and keep thee in all thy Ways, and they ſhall bear thee up in their Hands, leſt thou daſh thy Foot againſt a Stone.

HOW the Angels do this, 'tis not our Ambition to know, ſince, by happy Experience, we find that it is done. This only we may imagine, [u] that as theſe powerful Spirits have a mighty Influence upon neceſſary Cauſes (at leaſt upon a great many of them) and can retard or precipitate, can vary or divert their Motions, as they ſee Occaſion; they can, by this Means, prevent a great many Accidents, which muſt otherwiſe have come to paſs, had they permitted them to proceed in their natural Courſe: And as they have a near Acceſs at leaſt to Mens Imaginations; either by warning us of Dangers approaching, by ſome external Sign, or unaccountable Impreſſion upon our Fancies, vehemently ſolliciting us, without any viſible Cauſe or Reaſon, to leave the Path, where the Danger lies; or by injecting ſudden Fears into the Hearts of wicked Men, and brandiſhing horrid Phantaſms before their Imaginations (as the Angel did the flaming Sword before Balaam) they can prevent their miſchievous Deſigns againſt us.

3. Aſſiſt us in Goodneſs.

BUT the End of their Miniſtry and Attendance about us is not only to defend us from Evil, and reſcue us from Danger, but to contribute their Aſſiſtance likewiſe to the Procuration of all the good Things, we ſtand in need of: And [x] accordingly we may obſerve, that St John, in his [y] Salutation of the Churches of Aſia, wiſhes them Grace and Peace, i. e. all ſpiritual, as well as temporal Bleſſings, not only from God the Father, as the Fountain of them; and from Jeſus Chriſt, as the meritorious Procurer of them; but from the ſeven Spirits, or chief Angels likewiſe, that are before the Throne, as the great Inſtruments of Divine Providence in diſpenſing them; [z] which muſt needs imply, that the holy Angels, ſince our Saviour's Return to Heaven, are employed, by the Divine Appointment, to be the Conveyers of ſpiritual Bleſſings to us, from the Holy Ghoſt the Comforter.

[z] Patrick's Sermons.

SOCRATES, in his Apology, declares, that he was prompted to ſay and do, as he did, in Oppoſition to the deprav'd Sentiments and Practices of the Vulgar, by the Inſtigation of his good Genius: But however that was, ſince the Devil is ſaid [b] to work in the Children of Diſobedience, making it Matter of his Induſtry to tempt them to Sin, and to ſtir them up to the Commiſſion of it, we cannot but think that good Angels are equally able to do ſomething of a contrary Nature, for the Benefit of the Righteous; that they can guide and direct them inſenſibly to the Means of Religion and Virtue, by the Mediation of their Blood and Spirits: can ſtir up in their Minds an Inclination to what is virtuous, and, by working upon their Fancies, can ſuggeſt good Thoughts, raiſe holy Purpoſes and Affections, refreſh them in their pious Undertakings; and ſo aſſiſt and promote the Work of their Sanctification: And accordingly any one, that has been exercis'd in the Ways of Godlineſs, muſt have obſerved within himſelf, that oftentimes, he knows not how, the moſt powerful and affecting Thoughts of Eternity, and the great Concerns of Religion have ſeiz'd and poſſeſs'd his Soul; and that, even when his Mind has been taken up with other Matters, he has had a ſudden Suggeſtion ariſe in his Breaſt, which he could not controul, exciting him to ſome Act of Piety, or other good Work, with an irreſiſtible Force, which in a great Meaſure is imputable to the Agency of Angels, directed by the Superintendency of the Holy Ghoſt.

THE Holy Ghoſt indeed is the ſole original Author of our Sanctification: He only is able to over-rule our Wills, and rectify our inward Faculties; and therefore, when we aſcribe thus much to the Operation of Angels, we mean not to derogate from his gracious Undertaking: On the contrary, we aſſert, that all the Means and Methods of forming holy Diſpoſitions in us, do originally flow from him; and that even, when Angels aſſiſt, the Grace is his, and therefore his the Glory, becauſe they only act by his Delegation.

NAY we aſſert farther, that this Doctrine of Angelical Aſſiſtance does not in the leaſt interfere with the Power of God's bleſſed Spirit, and that there is a plain Difference between its Operation and theirs, upon the Minds of Men, which we find St Bernard thus diſtinguiſhing: Angelus, ſays he, adeſt Animæ, non ineſt; ſuggerit bona, non ingerit; hortatur ad bonum, non bonum creat; which in Effect is this,—— "The Angel comes to the Soul, the Holy Ghoſt comes into the Soul; the Angel "ſuggeſts and recommends good Things to us, but the Holy Ghoſt does, by a pow- "erful Energy, create and plant them in us:" In a Word, the Angels cannot act upon our Souls but mechanically, and by the Mediation of our Fancy; but the Holy Ghoſt can come into them, and act immediately upon their very Eſſence. It ſeems therefore moſt worthy the Majeſty of God, and moſt ſuitable to our own Diſtance, to believe, that, whatever of God's Pleaſure can be done for our Souls mechanically, the Angels are the Inſtruments of doing it; but to work immediately upon the Soul, and change and ſanctify it effectually, this we affirm, and this we ought to believe, is only the Work of God that made it.

4. Inſpect our private,

ANOTHER Part of the Office and Employment of Angels is to inſpect the Behaviour, and take Notice of the Prayers, and other good Works of Men upon Earth, in order to make a Report of them, before God in Heaven. [c] That the ancient Chriſtians look'd upon Angels, as the Witneſſes of their Actions, in Conſideration of which, they were excited to do well, and to behave themſelves with Care and Circumſpection, is manifeſt from that ſevere Charge, which St Paul gives his Son Timothy, [f] I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the elect Angels, that thou obſerve theſe Things. As if he had ſaid, "The Elect, i. e. the choice and "principal Angels are Witneſſes of what I ſay, and of all the Charge, that is im- "poſed on thee, and undertaken by thee; they will obſerve thy Behaviour and "Demeanour in the Church of God, being as ſo many Governors, ſet over Men "by the Father of all; and accordingly they will accuſe, or acquit thee, at the "great Day of Retribution." And the ſame Meaning ſeems to be ſuggeſted [g] in another Place by this Apoſtle, where he would have the Corinthians think, that Angels are preſent in their ſacred Aſſemblies, and ſo, out of Reverence to ſuch great Miniſters of God, appointed to attend there, to be careful how they admitted of any Thing indecent or immodeſt at their Meetings.

And religious Behaviour.

THESE Courtiers of Heaven indeed ſeem ambitious [h] to look into the important Matters of Chriſtianity: They bend their glorious Heads (as the Expreſſion intimates) intimates) and ſtoop down to pry into the ſacred Myſteries of our holy Religion; They learn from the Church the manifold Wiſdom of God, as the Apoſtle affirms; and therefore no Wonder, that they are preſent at the Places, where theſe Things are commemorated. And if they are preſent in our religious Aſſemblies, we cannot ſuppoſe, that they are there as idle Auditors and Spectators, that have nothing elſe to do, but only obſerve and gaze upon our holy Solemnities; and therefore we muſt conclude, that their Buſineſs is to aſſiſt us in our religious Performances; to remove our Indiſpoſitions; and recollect our Wanderings; to fix our Attention, excite our Affections, and inflame our Devotions; and when our Devotions are thus qualified, to join their Supplications to ours, for their better Acceptance at the Throne of Grace: In which Senſe that Paſſage in the Revelation may not improperly be underſtood, [k] that an Angel came, and ſtood at the Altar, having a Golden Cenſer, and there was given unto him much Incenſe, that he ſhould offer it with the Prayers of all Saints, upon the Golden Altar, which was before the Throne.

[a] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. [b] Eph. ii. 2. [c] Bull's Sermons, Vol. II. [d] Young's Sermons, Vol. II. [e] Patrick's Sermons. [f] 1 Tim. v. 21. [g] 1 Cor. xi. 10. [h] 1 Pet. i. 12.

GOD indeed knows, and takes notice of every Thing that good Men do: He records it, to Perpetuity, in the faithful Regiſter of his omniſcient Mind; and yet he would have his Angels to be conſcious of our good Actions, not only that they might congratulate our Happineſs, as Fellow-Servants under the ſame common Lord; but might be Witneſſes likewiſe of his righteous Judgments, Aſſerters of our Innocence, and ready to confront that grand [l] Accuſer of the Brethren, when Chriſt ſhall come from Heaven with Millions of his holy Angels to judge the World, according to his Goſpel.

FROM what has been ſaid then we cannot but obſerve, how graciouſly kind theſe great and glorious Spirits are, in doing all good Offices, that may tend to our Salvation; in reſtraining, and pulling us back from Sin; in exciting, and ſolliciting us to what is good; in promoting our Sanctity, in helping our Devotion, in recommending our Prayers, and, when we have done any Thing commendable, in carrying the News, and making a favourable Report thereof, to their great Maſter and ours.

5. Aſſiſt us in Death, and convey our Spirits into Paradiſe.

AND as they are thus aſſiſtant to us, in working out our Salvation, thro' the Courſe of our Lives; [m] ſo, at the Hour of Death, they ſtand by, to help and comfort us, in that needful, and diſmal Time, in that laſt, and great Conflict of frail Mortality with Death, and the Powers of Darkneſs; to receive our naked Spirits into their Embraces, and to conduct them ſafe to thoſe bleſſed Abodes, which the Divine Goodneſs has provided for their Reception. For be the Place of Paradiſe where it will, [n] ſince the lower Regions, thro' which we are to paſs, are peſter'd with Apoſtate Spirits, which, like Birds of Prey, are continually lying in wait, to ſeize upon the Souls of Men, as ſoon as they are ſeparate from the Body; the bleſſed Angels are appointed, to take all pious Souls into their Cuſtody, and to guard them ſafe and ſecure thro' the Enemies Quarters, into their bleſſed Habitations: And 'tis not improbable, that theſe evil Spirits do diſtinguiſh what Souls belong to them, and what do not, by ſeeing who are left deſtitute, and who are attended with this celeſtial Guard of Angels.

The Uſes of this Doctrine.

THUS we have gone as far, as Scripture leads us, in the Diſcovery of the Nature and Offices of good Angels: And (not to let go ſo comfortable a Doctrine without ſome proper Application) [o] this may ſerve to remind us of the wonderful Vouchſafement of God unto Mankind, while we conſider that our preſent State, how contemptible ſoever it may appear to be in other Reſpects, yet is honour'd with the Attendance of ſuch excellent Creatures. It may ſerve to recommend that Part of Devotion, wherein pious Chriſtians are wont to implore of God their Succour and Protection; but it gives no Countenance to our paying that Devotion to them which they themſelves are known to abhor; [p] See thou do it not, I am thy Fellow-Servant: Worſhip God: And laſtly, it may ſerve to diſpoſe our Minds to a proper Reverence of the holy Angels, i. e. to think on them, as conſtant Witneſſes of our Behaviour; to bear an awful Regard to their Preſence and Inſpection; and to take Care that they, who wait on us for our Good, be not griev'd or frighten'd from their Station, by our unworthy Deportment.

IN every Place, in every Corner therefore, revere the Preſence of thy Angel; and do not that before him, which thou wouldſt be aſham'd to do before a Man like like thyſelf. [q] Keep thy Foot more eſpecially, when thou goeſt into the Houſe of God, and be very devout, and ſincere in what thou offereſt unto him, becauſe his holy Angels are aſſembled there, and are ſtrictly obſerving thy Carriage and Behaviour. And as they are thy Obſervers, ſo be thou theirs, and ſet their Example before thee, for thy Imitation. Imitate their exalted Love (the Source and Fountain of all their Services) to their Creator, in loving the Lord thy God with all thy Heart. Imitate their exalted Praiſes, in the beſt Tribute of Thankſgiving that thou canſt pay, and thy conſtant Communion in religious Offices. Imitate their Charity, in the free Extenſion of thy Love and Aſſiſtance to thy weak or indigent Brother; and imitate their great and wonderful Condeſcenſion, in thinking no Office below thy Dignity, that contributes to the Relief of his Neceſſity, or the Benefit of his immortal Soul.

SECT. III.

Of the EXISTENCE and EMPLOYMENT of Evil ANGELS.

THE Angels were at firſt all created good and obedient to their Maker's Will, but the Divine Revelation teaches us, that ſome of them [r] ſinned, and [s] kept not their firſt Eſtate, but left their own Habitation; and ſo, of the moſt bleſſed and glorious, became the moſt vile and miſerable of all God's Creatures. They were expelled from the Regions of Light, that bleſſed Abode they once enjoyed, and caſt down to Hell, to be reſerved in everlaſting Chains, under Darkneſs, unto the Judgment of the great Day: With Heaven, they loſt their heavenly Diſpoſition, that delighted once in doing good, and praiſing God; and fell into a ſettled Rancour againſt him, and Malice againſt Man, that bears his Image. Their inward Peace and Tranquillity were gone; all Deſire and Ability of doing good departed from them; and, inſtead thereof, Rage, Fury, and revengeful Thoughts, Horror, Diſtraction, and Deſpair took Poſſeſſion of them, and created an eternal Hell within them.

Their Exiſtence.

THAT there are ſuch wicked and apoſtate Spirits, is but too evident, from the Power and Poſſeſſion they have gained in the World: For, how diffident ſoever we may be of the ſeveral modern Accounts of Sorcery and Witchcraft; how incredible ſoever we may ſuppoſe the Meetings of Witches, and their Transformations, their Compacts with the Devil, and fœderal Solemnities, their ludicrous, as well as miſchievous Pranks and Practices to be; yet, if we believe the Divine Authority of the Scripture, we cannot but think, that the many Laws provided in the Old Teſtament [t] againſt Wizards, and ſuch as had familiar Spirits, and the many Inſtances, in the New, of Perſons poſſeſſed with Devils, which, the Evangeliſts tell us, our bleſſed Saviour caſt out, are ſo many Arguments in Atteſtation of this Truth: And though (bleſſed be God) he does not permit theſe malicious Fiends ſuch Liberty now in Chriſtian Countries, (in which Senſe thoſe Words of our Saviour, [u] I beheld Satan, as Lightning, fall from Heaven, may not improperly be underſtood) yet, if we believe the ancient Writers of the Church, Poſſeſſions, at the firſt preaching of the Goſpel, were frequent, and the Number of Dæmoniacks not a few: If we believe the Teſtimony of Travellers, in ſeveral Countries, that are deſtitute of the true Knowledge of God, [x] theſe infernal Spirits, even to this Day, appear frequently, are worſhipped publickly, and exerciſe an open and palpable Tyranny upon the poor deluded People: If we believe the Confeſſions of ſome good Men, who complain of the Temptation of horrid and blaſphemous Thoughts, which nothing but the Injection of an inviſible and wicked Agent can occaſion; or if we conſider the Practices of too many bad Men, their bloody Murthers, and execrable Oaths, and abominable Luſts, which human Nature (without the Inſtigation of the Devil) could never prompt them to; which gratify no Paſſion or Appetite, but ſeem merely to be done becauſe they are monſtrouſly wicked; if we conſider theſe Things, I ſay, we cannot but be convinced, that, even in Chriſtian Countries, this Adverſary and his Aſſociates have [x] Several Writers, not only Papiſts, but Proteſtants, teſtify, that the Infidels of America are haunted, and ſcared by theſe wicked Creatures, who meet them, at all Times, in frightful Shapes. Particularly of the People of Braſil, it is related by Maffeus, that they commonly carry Fire with them when they go abroad, thinking thereby that they defend themſelves againſt the Devils, who make them do Homage, and worſhip them with the profoundeſt Humility. For the further Proof of this Matter, ſee Prodage's poſthumous myſtical Theology, Baxter's Diſcourſe of Apparitions, Lavater & Logerus de Spectris, Boiſardus de Spirit. Apparit. &c.

have too large a Sway, and, while they only try and exerciſe the Righteous, reign very powerfully in the Children of Diſobedience. In ſhort, the Scriptures have taken ſuch Care to acquaint us with the Origin and [y] Fall of theſe once celeſtial Creatures; with their [z] Names and [a] Numbers, their [b] Government and [c] Orders, their [d] woeful Eſtate and [e] Puniſhment, their [f] malicious Deſigns and Employments, that no one can doubt of their Exiſtence, who believes theſe holy Oracles to be true; nor can any one endeavour to diſpoſſeſs his Mind of this Perſuaſion, without tempting God to give him up to a ſtrong Deluſion, that he may believe a Lye.

Their Fall, and probable Occaſion of it.

WHEN, and for what Offence, theſe apoſtate Spirits fell from Heaven, and plunged themſelves into ſuch an Abyſs of Wickedneſs and Woe, are Queſtions very hard, if not impoſſible, to be determined by any clear Evidence of Scripture: All we learn from thence is, that, before the Fall of Man, there was a fallen Angel, the firſt and chiefeſt of the fallen Angels, that, under the Form of a Serpent, ſeduced Man to Diſobedience, and therefore called [g] the old Serpent, [h] and a Murtherer from the Beginning: But how long his Fall preceded Man's Creation, we have no Intimation, nor can it be determined, for what particular Fault and Crime, he, and his Aſſociates, fell.

SOME of the [i] Jews, as well as Chriſtian [k] Fathers, were of Opinion, that the Sin of Angels, which threw them into the Condition of Devils, was Carnality, and that they left their own Habitation, or were caſt out of Heaven, for luſting to converſe with Women upon Earth: An Opinion founded upon a Miſtake in the Interpretation of theſe Words, [l] the Sons of God ſaw the Daughters of Men that they were fair, which are not to be underſtood of Angels, but of the religious Men of that Age, who, according to Scripture-Stile, are, in other Places, called the Sons and Children of God: And theſe religious Men (if we will believe the beſt Expoſitors) were the Poſterity of Seth, in whoſe Family the Worſhip of the true God was preſerved, who, taking to Marriage the Daughters of Men, i. e. the Deſcendants of wicked Cain, did, by that Union, occaſion the general Corruption of Mankind, [m] which Moſes afterwards relates.

[n] OTHERS have imagined, that the Angels being informed of God's Intentions to create Man after his own Image, and to dignify his Nature by Chriſt's aſſuming it, and thinking their own Glory to be eclipſed thereby, envied Man's Happineſs, and ſo revolted: But this Opinion, how plauſible ſoever, has not ſuch Countenance either from Reaſon or Scripture, as [o] that, which makes Pride the leading Sin of Angels. For [p] how perfect and excellent ſoever any Creature may be, yet, unleſs it is confirmed and eſtabliſhed in a State of Purity and Holineſs, (which the Angels at firſt were not) it may be ſuppoſed to admire itſelf, and doat upon its own Excellencies, and ſo, by Degrees, come to neglect and diſeſteem God the Author of them, and, in Proceſs of Time, to throw off all Subjection to him. The Man that is guilty of ſpiritual and phariſaical Pride, makes every Thing, that is good and commendable in him, the Matter of his Sin; and, in like Manner, theſe ſublime Beings might be puffed up, conſidering the Height and Dignity of their Station, and, the more Perfections they perceived in their Nature, have the greater Temptations to rebel; to which Cauſe of the Angels Apoſtacy, the Apoſtle in theſe Words ſeems to refer us, [q] leſt being puffed up with Pride, he fall into the Condemnation of the Devil, where he puts the Sin and Puniſhment of thoſe evil Spirits both together.

[r] HOW art thou fallen from Heaven, O Lucifer, Son of the Morning! How art thou cut down to the Ground, which didſt weaken the Nations! For thou haſt ſaid in thine Heart, I will aſcend into Heaven, I will exalt my Throne above the Stars of God, I will be like the Moſt High; yet thou ſhalt be brought down to Hell, to the Sides of the Pit. The Prophet, it muſt be owned, ſpeaks here of proud Sennacherib's Fall, but

A full and perfect Legion among the Romans was ſix thouſand and odd armed Men, which, though put here for an indefinite Number, yet expreſſes to us the vaſt Multitude of Devils, that are up and down in the World: For if there was a Legion in one Man, we may well infer how numerous they are.

the Analogy of the Compariſon will not ſuffer us to doubt, but that he had the Angels likewiſe in his View, and intended to intimate, that Pride had deſtroyed this Babylonian Tyrant, as it had formerly done the Angelic Spirits. And this, by the Way, may ſuggeſt the Reaſon why this ſuperior Order of Creatures was for ever paſſed by in the Redemption of the World, while Man and his Race were admitted to Mercy. God, no doubt, could have redintegrated the Nature of Angels, and made them as glorious Creatures as they were before. He could have beſtowed Redemption and Salvation on them, in the ſame Manner that he did upon loſt Man: But it was his Pleaſure to ſhew the Riches of his Grace towards us, and not towards them; towards us, becauſe our Station and Perfections are not ſo conſpicuous, and our Sin, though voluntary, was, in ſome Meaſure, occaſioned by their Temptations; but not towards them, becauſe they wilfully abandoned the greateſt Happineſs, that Creatures could enjoy, and fell from the higheſt Top of Honour and Excellency, voluntarily, and without any Manner of Solicitation: And ſince their Sin was the firſt, it might further be thought expedient, that Rigour ſhould begin, where the Offence firſt began, in order to deter others from the like Provocations; and for this Reaſon, ſome have imagined, that the ſad Proſpect of their Brethren's Ruin and Apoſtacy, is, among others, one powerful Means to preſerve the elect Angels in a State of Impeccancy.

The Reaſon of their Non-Redemption.

Their Miniſtry and Employment.

"BUT if theſe evil Spirits are ſuch inveterate Enemies to God and Goodneſs; "if ſo outrageouſly bent upon Man's Ruin, that, like roaring Lions, they go about "ſeeking whom they may devour; why does not God rid himſelf and us of theſe "Adverſaries, and extinguiſh their Nature at once, ſince they are irrecoverably loſt?" This is a Queſtion that may well enough be aſked; and, in order to give it a proper Reſolution, it may be obſerved, that the Devils themſelves, though they have left their Station above, are nevertheleſs ſubject to the Divine Command and Juriſdiction; that they can do nothing, but by the particular Permiſſion and Appointment of Heaven; that they cannot refuſe doing any Thing, that God's infinite Wiſdom puts them upon; and, conſequently, under this View, are to be conſidered, as much the Inſtruments of Providence, as the holy Angels themſelves, and their Services, (though they intend it not ſo) by God's wiſe Diſpoſal and Management, redound equally to his Glory, and the Welfare of his faithful Servants. For ſince this World is a State of Probation, wherein Difficulties are neceſſary to exerciſe our Virtues, [t] the Wiſdom of God thinks fit to employ the Malice of theſe wicked Spirits, in order to make our Faith, and Patience, and Reſignation to his Divine Will more conſpicuous; and, by the continual Alarms of theſe our reſtleſs Adverſaries, to keep us upon our Guard, that we may be [u] ſober and vigilant, and, conſidering the Hoſt that is ſet in Array againſt us, [x] Principalities, and Powers, and ſpiritual Wickedneſs in high Places, more deſirous to put on the whole Armour of God, that we may be able to ſtand againſt the Wiles of the Devil and his Aſſociates.

To try the Good, and puniſh the Wicked.

SINCE the moſt righteous Men are ſubject to Faults, and the Wicked, without Correction, would become intolerable; God makes uſe of theſe diabolical Spirits for the Chaſtening of the one, and the Puniſhment of the other. In the Caſe of St Paul, we read, that [y] a Meſſenger of Satan was ſent to buffet him, i. e. an evil Spirit was ſent from Satan, the Prince of Devils, to inflict [z] ſome corporal Pain and Diſeaſe on him; which the Apoſtle calls a Thorn in his Fleſh, i. e. as grievous and uneaſy to be borne, as a poignant Thorn ſticking in any ſenſible Part of the Body; and the Reaſon of this Infliction, he tells us, was, leſt he ſhould be exalted above Meaſure, through the Abundance of his Revelations. In the Caſe of St Peter, we read, that [a] Satan had deſired to have him, that he might ſift him as Wheat, i. e. lay ſome great and ſevere Affliction upon him; and though his Requeſt was not granted, yet from hence we may learn, that as the Devil is ſometimes called [b] the Accuſer of the Brethren, which accuſes them before God Day and Night, is continually exaggerating their Crimes, and demanding them of God, to be ſubmitted to his Aſſaults and Puniſhments; ſo, when

[s] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. [t] Scott's Chriſtian Life, Vol. III. [u] 1 Pet. v. 8.
[x] Eph. vi. 11, 12. [y] 2 Cor. xii. 7. [z] That by a Thorn in the Fleſh, we are to underſtand ſome bodily Diſeaſe in St Paul, extraordinary painful and troubleſome to him, and therefore aptly called a Thorn for its Sharpneſs and Pungency; and a Thorn in the Fleſh, for the Seat of it, which was his Body; the conſentient Interpretations of moſt Doctors of the Church, who have happened to make mention of this Text, and may be ſuppoſed to underſtand St Paul's Hiſtory beſt, are ſufficient to convince us. What particular Sickneſs or Infirmity of Body it was, whether a violent Head-Ach, as St Jerom aſſures us was the antient Tradition; or the Cholick, as Aquinas upon that Place tells us, ſome thought; or the Falling Sickneſs, as others have imagined, I will not determine; but it ſeems plain and evident to me, that a bodily Sickneſs and Infirmity it was. Bull's Sermons, Vol. I. [a] Luke xxii. 31.
[b] Rev. xii. 10.

when his Accuſations prove juſt, and their Crimes are become enormous, God is ſaid [c] to deliver them up unto Satan, for the Deſtruction of the Fleſh; making uſe of him as a Lictor or Executioner, to inflict the Expreſſes of his Wrath, either in bodily or ſpiritual Calamities, upon ſuch Malefactors.

THERE is a farther Uſe, that God may be ſuppoſed to make of the Miniſtry of evil Angels; and that is, their hardening and confirming obſtinate and incorrigible Sinners in their wicked Purpoſes. For when Men have long reſiſted the Grace of God, broke through his Perſuaſions, and baffled all his Arts of ſaving them; he many times withdraws the Aids of his bleſſed Spirit and holy Angels, and abandons them to the Powers of Darkneſs; who from thenceforth tempt and ſeduce them at Pleaſure, and lead them on from one Commiſſion to another, until they have filled up the Meaſure of their Iniquity. [d] And this, I conceive, is the Meaning of God's hardening Sinners, ſo often mention'd in holy Scripture, which cannot imply, that God, by any poſitive Act of his own, infuſes any ſinful Quality into Mens Wills, to excite them to ſin, for as he cannot be tempted with Evil, ſo neither tempteth he any Man; but only that when Men have a long while harden'd themſelves againſt the powerful Impreſſions of his Grace, and, in the Purſuit of their wicked Courſes, have turned a deaf Ear to all his Intreaties to the contrary, he then (as a juſt Puniſhment for their incorrigible Obſtinacy) takes from them his Grace and Protection, and leaves them to the Power and Poſſeſſion of the Devil, who hurries them into Vice, and never ceaſes urging and preſſing them forward, from one Degree of Wickedneſs to another, until he has ſear'd and harden'd them into final and incurable Impenitence.

To harden them here.

THERE is one Purpoſe of God more, to which theſe infernal Spirits are applicable; and that is, the Execution of his Vengeance upon the Wicked and Impenitent in the Life to come. For, as they have been very induſtrious in tempting us to Sin here, there is no Queſtion to be made, but that it will become ſome Part of their Employment, to torment us for it hereafter; to object our Sins continually to us, to reproach us with the Folly of them, to put us in mind of that diſmal Futurity we muſt ſuffer for them; and by this Means inceſſantly ſting us with Swarms of dire Reflections and tormenting Thoughts. As Spirits, they have Power to act upon our Souls, and fill them with preternatural Horrors; and, as malignant Spirits, they can want no Will to plague and torture us, when we ſhall be left to their Mercy, and they have free Scope to exert their Fury upon us, and glut their hungry Malice with our Torment and Vexation.

And torment them hereafter.

THESE are ſome of the Reaſons, for which the wiſe Diſpoſer of all Things continues theſe wretched Creatures in Being, not only as ſtanding Monuments of his Diſpleaſure againſt their Apoſtate Race, but as Inſtruments likewiſe in his Hand, to puniſh the Wicked, and try and exerciſe the Righteous. Theſe curſed Spirits, however, deſign nothing but Ill in what they do; they have no Regard to the Will of God, nor any Conſideration of his Commands. The Love of Miſchief, and the Gratification of their Malice, are the only Motives of their Actions; and therefore the Wiſdom of God is more remarkable, in making them act contrary to their Intentions; and, at the laſt great Day, his Juſtice and Goodneſs too ſhall be made conſpicuous, when the Wonders of his Adminiſtration, in controuling and managing their Devices, ſhall appear, and all their Attempts redound upon themſelves, as additional Sins, to increaſe the Weight of their Condemnation.

IN the mean Time, what has been ſaid of theſe once-illuſtrious Beings, now ſunk into ſuch an horrid State of Depravity, may afford us, at any Time, an awful Contemplation to conſider, what ſad Havock Sin makes, even in the moſt ſublime Natures, when once it gets Poſſeſſion, and what great Reaſon we have, at all Times, to attend to the Apoſtle's Admonition: [e] Let him that thinketh he ſtandeth, take Heed leſt he fall: [f] For if God ſpared not the Angels that ſinned, but caſt them down into Hell, and delivered them into Chains of Darkneſs, to be reſerved unto Judgment; if theſe bright Intelligences found no Favour in his Sight, when they rebelled againſt him, how ſhall we eſcape, if we fall into the like Confederacy? Their Fate is made an Enſample unto thoſe that ſhould, at any Time, live ungodly; and the ſame Lord, that uſed ſuch Severity towards them, knows likewiſe how to reſerve all unjuſt and unrighteous Men unto the Day of Judgment, to be puniſhed.

An Inference from the whole.

CHAP.

CHAP. IV.

Of the CREATION of the Viſible WORLD.

WE have hitherto been contemplating the inviſible Realms of Light, and the Nature of thoſe intellectual Beings, that were ordained by their Maker to be Inhabitants thereof, though ſome of them rebelled againſt him, and were depoſ'd from their bleſſed Abode: and are now coming down to the Regions below, in order to fix our Obſervations more eſpecially on that terraqueous Globe, which the Bounty of Heaven has appointed for our Habitation. It differs indeed from the Celeſtial Manſions above, in that it was formed out of pre-exiſtent Matter, which, in all Probability, they were not; but then the Matter, out of which it aroſe, was ſo rude and indigeſted, ſo unapt to receive that beautiful Form, which the Almighty Artiſt put upon it, as ſtill to deſerve, though in a ſecondary Senſe only, the Name of a Creation.

The viſible World made out of a Chaos.

THAT it was an old Tradition among the Heathens, that the World, by ſome omnipotent Agent, was created out of a Chaos, i. e. a confus'd, inordinate Heap of Matter, we have the Hiſtories of the moſt [b] antient Nations, and the Teſtimony of their beſt Authors, [c] both Poets and [d] Philoſophers. That this Tradition of the Chaos is no Way repugnant to the Holy Scriptures, but, on the contrary, very conſonant and agreeable thereunto, is manifeſt from the Hiſtory and Deſcription, that Moſes gives of the Creation, where he does not ſay, that God, at once, made all Things in their full Perfection, but that in the Beginning he created the Earth, i. e. the Matter whereof the Chaos was compoſed, which was without Form, [e] without any Shape or Order; and void, without any Thing living or growing in it; and Darkneſs was upon the Face of the Waters, nothing was ſeen for Want of Light, which lay buried in this vaſt Abyſs.

The Chaos. what.

ACCORDING to the received Opinion, and the Repreſentation, that this inſpir'd Author ſeems to convey to us, this Chaos [f] was a fluid Maſs, wherein were the Materials and Ingredients of all Bodies, but mingled in Confuſion with one another; ſo that heavy and light, denſe and rare, fluid and ſolid Particles were jumbled together; and the Atoms, or ſmall conſtituent Parts of Fire, Air, Water, and Earth, (which have obtained the Name of Elements) were every one in every Place, and all in a wild Confuſion and Diſorder.

When turned into an habitable World.

WHEN it firſt pleaſed the great Creator of all Things to change the Face of this primordial Maſs, and out of ſo much Confuſion to raiſe ſuch a beautiful Fabrick, though it may, in ſome Meaſure, be gather'd from Scripture; yet has it not yet been ſo preciſely done, but that Chronologers have been divided about it: [g] For, to ſay nothing of the Computation of the LXX Interpreters, who place the Creation of the World 5500 Years before the Nativity of our Lord; even thoſe, that follow the Hebrew Text, are not agreed in their Account: For the Jews make the World only 3760, whereas moſt of the Chriſtian Chronologers will have it to be much about 4000 Years older than Chriſt. So that, by them, 5727 Years is thought a moderate Computation of the World's Antiquity.

WHY

[a] Vid. Grot. de Verit. Chriſt. Rel. Ray's Phyſico-Theological Diſcourſes. [b] What the Opinion of the Egyptians was, we have the Words of Diodorus Siculus to convince us, Cum primum Res univerſæ exiſtere cæpêre, unius vultûs fuiſſe Cælum & Terram, permixtâ eorum Naturâ; poſteaquam diſceſſiſſent à ſe iſta corpora, mundo contigiſſe, eum quem nunc videmus, Ordinem, &c. [c] Heſiod, who, for Antiquity, may contend with Homer, has, in the Beginning of his Theogonia, a Deſcription of the Creation:

Ἤτοι μὲν πρώτιστα Χάος γένετ', αὐτὰρ ἔπειτα
Γαῖ' εὐρύστερνος, &c.

As has Ovid likewiſe in the Beginning of his Metamorphoſis:

Ante mare & terras, & quod tegit omnia Cœlum,
Unus erat toto naturæ vultus in Orbe,
Quem dixêre Chaos. Rudis indigeſtaque moles,
Nec quicquam niſi Pondus iners, congeſtaque eodem
Non bene junctarum diſcordia ſemina Rerum, &c.

[d] The like Account we have likewiſe in the antient Philoſopher Anaxagoras, who begins his Philoſophy with theſe Words:

Πάντα χρήματα ἦν ὁμοῦ, εἶτα Νοῦς ἐλθὼν αὐτὰ διεκόσμησε.

[e] Patrick's Commentary. [f] Vid. Burnet's and Whiſton's Theories. [g] Curcell. Inſtitut. Lib. III.

WHY God suffered the Chaos to continue so long, before he transformed it into an habitable World, is a Question only resolvable into his Divine Pleasure. [h] There is nothing, according to any Ideas we have of his moral Perfections, to fix the Creation of any Thing sooner or later, than his own arbitrary Will determined; only we may imagine that, after the Revolt of so many Angels, God, intending to create a new Race of Creatures, to supply their Place, and fill up the Vacancy in Heaven, and withal resolving to make Trial of their Obedience, before he admitted them into his beatifick Presence, singled out one, (as perhaps there might be many Chaotick Bodies in the Universe) placed at proper Distance from his own Empyreal State, to be the Habitation of the Creatures, he was going to make; but delay'd the fitting it up for them, until the Time of their Creation was approaching. Why no sooner.

[i] IN what Season of the Year this Habitation of theirs was prepared for them, whether in the vernal or autumnal Equinox, is another Question, that has divided the Opinions of the Learned. The common Voice of Chronologers is for the vernal Equinox, as the propereſt Season for Seeds, deposited in the new-formed Earth, to spring up and fructify; besides the Sanction, that seems to be given to this Opinion, by the Words of God himself, at the Institution of the Passover; this Month (viz. the Month of Nisan, which falls in the vernal Equinox) [k] shall be unto you the Beginning of Months; it shall be the first Month of the Year. God's commanding the Israelites however (as [l] others have observed) upon their Return out of Egypt, to esteem the Month Nisan the first of their Year, seems to imply, that, till that Time, it had not been so esteemed by them; and though, in Commemoration of their Deliverance from the House of Bondage, they made it (as God had appointed them) the Beginning of their sacred Year; yet the Beginning of their civil Year was, in all Ages, the first Day of their autumnal Month Tisri, which accordingly was honoured with an extraordinary Festival, [m] the Feast of Trumpets, while the Beginning of their sacred Year, the first of Nisan, had no such Solemnity annexed to it. In what Season of the Year.

IT is to be observed likewise, that the Feast of In-gathering, or of Tabernacles, (which was about the Autumnal Equinox) is said [n] to be at the End of the Year, and where the old Year ended, the new undoubtedly did begin. [o] There is likewise a manifest Convenience in introducing Mankind, and other living Creatures into a World, well stored with all Manner of Provision for their Sustenance, (as it is in Autumn) and not in the Beginning of Spring, which would have looked like bringing them into an empty House; and for these Reasons, the Maintainers of this Hypothesis conclude, that the World was created, and consequently, the first Day of the ancient and Patriarchal Year began in the Autumnal Equinox.

BY what Means this World was created and the ancient and deformed Chaos changed into a regular and delightful Place; how far the immediate Hand of God, and how far the Laws of Nature were concerned in the Alteration; whether in every Step the Divine Power and Interposition exerted itself, or some Things were left to their own Operation, guided and assisted only by their first Mover, are Difficulties, not so easy to be determined; because it is a Matter of no small Nicety to distinguish between those Parts of the Mosaick Creation, that are mechanically to be accounted for, and those, wherein the miraculous Energy of Almighty God interposed. In what Manner.

[p] A DIVINE Energy, say the warmest Abettors of mechanical Principles, must certainly be admitted in this Case, where a new World was to be formed, and a wild Chaos reduced to a fair, and regular, and permanent System; and yet, there are sundry Passages, even in the Mosaick Account, such as, let the Earth bring forth Grass; let the Earth bring forth the living Creature after his Kind; and it did so, which referred something at least to the Agency of second Causes, after God had endowed them with a prolifick Quality: Whereupon they conclude, that, whatever is eminently above the Power of second Causes, such as the Production of Matter out of nothing, the Formation of the Seeds of all Animals and Vegetables, the Creation of our first Parents, and inspiring them with immortal Souls, are the sure Result of God's omnipotent Power, and to him only to be ascribed; but whatever is of a lower Denomination, and comes under the Compass of mechanical Cauſes, this they think might very well be effected by Matter and Motion, ſet only on work by infinite Wiſdom, and ſuſtained in their Being and Operation by infinite Power: And, upon this Suppoſition, they begin ſuch Theories, as we come now to conſider.

SECT. I.

Dr BURNET and Mr WHISTON'S Theories examined.

WE have had two learned Men, of our Age and Nation, that have both ſhewn great Skill in this Kind of Writing; the one, by the Richneſs of his Stile and Fancy, and the other, by the Strength of his Parts, and [q] Streſs of Contrivance, have carried the Credit of THEORIES as far as they well can go; but, after all their Pains and curious Diſquiſitions, they have not been able to give us any ſatisfactory Account of the World's Formation.

The Subſtance of Dr. Burnet's Theory.

THE Former of them ſuppoſes, "That the Chaos was a confuſed fluid Maſs, "much of the ſame Make with what we have deſcribed, under the Influence and "Direction of God indeed, but left to the general Action of Nature to work itſelf "into Shape: That, upon God's giving the World, [r] the heavieſt and groſſeſt Parts "did ſink down towards the Middle of this Maſs (for there he ſuppoſes the Center "of its Gravity) hardened by Degrees, and conſtituted the interior Parts of the "Earth: That the reſt of it, which ſwam above, was, by the ſame Principle of "Gravity, divided likewiſe into two Orders of Bodies, the one liquid, like Water, "the other volatile, like Air: That the fine Parts, diſintangling themſelves from "the reſt, did mount upwards, and, having Motion enough to keep themſelves "upon the Wing, did play in open Spaces, where they conſtituted that Body, "which we call Air: That the other Parts, being groſſer, ſettled in a Maſs toge-"ther, upon the Body of the Earth, and compoſed, not only Water ſtrictly ſo "called, but all Manner of liquid Bodies, belonging to the Earth: That of theſe "liquid Bodies there are two Kinds, one light and oily, and the other lean and "more ponderous, which naturally ſeparate one from another, as in Water and "Oil; ſo that the light and oily Part of the Maſs got above the other, and ſwam "uppermoſt."

THUS far the Theoriſt goes on very well; but his Hypotheſis, ſoon after, be-gins to be extravagant. "He ſuppoſes that the Air, as yet, was thick, groſs, and "dark; that there was Abundance of terreſtrial Particles ſwimming in it; the hea-"vieſt of which ſubſided ſoon, but the leſſer and lighter remained in the Air; and "though they ſunk down, as well as the other, yet it was very leiſurely, and after a "long Space of Time: That, in their Deſcent, they met with that oily Liquor upon "the Face of the Deep, which intangled and ſtopped them from paſſing any far-"ther; that, there mixing with this unctuous Subſtance, they compoſed a certain "Slime, or ſoft and light Earth, ſpread upon the Face of the Waters; that this thin "and tender Orb increaſed more and more, as the little earthly Parts, that were de-"tained in the Air, could make their Way to it; 'till at length, by a continued "Acceſſion of Parts, this oily Liquor was all ſucked up and incorporated into one "Subſtance, which, in Proceſs of Time, grew ſtiff and firm; and became, at laſt, "an habitable Earth, ſmooth and uniform, without Mountains, and without a Sea."

The chief Matters in it confuted.

[s] AFTER this Manner has the Theoriſt formed his Antediluvian World: But alas! how little Truth and Solidity is there in all this fine Fiction! His very firſt Suppoſition, that the primitive Chaos was a fluid Maſs, is ſcarce allowable, ſince the greateſt Part of terreſtrial Bodies (as far as we can diſcern) are hard and ſolid; and Stones and Metals (which make not the leaſt Part of them) are incapable of being liquified by Water: Nor can we ſee any Reaſon, why there might not be huge Lumps of firm and ſolid Matter, jumbled together, and ſwimming up and down, ſome on the Surface, and ſome within the Fluid of it. His Laws of Gravitation ruin the whole Contrivance; for, if every Thing muſt ſubſide according to its ſpecific Gravity, [q] Baker's Reflections upon Learning. [r] Vid. Burnet's Theory of the Earth, Vol. I. [s] Keil's Examination of Dr Burnet's Theory.

Gravity, the Earth, being heavier than the Water, muſt neceſſarily place itſelf nearer the Center, and ſo leave the Waters to cover the Face of the whole Orb. His fat and oily Liquid, to catch the terrene Particles, as they deſcended, is but a weak Salvo, becauſe it is impoſſible that Oil, or any other Liquor, ſhould ſuſtain ſuch an immenſe heavy Orb, wherein ſuch prodigious Quantities of Stones and Minerals are contained, and which, if left to their own Motion, muſt of Neceſſity ſink to the Bottom. In this primitive Earth indeed, he affirms that there was no ſuch Thing as Metals and Minerals; but how Tubal Cain, before the Flood, could be the [t] Inſtructor of every Artificer of Braſs and Iron, or how an Ark, to contain all Terreſtrial and Aerial Animals, could be built without Iron, is a Thing inconceivable. His incloſing the whole Maſs of Waters within an incruſted Earth, is an idle Invention; ſince thereby he deprived the World of the Benefit of a Sea, and all Advantages of Navigation; of the Pleaſure of Rivers and Fountains, ſo neceſſary for the Accommodation of Life; and [u] of the Fruitfulneſs of Clouds and Vapours, that are exhaled by the Sun, to feed the Plants of the Earth with the Balm of Dews, and the Fatneſs of Showers. His excluding the annual Motion of the Earth, and allowing it only a ſimple Motion round an Axis, parallel to the Poles of the Ecliptick, leaves a great Part of the World uninhabitable, and takes away the bleſſed Viciſſitude of Times, and Seaſons, and Years; and, to name no more, his excluding all Hills and Mountains out of the Creation, merely to make a ſmooth and uniform Convexity of the Earth, is a very wild and extravagant Fiction: For, beſides that theſe Mountains yield Food for ſeveral Animals, deſigned by Nature to live upon them; and ſupply us, from without, with many excellent Plants, and, from within, with many uſeful Metals; [x] by condenſing the Vapours, and ſo producing Rain, and Fountains, and Rivers, they give the very Plains and Valleys themſelves the Fertility they boaſt of. Theſe ſhapeleſs and ill-figured old Rocks and Mountains then (as the Theoriſt is pleaſed to call them) from whence we dig Gold, and Stone, and Minerals, are of ſuch ſingular Uſe in their Kind, that we can hardly think the little phantaſtical Pleaſantneſs of an even Superficies any tolerable Compenſation [y] for the chief Things of the ancient Mountains, and for the precious Things of the laſting Hills. Nay, we may appeal to the Senſe of Mankind, if a Land of Hills and Valleys has not more Pleaſure and Beauty both, than any uniform Flat, which then only affords Delight, when it is viewed from the Top of an Hill. [z] What were the Temple of Theſſaly, ſo celebrated in ancient Story for their unparallelled Pleaſantneſs, but a Vale divided with a River, and terminated with Hills? Are not all the Deſcriptions of Poets embelliſhed with ſuch Ideas, when they would repreſent any Places of ſuperlative Delight, any bliſsful Seats of the Muſes and Nymphs, any ſacred Habitations of Gods and Goddeſſes? They will never admit that a wide Flat can be pleaſant, no not in the very [a] Elyſian Fields; They too muſt be diverſified: Swelling Aſcents, and declining Valleys, are their chief Beauties; nor can they imagine [b] even Paradiſe a Place of Pleaſure, or Heaven itſelf to be [c] Heaven, without them.

MANY more Exceptions might juſtly be made both againſt the Form of the primitive Earth, and the Manner of its Production according to this Theoriſt; and the Boldneſs he makes with the holy Scriptures, when at any Time he finds himſelf at a Plunge, might be juſtly cenſured: But what has been ſaid is enough to convince us, that there is no accounting for the wonderful Works of God by the ſtated Rules of Matter and Motion; that he, who attempts it, runs himſelf immediately into Difficulties, which all his Suppoſitions are not enough to clear him of; and [d] that, how eaſy ſoever

The Sum of Mr. Whiſton's Theory.

THE other Theoriſt ſhews a greater Regard to Scripture, and has avoided many Difficulties, that were chargeable upon his Predeceſſor: He proceeds too upon more philoſophical Principles, but has ſuch bold and adventurous Suppoſitions, as are liable to juſt Exception. "He ſuppoſes, [e] that the Moſaick Account of the Creation extends no farther, than to this ſublunary World; that the Sun, Moon, and Stars "were created before, and only made viſible and conſpicuous on the fourth Day; "[f] that the ancient Chaos, the Origin of the Earth, was the Atmoſphere of a Comet; "that the ſix Days of the Creation were equal in Length to ſix Years; and that, tho' "the Annual Motion of the Earth commenced at the Beginning, yet its Diurnal "did not till after the Fall of Man."

Refuted.
1. The Creation extended beyond the Earth.

How far he may be right, as to the Extenſion of the Creation, has, in ſome Meaſure, [g] been conſider'd before: His Arguments, it muſt be granted, have their Weight, but ſtill it is certain, [h] that the Moon, at the Time of the Moſaick Creation, was form'd, or at leaſt plac'd in its Orbit, and made to turn round the Earth; for no Comets have any ſecondary Planets which move round them: And if the Moon, at the Time of the Moſaick Creation, was either created and form'd, or at leaſt brought into a new Orbit, and made to move round us, in order to give Light in the Night-Seaſon, we muſt be forc'd to acknowledge, that, when God is ſaid to have made the Moon, there muſt be ſomething more intended, than a mere rendering it viſible: And, becauſe the Word (made) is equally applied both to the Sun and Moon, there is Reaſon to believe, that it ought to be taken in the ſame, i. e. a literal Senſe, when ſpoken of both.

2. The Chaos not the Atmoſphere of a Comet.

2. THE Atmoſphere of a Comet, how ſimilar ſoever he might think it, and proper for the original Matter of this Earth, yet wanted this eſſential Quality, viz. that whereas the ſacred Hiſtory repreſents the primitive Chaos as a very dark and obſcure Body, thoſe, that have made their Obſervations, tell us, that not only the Atmoſphere of a Comet is a bright pellucid Fluid, through which the Beams of the Sun freely diffuſe themſelves, and are many of them reflected back again to us; but that the Central Solid itſelf, by Reaſon of its near Approach to the Sun, is often heated to an intenſe Degree; and whatever ſolid Bodies are heated to an intenſe Degree, are always clear and luminous.

[i] THEY obſerve farther, that the greateſt Part of thoſe Solids, which compoſe the upper Stratum of the Earth, conſiſts of Stones, Sand, and Gravel, which, upon being very much heated, melt and turn into Glaſs: If any of theſe therefore had been in the Comet's Atmoſphere, upon its Approach to the Sun, they muſt have neceſſarily melted, and compos'd a Fluid, which, upon the Comet's cooling again, would appear in the Form of Glaſs; but of this we ſee not the leaſt Tokens in the preſent Texture of our Earth. Since therefore the Atmoſphere of Comets is a clear and pellucid luminous Body, thro' which we can plainly ſee their Central Solids; have Properties diſtinct, and perhaps may be made of Matter quite different to our Earth; and ſince the Chaos, out of which our Earth was originally form'd, was a dark and confus'd Heap of Bodies, without the leaſt Glimmerings of Light, (which was not created till the firſt Day) it is plain, that, whatever Boaſt the Theoriſt may make of the Invention, this Chaos could never be the Atmoſphere of a Comet.

3. The Diurnal Motion of the Earth before the Fall.

3. THAT the Diurnal Rotation of the Earth did not commence till after the Fall, ſo that, till that Time, Days and Years were exactly the ſame, is another Aſſertion in the Theoriſt, juſtly to be held a Paradox: [k] For, when we conſider the vaſt and prodigious Cold, that muſt be occaſion'd on the Earth, by the total Abſence of the Sun, for one half of the Year, and the immenſe intolerable Heat that muſt enſue upon its perpetual ſhining upon it, for the other; we ſhall be led to conclude, either that the Bodies of the Antediluvian Plants and Animals were of a different Conſtitution to what they are now, or that they muſt neceſſarily have been ſtarv'd or wither'd, frozen or ſcorch'd to Death, by an immoderate Degree of Heat or Cold.

PLANTS, we know, require a certain determinate Degree of Heat for their Production and Vegetation; a leſs Degree would never bring them to Perfection, and a greater a greater would quite wither them, before their Seeds could be ripen'd, and fit for the Production of new Plants of the ſame Species. The Nature of Animals, we perceive, is not able to bear two ſuch Oppoſers, as the extream Heat, that is cauſed by the Sun, while it ſhineth for one half Year without Intermiſſion, and the extream Cold, that muſt ariſe from its Abſence for the ſame Space of Time. For though we ſhould ſuppoſe that the Blood and other Liquors, that run in their Bodies, is of ſuch a Fervency, as not to be frozen with the extream Cold; yet it is certain, that they muſt have evaporated, and been exhal'd by the extream Heat that ſucceeded it in the Half-year's Day; or, if they were able to ſuſtain ſuch an extream Heat without Evaporation, yet it is ſcarce to be imagin'd how they could preſerve themſelves from freezing, in the extream Cold of an Half-year's Night. The Heat and Cold muſt then have been ſome hundred Times more intenſe, than what we feel it now, and the Paradiſaical Life of our firſt Parents not near ſo pleaſant, as ſome have imagin'd; while one half of the Year paſs'd in a cold uncomfortable Darkneſs, and the other in a ſcorching and tormenting Heat. But ſuppoſing our firſt Parents had proper Conſtitutions, and primitive Plants and Animals were of a Texture able to endure ſuch Extremities; yet, if the Earth had no Diurnal Rotation, till after the Fall, and if then only it began to turn round its own Axis, there muſt have been ſuch great and extraordinary Changes and Alterations of Heat and Cold introduc'd by this new Rotation, as would neceſſarily require new Species of Plants and Animals, of a Make different to the former, ſuch as would better agree with this new Diſpoſition of the Earth, and Action of the Sun, i. e. God muſt have created new and different Sets of Plants and living Creatures, or at leaſt quite alter'd and chang'd the Natures of the old Ones; which is incongruous to think was ever done.

Days and Years not the ſame.

INTO ſuch Abſurdities has our Theoriſt run himſelf, purely to make Room for his ſecond Cauſes to work the World into a regular Order, leiſurely and gradually, [l] as he tells us, without Precipitance, or Acceleration. The Compaſs of one Day, of four and twenty ſhort Hours, he thought too ſmall for ſuch vaſt Productions: On the third Day he found Moſes relating Works ſo incompatible, and on the ſixth, ſo numerous, that he could not conceive how ſo many, and ſo different Things could be tranſacted in ſo ſhort a Space: And therefore he ſuppoſes, that Days then might be as long as Years are now, to give Nature Time enough to finiſh her Works, without the Interpoſition of any miraculous Providence: Never conſidering, that where an Almighty Agent is concerned, (and if any where concerned, certainly in the Work of Creation) a Day, an Hour, a Moment, is equivalent to an Age; that the more we aſcribe to ſecond Cauſes, the leſs we impute to the Divine Efficacy; and that the longer we protract the Time, the more we impair the Wonder of the Performance. For this Reaſon, [m] ſome have imagin'd, that even ſix Days were too long a Space for God to create the World in; that Time to him is of no Conſideration, who can do every Thing he pleaſes in an Inſtant; and that therefore, tho' he might employ ſome Part of each Day in the Formation of Things, yet it could not be more, than a very ſmall Portion of it, the Space of a Moment, or the Compaſs of a Word's ſpeaking; unleſs we can imagine, ([n] as ſome of the Jewiſh Doctors do) that he made uſe of the Miniſtry of Angels, who, being but finite Creatures, muſt be ſuppos'd to require Time in their Operations.

THE Truth is, the more we prolong the Work, the leſs we make it the Effect of a Divine Power: And therefore the Account, which Moſes gives us of the Formation of Things, if it be not ſo philoſophical, muſt be own'd to be more emphatical, than what our Theoriſts have produced; [o] and tho' it may be no more than an hiſtorical Journal, or Diary of the Mutations of the Chaos, and of the viſible Works of each Day; yet, [p] in his Journal, we find Matters ſet in a clearer Light, and a fairer Repreſentation of the great Creator's Power and Godhead given us, than all the laborious Diſquiſitions of the beſt Philoſophers have yet been able to do.

[l] Vid. his Hypotheſis, Page 25. [m] Curcell. Inſtitutiones. [n] The Jewiſh Doctors are generally of Opinion, that God employed the bleſſed Angels in the Work of the Creation, and therefore they lay it down as a ſtanding *Maxim, that God does nothing without his Council, or without his Family on high. SECT. II.

The MOSAICK Account of the CREATION.

That the Mosaick Account includes the solar System.

THE better to understand the Account, that the sacred History gives us of the Creation, it will be proper to observe, that, however some have extended it to the whole Universe, and others reduced it to this sublunary Globe only; the middle Acceptation, that includes the solar System, but pretends to go no farther, seems to be the most probable: The Reason is, because the several Planets, that are contain'd within the Magnus Orbis, i. e. the Circle, which Saturn describes about the Sun, have so near a Similitude and Relation, the same Form, the same Center, and the same common Luminary, with one another; that it is hardly to be imagin'd, but that they were all the Production of one and the same Creation. And therefore, tho' the Historian seems chiefly to regard the Earth in his whole Narration, yet there is Reason to presume, that the other Parts of the Planetary World went on in the same Degrees of Formation with it.

Why more particular, as to the Earth.

IT is to be observ'd farther, that tho' each of these Planets might take up the same Time in its Production, that the Earth did; yet it was enough for Moses's Purpose to give an Account exactly of the sublunary Creation only, and not to trouble the People's Heads with Astronomical Niceties. His Business was to instruct them, that their Original was from God, the better to keep them from Idolatry; and to relate to them the Creation of Things so far, as was agreeable to Truth, and conformable to their Capacities. To have given them a false System of the World, in Compliance to their weak Apprehension, had been declaring himself an Impostor to all intelligent Men; and yet to have particularly unfolded all the Phænomena of a true one, had been every whit as absurd, considering the illiterate People he had to deal with. The Wisdom of God therefore directed his holy Penman to the middle and wisest Course, viz. to speak exact Truth, but seasonably and cautiously, so as neither to confound the Minds of the ignorant Jews, nor expose himself to the Contempt of the more learned Nations that were about them. He himself, no doubt, who was educated in all the Learning of the Egyptians, was well vers'd in the Vulgar, or what is usually called the Ptolemaick Hypothesis, which came from Egypt into Greece; and yet we find him not giving the least Glance that Way; which must be imputed to no other Cause, but only the particular Providence of God, over-ruling this inspir'd Person, and obliging him to relate Matters, almost contrary to his own Sentiments, for Reasons best known to his Divine Will.

God's Spirit moving upon the Waters, what.

TO this Purpose we may observe farther, that, before he begins his Account, and undertakes to inform us what particular Creatures were each Day successively brought into Being, as a Thing essential and preparatory to the Work, he tells us, [q] that the Spirit of God moved upon the Face of the Waters: For whether by the Spirit of God we are to understand [r] his holy and essential Spirit, which is the third Person in the ever-blessed Trinity; that [s] plastick Nature, which, according to some, was made subservient to him upon this Occasion; or some other Emanation of the Divine Power, 'tis reasonable to suppose, that its Incubation upon the Chaotick Mass deriv'd into it a motive Faculty, impregnated it with several Kinds of vital Influence, and so separated, and digested its confus'd Parts, as to make it capable of Disposition and Order.

Of the first Day's Work.

IN this Condition we may suppose the Chaos to have been, when the Fiat for Light was given: [t] Whereupon, all the confus'd, stagnating Principles of Matter began to range into Form and Order; the dull, heavy, and terrene Parts, which over-clouded the Expansum, had their Summons to retire to their respective Centers: They presently obey'd the Almighty's Orders, and Part of them subsided to the Center of the Earth; some to Jupiter, some to Saturn, and others to Venus, &c. till the Globes of these several Planets were compleated. And as the grosser Parts subsided, [u] the lighter and more tenuous mounted up, and the lucid and and fiery Particles being lighter than the reſt, aſcended higher, and, by the Divine Order, meeting together in a Body, were put in a circular Motion, and, in the Space of a natural Day, made to viſit the whole Expanſion of the Chaos; not only to make a Separation of the Light from Darkneſs, and thereby a Diſtribution of Day and Night, [x] but to facilitate the Work likewiſe, and forward the Digeſtion of the remaining Parts of the Creation.

Of the ſecond Day's Work.

THUS, on the firſt Day, the bright and active Element of Fire was extracted from the Chaotic Maſs, as on the ſecond, what we properly call the Air, though our Tranſlation (in Imitation of the Latin, which has followed the [y] Septuagint a little too cloſely) has ſtiled it the Firmament. The original Word ſignifies properly an Expanſion, and means here all that extended Space, that makes up the Earth's Atmoſphere; and therefore the only Difficulty, in this Day's Work, is to know, what we are to underſtand by the Waters, that are above the Firmament. [z] That the Moon has Waters analogous to our Seas, is plain, not only from the different Reflection of Light from her different Parts, but from the very Shape of Seas and Iſlands, that we may perceive in it; and that the other Planets have the ſame, is highly probable, from their great Similitude to one another. Now we ſuppoſe, that, before the Work of this ſecond Day, all this Planetary Water lay undiſtinguiſhably diſperſed throughout the Expanſion of the Chaos, and, together with the Æther, made up a pellucid Body; ſo that the Buſineſs now was, to make a Diviſion of theſe Waters, and diſtribute them, in proper Portions, to their reſpective Planets: And, accordingly, as ſoon as the Almighty gave the Word, all the aqueous Parts of this great Pellucid ſubſided towards the Centers of the Planets, and were circumfus'd about their Globes. Thus the Expanſum was cleared off a ſecond Time, by the Subſidence of the aqueous Particles, which Moſes calls a dividing of the Waters under the Firmament, from the Waters which are above the Firmament; for the Waters under the Firmament are the Waters of the Earth, and the Waters above the Firmament are [a] thoſe of the Moon, and other Planets, which, ſince this ſecond Day's Work, are diſtinguiſhed, but lay confuſedly diſperſed in the great Expanſum before.

The firſt Part of the third Day's Work.

THUS, on the ſecond Day, the beautiful Element of Air was extracted; and one Part of the Buſineſs of the third, was to ſeparate the other remaining Elements, Water and Earth: For the watery Particles, as we ſaid, clearing the Expanſum, and falling upon the planetary Orbs, muſt be ſuppoſed to cover the Face of the Earth, as well as other Planets; when the great Creator gave the Command, for the Waters to be gathered into one Place, and the dry Land to appear. Whereupon, the mighty Mountains inſtantly reared up their Heads, and the Waters falling every Way from their Sides, ran into thoſe large extended Valleys, which this Swelling of the Earth, in ſome Places, had made for their Reception in others.

How the Earth might be raiſed above the Waters.

WHETHER this Separation of the Land and Water, was done by the immediate Application of God's Almighty Power, or by the Intervention, and Inſtrumentality of ſecond Cauſes, is not ſo eaſy to determine: To excavate ſome Parts of the Earth, and raiſe others, in order to make the Waters ſubſide into proper Channels, is thought a Work not ſo comporting with the Dignity and Majeſty of God; and [b] therefore ſome have thought, that it might poſſibly be effected by the ſame Cauſes, that Earthquakes are, i. e. by ſubterraneous Fires, and Flatus's. What incredible Effects the Accenſion of Gunpowder has, we ſee every Day; how it rends Rocks, and blows up the moſt ponderous and ſolid Walls, Towers, and Edifices, ſo that its Force is almoſt irreſiſtible; and why then might not ſuch a proportionable Quantity of the like Materials, ſet on Fire together, raiſe up the Mountains, how great and ponderous ſoever, Denſior his Tellus, Elementaque grandia traxit,

Et preſſa eſt gravitate ſuâ; circumfluus Humor
Ultima poſſedit, ſolidumque coërcuit Orbem. OVID. Metam.

[x] The Opinion of our learned Commentator, Biſhop Patrick, is much the ſame, as to the Regulation of this Day's Work: It ſeems to me moſt rational, ſay he, by this Light, to underſtand thoſe Particles of Matter, which we call Fire [(whoſe two Properties every one knows are Light and Heat) which the Almighty Spirit, that formed all Things, produced, as the great Inſtrument for the Preparation and Digeſtion of the reſt of the Matter, which was ſtill more vigorouſly moved and agitated, from the Top to the Bottom, by this reſtleſs Element; till the purer and more ſhining Parts of it, being ſeparated from the groſſer, and united to a Body fit to retain them, became Light.

[y] The LXX Interpreters, in tranſlating the Hebrew Word, the firm or ſolid, have followed the Philoſophy of the firſt Ages; for the Ancients fancied that the Heavens were a ſolid Body, and that the Stars were faſtened therein, which perhaps was likewiſe the Notion of Elihu, Job xxxvii. 18. ſince he repreſents the Heavens to be firm or ſolid, like a molten Looking-Glaſs. Saurin's Diſſertations on the Old and New Teſtament.

[z] Nicholls's Conference, Vol. I.

[a] Our excellent Commentator ſuppoſes the Waters above the Firmament to be thoſe, that hang in the Clouds; but the Notion of their being planetary Waters ſeems more reaſonable, becauſe at this Time there were no Clouds, neither had is as yet rained on the Earth, Gen. ii. 6.

ſoever, and the whole Superficies of the Earth, above the Waters, and ſo make Receptacles for them to run into? Which Opinion I ſhould not venture to mention, but that it ſeems, in ſome Meaſure, to be countenanced by the Pſalmiſt's Authority, who, after he had ſaid, that [c] the Waters ſtood above the Mountains, immediately adds, at thy Rebuke they fled, at the Voice of thy Thunder (an Earthquake, we know, is but a ſubterraneous Thunder) they haſted away, and went down to the Valleys beneath, even unto the Place, which thou hadſt appointed for them.

The ſecond Part.

THUS, on the third Day, were all the ſimple and elementary Bodies compleated; and then the Hiſtorian proceeds to relate, in what Manner all mixt Bodies, and ſuch as were compounded of the firſt-extracted Elements, came to be produced. For the Earth, being now ſeparated from the Waters, and intended for the Habitation of Man and Beaſts, that were afterwards to be created, was firſt of all furniſhed with ſuch Things, as were proper for their Support; Graſs for Cattle, and Herbs and Fruit-Trees, for the Nouriſhment of Man. Immediately therefore, upon the Divine Command, the Earth was covered with verdant Herbage, and Vegetables of all Kinds were produced in their full Proportion, laden with Fruit, and not ſubjected to the ordinary Courſe of Maturation. [d] For, how great ſoever the Fecundity of the primogenial Earth might be, yet it is ſcarce to be imagined, how Trees and Plants could be ripened into full Growth and Burden of Fruit, in the ſhort Period of a Day, any other Way, than by Virtue of a ſupernatural Power of God, [e] which firſt brought together thoſe Parts of Matter, that were fit to produce them; then formed every one of them, and determined their ſeveral Kinds; and at laſt provided for their Continuance, by a curious Incloſure of their Seed, in order to propagate their Species, even unto the End of the World.

Of the fourth Day's Work.

THE Divine Hiſtorian having thus informed his Reader how God had finiſhed this lower World, and furniſhed it with all Manner of Store, recounts in the next Place, what, on the fourth Day, he did in the Regions above, and how he made two great Lights (for ſo they may be juſtly called, in reſpect to the Service they do us) the Sun to rule the Day, and the Moon to rule the Night. The Moon, as well as the other Planets, we ſuppoſe to go along with the Earth in its Formation, and to advance in Proportion as it did; though it is only then ſaid to be made, when the reflected Rays of the Sun made it viſible to the Earth; but the Sun was of a different Make and Matter. [f] That great flaming Light, which we ſuppoſe to have been extracted on the firſt Day, and to move about the Chaotic Maſs, for two Days after, was certainly of great Uſe in the Production of the Æther, the Separation of the Water, and the Arefaction of the Earth, which required a more violent Operation, than was neceſſary, or indeed ſuitable to thoſe ſmaller Alterations, that were afterwards effected. Nor can it be thought, but that, had this great fiery Body continued its Revolutions about the World, it would have been too hot and intenſe, both for the Production and Conſervation of Mankind, and thoſe other Animals, that were now to be created: 'Tis reaſonable to imagine therefore, that God, on this Day, caſt it into a proper Orb; placed it at a convenient Diſtance from the Earth, and other Planets; and, giving it a twofold Motion, the one, to diſtinguiſh the Day from the Night, and the other, to mark out the various Seaſons of the Year, ſuch as Spring, Summer, Autumn, and Winter, did form it into that glorious Luminary, we are, every Day, ſo much indebted to.

Of the fifth Day's Work.

AFTER the Formation of inanimate Creatures, the holy Penman, on the fifth Day, proceeds to the animate: And becauſe Fiſhes and Fowls are not ſo perfect in their Nature, not ſo curious in their bodily Texture, nor ſo ſagacious in their Inſtinct, as terreſtrial Creatures are; he therefore begins with the leſs, and goes on to the more perfect, until he comes to the Top of the Animal-Creation, which is Man.

THAT Fiſhes and Fowl had the ſame Original, and were both produced out of the Waters, i. e. out of ſuch Matter, as was mixed with the Waters, which contained many Things beſides ſimple Water, the great Congruity there is in their Natures (for they are both oviparous, which makes them more fruitful than the Beaſts of the Earth, and both ſteer and direct their Courſe by their Tail) is a ſufficient Indication. [g] Whether God created, at firſt, a great Number of every Kind of Animals all the Earth over, in their proper Places and Climates, or only two of each Species, [c] Pſal. civ. 7, 8. [d] Hale's Origination of Mankind. [e] Patrick's Commentary. [f] Hale's Origination of Mankind, and Patrick's Commentary. [g] Ray, of the Chaos.

Species, a Male and a Female, from which all the reſt proceeded, by Way of Generation, is a Queſtion debated among the Learned; and ſome have been apt to imagine, that, from the Analogy of Mankind, which was created but two in Number, the ſame Order was obſerved in the Production of all other Creatures: But the contrary Opinion ſeems more conſonant to Scripture, which, in relating of the Creation of aqueous Creatures, uſes the Word abundantly; [h] and God ſaid, let the Waters bring forth abundantly the moving Creature that has Life: whereupon it immediately follows, that the Waters did bring them forth abundantly: So that, at leaſt of Birds and Fiſhes, there were many Individuals at firſt created; and what is peculiar to this Day's Work, [i] here is the firſt Mention made of God's bleſſing his Creatures, bidding them to be fruitful and multiply, i. e. he gave them, at their firſt Creation, a prolifick Virtue, and a natural Inſtinct for Generation, whereby they might not only preſerve their Species, but multiply their Individuals.

THUS every Thing being put in due Order, the Earth covered with Plants, the Waters ſtored with Fiſhes, the Air repleniſhed with Fowl, and the Fire placed at a proper Diſtance, to give a convenient Warmth and Nouriſhment to them all; to make this ſublunary World a ſtill more comfortable Reception for Man, in the former Part of the ſixth and laſt Day, God created the Terreſtrial Animals, which our Hiſtorian diſtributes into three Kinds; 1. Beaſts, by which we underſtand all wild and ſavage Creatures, ſuch as Lions, Bears, and Wolves. 2. Cattle, all tame and domeſtick Creatures, deſigned for the Uſe of Men, ſuch as Oxen, Sheep, and Horſes. And, 3. Creeping Things, ſuch as Serpents, Worms, and other Inſects; but [k] whether theſe ſeveral Creatures were, at firſt, produced in their full State and Perfection, or God only created the Seeds of all Animals, (i. e. the Animals themſelves in little) and diſperſed them over the ſuperficial Part of the Earth, giving Power to that Element, aſſiſted by the genial Heat of the Sun, to hatch and bring them forth, has been a Queſtion. It ſeems more rational, however, to ſuppoſe, that God did not commit the Formation of Things to any intermediate Cauſes, but [l] himſelf created the firſt Set of Animals in the full Stature and Perfection of their ſpecifick Natures, and gave to each Species a Power afterwards, by Generation, to propagate its Kind. The Account indeed tells us, that God commanded the Earth to produce ſuch and ſuch Animals; [m] Let the Earth bring forth the living Creature after his Kind, but then it immediately follows, that God made the Beaſts of the Earth, and every Thing that moveth, after his Kind: So that the proper Intention of the Words muſt be, that God himſelf effectually formed them, and made uſe of the Earth only as the Matter, whereof he conſtituted their Parts. For, however Inſects and other equivocal Animals may, by the Heat of the Sun, be generated, (though [n] this is confuted by modern Experiments) [o] yet it is certainly impoſſible, that any of the perfect Species can, either naturally or accidentally, be produced by any Preparation of Matter, or by any Influence of the Heavens, without the miraculous Interpoſition of Almighty Power.

The firſt Part of the ſixth Day's Work.

THUS the Heavens and the Earth were finiſhed, (for the Creation of Man will be Matter of a diſtinct Conſideration) and it may be perhaps worth our while, to ſtop here a little, and obſerve, that, of all the Accounts, which, in all Nations, have been pretended to be given of the Origin of the World, this is the wiſeſt, and moſt philoſophical: Which, conſidering the low Ebb that Learning was at, in the Jewiſh Nation, is no ſmall Argument of its Divine Revelation. [p] What a wretched Account was that of the Egyptians, from whence the Epicureans borrowed their Hypotheſis, that the World was made by Chance, and Mankind grew out of the Earth, like the Pumkins! What ſtrange Stories does the Grecian Theology tell us of Οὐρανὸς and Γῆ of Jupiter and Saturn! And what ſad Work do their ancient Writers

[h] Gen. i. 20. [i] Limborch's Syſtem. [k] Ray, on the Chaos. [l] Hale's Origination.
[m] Gen. i. 24, 25. [n] That no Inſect or Animal did ever proceed equivocally, unleſs in Caſes miraculous, (as in Egypt, by the Divine Judgments) but are all generated from Parents of their own Kind, Male and Female, is manifeſt from the Experiments of the learned and ſagacious Naturaliſt Franciſco Redi, who made innumerable Trials, with the putrid Fleſh of all Sorts of Beaſts, and Fowls, and Fiſhes, and Serpents; with corrupted Cheeſe, and Herbs, and Fruits, and even Inſects themſelves; and yet conſtantly found, that all theſe Kinds of Putrefaction never produced any one Animal by ſpontaneous Formation. For when he ſuffered all theſe ſeveral Things, at different Times, to putrify in hermetically-ſealed Glaſſes, or (leſt the Excluſion of the Air might be ſuppoſed to hinder the Experiment) in Veſſels covered with fine Lawn, ſo as to admit the Air, and keep out the Inſects, no living Thing was ever produced there, though he expoſed them to the Action of the Sun, in the warm Climate of Florence, and in the kindeſt Seaſon of the Year. But when the Glaſſes were open, and Inſects were permitted to go in, there aroſe Creatures then indeed out of the corrupt Matter; but then they were only of ſuch Species as he ſaw go in, and feed, and depoſit their Eggs: From whence we may conclude, that no dead Fleſh, or putrified Bodies, nor indeed any Thing, but what has Life, can produce an Inſect. Bentley's Sermons, at Boyle's Lecture. make, when they come to form Men and Women out of projected Stones! The Chineſe are accounted a wiſe People, and yet the Articles of their Creed are ſuch as theſe,—" That one Tayn, who lived in Heaven, and was famous for his Wiſdom, " diſpoſed the Parts of the World into the Order we find them; that he created, " out of nothing, the firſt Man Panſon, and his Wife Panſone; that this Panſon, " by a Power from Tayn, created another Man, called Tanhom, who was a great " Naturaliſt, and thirteen Men more, by whom the World was peopled; till after " a while the Sky fell upon the Earth, and deſtroy'd them all; and that the wiſe " Tayn afterwards created another Man, called Lotziram, who had two Horns, and " an odoriferous Body, and from whom proceeded ſeveral Men and Women, who " ſtocked the World with the preſent Inhabitants." But, of all others, the Mahometan Account is the moſt ridiculous; for it tells us, that the firſt Things that were created, were the Throne of God, Adam, Paradiſe, and a great Pen, wherewith God wrote his Decrees; that this Throne was carried about upon Angels Necks, whoſe Heads were ſo big, that Birds could not fly, in a thouſand Years, from one Ear to another: That this great Pen is a Journey of five hundred Years long, and one of eighty Years broad; that the Stars are Firebrands, thrown againſt the Devils, that would invade Heaven: That the Heavens are propped up by the Mountain Kaff, which is made all of Emerald; that the Moon is as big as the Sun, only the Angel Gabriel ſpreads his Wing over Part of it: And that the Earth ſtands upon the Top of a great Cow's Horn; that this Cow ſtands upon a white Stone, this Stone upon a Mountain, and this Mountain upon God knows what; with many more Abſurdities of the like Nature.

THESE are ſome Accounts of the World's Creation, that have had many Followers, and ſome Believers: But alas! how ridiculous are they, when we come to compare them with what we read in the Book of Geneſis; where every Thing is eaſy, and natural, comporting with God's Majeſty, and not repugnant to the Rules of Philoſophy! Were we to judge of Moſes at the Bar of Reaſon, merely as an Hiſtorian; had we none of thoſe ſupernatural Proofs of the Divinity of his Writings, which ſet them above the Sphere of all human Compoſitions; had his Work none of that manifeſt Advantage of Antiquity above all others we ever yet ſaw; and were we not allowed to preſume, that his living nearer the Time, which he makes the Period of the World's Creation, gave him great Aſſiſtances in Point of Tradition; were we, I ſay, to wave all this, that might be alledged in his Behalf, yet the very Manner of his treating the Subject, gives him a Preference above all others: Nor can we, without Admiration, ſee a Perſon, that had none of the Syſtems before him, which we now ſo much value, giving us a clearer Idea of Things, in the Way of an eaſy Narrative, than any Philoſopher, with all his hard Words and Inventions, has yet been able to do; and, in the Compaſs of two ſhort Chapters, compriſing all, that has yet been advanced with Reaſon, even from his own Time to this very Day. Nor is it an unlikely Thought, that the Senſe of being ſo far outdone, in a philoſophic Enquiry, by a plain Hiſtorian, has raiſed the Indignation of ſome, and given Birth to the few trifling Objections, that have been made againſt him.

SECT. III.

Exceptions to the MOSAICK Account anſwered.

1. Of the Omiſſion of Meteors and Minerals.

ONE Exception againſt this Hiſtory of the Creation is, that Moſes has omitted two great Integrals of the ſublunary World, Meteors and Minerals, and made no Mention of their Original. [q] But, as theſe two Bodies are a Kind of accidental Production out of other Elements, that he has accounted for, they could not well fall under his Conſideration, becauſe, at the firſt Formation of the World, they were not in Being. Meteors are formed, in the upper Regions of the Air, by the Appoſition, or Mixture, of divers Exhalations from the other Parts of the Univerſe; and Minerals ſeem to be Concretions and Digeſtions, in the Bowels of the Earth, either by the Power of celeſtial, or by the Force of internal and connatural Fire. Which Way ſoever we ſuppoſe theſe Bodies to be ingendered, 'tis plain, that they were not the Production of the ſix Days Work, but the ſpontaneous Effects of

of Nature afterwards, and ſuch as could not come under the Obſervation of an Hiſtorian, that gives us only the Original of Things, and not their future Tranſformations.

LIGHT before the Sun is another Exception, and [r] ſeems as incongruous to ſome, as a Shadow without a Body, or an Effect without a Cauſe. But ſince Darkneſs, in all Ages, has been the chief Idea Men have had of a Chaos, it may reaſonably be ſuppoſed, that the firſt Remove from ſuch a Chaos, muſt be a Tendency to Light; and that this Tendency might be effected, in the Manner that we have deſcribed, by the Subſidence of the groſſer, and the Aſcenſion of the lighter and more luminous Parts, in the very Inſtant that God gave the Command. 2. Light before the Sun.

HOW the Waters could be diſpos'd of, and all the Channels of the great Deep hollowed out in one Day's Time, has been a Matter of ſome Admiration: [s] But 'tis a Wonder, that no wiſe Man ſhould be ſtartled at, that Almighty God ſhould do That in four and twenty Hours, which he might, if he pleaſed, have done in an Inſtant. We ourſelves, in a Moment's Time, can mold a Bit of moiſt Clay into what Form we will; we can make it round or oval, convex or hollow, or how we pleaſe; and why may we not then ſuppoſe, that Almighty God might, in as little a Time, have formed the Earth into what Figure he thought fit and collected the Waters into a Place appropriated for them? Waters indeed, in the ordinary Courſe of Things, move juſt ſuch a Pace, and no faſter; but there is no Reaſon, that God, in his Creation of the World, ſhould be tied up to the dull Motions of his Creatures; ſince the Motion of all Bodies, as every one allows, may be made infinitely faſter or ſlower, as he pleaſes to determine it. 3. Channels made for the Sea.

THE Production of Plants, before the Formation of the Sun, is thought another Soleciſm: [t] But why, at the firſt Creation of Things, ſhould there be that Need for a Sun? In the natural Production of Plants indeed, there is an abſolute Neceſſity for it, to open the Fibres, to raiſe the Juices, and unfold the Coats and Leaves of the Embryon-Plant in the Seed; but, in the Caſe now before us, there were no Coats and Leaves to be unfolded; for God formed the Plants immediately out of the common Matter, and in their full Perfection, ſo that the Seed was the Production of the firſt Plants, and not the Parent of them. But, granting that a vital Warmth was requiſite for the firſt Production of Things, yet this vaſt luminous Body, which we ſuppoſe extracted out of the Chaotic Maſs the firſt Day, was certainly ſufficient for that Purpoſe; and might make the Earth, impregnated by the Moiſture of circumfus'd Waters, as haſty in putting forth Plants, and all other Kinds of Herbage, as we can well deſire, ſuppoſing the Thing to be done by the Inſtrumentality of ſecond Cauſes. 4. Plants before the Sun.

THE allowing ſix Days for the Work of the Creation, which ſome think too long, and others too ſhort a Space, is another great Fault found with the Moſaick Account; and therefore, to clear our Hiſtorian of both theſe, 'twill be proper to ſuggeſt ſome Reaſons, why the Formation of Things might require ſuch a determinate Time, and no longer. 5. Why God employ'd ſix Days in the Creation.

IT is very probable, from what has been ſaid before, [u] that Angels were created, when the ſupreme Heavens were made, at leaſt, ſome conſiderable Time, before the Production of this viſible World. 'Tis certain, that they had an Exiſtence, before the Foundations of the Earth were laid, and [x] glorified God for his Goodneſs in creating it. Now Angels, tho' they be great and glorious Beings, are yet of a finite Nature, and unable to comprehend the wonderful Works of God. There are ſome Things, that theſe celeſtial Creatures, as the Apoſtle teſtifies, [y] deſire to look into; and the more they are let into the Knowledge of the Power and Wiſdom of God, the more they are incited to praiſe him. That therefore they might have abundant Matter for this heavenly Exerciſe, the whoſe Scene of the Creation, according to the ſeveral Degrees and Natures of Things, ſeems to have been laid open in Order before them; whereby they muſt have had a more full and comprehenſive View of the Divine Attributes therein exhibited, than they could have had, in caſe the World had ſtarted forth in an Inſtant, and jumpt, as it were, into this beautiful Frame and Order all at once: Juſt as he, that ſees the whole Method and Contrivance of any curious Piece of Art, values and admires the Artiſt more, than he, that beholds it in the Groſs only. 1. With Reſpect to Angels.

GOD

[r] Nicholls's Conference, Vol. I. [s] Nicholls, ibid. [t] Nicholls, ibid. [u] Jenkins's Reaſonableneſs of Chriſtianity, Vol. II. [x] Job xxxviii. 7. [y] 1 Pet. i. 12.

GOD was pleaſed therefore to diſplay his Glory before the Angels, and, by ſeveral Steps and Degrees, to excite their Praiſe, and Love, and Adoration, which moved them to Songs and Shouts of Joy. By this Means, his Glory, and their own Happineſs was advanced, much beyond what it would have been, had all Things been created and ranged into their proper Order, in one Moment. By this Means, they had Time to look into the firſt Principles and Seeds of Things, and every Day preſented them with a glorious Spectacle of new Wonders; for the more they ſaw, the more they knew, and the more they know of the Works of God, the more they for ever love and adore him.

2. And Men. [z] BY this ſucceſſive and gradual Production of Things in ſix Days at the Creation, the Glory of God is likewiſe more manifeſt to Men, than it would have been, if all had been done at once, or by ſlow and tedious Methods. It is generally acknowledged, that Moſes has given us ſuch an Account of the Creation, as is more intelligible, and better adapted to moſt Men's Capacities, than the boaſted Theories, which ſome would obtrude upon us: Now, whatever Reaſons can be aſſigned, why the Creation ſhould be deſcribed, as it is in the Book of Geneſis, the ſame Reaſons will hold good, why it ſhould, in the ſame Manner, have been effected; for if it be more ſuitable to the Capacities and Apprehenſions of Men, to have it ſo related, 'tis more ſuitable to the ſame Capacities, to have it ſo perform'd.

THE Heavens, and all the Hoſt of them, we may ſuppoſe, were made in an Inſtant, becauſe there were then perhaps no other Creatures, to whom God might diſplay the Glory of his Works; and as they were made in an Inſtant, we have little or no Perception of the Manner, wherein they were made: But now, in the leiſurely Procedure of the Earth's Formation, we ſee, as it were, every Thing ariſing out of the confus'd Maſs; firſt the ſimple Elements, and then the compounded and more curious Creatures, and are led on Step by Step, full of Wonder and Admiration, until we perceive the whole compleated. Angels are [a] the chief of the Ways of God, i. e. the moſt excellent of all his Works; and yet, becauſe we have not their Creation diſtinctly related to us, we have but imperfect Notions of their Nature, and ſmall Conceptions of the Almighty's Glory in creating them; whereas the Formation of Man, delivered as it is, with all its Apparatus, Order, and Proceſſion, ſtrikes the Mind with a competent Conception how [b] God formed him out of the Duſt of the Ground, and breathed into his Noſtrils the Breath of Life, and ſo Man became a living Soul.

IF God then, in Condeſcenſion to our Capacities, divided the Creation into ſtated Periods, and prolonged the Succeſſion of what he could have finiſhed in ſix Moments, to the Term of ſix Days, that we might have clearer Notions of his eternal Power and Godhead, and, every Day of the Week, new and particular Works to celebrate him for; this Condeſcenſion ſhould be far from tempting us to loſe Sight of him, by ſuppoſing, either that he took a longer Time in the Work, or left it to the Management of natural Cauſes. If the miraculous Power of God interpoſed, ſix Days, for Diſtinction's Sake, were ſufficient: If all was committed to the Agency of natural Cauſes, ſix thouſand Ages would not have been enough. Inſtead of cavilling at the Method of God's Operations therefore, the proper Effect, that the Contemplation of them ſhould have upon us, is, to beget in us the higheſt Eſteem and Veneration of him, from the many fair Characters of his infinite Goodneſs, legible in every Step of his Proceeding; to engage us, with all due Thankfulneſs, to acknowledge, that [c] the Earth was made by his Power, the World eſtabliſhed by his Wiſdom, and the Heavens ſtretched out by his Diſcretion; and, upon the Conſideration of theſe great Tokens of Omnipotence, to poſſeſs our Minds with the deepeſt Humility; often revolving with ourſelves, and often admiring with the Royal Prophet, [d] What is Man, that God is ſo mindful of him! [e] For a Nothing to himſelf muſt every one appear, that looks abroad upon the other Parts of the Creation.

CHAP. V.

Of the CREATION of MAN.

THAT Mankind has not continued in an infinite Succeſſion, from Generation to Generation, but, at one Time or other, was originally made by Almighty God, is ſufficiently evident, not only from the plain Abſurdity of an [a] infinite Succeſſion, but from all the Arguments likewiſe, that we formerly made Uſe of, to prove the recent Date of the World's Formation. That the univerſal Species of Mankind has had a gradual Increaſe, notwithſtanding what War, and Famine, and Peſtilence, and Floods, and Conflagrations, and other calamitous Cauſes have retarded it, is manifeſt from the Hiſtory of the Jewiſh Nation, from the Account of the Roman Cenſus, and [b] Regiſters of our own Country, where the Proportion of Births and Burials is found, upon Obſervation, to be yearly, as fifty is to forty. Now if Mankind do increaſe, though never ſo ſlowly, but one Couple, ſuppoſe, in an Age, 'tis enough to evince the Falſhood of infinite Generations already expired. For though we ſhould ſuppoſe ten thouſand Millions of Couples now in being, yet it is but going ſo many Ages back, and we come to a ſingle original Pair; and 'tis all one, in Reſpect of eternal Duration, yet behind, whether we begin the World ſo many Millions of Ages ago, or date it from the late Æra of about ſix thouſand Years. Mankind not from Eternity.

THAT the Origin of Mankind is not to be aſcribed [c] to the Influence of Stars, upon ſome extraordinary Conjunction, the Action of the Sun upon duly-prepared Matter, the fortuitous Concourſe of Atoms, or any other Method, wherein Chance and Accident had the Guidance, is plain from the admirable Contrivance and Structure of the human Body, even without any additional Proof from the Powers and Properties of the Soul. For when we conſider the many conſtituent Parts of the Bodies of Men, all admirably compacted into ſo noble an Engine, that in each of the very Fingers, for Inſtance, there are Bones, and Griſtles, and Ligaments, and Membranes, and Muſcles, and Tendons, and Nerves, and Arteries, and Veins, and Skin, and Cuticle, and Nail; together with Marrow, and Fat, and Blood, and other nutricious Juices; all theſe ſolid Parts, of a determinate Size, and Figure, and Texture, and Situation; and each of them made up of Myriads of little Fibres, and Filaments, not diſcoverable by the naked Eye; when we conſider, I ſay, how innumerable Parts muſt conſtitute ſo ſmall a Member, as the Finger; we cannot look upon it, or the whole Body, wherein appears ſo much Fitneſs, and Uſe, and Subſerviency to infinite Functions, any otherwiſe, than as the Effect of Contrivance and Skill, and conſequently, the Workmanſhip of a moſt intelligent and beneficent Being. And though now the Propagation of Mankind be in a ſettled Method of Nature, which is the Inſtrument of God; yet we cannot but believe, that the firſt Production of Mankind was by the immediate Power of the Almighty Author of Nature, and that all ſucceeding Generations of Men were the Progeny of one primitive Couple. But made by God.

[a] The Arguments from Eternity I have purpoſely omitted, becauſe ſomewhat metaphyſical; but find a very learned Divine of our Church, ſetting them forth in a pretty clear Light. Infinite Generations of Men, ſays he, are already paſt and gone; but whatever is now paſt, was once actually preſent; ſo that each of theſe infinite Generations was once in its Turn actually preſent: Therefore all, except one Generation, were once future, and not in Being; which deſtroys the very Suppoſition. For either that one Generation muſt itſelf have been infinite, which is Nonſenſe; or it was the finite Beginning of infinite Generations between itſelf and us, i. e. Infinity terminated at both Ends, which is as much Nonſenſe as before. Again, infinite paſt Generations of Men have been once actually preſent: There may be ſome one Man, ſuppoſe then, that was at infinite Diſtance from us now; therefore that Man's Son likewiſe, forty Years younger, ſuppoſe, than his Father, was either at infinite Diſtance from us, or at finite: If that Son too was at infinite Diſtance from us, then one infinite is longer, by forty Years, than another; which is abſurd: If at finite, then forty Years added to finite make it infinite, which is as abſurd as the other. Once more, the Number of Men, that is already dead and gone, is infinite: But the Number of the Eyes of thoſe Men muſt neceſſarily be twice as much, as that of the Men themſelves; and that of the Fingers ten Times as much, and that of the Hairs of their Heads thouſands of Times: So that we have here an infinite Number twice, ten Times, and thouſands of Times as great, as another, which is a Contradiction again. Thus we ſee it is impoſſible in itſelf, that any ſucceſſive Duration ſhould be actually and poſitively infinite, or have infinite Succeſſions already gone and paſt. Bentley's Sermons at Boyle's Lecture. Adam the firſt of Mankind.

THAT this primitive Couple were the ſame with what the Hiſtory of the Creation mentions, muſt depend upon the Truth and Veracity of Moſes, whoſe Character we have conſidered, and the Date and Authority of whoſe Writings we have examined into [d] before: Only there is an Objection or two, which ſome of a captious Spirit have drawn from the Hiſtory itſelf, which muſt be obviated, before we can proceed to diſcuſs the Manner of their Formation.

The Objection of the Preadamites.

"THAT Adam and Eve were the primigenial Parents of the World, ſay they, is "no Way evident from the Hiſtory of Moſes, who means no more, than that they "were the Progenitors of the Race of the Jews: [e] For he not only relates two "Creations, one [f] of Mankind in general, and [g] another of the ſacred Race; but "gives us ſtrong Intimations likewiſe, that there were ſeveral more Men in the "World, when Adam and Eve were created. Elſe, how could he ſay, that Cain "was a [h] Tiller of Ground, which muſt pre-ſuppoſe all the Artificers, that have "Relation to Tillage; that he was afraid every [i] one that found him, would ſlay "him, which implies a great Number in the World; and above all, that he went "[k] into the Land of Nod, married a Wife, and builded a City, which certainly ſig-"nifies that there were both Women for him to marry, and Men to inhabit his "City. From all which it is evident, ſay they, that the Jewiſh Hiſtorian never "intended to write of the primitive Parents of all the World; ſince, within a few "Lines, he lets fall ſo many Expreſſions, that denote the contrary, but only to give "us an Account of the Origin of the Jews, as other Hiſtorians have done of other "Countries."

Anſwered.

NOW, tho' it cannot be denied, that Moſes might principally deſign to give us an Hiſtory of the Jewiſh Nation; yet, in the Beginning of his Account, and till they came to be diſtinguiſhed from other Nations in the Patriarch Abraham, he could not have that under his peculiar Conſideration. He acquaints us, we find, with the Origination of the firſt of other Animals, whence they aroſe, and in what Manner they were perfected; and when he came to treat of the Formation of human Creatures, 'tis but reaſonable to imagine, that he intended likewiſe to be underſtood of the firſt of their Kind. Now, that Adam and Eve were the firſt of their Kind, [l] the Words of our bleſſed Saviour, [m] From the Beginning of the Creation, God made them Male and Female, are a full Confirmation; becauſe he produces the very ſame Precept, that was applied to Adam and Eve at their Creation, [n] therefore ſhall a Man leave his Father and Mother, and cleave unto his Wife: And that there could be none before them, the Reaſon [o] why Adam called his Wife's Name Eve, becauſe ſhe was the Mother of all Living, i. e. the Perſon, that was the Root and Source of all Mankind, that was to be upon the Earth, is a plain Demonſtration: For if ſhe was the Mother of all Living, there certainly was no Race of Men or Women before her.

THO' therefore Moſes may make a double Mention of Adam's Creation, yet this is properly to be imputed to nothing elſe, but the Method and Manner of writing his Hiſtory; [p] who having, in the firſt Chapter, given an Account of the ſix Days Creation in general, in the ſecond, re-aſſumes the Argument, and treats of the Creation of Man in particular. Now to refer a very remarkable Paſſage in order to re-aſſume it, and ſpeak of it more fully in another Place, is a Thing common to all Hiſtorians; but more eſpecially requiſite in this Caſe, where the Dignity of Man, the Lord of the Creation, was concerned, and every one is ſuppoſed curious to know the Riſe and Origin of his Primogenitors. It may be obſerved farther, that the Moſaick Hiſtory, eſpecially in its Introduction, is ſo very ſhort, and comprizes the Tranſactions of ſo many Years in ſo ſmall a Compaſs, that it is not to be wondered at, if many Things are omitted, and that the Reader is obliged to ſupply, with his Imagination, the Defect of the Account in ſome Particulars. Though therefore we ſhould allow, [q] that by the Word Nod, we are to underſtand a Country, (whereas it may as well ſignify a Fugitive, and ſo the Senſe will be, that Cain lived a Fugitive and a Vagabond in the Land); and tho' we ſhould grant, that there was a conſiderable Number of Men and Women in the World at that Time; [r] yet we may ſtill ſuppoſe, that they were the Deſcendants of Adam and Eve, who might have a great many Children and Grand-Children, that are not expreſsly mentioned by Moſes; ſuch as might be Smiths and Carpenters to to ſupply others with the Inſtruments of Agriculture; though, in the Infancy of the World, 'tis very probable, that the Art of Tillage was not yet come to ſuch Perfection, but that Cain might make uſe of wooden Ploughs and Spades, and, inſtead of Knives and Hatchets, form his Tools with ſharp Flints or Shells, which were certainly the firſt Inſtruments of Cutting.

IT was, in all Probability, in the hundred and twenty-ninth Year of Adam's Age, that Abel was ſlain; for the Scripture ſays expreſly, that Seth, [s] who was given in the Lieu of Abel, was born [t] in the hundred and thirtieth Year; very likely the Year after the Murther was committed, to be a Comfort to his diſconſolate Parents; ſo that Cain muſt be one hundred and twenty-nine Years old, at leaſt, when he took his Flight; at which Time, there might be a competent Stock of Mankind upon the Face of the Earth, to the Number, it may be, of an hundred thouſand Souls, conſidering the primitive Fecundity. For if the Children of Iſrael, from ſeventy Souls, in the Space of two hundred and ten Years, became ſix hundred thouſand fighting Men, (though great Numbers of them died during the Increaſe) we may well enough ſuppoſe, that the Children of Adam might amount to a hundred thouſand, in a hundred and thirty Years, which are almoſt five Generations. Cain therefore might very well find a Wife in another Land, build a City, and grow out of the Knowledge of many, when there was ſuch a Number of People in the World, not living together all in one Place, but cantoned into different Countries.

"BUT if Adam and Eve were the firſt Progenitors of all Mankind, (to ſuppoſe "them created in Beauty and Perfection) we muſt ſuppoſe that they were white at "firſt; and if ſo, whence come all the Blacks, that are now in the World? They "muſt certainly be another Generation of Men; and whether antecedent or ſubſe-"quent to Adam, ſeem to have no Relation to him, but to be rather a diſtinct Species "of themſelves, and made by God at another Time." The Objection of the Blacks. The Mahometans, to obviate this Difficulty, have a very ridiculous Notion, viz. that God made the firſt Man, like a Magpie, part black, and part white, which occaſioned his Poſterity to be of different Complexions: But there ſeems to be a much better and more rational Way of accounting for it. [u] We all ſee, how the Hair and Colour of Mens Bodies differ, according to the Clime they inhabit, and their greater or leſſer Diſtance from the Sun. The Danes and Swedes, the Engliſh and Scotch, being far to the North, have generally a brown, fair, or yellowiſh Hair, and ſomewhat lank; the Spaniſh, Italians, Greeks, and Arabians, have black Hair, ſomewhat curled, and ſo proportionably all other Nations, that live to the South. The Europeans have generally a clear, white Skin; the Aſiaticks a more tawny one, as being nearer the Sun; but the Æthiopians, living in the Midſt of a mighty Continent, where they are refreſhed by no cool Breezes from the Sea, where the Air is continually heated by ſweeping along over fiery Sands, and the Sun, not only vertically over them, but reflected with Violence from their vaſt Mountains, muſt neceſſarily be more black, than any other Nation. Now, if the Warmth of Aſia is of Efficacy enough to make the Skin of the People tawny, and to curl their Hair; we may eaſily ſuppoſe, that the intenſe Heat of Æthiopia is ſufficient to make its Inhabitants much blacker, and to criſp their Hair into a Sort of a Friz. We may therefore very well conclude, that the firſt Colony, which ſettled in any Country of extraordinary Heat, received a great Change in their Complexion, proportionably to the Heat of the Climate, and became very tawny, much beyond the Arabians, and inclinable to Blackneſs, as the Sun was more intenſe upon them. Hence, in a Generation or two, that high Degree of Tawnineſs became the Nature, and from thence, the Pride of the Inhabitants. The Men began to value themſelves chiefly upon this Complexion, and the Women to affect them the better for it; ſo that their Love to their Huſbands, and daily Converſation with them, had a conſiderable Influence upon the Fruit of their Wombs, and made each Child grow blacker and blacker, according to the Fancy and Imagination of the Mother. Upon this Suppoſition, the Children thus produced muſt, every Birth, approach nearer to an abſolute Blackneſs; and as their tender Bodies came to be expoſed naked (as the Manner of ſuch Countries is) to the violent Heat of the Sun, their Skins muſt needs be ſcorched extraordinarily, and and by that Means contract a Blackneſs, far ſuperior to that of their Parents. By ſuch Degrees as theſe, we may reaſonably ſuppoſe that People of the faireſt Complexion, when removed into a very hot Climate, may, in a few Generations, become perfect Negroes; beſides, what ſome have imagined, that this Blackneſs was at firſt preternatural, [x] and a ſignal Judgment inflicted upon Ham, the Son of Noah, for diſcovering his Father's Nakedneſs, and that all People of that Complexion, are the unhappy Progeny of that undutiful Son.

Their Complexion accounted for.

THESE two Objections, that ſtood a little in our Way, and ſeemed to call in Queſtion Adam's Primacy, being thus got over, we may now take a clearer View of the new-created World, and of that Part of the Six-days Work, that, as yet, was uncompleated.

SECT. I.

Of the Manner of MAN's Creation.

Man, why not created till the ſixth Day.

IT were no hard Matter to ſhew, [y] that none of the preceding Days were ſo proper for the Creation and Introduction of Man, as this, wherein every Thing, that could be ſubſervient to him, and advance his Felicity, was perfected. When the Light had been penetrating into, and clarifying the dark and thick Atmoſphere; when the Air was freed from its noiſome Vapours, and become pure, and clear, and fit for his Reſpiration; when the Waters were ſo diſpoſed, as to miniſter to his Neceſſities by Miſts and Dews from Heaven, and by Springs and Rivers from the Earth; when the Surface of the Earth was become dry and ſolid for his Support, and cover'd over with Trees, Shrubs, Plants, Herbs, Graſs, and Flowers, for his Suſtenance and Delight; when the glorious Firmament of Heaven, and the beautiful Syſtem of the Sun, Moon, and Stars, was laid open to his Contemplation, and, by their powerful Influences, appointed to diſtinguiſh the Seaſons, and make the World a fruitful and delicious Habitation for him; when, laſtly, all Sorts of Animals, in the Seas, in the Air, and on the Earth, were ſo ordered and diſpoſed, as to contribute, in their ſeveral Capacities, to his Benefit and Delight; when all theſe Things, I ſay, were, by the Care and Providence of God, prepared for the Entertainment of this principal Gueſt; 'twas then, and not till then, that Man was created, and introduced into the World; then, and not before, that he was conſtituted the Lord and Governor of the Whole; in which Procedure, the Wiſdom and Goodneſs of the Creator, and the Honour and Dignity of his principal Creature here below, were equally conſulted.

The ſolemn Manner of doing it.

THIS, upon many Accounts, being the propereſt Time for Man's Introduction, we may obſerve, that the Sacred Hiſtory has made a ſignal Diſtinction between him and other Creatures; [z] that the Creation of his Body, as well as his Soul, is mentioned in a Manner, highly proper to awaken our Obſervation, and repreſented as a more eſpecial Effect of Counſel and Deliberation; Let us make Man. [a] Not that the Divine Wiſdom ſtood in Need of the Counſel or Concurrence of others, or himſelf made the leaſt Pauſe or Heſitation in what he was going to perform, (for, known unto him are all his Works from the Beginning, and, by one ſimple and indiviſible Act, he both foreſees what is to be done, and judges and determines it) but the Expreſſion is added as a Mark of Attention, and to ſignify the Pre-eminence of the Creation of Mankind, above the reſt of the viſible World. And [b] conſidering, indeed, that Man was to be a Creature intirely different from all the reſt, as being compounded of a ſpiritual and immortal Soul, and of a material and corruptible Body, and in both theſe to be made in the Likeneſs of God, and conſtituted his Deputy and Vicegerent among the Creatures here below; conſidering this, I ſay, it was but fit and reaſonable, that there ſhould be as great a Diſtinction in his Origination, as was to be in his Nature and Faculties, his Office and Dignity, his Capacities and Happineſs. [c] The Doctors of the Jewiſh Church are of Opinion, that this Deliberation was real, and held with ſuch angelical Beings, as God might employ in the Work of Man's Creation; but that this Opinion is deſtitute of Reaſon, and the Angels themſelves incompetent for the Work, is what we ſhall obſerve hereafter. Moſt of the modern Expoſitors account it only a majeſtick Form of Speech, [x] Gen. ix. 25. [y] Whiſton's Theory in the Solutions. [z] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Part I. [a] Hale's Origination of Mankind. [b] Whiſton's Theory in the Solutions. [c] Hale's Origination of Mankind.

Speech, as nothing is more common than for Perſons inveſted with Sovereign Authority, to ſpeak in the plural Number, eſpecially when they are about to deliver any important Order or Command. It has been obſerved however, that as there were no Men, and conſequently no great Men, when this was ſpoken; ſo there was no ſuch Title among that Rank of Perſons, for many Ages after Moſes: Their common Cuſtom was, in all their publick Inſtruments and Letters, (the better to inhance the Notion of Sovereignty) to ſpeak in the firſt Perſon, as 'twas in our Nation [d] not long ago, and is in the Kingdom of Spain to this very Day. And therefore we may, [e] upon the Authority of ſeveral great Fathers of the Church, conclude, that this Language of Moſes repreſents God ſpeaking as he is, i. e. in a Plurality of Perſons, and holding a Conſultation (as it were) of the holy Trinity, about making and forming of Man.

HOWEVER this be, 'tis certain, that the Force and Energy of the Expreſſion denotes thus much, —— that the Production of Mankind was ſo immediately the Work of Almighty God, that the Power of no ſubordinate Intelligence could be capable of it. [f] Angels indeed are wiſe and powerful Beings, and their Knowledge of Nature, by the Application of Actives and Paſſives, may, in ſome Meaſure, enable them to form an Inſect, or perhaps a compleat Animal: But the curious Structure of the Body of Man, the Accommodation of it to Faculties, and the furniſhing it with Faculties, that are accommodated to it, (even as to its animal Life) imports in it a Wiſdom and Efficacy, far above the Power of any created Nature to effect. For to make the whole Man compleat, there muſt be an Harmony and due Proportion obſerved between the Parts of the Body, and the Faculties of the Soul; and conſequently, as much Skill and Dexterity required, in the Formation of one, as the other. But now, if an Angel, or any other Being leſs than infinite, is confeſſedly unequal to the making of a Soul, it can never be ſufficient to make a fit organical Body, exactly conform and agreeable to it.

His Body made by God alone.

UPON the Whole therefore, we may conclude, that not only the Soul, but the very animal Nature of Man, nay the very Formation and Deſtination of his bodily Frame, was not only the Work of an intelligent Being, but of the infinite and omnipotent intelligent Being, who, in the ſame Moment, both formed his Body, and organized it with the Inſtruments of Life and Senſation. And this may poſſibly ſuggeſt a Reaſon, why, in the Formation of Man's Body, the Wiſdom of God made choice of the Duſt of the Ground, or, as it is elſewhere, of red Clay, that, from the Incongruity of the Matter, Men might judge of the Difficulty, and learn to attribute the Glory of the Performance to him alone.

[g] SHOULD any of us ſee a Lump of Clay riſe immediately from the Ground into the compleat Figure of a Man, full of Beauty and Symmetry, and endowed with all thoſe Parts and Faculties, that we perceive in ourſelves, and poſſibly far more exquiſite and beautiful: Should we, preſently after this Formation, obſerve him uſing all the Operations of Life, Senſe, and Reaſon; move as gracefully, talk as eloquently, reaſon as juſtly, and do every Thing as dextrouſly, as the beſt accompliſhed Man breathing: The Caſe is the very ſame, and, in the like Moment of Time, was the Protoplaſt made in his full Perfection; but, to give the Thing a ſtronger Impreſſion upon our Minds, we will ſuppoſe that this Figure riſes by Degrees, and is finiſhed Part by Part, in ſome Succeſſion of Time; and that, when the whole is compleated, the Veins and Arteries bored, the Sinews and Tendons laid, the Joints fitted, and the Liquor, tranſmutable into Blood and Juices, lodged in the Ventricles of the Heart, God infuſes into it a vital Principle; whereupon the Liquor in the Heart begins to deſcend, and thrill along the Veins, and an heavenly Bluſh ariſes in the Countenance, ſuch as ſcorns the Help of Art, and is above the Power of Imitation: The Image moves; it walks; it ſpeaks; moves with ſuch a Majeſty, as proclaims it the Lord of the Creation, and talks with ſuch an Accent, and Sublimity of Sentiment, as makes every Ear attentive, and even its great Creator enter into Converſe with it: When we ſee all this tranſacted before our Formed out of the Duſt, to ſhew God's Power.

[d] Before King John's Time, the Kings of England uſed the ſingular Number, as may be ſeen in the Cloſe of Writs, Teſte meipſo apud Weſtm. [e] Tertullian ad Prax. Cap. 12. Athanaſius, Dialog. 3. de Trinit. Cyril of Jeruſalem, Catech. 10 Chryſoſtom, Hom. 8. in Gen. Auguſtine, de Civ. Dei, L. 16. C. 6. with many more, who take this Paſſage in this Senſe. Edwards's Body of Divinity. The Jews however, upon this Occaſion, relate a Story, that has ſome Semblance of Truth in it: They tell us, that as Moſes was writing his Book by God's Appointment, and theſe Words came to be dictated, he refuſed to ſet them down, crying out, O Lord, would'ſt thou then plunge Men into Error, and make them doubt of the Doctrine of the Unity? Whereupon it was anſwered by God, I command thee to write, and if any will err, let them err. Saurin's Diſſertation. [f] Hale's Origination of Mankind.
[g] Ibid.

Eyes, I ſay, we cannot but ſtand aſtoniſhed at the Thing, and in humble Admiration cry out, Lord, [h] what is Man, that thou art thus mindful of him, and the Son of Man, that thou thus viſiteſt him? From a Bit of Clay, thou haſt made him little lower than the Angels, to crown him with Glory and Worſhip; thou makeſt him to have Dominion over the Works of thy Hands, and thou haſt put all Things in Subjection under his Feet; for the lower the Materials are, the greater is the Skill of the Divine Artiſt, to raiſe ſuch a glorious Fabrick out of them: And therefore the Pſalmiſt concludes his Contemplation with theſe Words, O Lord, our Governor, how excellent is thy Name in all the World!

2. And to teach us Humility.

BUT God might have a farther Meaning, than his own Glory, in making the Duſt of the Ground the conſtituent Matter of Man's Body, and that poſſibly to teach us Humility, as oft as we look upon ourſelves, and conſider the Meanneſs of our Original. For Pride having lately undone the Angels above, and plunged them into utter Perdition, it became the infinite Wiſdom of God, in this new Production of Creatures, to give them a ſtanding Remembrance, and in their very Conſtitution (as it were) to intermix an Antidote againſt it, that, whenever their Minds came to be elated above Meaſure, they might recover their Temper again, by [i] looking to the Hole of the Pit, whence they were digged. 'Tis a ſtrong Sarcaſm, that which we meet with in the wiſe Son of Sirach, where he tells us, [k] that Pride was not made for Man: [l] For fancy Pride where we will, 'tis no where ſo improper, no where ſo unbecoming, as in Man, whoſe Make is of the common Clay, as putrid and contemptible, as that of other Creatures, and who every Day [m] may ſay to Corruption, Thou art my Father, and to the Worm, Thou art my Mother, and my Siſter. And therefore God might the rather admit of this debaſing Circumſtance in our Compoſition, on Purpoſe to remind us of our Pedigree, when our Proſperity has made us forget him; and in our moſt ſucceſsful Gale of Fortune, in our higheſt Elevation of Honour, amidſt all the gaudy Scenes of Pleaſure, amidſt all the gay Ideas of our Wit, and Beauty, and other Accompliſhments, to whiſper this ſad and ſober Admonition in our Ears, [n] Duſt thou art, and unto Duſt ſhalt thou return.

The Infuſion of his Soul.

FROM the Formation of Adam's Body, the ſacred Hiſtory comes at laſt to give us ſome Account of the Production of his Soul. The ſpiritual and immaterial Nature, the immortal Condition, active Powers, and free and rational Operations, which, in Reſemblance of the Divine Being, the Souls of Men were to participate, could not but require ſome peculiar and extraordinary Conduct in their firſt Production, their Union with Matter afterward, and Introduction into this corporeal World; and accordingly we may obſerve, that whereas in the Formation of all other Animals, 'tis only ſaid, [o] Let the Earth bring forth the living Creature after his Kind, in the Caſe of Man's Creation, the Account is, that [p] the Lord God formed Man out of the Duſt of the Ground, and breathed into his Noſtrils the Breath of Life, i. e. did ſomething analogous to breathing, (for God has no Body to breathe with) whereby he infuſed a rational and immortal Spirit (for we muſt not ſuppoſe that God gave any Part of his own Eſſence) into the Man's [q] Head, as the principal Seat thereof, and Man became a living Soul.

Which is diſtinct from the Body.

BUT here ſome great and controverted Queſtions meet us, concerning the Nature and Origin of human Souls: As whether they are real and ſubſtantial Forms, or only the finer Parts of Air or animal Spirits; whether they were all created at once, or only ſucceſſively, as there is Occaſion; and whether it is the Finger of God, that immediately makes them, or they come by Way of Traduction from our Parents. The Nature, and Powers, and Immortality of the Soul, I ſhall have Occaſion hereafter to conſider more fully; and ſhall therefore, at preſent, only obſerve, that the Divine Hiſtorian places a manifeſt Diſtinction between Adam's Soul and Body, making the one proceed from the Duſt of the Earth, and the other from the Breath of God; that, in the Formation of Adam, * there is a quite different Procedure uſed, from what we perceive in that of other Animals; for which there can be no Reaſon aſſign'd, if there were not ſomething ſuperior and different in the eſſential Parts of his Conſtitution; that he is ſaid to be made after the Image of God, though there is nothing in Man, except his reaſonable Soul, that, with any tolerable Pretence, can deſerve that Character; that he became a living Soul, which being effected by the Divine Inſpiration, muſt denote ſomething reſemblant of of that Spirituality, whereby the great Creator of all Things is ſo frequently called the living God, and the Angels in Heaven who are Spirits, are likewiſe called [r] his Sons.

No Account, one would think, could be deviſed more purpoſely to eſtabliſh the Diſtinction of the Soul and Body, and to ſet before our Eyes (as it were) the groſs Compoſition of the One, and the Divine and Spiritual Nature of the Other; and yet, even from this Repreſentation, [s] ſome have adventured to affirm, "that God's breath- An Objection.
"ing into Man the Breath of Life, means no more, than that he made Matter, or "Man, with his exterior Shape, become a living Creature, ſo that his Soul de-"pended upon the Organization of his Body, without ever conveying into him any "ſpiritual Subſtance, which they deny the Soul to be."

1. THE Vulgar indeed retain very groſs Notions of Subſtance, and, upon the firſt naming it, have immediate Recourſe in their Minds to ſomething that is ſeen or felt. They call a Piece of Cloth or Plate ſubſtantial, that has ſuch a ſufficient Degree of Thickneſs, or ſuch a Quantity of Matter in it, as will make it hold wearing; and therefore they conclude, that there can be no other proper Notion of Subſtance but it. [t] Now, if Divines and Philoſophers, when they call a Soul a ſpiritual Subſtance, mean a Subſtance in this Senſe, they might be juſtly chargeable with an abſurd and contradictious Notion: But when they declare their Meaning to be, that the Soul is a Subſtance, and of a Nature perfectly different from this, excluſive of all Length, and Breadth, and Thickneſs; a Being, that has ſeveral Modes and Properties agreeable to its Nature, attending it, and as perfectly diſtinct, as thoſe of corporeal Beings are, this carries in it no Impoſſibility or Contradiction; and the Word Subſtance, when applied to this Conception, is altogether as proper and intelligible, as when it ſtands for the groſs Notion, that the Vulgar have of it. Anſwered, 1. By proving the Soul to be immaterial.

THAT the Soul of Man, in this higher Senſe, is a ſpiritual Subſtance, and independent on the Matter it carries about with it, is evident to any one, that conſiders the Power and Freedom of its Operations, which no Accident can be ſuppoſed to have; and which Matter, with all its Refinements and Maturations, can never be able to perform. Matter, we know, can only act and move, as it is directed, having no Will of its own, nor any Sufficiency to determine the Cauſe of its Motions: And yet, [u] in this Soul of ours, we feel and experience a natural Liberty of acting, even tho' the Force of outward Objects come never ſo ſtrongly upon it. Thus, in the Midſt of the Alarms and Shoutings of an Army, of the Noiſe of Drums and Trumpets ringing in our Ears, the Soul can recollect itſelf, and reduce its ſcattered Thoughts into profound Contemplation of a ſweet and bleſſed Peace; and when it is preſſed from without, with never ſo much Importunity, to this or that particular Choice, it has it in his Power to reject the Motion, and chuſe the quite contrary. Since therefore the Soul has an innate Liberty of acting, and, by the different Preſſures of material Things about it, is undeterminable in its Motions, it muſt hence neceſſarily follow, that it is a Being of diſtinct Properties from Matter. And indeed, conſidering how much its Operations do exceed the utmoſt Power of Matter, 'tis pretty ſtrange, that any one ſhould ſo far forſake his Reaſon, as to rank it among material Beings. For how is it poſſible, that a Lump of Clay or Dirt, with all the Formation and Refinement imaginable, ſhould ever be able to make a thinking Being, or grow up into the Soul of a Philoſopher? How is it poſſible, that from the Motion of the Blood and Spirits, which are no more than globular Particles of Matter, there ſhould ariſe an Underſtanding, that, in the Twinkling of an Eye, can expatiate through the Univerſe; prick out the Paths of the heavenly Bodies, and meaſure the Circles of their Motion; ſpan the whole Surface of the Earth, and dive into its capacious Womb, there to diſcover the numerous Offſprings, with which it is continually teeming; that can ſail into the World of Spirits by the never-varying Compaſs of its Reaſon, and diſcover thoſe invifible Regions of Happineſs or Woe, which are altogether out of our Sight, whilſt we ſtand upon this hither Shore; and, in a Word, that can aſcend from Cauſe to Cauſe, to God, who is the Cauſe of all, and fixing its Eyes upon the lovely Object, loſe itſelf in the Contemplation of his Divine Perfections.

THESE

And that Matter cannot be made to think.

THESE are Actions of ſo abſtracted a Nature, that it ſhocks common Senſe to imagine, how Matter ſhould be capable of effecting them. All that we can poſſibly conceive of Matter is, that it is Something extended, and taking up Room, ſolid, and impenetrable, and capable of receiving different Figures; but how can this contribute any Thing towards making a Soul, or a thinking Being? One Part of Matter indeed, joined to another, will increaſe Bulk, and the Parts, differently ſituated, will produce a new Figure, becauſe Bulk and Figure are originally included in Matter; but for Matter to produce a thinking Mind, is no more poſſible, than 'tis for a Mouſe to write a Book of Mathematicks, or the Author of this Book to make an Angel.

NAY, there is ſuch an Incompatibleneſs between Matter and Thought, [x] that tho' we will not venture to ſay, that it is out of the Power of God to make Matter think, yet this we may affirm with Safety, that 'tis contrary to all our Conceptions, and to the common Ideas we have of the Nature of Things, that he ſhould do ſo. For ſuppoſe any Part of the human Body, the Brain of Adam for Inſtance, faſhioned out of the Earth, and to be made a thinking Subſtance by Almighty God; yet, upon God's giving the Command, the Materiality of it would be deſtroyed, and it immediately become a Spirit, in which Caſe, there would be a double Share of God's Omnipotence required, firſt to annihilate the Matter, and then to produce a Mind or Spirit in its Room; ſo that after all, it would not be the organized Matter, but the new-created Mind, that would be the thinking Subſtance. The Truth is, there is no imaginable Way (without adding a Soul to it) of making Matter think, but only God's immediate acting upon it, ſo as to become himſelf the real Cauſe of Thought, and other Operations in it: But then, this Suppoſition deſtroys the Notion of Good and Evil, makes Man unaccountable for all his Immorality, and fixes the Imputation of every Thing upon God. 'Tis God, that thinks in us wickedly; 'tis God, that commits the lewd Action; 'tis God, that falls into Error; 'tis God, that makes the wrong Choice; 'tis God, in ſhort, that does all thoſe enormous Crimes, for which Men ſuffer the Law, and die ignominiouſly: Which are Inferences to be deteſted, and full of horrid Blaſphemy. So impoſſible it is, in the Nature of Things, to make Matter and Motion the Parent of the Soul!

2. Whether our Souls were pre-exiſtent, or no.

THE next Queſtion is, [y] whether the Souls of Mankind (that of Adam included) were all created at once, in order to be united to certain Bodies, which ſhould be prepared afterwards for their Reception; or whether they are ſucceſſively created, as the Bodies, they are to inform, are made fit to receive them? Thoſe, that maintain Pre-exiſtence of Souls, pretend, in the firſt Place, "that they have the Current of "all Antiquity, both Heathens and Chriſtians, on their Side, and then argue; that "it is incongruous for God to be ſaid to have finiſhed his Work on the ſixth, and to "have reſted from his Labour on the ſeventh Day, when (in Reſpect of ſome of the "nobleſt Productions, and that in the moſt numerous Inſtances of it) it was but juſt "begun; that it was more ſuitable to his Wiſdom, to have exerted his Power all in "one Act, which would have anſwered the Purpoſe as well, than to be perpetually "creating, and infuſing new Souls, as Infants are begot all the World over; and "that our Saviour's not anſwering the Queſtion of the Jews (whether the Man, "that was born blind, had himſelf ſinned, or his Parents) when they are preſumed "to ſpeak the current Opinion at that Time, is a tacit Argument of his Approba-"tion of it: And therefore they infer, that the Souls of all Mankind were created "at once, [z] poſſibly in the Morning of the World, when Adam's was made, and "in ſuch infinite Myriads, as ſhould be ſufficient to inform all the Bodies, that "might be born into the World, as long as the World ſhould endure."

THOSE, that hold the contrary Opinion, lay it down for a Poſtulatum, that Souls can only be ſuppoſed to be united to Bodies (eſpecially upon the preſent Stage of Life) by Way of Puniſhment. "[a] Now Puniſhment, they ſay, implies (in the very "Reaſon and Deſign of it) a Conſciouſneſs of the Crime, for which we are puniſhed: "whereas there does not, at any Time, appear the leaſt Apprehenſion in the Soul "of any Thing done by it in a former State; and yet, without ſome Senſibility of "the Crime, for which we ſuffer, the Juſtice of God, in our Sufferings, will appear "purely vindictive, and deſtitute of thoſe ſalutary Reaſons, for which they are ſent "upon us in this Life.".

THEY

[x] Nicholls's Conference, Vol. II. [y] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. [z] Moor's Divine Dialogues.
[a] Fiddes's, ibid.

THEY argue farther, [b] that, properly ſpeaking, there is no Forgetfulneſs in a Soul, its Forgetfulneſs is only accidental, and occaſioned by the Impediment of Fleſh; and therefore, tho' the Generality of Men live contented under this Impediment, yet ſome there are, who endeavour to refine and ſpiritualize themſelves; and yet none of theſe can recover the leaſt Notice of what they were in their prior State. "We find not ourſelves, ſay they, ſo very forgetful in this Life: Some great "and momentous Paſſages will be ever ſtarting up before us, and making us "remember them, whether we will or no; and therefore it is very ſtrange, that no "Tranſaction, in our antecedent Life, no Senſe of the Place, and Manner wherein "we lived, nor any Remembrance of the Cauſe, for which we were ſent into theſe "Bodies, ſhould ever once come acroſs our Thoughts. A State of Pre-exiſtence "therefore with them is an idle Dream: Man is by Nature a compound Creature; "and as the Body cannot ſubſiſt without the Soul, ſo neither can the Soul be perfect "without the Body, which is one eſſential Part of the whole; and therefore they "conclude, that if the Soul pre-exiſted, Man muſt have been originally created in "a State of Imperfection, and after a Manner derogatory to the Action of an All-"wiſe God."

THIS is the Subſtance of their Arguments: [c] But our Saviour, having left the Queſtion undetermined, when he had a fair Opportunity of reſolving it, has left us likewiſe to judge of it, as a Point of Speculation, about which we may determine ourſelves ſafely, on either Side, that ſeems to carry the ſtronger Reaſons of human Probability.

3. Whether ex traduce or no.

THE other Queſtion is, whether our Souls come by immediate Infuſion from God, or by Way of Traduction from our Parents. Thoſe, that maintain the latter Opinion, are apt to argue, [d] that, as God inveſted all other Creatures with a Power of propagating their Species in its full Perfection; ſo it is preſumable, that he endowed Mankind with the ſame, otherwiſe that Bleſſing, given to our firſt Parents preſently after their Creation, [e] to be fruitful, and multiply, and repleniſh the Earth, was not given in the ſame full and extenſive Signification to them, as it was to Brutes, which is hard to imagine. Children, we ſee, ſay they, reſemble their Parents in the Diſpoſition of their Minds, as much as the outward Lineaments of their Bodies. A Proclivity to Wickedneſs, which ſome Children diſcover, cannot be ſuppoſed to proceed from God; and muſt therefore be congenial with the Soul, which was tainted, in its Generation, by the Depravity of its Parents: So that, when Adam is ſaid to [f] beget his Son Seth in his own Likeneſs, and after his Image, in the ſame Manner, that he himſelf is ſaid to be the Image of God, (which chiefly conſiſted in his Soul) it muſt be ſuppoſed, without ſtraining the Words, that he begot his Soul and Body both: For we cannot conceive it a Work ſo becoming the Majeſty and Purity of God, to be inceſſantly making Souls, and oftentimes obliged to infuſe them into Bodies, proceeding from ſuch foul and inceſtuous Mixtures, as his Nature abhors, and his Laws have ſeverely prohibited.

THOSE, that ſuſtain the other Side of the Queſtion, ſuppoſe, that all Mankind receive their Souls, in the ſame Manner that Adam did from God; becauſe they cannot conceive, how we can maintain their Incorruption and Immortality, upon any other Hypotheſis. If the Soul be propagated by Generation, ſay they, then does it proceed either from both the Parents jointly, or from the Father only; if from both the Parents jointly, then it is a Compound of both their Souls, and conſequently, liable to Corruption; if from the Father only, then was Chriſt, who had no Father upon Earth, deſtitute of an human Soul, and conſequently no true and perfect Man. And therefore to obviate theſe, and many more Abſurdities of the like Nature, they affirm, that God has declared himſelf to be the [g] Father of Spirits in a peculiar Manner; that all good Men, in all Ages, have lived with this Perſuaſion, [h] that the Spirit of God made them, and the Breath of the Almighty gave them Life; and died in this Belief, that [i] when the Duſt returns to the Earth, as it was, the Spirit ſhall return unto God, who gave it. Tho' therefore God has committed the Formation of our Bodies, in a great Meaſure, to the Agency of ſecond Cauſes, yet our Souls, ſay they, are Beings of ſuch Value in his Eſteem, that to himſelf he has reſerved the Production of them, and that we intrench very much upon his Prerogative, when we pretend to aſſume it ourſelves.

[f] Ibid. v. 3. [g] Numb. xvi. 22. [h] Job xxxiv. 14. [i] Eccleſ. xii. 7.

In ſhort, [k] the Notion of propagating human Souls by Way of Traduction, is ſo inconſiſtent with the Simplicity of immaterial Beings, or the Senſibility of any ſuch Power in us; is ſo injurious to God's watchful Providence, and ſo repugnant to the plain Senſe of his Word, beſides the bad Uſe that Men of profane Principles may make of it; that great Care ſhould be taken, how we give Countenance to ſuch Suggeſtions, as tend to invalidate the Power of God in any Inſtance, and to weaken the Sinews of Religion, by depreciating the Worth of our immortal Souls. ——But to return to our Hiſtorian.

The Formation of Eve.

It is not to be doubted, but that Eve, the Mother of all Living, was created by Almighty God, on the ſame Day with her Huſband; for ſo it is ſaid, that on the ſixth Day, [l] Male and Female created he them: The Hiſtorian therefore only reaſſumes the Argument, in the ſecond Chapter, to give us a more full and particular Account of the Origin of that illuſtrious Creature, which was briefly and compendiouſly delivered in the firſt. To this Purpoſe he informs us, how, after the Lord God had finiſhed his Work upon Adam, and made him complete in every Part, he [m] cauſed a deep Sleep to fall upon him. [n] The ancient, both Jewiſh and Chriſtian Writers do generally agree, that this Sleep, which Adam was caſt into, before God formed Eve out of him, was not only intended, as an Expedient for the Performance of the wonderful Operation in him without Senſe of Pain, but as an Extacy likewiſe, (for [o] ſo the Word is tranſlated by the Septuagint) wherein was repreſented to his Mind both what was done to him, and the Myſtery thereof; and whereby he was prepared for the Reception of that [p] Divine Oracle, which preſently, upon his awakening, he uttered; like that deep Sleep, which God ſent upon [q] Abraham, when, by the Spirit of Prophecy, he meant to acquaint him with thoſe Events, which were to happen to his Poſterity ſome Ages after.

However this be, the Hiſtorian continues to acquaint us, that, during this Sleep, [r] God took a Rib out of the Man's Side, and of that Rib made a Woman. But here a Queſtion or two will ariſe, why God ſhould make Choice of a Rib above all other Parts; how Adam could ſpare a Rib, and yet remain perfect; and what poſſible Proportion there could be between ſo ſmall a Portion of Matter and the Woman's Body?

Why ſhe was made of a Rib.

Now, in Anſwer to theſe Queſtions, [s] we need not, in the firſt Place, grant, that the original Word ſtrictly ſignifies a Rib; the Septuagint all along tranſlate it by the Greek Word πλεύρα, which we call a Side, and according to this Signification, all the Difficulty of the Thing vaniſhes, and the plain and eaſy Signification of the Paſſage will be this,——That God took ſome Part of Adam's Body, about his Side, cloſed up the Orifice again, and out of this Subſtance formed Eve: And where, I pray, does all the Oddneſs of this Account lie? For if God deſigned any myſtical Meaning in the Tranſaction, this certainly was the propereſt Part for him to make Choice of. To have formed the Woman out of the Head, would have entitled her to a Superiority, that God did not intend for her: To have made her of an inferior and more diſhonourable Part, would not have agreed with that Equality, which ſhe was appointed to: And therefore he took her out of the Man's Side, to denote the Obligations of the ſtricteſt Union and Society; [t] to breed the greater Love between him and her, as Parts of the ſame Whole; and to recommend Marriage to all Mankind, as founded in Nature, and as the Re-union of Man and Woman. There was no Occaſion then for Adam's loſing a Rib, according to this Acceptation: [u] But admitted it was a Rib that he loſt, why might not God ſupply him with another, or make [x] the Fleſh, which he cloſed up in the Stead thereof, ſoon grow into the Solidity of one? There's no diſputing what God can do; and therefore he that conſiders an Acorn, or a Muſtard-Seed, the one becoming a ſpacious Tree, and the other a large Plant, will ſoon find Reaſon to be convinced, that the Man's Rib, in the Hand of Omnipotence, was Matter enough for the Compoſition of the Woman's Body.

No Mention indeed is made (which ſome may make another Objection) of the Inſpiration of the Woman's Soul; [y] for the Hiſtorian only means here to repreſent what was peculiar in the Woman's Compoſition, viz. her Aſſumption from the Man's Side: What relates to the Creation of her Soul therefore muſt be preſumed to go before, and is indeed ſignified in the Preface God makes upon this intended Formation:

[k] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. [l] Gen. i. 27. [m] Ibid. ii. 21. [n] Bull's Sermons, Vol. IV. [o] Patrick's Commentary. [p] See Gen. ii. 23, 24. [q] Gen. xv. 12, &c. Formation: [z] It is not good that Man ſhould be alone: I will make him an Help MEET for him, i. e. of the like eſſential Qualities with himſelf; (ſo the original Word means, and ſo the vulgar Latin has tranſlated it) for we cannot conceive, of what great Comfort this Woman would have been to Adam, had ſhe not been endowed with a rational Part, capable of converſing with him; had ſhe not had, I ſay, the ſame Underſtanding, and Will, and Affections, [a] though perhaps in a lower Degree, and with ſome Accommodation to the Weakneſs of her Sex, to recommend her Beauty, and to endear that Softneſs, wherein ſhe had certainly the Pre-eminence.

THUS were the firſt Man and Woman made in the full Perfection of their Nature, inveſted with Power and Dominion over all other Creatures, and placed in a Paradiſe, where the Ground was fruitful, and all its Fruits delicious; and where the Air and Seaſons of the Year were ſo ſerene and temperate, that they wanted nothing to defend them from the Injuries of the Weather. Here it was, that God deſigned that Man ſhould live an happy and delightful Life, until his Tranſlation ſhould enſue. Here it was, that God intended to raiſe up to himſelf another Race, to ſupply the Place of thoſe, that had revolted: And, to this Purpoſe, here it was, that God himſelf condeſcended to make the Eſpouſals, (if I may ſo ſay) and to join this Man and this Woman together in the State of Marriage. For when the ſacred Story tells us, that God brought the Woman to him, the Meaning is, not that he barely conducted her to the Place, where Adam was, but that he preſented her, in the Capacity of a matrimonial Father, and gave her to him to be his wedded Wife.

Hail wedded Love, myſterious Law, true Source
Of human Offſpring, ſole Propriety
In Paradiſe, of all Things common elſe!
By Thee adult'rous Luſt was driven from Men
Among the beaſtial Herds to range; by Thee
Founded in Reaſon, loyal, juſt, and pure,
Relations dear, and all the Charities
Of Father, Son, and Brother, firſt were known.
Perpetual Fountain of domeſtick Sweets!
Here Love his golden Shafts employs, here lights
His conſtant Lamp, and waves his purple Wings,
Reigns here, and revels.——

AND ſo I leave this happy Pair, to take a nearer Survey of the Perfections of their Nature.

[z] Gen. ii. 18.

[a] Our incomparable Milton, whom I take to be a good Commentator upon this Part of Scripture, in his ſublime Poem upon our firſt Parents, has given us a true State and Deſcription of Eve's Perfections, both in Body and Mind, where he brings in Adam recounting to the Angel the Superiority of her Charms;

- - - - - - - - - - - - But here
Far otherwiſe, tranſported I behold,
Tranſported touch, her Paſſion firſt I felt
Commotion ſtrange, in all Enjoyments elſe
Superior, and unmov'd, here only weak
Againſt the Charm of Beauty's powerful Glance——
Tho' well I underſtand, in the prime End
Of Nature, her th' Inferior, in the Mind
And inward Faculties, which moſt excel;
In outward alſo her reſembling leſs
His Image, who made both, and leſs expreſſing
The Character of that Dominion giv'n
O'er other Creatures; yet when I approach
Her Lovelineſs, ſo abſolute ſhe ſeems,
And in herſelf compleat, ſo well to know
Her own, that what ſhe wills to do, or ſay,
Seems wiſeſt, virtuouſeſt, diſcreeteſt, beſt.
All higher Knowledge, in her Preſence, falls
Degraded; Wiſdom, in Diſcourſe with her,
Loſes diſcountenanc'd, and like Folly ſhews.
Authority and Reaſon on her wait,
As one intended firſt, but after made

SECT.

SECT. II.

Of the IMAGE of GOD in MAN.

'Tis hard to conceive what the Divine Image was.

WHAT the Image of God, impreſſed upon Man in the State of his Integrity, was, is as difficult a Matter for us, [b] who date our Ignorance from our firſt Being, and were all along bred up with the ſame Infirmities about us, wherewith we were born, to form any adequate Perception of, as it is for a Peaſant, bred up in the Obſcurities of a Cottage, to fancy in his Mind the unſeen Splendors of a Court: And therefore we have the leſs Reaſon to wonder, that we find ſo many learned Men running into ſuch different Opinions concerning it.

Different Opinions about it.

[c] PHILO, among the Jews, tells us, that the Image of God was only the Idea of human Nature in the Divine Underſtanding, by looking on which, he formed Man; juſt as an Architect, about to build an Houſe, firſt delineates the Scheme in his Mind, and then proceeds to erect the Fabrick. But this Opinion, how true ſoever, does not come up to the Point in Hand; for it makes no Diſtinction between Man and other Creatures, (ſince they were likewiſe made according to their ideal Image in the Divine Intellect) though it be manifeſtly the Intent of the Scripture-Account to give him a particular Preference.

[d] ORIGEN, among antient Chriſtians, will have it to be the Son of God, who is called [e] the expreſs Image of the Father; but there is no ſuch Reſtriction in the Words of Moſes: They are delivered in the plural Number, and therefore cannot, without Violence, be applied to one ſingle Perſon in the Godhead: And, among the Moderns, ſome have placed it in Holineſs, while others have thought it more properly ſeated in Dominion; but theſe are only ſingle Lines, and far from coming up to the whole Portraiture. The Divine Similitude, in ſhort, is a complex Thing, and made up of many Ingredients; and therefore (to give our Thoughts a Track in ſo ſpacious a Field) we may diſtinguiſh it into natural and ſupernatural; and, accordingly, ſhall firſt conſider the ſupernatural Gifts and Ornaments, and then thoſe natural Perfections and Accompliſhments, wherein this Divine Image in our firſt Parents may be ſaid to conſiſt.

Illuſtrated by a Compariſon.

[f] AN eloquent Father of the Church has ſet this whole Matter before us in a very apt Similitude, comparing this animated and living Effigies of the King of Kings, with the Image of the Emperor, ſo expreſſed by the Hand of the Artificer, either in Sculpture or Painting, as to repreſent the very Dreſs and Enſigns of the Royal Majeſty; ſuch as the Purple Robe, the Scepter, and the Diadem. For as the Emperor's Image does repreſent, not only his Countenance, and the Figure of his Body, but even his Dreſs likewiſe, his Ornaments, and Royal Enſigns; ſo Man does then properly repreſent in himſelf the Image and Similitude of God, when to the Accompliſhments of Nature (which cannot totally be extinguiſhed) the Ornaments of Grace and Virtue are likewiſe added; when [g] Man's Nature (as he expreſſes it) is not cloathed in Purple, nor vaunts its Dignity by a Scepter or Diadem, (for the Archetype conſiſts not in ſuch Things as thoſe) but, inſtead of Purple, is cloathed with Virtue, which, of all others, is the moſt Royal Veſtment; inſtead of a Scepter, is ſupported by a bleſſed Immortality; and, inſtead of a Diadem, is adorned with a Crown of Righteouſneſs.

It conſiſted, 1. In ſupernatural Gifts, as to his Soul.

THAT our firſt Parents, beſides the Seeds of natural Virtue and Religion ſown in their Minds, and beſides the natural Innocence and Rectitude, wherein they were created, were endowed with certain Gifts and Powers ſupernatural, infuſed into them by the Spirit of God, is manifeſt, not only from the Authority of [h] Chriſtian Writers, but from the Teſtimony of Philo the Jew likewiſe, who is very full of ſublime Notions concerning the Divine Image, and, [i] in one Place more eſpecially, expreſſes himſelf to this Purpoſe: The Creator made not any Soul, ſays he, while incloſed in a Body, able of itſelf to ſee and know its Maker; but, conſidering how vaſtly advantageous ſuch Knowledge would be to Man, (for this is the utmoſt utmoſt Bound of his Felicity) he inſpired into him, from above, ſomething of his own Divinity, which, being inviſible, impreſſed upon the inviſible Soul its own Characters; that ſo even this earthly Region might not be without ſome Creature made after the Image of God: Where he manifeſtly places the Image of God, (i. e. the Perfection of it) after which Adam was created, in thoſe Divine Characters, which were impreſſed upon the Soul in his Creation; or in that ſupernatural Gift and Faculty, whereby he was enabled to attain the Viſion of God: And this he aſſerts to be the recondite Senſe of Moſes's Words, in the Hiſtory of Man's Creation.

Proved from Scripture.

AND indeed we need go no farther than this Hiſtory of Moſes, to prove the very Point, we are now upon: For, whereas it acquaints us, [k] that the firſt Man, in his State of Integrity, was able to ſuſtain the Approaches of the Divine Preſence, and converſe with his Maker in the ſame Language; 'tis reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that it was a particular Vouchſafement to him, to confirm his Mind, and enlighten his Underſtanding in this Manner; becauſe no Creature is fit to converſe with God, without Divine Illumination, nor is any Creature able to bear his majeſtick Appearance, that is not prepared for it by a Divine Power.

WHEREAS it tells us, that [l] the Lord God formed every living Creature out of the Ground, and brought them unto Adam, to ſee what he would call them; and whatever he called them, that was the Name thereof; it can hardly be ſuppoſed, conſidering the Circumſtances of the Thing, but that this was the Effect of ſomething more than human Sagacity. That, in an infinite Variety of Creatures, never before ſeen by Adam, he ſhould be able, on a ſudden, without Labour or Premeditation, to give Names to each of them, ſo adapted and fitted to their Natures, as that God himſelf ſhould approve the Nomenclature, is a Thing ſo aſtoniſhing, [m] that we may venture to ſay, no ſingle Man, among all the Philoſophers ſince the Fall; no Plato, no Ariſtotle, among the Ancients; no Des Cartes or Gaſſendus, among the Moderns; nay, no Academy, or Royal Society whatever, durſt have undertaken it.

WHEREAS it informs us, that Adam no ſooner ſaw his Wife brought unto him, [n] but he told exactly her Original, and gave her a Name accordingly, though he lay in the profoundeſt Sleep and Inſenſibility all the while, that God was performing the wonderful Operation of taking her out of his Side; this can be imputed to nothing, but either an immediate Inſpiration, or ſome prophetick Viſion, as we ſaid before, that was ſent upon him, while he ſlept. [o] From the Conformity of Parts, which he beheld in that goodly Creature, and her near Similitude to himſelf, he might have conjectured indeed, that God had now provided him the meet Help, which before he wanted; but 'tis ſcarce imaginable, how he could ſo punctually deſcribe her Original and Manner of Formation, and ſo ſurely propheſy what the general Event would be to his Poſterity, for the Sake of her Sex, to leave Father and Mother, and cleave to their Wives; otherwiſe than by ſome divine Illumination, "which enabled him, "(as [p] one expreſſes it) to view Eſſences in themſelves, and read Forms without the "Comment of their reſpective Properties: Which enabled him to ſee Conſequents "yet dormant in their Principles, and Effects yet unborn, and in the Womb of "their Cauſes: Which enabled him, in ſhort, to pierce almoſt into future Contin-"gents, and improved his Conjectures and Sentiments even to Propheſy, and the Cer-"tainties of Prediction."

And as to his Body.

THESE ſeem to be ſome of the ſupernatural Gifts, and what we may call the chief Lines, wherein the Image of God was ſo conſpicuous upon Adam's Soul: And there was this ſupernatural in his Body likewiſe, that, whereas it was made of the Duſt of the Earth, and, in its Compoſition, conſequently corruptible; either, by a Power continually proceeding from God, [q] whereof the [r] Tree of Life was the Divine Sign and Sacrament, or by [s] the inherent Virtue of the Tree itſelf, perpetually repairing the Decays of Nature, it was to enjoy the Privilege of Immortality: Not ſuch an Immortality, as the glorified Bodies of Saints ſhall hereafter poſſeſs; for they ſhall be made wholly impaſſible, and ſet free from the Reach [k] Bull's Sermons, Vol. IV. [l] Gen. ii. 19. [m] The Knowledge of Adam is highly extolled by the Jewiſh Doctors. Some of them have maintained, that he compoſed two Books, one concerning the Creation, and the other, about the Nature of God. Nay, ſome of them go farther, and advance ſuch fabulous Stories upon this Head, as are fit only to amuſe Children. They tell us, that Adam's Knowledge was not only equal to that of Solomon and Moſes, but exceeded even that of the Angels; and for the Proof of this, they mention the Inſtance before us, —— that the Angels, having ſpoke contemptibly of Man, God made Anſwer, that the Creature, which they deſpiſed, was their Superior in Knowledge; and to convince them of this, he brought all the Animals to them, and bid them name them; which they being not able to do, he propoſed the Thing to Adam, and he did it preſently. Saurin's Diſſertations. of outward Impreſſions, and the Diſcords of elemental Mutinies, that might impair their Vigour, or endanger their Diſſolution: But an Immortality by Donation, and the Privilege of an eſpecial Providence, which engaged itſelf to ſway and over-rule that natural Tendency which was in Man's Body to Corruption; and, notwithſtanding the Contrarieties and Diſſenſions of a terreſtrial Conſtitution, to continue him in Life, as long as he ſhould continue himſelf in his Obedience.

2. In the Rectitude of the natural Faculties of the Soul.

ANOTHER chief Part of the Divine Image and Similitude in our firſt Parents, was, an univerſal Rectitude in all the Faculties belonging to the Soul. Now, the two great Faculties, or rather eſſential Acts of an human Soul, are the Underſtanding and Will, [t] which, though for the clearer Conception of them, we may conſider ſeparate, are, in their Operations, ſo blended and united together, that we cannot properly think them diſtinct Faculties. 'Tis the ſame individual Mind, that ſees, and perceives, as well as chuſes, or rejects the ſeveral Objects, that are preſented to it: When it does the Former, we call it the Underſtanding, and when the Latter, the Will; ſo that, they are both radically and inſeparably the ſame, and differ only in the Manner of our conceiving them. Nay, the cleareſt and only diſtinct Apprehenſion we are able to form of them, even when we come to conſider them ſeparately, is only this, that the Underſtanding is neceſſarily determined in the Judgment it makes, the Will is free in the Acts of its Choice or Refuſal; that the Underſtanding is chiefly converſant about intelligible, the Will about eligible Objects; and that the one has Truth, the other Goodneſs in its View and Purſuit.

THERE are, beſides theſe, belonging to the Soul of Man, certain Paſſions and Affections, which have chiefly their Reſidence in the ſenſitive Appetite; and however, in this lapſed Condition of our Nature, they may many Times mutiny and rebel, yet, when kept in due Temper and Subordination, are excellent Handmaids to the Soul. [u] The Stoicks indeed looked upon them all as ſinful Defects, and Deviations from right Reaſon; but 'tis ſufficient for us, that our bleſſed Saviour, who took upon him all our natural, but none of our ſinful Infirmities, was known to have them; and that our firſt Progenitor, in the State of his greateſt Perfection, was not devoid of them. Let us then ſee, how far we may ſuppoſe, that the Image of God, after which the firſt Man was made, might be impreſſed upon each of theſe.

[x] HIS Soul in itſelf was a rational Subſtance, immaterial and immortal, and therefore a proper Repreſentation of that ſupreme Spirit, whoſe Wiſdom is infinite, and Eſſence eternal.

[y] HIS Underſtanding was, as it were, the upper Region of his Soul; lofty and ſerene, ſeated above all ſordid Affections, and free from the Vapours, and Diſturbances of inferior Paſſions. Its Perceptions were quick and lively, its Reaſonings true, and its Determinations juſt. A deluded Fancy was not then capable of impoſing upon it, nor a fawning Appetite of deluding it to pronounce a falſe or diſhoneſt Sentence. In its Direction of the inferior Faculties, it conveyed its Suggeſtions with Clearneſs, and enjoined them with Power; and though its Command over them was but ſuaſive, yet it had the ſame Force and Efficacy, as if it had been deſpotical.

HIS Will was then very ductile and pliant to the Motions of right Reaſon. It purſued the Directions that were given it, and attended upon the Underſtanding, as a Favourite does upon his Prince, where the Service is both Privilege and Preferment; and while it obeyed the Underſtanding, it commanded the other Faculties, that were beneath it, gave Laws to the Affections, and reſtrained the Paſſions from licentious Sallies.

HIS Paſſions were then indeed all ſubordinate to his Will and Intellect, and acted within the Compaſs of their proper Objects. His Love was centered upon God, and flamed up to Heaven in direct Fervours of Devotion: His Hatred (if Hatred may be ſuppoſed in a State of Innocence) was fixed only upon that, which his Poſterity only love, Sin: His Joy was then the Reſult of a real Good, ſuitably applied, and filled his Soul, as God does the Univerſe, ſilently, and without Noiſe: His Sorrow (if any ſuppoſed Diſaſter could have occaſioned Sorrow) muſt have moved according to the ſevere Allowances of Prudence, been as ſilent as Thought, and all confined within the Cloſet of the Breaſt: His Hope was fed with the Expectation of a better Paradiſe, and a nearer Admiſſion to the Divine Preſence; and (to name no more) his Fear, which was then a Guard, and not a Torment to his Mind, was fixed upon him, who is only to be feared, God; but in ſuch a filial Manner, as to become an Awe, without Amazement; and a Dread, without Diſtraction.

IT muſt be acknowledged indeed, that the Scriptures do not expreſsly attribute all theſe Perfections to Adam in his firſt Eſtate; but ſince the oppoſite Weakneſſes now infeſt the Nature of Man fallen, we muſt conclude, (if we will be true to the Rule of Contraries) that theſe and ſuch like Excellencies were the Endowments of Man innocent: And if ſo, then is there another Perfection ariſing from this Harmony, and due Compoſure of the Faculties, which we may call the Crown and Conſummation of all, and that is a good Conſcience. For as, in the Body, when the vital and principal Parts do their Office, and all the ſmaller Veſſels act orderly, there ariſes a ſweet Enjoyment upon the whole, which we call Health; ſo in the Soul, when the ſupreme Faculties of the Will and Underſtanding move regularly, and the inferior Paſſions and Affections liſten to their Dictates, and follow their Injunctions, there ariſes a Serenity, and Complacency upon the whole Soul, infinitely beyond all the Pleaſures of Senſuality, that, like a ſpicy Field, refreſhes it upon every Reflection, and fills it with a joyful Confidence towards God.

THESE are ſome of the natural Lines, as we have diſtinguiſhed them, that the Finger of God portrayed upon the Soul of Man; and, ſo far as a ſpiritual Subſtance may be reſembled by a corporeal, he was not wanting to his Body likewiſe. [z] The Contrivance of its Parts was with ſuch Proportion and Exactneſs, as moſt conduced to Comelineſs and Service: His Stature was erect and raiſed, becoming the Lord of the Creatures, and an Obſerver of the Heavens: A [a] Divine Beauty and Majeſty were ſhed upon it; and this was no vaniſhing Ray, ſoon eclipſed by Sickneſs, or extinguiſhed by Death, but ſhined in the Countenance without Declination. [b] For Adam knew no Diſeaſe, ſo long as he refrained from the forbidden Fruit: Nature was his Phyſician; and Innocence and Abſtinence would have kept him healthful to Immortality. And from this Perfection of Man's Body, eſpecially that Port and Majeſty that appeared in his Looks and Aſpect, there aroſe, in ſome Meaſure, another Lineament of the Divine Image, viz. [c] that Dominion and Sovereignty, wherewith God inveſted him above all other Creatures: For there is a certain terrifick Character (as [d] one calls it) impreſſed on Man by the Creator, which, aſſiſted by that Inſtinct of Dread, which he hath equally implanted in their Natures, commands their Homage and Obeiſance, inſomuch that it muſt be Hunger, or Compulſion, or ſome violent Exaſperation or other, that makes them, at any Time, rebel againſt their Maker's Vicegerent here below. And Body.

THIS is the beſt Copy of the Divine Image that we can draw: Only it may not be amiſs to add, [e] that the Holineſs of Man was a Reſemblance of the Divine Purity, and his Happineſs a Repreſentation of the Divine Felicity. And now (to look over it again, and recount the ſeveral Lines of it) what was ſupernatural in it, was a Mind, fortified to bear the Divine Preſence, qualified for the Divine Converſe, fully illuminated by the Divine Spirit; and a Body, that, contrary to its natural Compoſition, was indulged the Privilege of Immortality. What was natural to it, was an univerſal Harmony in all its Faculties; an Underſtanding fraught with all Manner of Knowledge; a Will ſubmitted to the Divine Pleaſure; Affections placed upon their proper Objects; Paſſions calm and eaſy; a Conſcience ſerene, reſplendent Holineſs, and a Body adorned with ſo much Majeſty and Glory, as to challenge the Rule and Juriſdiction of this inferior World. A Recapitulation of the Divine Image.

IF it be demanded, how much of this Image is defaced; [f] the Anſwer is, that, whatever was ſupernatural, and adventitious to Man by the Benignity of Almighty God, as it depended upon the Condition of his Obedience to the Divine Command, [z] Bates's Harmony of the Divine Attributes. [a] The Signification of the Hebrew Word Adam is not only rubmit, he was red, or ruddy; but means likewiſe as much as ſplenduit, he was bright and beautiful. That it bears this Senſe may be gathered from the Word Adamdameth, Lev. xiii. 19. where it muſt be rendered ſhining or gliſtering, or elſe white and ruddy. That Adam ſometimes means the ſame, as formoſus erat, is plain from the Word Admoni, (which comes from Adam) and when applied to David (as it is 1 Sam. xvi. 12.) muſt mean beautiful, as explained in the following Words: And in like Manner Edom (which is a Word of the ſame Extraction) muſt be underſtood, Cant. v. 10. where the Spouſe ſays of her Beloved, that he is ruddy, viz. comely, and of a lovely Aſpect. Edwards's Survey, Vol. I.

'Tis hardly worth mentioning what the Talmudick Doctors tell us of the Beauty and Elegance, and vaſt Proportions of Adam's Body, ſince they ſtick not to ſay, that he was ſo exceſſively tall, that, ſtanding on the Earth, he could touch the Heavens with his Hand, and that, when he was driven out of Paradiſe, (tho' there was an Ocean, that parted it from the reſt of the World) yet he waded thro' it. Saurin's Diſſertations. mand, upon the Breach of that Command, was entirely loſt: What was perfective of his Nature, ſuch as the Excellency of his Knowledge, the Subordination of his Faculties, the Tranquillity of his Mind, and full Dominion over other Creatures, was ſadly impaired; but what was eſſential to his Nature, the Immortality of his Soul, the Faculties of Intellection and Will, and the natural Beauty and Uſefulneſs of his Body, do ſtill remain, notwithſtanding the terrible Concuſſion of his Soul.

SECT. III.

Of the End of MAN'S CREATION.

WHAT we have ſaid in the foregoing Chapter, of the Powers and Faculties of human Nature in general (for what was proper and peculiar to Adam comes not now under our Conſideration) may be of ſome Uſe, to give us a rational Idea of the End and Purpoſe, for which God made Man at firſt.

1. The End of Men to know God.

IF we reflect, never ſo little, upon the Make and Conſtitution of our Souls, we cannot but perceive, that there is a Faculty in them, which thinks, [g] and has not only ſimple Apprehenſions of Things, but knows how to connect theſe Apprehenſions into Propoſitions, and to draw theſe Propoſitions into rational Concluſions. We perceive farther, that this Faculty of Thinking does not ariſe from any Texture of our Bodies, or any ſenſitive Things, that are without us; becauſe it takes into it Things, that have no Affinity to Matter or Senſe: It judges of the Truth or Falſehood of a Propoſition, and ſees whether a Concluſion ariſes from the Premiſes or no: It conceives the abſtracted Notions of Things, ſuch as a pure Point, Equality and Proportion, Symmetry and Aſymmetry of Magnitudes, the Riſe and Propagation of Dimenſions, and a thouſand other Notions of the like Nature, that never were in Matter, and conſequently, could never be extracted out of it: Nay, it corrects the Errors of our Imagination, and demonſtrates Things to be vaſtly different from what our Senſes apprehend, or report them; proves, for Inſtance, that the Stars are huge luminous Bodies, tho' they only appear to be ſo many lighted Candles, and the Sun ſome thouſand Times larger than the Earth, when to the Eye and Imagination it appears no bigger than a Buſhel.

IN this Faculty of Thinking, we may obſerve farther, that there is a ſtrong Thirſt and Deſire of Knowledge; ſo ſtrong a Deſire, that ſome have bid Adieu to the World, and all the pleaſing Gratifications thereof, to devote their Lives to the Study and Search of Truth; and ſo great a Pleaſure, that the Succeſſion of Time has been forgot in the Raptures of Contemplation, and an εὕρηκα been thought a ſufficient Compenſation for never ſo many early Riſings and Night-Watchings. We may obſerve farther of this Faculty, [h] that the more Truth and Reality there is in any knowable Object, and the farther it is removed from Non-entity, the more Worth and Sublimity it has in it; and the farther it tranſcends ſenſitive Perception, the greater Joy and Satisfaction it gives the inquiſitive Mind, when once it has attained the Knowledge of it.

NOW if there be ſuch a Faculty in us, that can raiſe its Thoughts above the Sphere of our Senſes, ſo eager of Knowledge, and ſo infinitely delighted with the Acquiſition of it; we cannot but ſuppoſe, that God has provided every Man with Objects ſuitable to this Faculty. And, accordingly, if he opens his Eyes, [i] the ſtupendous Fabrick of Heaven and Earth preſents itſelf to his View; and in it, the moſt expreſs and clear Characters of that glorious and infinite Power, that produced it. [k] He ſees the Earth ſtocked with every living Thing, and Plants in Abundance, for the Service of Life; he ſees the Heavens, beautiful with innumerable Stars of vaſt Bulk and Purity; he ſees thoſe glorious Luminaries the Sun and Moon; he ſees thoſe celeſtial Bodies, how they are regular and perpetual in their Motion, unchangeable in their Natures, and of wonderful Influence upon the World; and tho' himſelf may be ſaid to be an Abridgement of it, yet he plainly perceives that it is beyond his Power to make the ſmalleſt Inſect; and therefore he cannot but conclude, that there is ſomething infinitely more powerful and noble, than himſelf, which firſt gave Being to ſo many vaſt and beautiful Creatures. Thus the inviſible Things [g] Scott's Sermons, Vol. II. [h] Scott's Chriſtian Life, Vol. I. [i] Bates's Harmony. [k] Eſſays, concerning Natural and Revealed Religion.

Things of God are known by the Things that are ſeen [l], and in the Contemplation of his Creatures, we aſcend the Chain of Cauſes, until we come to that laſt Link, which, as the Poets elegantly feign, was faſtened to the Throne of God, and there we find an Object to fill all our Capacities, and entertain our moſt eager Meditations, as long as Eternity laſts. Thus by a due Conſideration of the Faculty of Man's Underſtanding, we may perceive that one chief End of his Creation was to know God; in the Glaſs of his Creatures, and in the Volume of his Will, to ſee and admire his Power, and Wiſdom, and Goodneſs, and Preſence in every Thing; to conſider his Unity, his Eternity, his Immenſity, his Providence, his Juſtice, his Mercy, and thence to form great and noble Notions of his eternal Power and Godhead, ſuch as may awaken his Fear and Reverence, encourage his Dependency, and be the eternal Subject of his Praiſe.

2. To delight in him, and ſerve him.

IF we reflect again upon the Conſtitution of our Souls, we cannot but obſerve, that there is a farther Faculty in them, which wills, or has a [m] Liberty of Choice or Refuſal, according as Objects are repreſented to the Mind, under the Appearance of Good or Evil; and that, upon the Exerciſe of this Faculty, the Morality of our Actions, the Reaſons of Reward or Puniſhment, and whatever is blameable or praiſe-worthy in us, intirely is ſuſpended. We may perceive farther, [n] that there is in this Faculty a natural Inclination to nothing, but what is good, either in Reality or Appearance; for tho' Paſſions and Affections may, many Times, blind the Underſtanding, and, by that Means, captivate the Will; yet this is an Argument of its great Propenſity to Good, that the Things, which are really bad and poiſonous, are never embraced or ſought for, until they are gilded over with a ſpecious Semblance of the contrary Quality. Once more, we may obſerve of this Faculty, that it is influenced by Objects, in Proportion to their Eligibility: Where Things are of an ambiguous Nature, it heſitates long, before it makes its Choice; but where they are found to be univerſally and completely good, it comes in with a full Tide of its Approbation. It leaves leſs for more worthy Objects, at leaſt Objects, that are ſo repreſented to the Imagination; [o] and this perhaps may be the Reaſon, why our Minds are ſo fickle in their Options, and our Deſires always reaching out after new Pleaſures, and purſuing new Poſſeſſions.

NOW if there be ſuch a Faculty in us, as has the Liberty of Choice; as chuſes nothing but what ſeems good, and purſues its Choice, in Proportion to its Worth; there is no Doubt to be made, but that God has provided us with an Object anſwerable to it. [p] Worldly Objects, we ſee every where indeed ſurrounding us, and their Power of pleaſing is but too manifeſt from the ſtrange Aſcendant they have upon our Affections: But ſtill we cannot but perceive, as oft as we conſider their empty and unſatisfying Nature, their offenſive Mixtures, and neceſſary Decays, that theſe are not the proper Objects of our Choice; and therefore God, by the Mouth of his Pſalmiſt, has been pleaſed to direct us to another: [q] Delight thou in the Lord, and he will give thee thine Heart's Deſire. And indeed where can we place our Delight ſo ſuitably as on him, that is the moſt lovely and amiable of all Beings; [r] that is poſſeſſed of all imaginable Beauties and Perfections; perfect Wiſdom, and endearing Goodneſs; tender Mercy, and unerring Juſtice; and has moreover done every Thing for us, that can engage a reaſonable Choice; made us Lords of this inferior World; provided for our Bodies all Kinds of Enjoyment; ſtamped his Divine Image upon our Souls; prepared for us an immortal Heaven; and all this, to engage us to ſerve him with Willingneſs, and delight in him with Chearfulneſs, not only as our chiefeſt Good, but as our beſt Benefactor; which is another End of Man's Creation?

3. To be kind and beneficent to one another.

IF we look upon ourſelves, we ſhall ſoon perceive, that, of all ſublunary Beings, Man is the moſt adapted to Society; that he has the Seeds of Juſtice, and Kindneſs, and Benignity (which are the Sinews of Concord) born with him, and implanted in his Breaſt; that he has the Gift of Speech, whereby he can expreſs his Thoughts, impart his Mirth, his Sorrows, his Secrets; communicate his Counſels, and participate in Compacts, beneficial to himſelf and his Fellow-Creatures. [s] We may obſerve farther, that there is in Man a Fund of Induſtry, and a certain happy Ingenuity in inventing Arts and Sciences, whether mechanical or liberal, ſuch as the Arts of Government, Political, Civil, and Oeconomical; the Arts of Huſbandry, and Improvements of Nature for Food and Raiment; the Arts of Geo- metry, Arithmetick, and artificial Meaſuring of Time; the Arts of Aſtronomy, Navigation, Printing, Painting, and the like; which have a mighty Tendency to the Delight and Benefit of Mankind: And therefore we need not queſtion, but that the wiſe God, by putting theſe Singularities in our Nature, intended (as another End of our Creation) that we ſhould not only live happily ourſelves, and ſpend our Time in beneficial Occupations, or agreeable Amuſements, but be likewiſe mutually aſſiſtant to each other, Inſtruments for the Good of human Society; and (according to Scripture Stile) [t] all of one Mind, having Compaſſion one for another; ſhould love as Brethren, be pitiful, be courteous, not rendering Evil for Evil, nor Railing for Railing, but contrariwiſe Bleſſing, knowing that we are thereunto called, that we ſhould inherit a Bleſſing.

4. To procreate, and take Care of their Species.

IF we look into the rational World in this good Order and Diſpoſition, where Peace and Unity reign, and the Endearments of Love and good Offices interfere between Man and Man; we ſhall ſoon be led to think, that the Earth is no incommodious Habitation, and was primarily deſigned by God for an happy Paſſage (if we will make it ſo) to a better Place reſerved for us in the higheſt Heavens: Conſequently, that our Buſineſs, in this ſhort Settlement here, is not only to propagate our Kind, and continue a Succeſſion of rational Creatures in the World until it terminates; but to take Care likewiſe, that whatever Off-ſpring deſcends from us, may live to the Glory of God, and the Good of the Community, wherein they are placed. The poor Brutes, in the beſt Manner they are able, take Care of their Young. They feed them, and attend them, and, till they are able to ſupport themſelves, never leave them, nor forſake them: And therefore, not only worſe than Infidels, but even worſe than the Beaſts that periſh, muſt that Parent be, who is forward enough to beget Children, but makes it no Part of his Concern to provide for them: Whereas his incumbent Duty is, not only to provide for their bodily Suſtenance, (which many fond Parents too prodigally do) but to provide likewiſe for the wholeſome Nurture and Well-being of their Souls, and, in the Language of the wiſe King, to [u] train them up in the Way, wherein they ſhould go, that, when they are old, they may not depart from it. For the proper Intent of our Creation, was not to beget ſuch Children, as might become Firebrands in Hell; but ſuch as, in their proper Spheres, might ſhine like Stars, and be beneficial to Mankind, while they continued here; and, upon their Removal, be received into the Aſſembly of the Firſt-born, and find a joyful Inheritance with the Saints in Light.

5. To rule the animal and vegetable World.

IF we look into the World of Animals, we may perceive a manifeſt Difference in their Make and Diſpoſition; ſome, that we call Beaſts of Prey, fierce and ſtrong, and ungovernable; others, that we call Domeſtick Animals, tame, and innocent, and ſo very ſerviceable to us, upon many Occaſions, as to deſerve our Favour and Protection. [x] If we look into the vegetable Kingdom, we ſhall find Plants and Herbs, ſome more tender and delicate, and ſuch as require perpetual Care and Cultivation; others more hardy and prolific, and ſuch as, without Correction and Reſtraint, would over-run the Earth, and make it a wild Wilderneſs. In Relation therefore to this inferior World of Brutes and Vegetables, Providence intended (as another End of Man's Creation) that he ſhould be his Vicegerent here on Earth, his Steward, or his Farmer, (if I may ſo ſay) to check the Cruelties of the fiercer, and to defend the Weakneſs of the uſeful Animals; to preſerve the Species of the tender, and reſtrain the Redundancy of unprofitable Vegetables; and by that Means continue the Face of the Earth in its Beauty and Fruitfulneſs, that both Cattle may increaſe for the Uſe of Men, and [y] the Vallies ſtand ſo thick with Corn, that they may rejoice and ſing.

6. To offer up their Praiſes to God.

IF we take a general View of the World, we ſhall ſee every Thing ſtampt with the Divine Signature of Wiſdom, and Goodneſs, and Power; not a Blade of Graſs in the Field, nor a Tree in the Foreſt, nor an Inſect on the Mole-hill, but what bears the Inſcription of the great and glorious God; and yet none of theſe can glorify their Maker: They know not their Original, neither are they ſenſible of their Excellence. It ſeems reaſonable to ſuppoſe therefore, that God has placed Man in this goodly Temple here below, to be (as it were) the common High-Prieſt of this inanimate and irrational World, to offer up the Praiſes and Acclamations of his Creatures to the Throne of Majeſty, and to perform thoſe Offices for them, which articulately and rationally they cannot do for themſelves. The Pſalmiſt indeed calls upon them all to celebrate the Glory of God: [z] Praiſe him Sun and Moon, [t] 1 Pet. iii. 8, 9. [u] Prov. xxii. 6. [x] Hale's Origination of Mankind. [y] Pſal. lxv. 13.

Moon, praiſe him all ye Stars of Light; but it is not conceivable in what Senſe they can do it, except it be by exhibiting proper Matter for us to praiſe God for them; or, in what Manner we can be qualified to do this Office, unleſs we make it ſome Part of our Study to contemplate their Natures; (which may be another ſubordinate End of Man) that, by conſidering their Order, and Uſefulneſs, and vaſt Extent, in Compariſon of our Smallneſs, we may, with the ſame pious Author upon every Remembrance, be prompted to cry out, [a] When I conſider the Heavens, the Work of thy Fingers, the Moon, and the Stars, which thou haſt ordained, what is Man, that thou art ſo mindful of him? &c.

ONCE more, if we look into the World, we ſhall perceive, that God's Goodneſs and Beneficence is over all his Works; that he hath made every Thing happy according to its Nature, and given it a Fruition proportionate to its Capacity. Since therefore he has inveſted Mankind with ſuch Powers and Faculties, as are not allied to ſenſual Enjoyments, 'tis reaſonable to think, that he has provided a ſuitable Fruition for them, both in this Life, and that which is to come. [b] In this Life, the Knowledge of him and his Works, the Senſe of his Favour and Protection, a Dependence on his Providence, a Dominion over their Luſts and Paſſions, a Reſignation of their Wills, and a Calmneſs and Serenity of Conſcience, whereof the wiſe Heathens made great Eſteem: And in that which is to come, an immutable State of everlaſting Happineſs, in the beatifick Viſion of God, and the Fruition of as much of his Goodneſs and Beneficence, as a glorified Soul can contain. 7. To enjoy God both here and hereafter.

[c] TO conclude therefore, ſince God, of his infinite Wiſdom, has fitted Man for a double End, both to glorify him, and enjoy him; he has, in order to this, given him a double Station, and annexed to each Station a proper Fruition. In the Station of this Life, he has furniſhed him with all Conveniencies ſuitable to it; with the Comforts of human Society, the Uſe and Dominion of his Creatures, the admirable Faculties of his Mind, the Books and Inſtructions of his Will and Word, the goodly Works of Creation and Providence, the Tenders of his Grace, the Influxes of his Love, and the Hopes and Anticipations of eternal Happineſs. But all theſe (as he gives us to know) are but ſo many Bounties to make our Paſſage thro' this Life more eaſy to ourſelves, and more ſerviceable to our Lord and Maſter. Our ſecond and better Station is beyond the Grave, the Country of our Reſt and Happineſs, our Home, and the End of our Being; where we ſhall behold the Glory of the glorious God, and enjoy that Bleſſedneſs, which Eye hath not ſeen, nor Ear heard, neither hath it entered into the Heart of Man to conceive. [d] Thy Hands have made me, and faſhioned me; O Lord, give me Underſtanding, that, by keeping thy Commandments, I may attain this End. Amen.

CHAP. VI.

Of DIVINE PROVIDENCE.

AFTER the Work of the Creation, the Providence of God immediately takes Place; for, as ſoon as Creatures are made, they want the Divine Power to ſupport them: No Point of Time can be imagined, wherein they can ſubſiſt without God's Interpoſition; and therefore the Schoolmen have not improperly called the Conſervation of the World a continued Creation.

IN the ſtrict and literal Senſe of the Word, and [a] as it is expreſſed in the three learned Languages, Providence ſignifies no more, than God's Foreſight and Precognition of all Events. The Whole is therefore denominated by a Part; for, in a more general and extended Signification, [b] it denotes "that Care, which God has over "all Things in the World, to preſerve the Being he has given them, and to direct "their Providence, what.

" their Motions and Actions to the Ends, that he has propoſed; ſo that nothing " exiſts in the World without his Cognizance, nothing is done without his Concur- " rence, nor can any Thing happen without his Determination."

THE Providence of God therefore, according to this Notion, may not unfitly be reſolved into theſe five Acts. 1. His Knowledge, and Inſpection of all Things. 2. His Preſervation, and Proviſion for all Things. 3. His Concurrence, and Co-operation with all Things. 4. His Rule and Government of all Cauſes. And, 5. His Direction and Appointment of all Events: To each of which we ſhall ſay ſomething ſeverally, the better to explain wherein this Work of the Almighty does conſiſt; and then proceed to the Proofs and Properties of it.

The Parts of Providence, 1. Inſpection.

ONE Part of the Providence of God conſiſts in his Knowledge and Inſpection of all Things, without which it would be but badly qualified for the Adminiſtration of the Affairs of the World. For if there is any Thing, whereof we can ſuppoſe the Divine Nature ignorant, or any Thing, that is hid and concealed from its Intuition; the Ignorance of that very Thing may be enough to occaſion infinite Diſorders and Confuſion in the World: And therefore, to obviate all ſuch Surmiſes, the Scriptures aſſure us, [c] that the Eyes of the Lord are in every Place, [d] that they run to and fro throughout the whole Earth; and [e] that all Things are open and naked to the Sight of him, with whom we have to do: And to ſatisfy us farther, how ſuch an univerſal Inſpection is poſſible, and even neceſſary in God, they inſtruct us, that his Preſence is in every Place, and his Divine Subſtance permeates all Things, whereof the Royal Pſalmiſt makes this liberal Confeſſion: O Lord, thou haſt ſearched me, and known me; thou knoweſt my Down-ſitting, and my Up-riſing, and art acquainted with all my Ways; not a Thought in my Heart, but thou underſtandeſt it afar off; not a Word in my Tongue, but thou knoweſt it altogether: Thou haſt beſet me behind and before, and laid thine Hand upon me. Whither then ſhall I go from thy Spirit? And whither ſhall I flee from thy Preſence? For thou haſt poſſeſſed my Reins, and covered me in my Mother's Womb. So impoſſible it is, that an omnipreſent Mind ſhould be ignorant of any Thing, and that the Maker of the World ſhould not be preſent with all his Creatures; or that being preſent, and ſeeing all their Actions, he ſhould be an idle and unconcerned Spectator.

How effected.

THOSE indeed that deny a Providence, will not allow, that God ſees and takes Notice of what is done here below. [f] The Epicureans, in Compliment to the Superſtition of the World, more than any real Perſuaſion of their own, acknowledged a Deity, nay, a Multitude of Deities, ſuch as they were; but they never allowed them to know any Thing of human Affairs, which would have been injurious (as they imagined) to their profound Eaſe and Tranquillity; and therefore kept them at a Diſtance, with their Arms folded up in Heaven, and thereby ſecured themſelves from any fearful Apprehenſions of them. And, in like Manner, wicked Men, in all Ages, as the Pſalmiſt repreſents them, [g] have ſaid in their Hearts, the Lord ſhall not ſee, neither ſhall the God of Jacob regard: [h] He hath forgotten; he hideth his Face; for [i] how ſhall he perceive? Is there any Knowledge in the Moſt High? And thereupon [k] they encourage themſelves in Miſchief, and commune among themſelves, how they may lay Snares: But to this he gives a ſevere Reproof, and ſhews the Fallacy of ſuch Suggeſtions: [l] Underſtand, ye Brutiſh among the People, and ye Fools, when will ye be wiſe? He that planted the Ear, ſhall he not hear? He that formed the Eye, ſhall he not ſee? Or he that teacheth Man Knowledge, ſhall not he underſtand? For if we have theſe Faculties, and can make uſe of them; 'tis not to be ſuppoſed, but that God, who gave us them, has ſomething in his own Nature infinitely ſuperior, that anſwers the Uſe of them. To ſpeak properly indeed, [m] 'tis neither our Ear that hears, nor our Eye that ſees, but 'tis our Spirit that hears and ſees thro' theſe, as its proper Inſtruments; and though our Spirits are limited to the Uſe and Aſſiſtance of ſuch Inſtruments; yet we muſt not therefore imagine, that the Spirits of a more exalted Order cannot perform all their Perceptions without them. To ſuppoſe this, would be as abſurd, as for a Man with weak Eyes to argue, that it is impoſſible for any one to ſee without a Glaſs: And therefore, when God is ſaid to have Eyes and Ears, 'tis only in Accommodation to our Mode of Thinking; for when we come to reaſon upon the Point we muſt acknowledge, that it is an Inſtance of his Perfection not to need theſe Helps, which are are a thouſand and ten thouſand Times ſurpaſſed by the Immenſity of that Eſſence, which is every where at once, [n] ſo as to penetrate all Things within, like an univerſal Soul, and contain all Things without, like an univerſal Place.

ANOTHER Part of the Providence of God conſiſts in his Preſervation of the Being, and Proviſion for the Well-being of all Things. For ſince they were brought into Being at firſt by the Contrivance of God's Wiſdom, and the Exerciſe of his Power, they have not their Exiſtence in themſelves, and muſt therefore depend upon the ſame Hand, that gave it for its Preſervation: [o] For where the Foundation of Exiſtence lies wholly in the Power of an infinite Being producing, the Ground of Continuance of that Exiſtence muſt lie in the ſame Power conſerving. We grant, indeed, that when Things are once in Being, they will continue ſo, 'till ſome greater Force than themſelves puts them out of Being; but then we ſhould conſider, that God's withdrawing his Conſervation is ſo great a Force, as muſt needs put that Creature, which had its Exiſtence from his Power, entirely out of Being. The Light of the Sun continues in the Air, and, as long as the Sun communicates it, nothing can extinguiſh the Light, but what muſt put out the Sun: But could we ſuppoſe the Sun to withdraw its Beams, what would become of the Light then? Now this is exactly the Caſe of all Beings, which proceed from an infinite Power: Their Subſiſtence depends upon a continual Emanation of the ſame Power, that gave them Being; and when once this Power is withdrawn, all thoſe Beings, which were produced by it, muſt needs relapſe into nothing. 2. Preſervation.

[p] THE Works of human Art indeed do often remain many Ages, after the Workman's Hand is withdrawn from them: But the Reaſon is, becauſe there is ſomething between them and nothing, viz. the pre-exiſtent Matter, of which they are compoſed; whereas the Works of God, being all produced out of nothing, have nothing between them but the creative Power that produced them: And therefore as Man's Works muſt neceſſarily periſh, were that pre-exiſtent Matter, which ſtands between them and nothing, taken away; ſo God's Works would neceſſarily reſolve into nothing, ſhould that creative Power, which ſtands between them and nothing, be withdrawn. [q] By a bare Act of his Will, they paſſed from nothing into Being; and if he ſuſpends that Act, they return again from Being into nothing; which the Author to the Hebrews has elegantly expreſſed by God's [r] holding, or bearing up all Things by the Word of his Power: For as there needs no poſitive Action, to make a Thing, which we bear up, fall to the Ground, ſince it neceſſarily falls, if we give it no farther Support; ſo God needs only to withdraw his Hand, and every Thing will return again to the State from which it was taken, i. e. to nothing. How effected.

'TIS the ſame Almighty Power then, which raiſed the World out of nothing, that keeps it from ſinking into nothing; and the Subſiſtence of Things, at this very Day, is as much the Effect of that Power, as they were the Moment, when they were firſt created: [s] For the World was no more able to give itſelf the ſecond Moment of Being, than it was the firſt, and the third, than the ſecond, and ſo on to all the Parts of its Continuance. One Moment of Being is as much as another, and therefore to give a Second, requires as much Power, as to give a Firſt; and if ſo, then muſt each ſucceeding Moment of the World's Duration be derived from the ſame Principle, that cauſed it to exiſt the firſt; and, accordingly, we may obſerve, that the holy Scripture has connected the Creation and Continuation of all Things both together: [t] Thou, even thou, art the Lord alone; thou haſt made Heaven, the Heaven of Heavens, with all their Hoſt, the Earth, and all Things that are therein, and thou preſerveſt them all.

BUT it is not enough for God to preſerve all his Creatures in Being, unleſs he provides likewiſe for their Well-being: And therefore, to ſatisfy ourſelves in this Particular, we muſt take a ſhort View of ſome Parts of his Works, in order to perceive how true the Obſervation of the Pſalmiſt is, [u] that the Eyes of all wait upon God, who opens his Hand, and filleth all Things living with Plenteouſneſs. 3. Proviſion.

IF then we look upon the Earth, whereon we tread, we cannot but perceive how fruitful it is in all Sorts of Animals and Vegetables. [x] What great Diverſity of Trees, all laden with delicate Fruits, whoſe Seeds are in themſelves, to perpetuate their Continuance; what an infinite Variety of Flowers, wonderful in their Make, and For Men.

moſt delightful in their Smell; Grains of all Sorts for the Suſtenance of Man and Beaſt; and Herbs of all Kinds, ſome good for Food, and others of ſingular Uſe for Medicines, may we ſee riſing on its Surface! And yet the Earth, out of which all theſe Bleſſings are produced, is nothing but a cold, inſipid Maſs of Matter, grateful to no Senſe, and deſtitute of all Warmth and prolifick Virtue.

For Animals. IF we paſs into the Region of Animals, we may obſerve, that ſome of them are endowed with ſingular Strength and Beauty; others with great Sagacity; all, how ſavage ſoever in their Nature, are tender and ſolicitous for the Preſervation of their Young; and, what is a ſingular Inſtance of God's Care for their Well-being, ſuch as are ravenous, are few in Number, live in Dens, and are ſeldom ſeen but ſingly; ſuch as are more timorous, are generally the ſwifteſt, as Hares; or herd together for their Security, as Sheep; and ſuch as are ſloweſt, and leſs able to fly from Danger, are either armed with pointed Quills or Pricks, as Porcupines and Hedgehogs; or elſe defended with Shells, as we obſerve in the Tortoiſe, Snails, and diverſe Kinds of Fiſh.

For Countries. BUT, not to expatiate over the ſeveral Tribes of Creatures, we will confine our Obſervations to ſome general Proviſions of Nature, which will be enough to convince us of the great Wiſdom and Providence of God, in ſupplying the Wants and Neceſſities of all his Creatures.

Cold. IF we conſider the Situation and Temper of the Northern Parts of the World, and ſuch as lie towards the Poles, we may obſerve, how all Things are expoſed to the Rigours and Severities of the Froſt and Snow; and yet theſe Inconveniencies are abundantly relieved by the comfortable Proviſion of vaſt Woods, which not only furniſh the Inhabitants with a good Supply of Fuel, but produce great Quantities of wild Beaſts, whoſe rich and warm Furs are not only a Defence againſt the Injuries of the Climate, but, by being tranſported into other Parts of the World, purchaſe whatever is uſeful and delightful for the Life of Man.

Hot. IF we conſider the hotter Regions, which lie under the ſcorching Rays of the Sun, we are informed, that the Morning-Dews, which fall in great Abundance, and the cool and refreſhing Breezes, which uſually ariſe with the Sun, and grow freſher, as it aſcends, fan the Air, and correct the ſultry Influences of it. Nay, even directly under the Equinoctial, we are told, that, during the Time of the greateſt Heats, there fall ſuch vaſt Quantities of Rain, as not only qualify the Climate, and refreſh the Air, but make the Soil, in moſt Places, as fruitful, as is any where to be found upon the Surface of the whole Earth.

Barren. EGYPT is a Country where it ſeldom or never rains, and conſequently, lying in ſuch a Degree of Heat, could not be inhabited, were it not, in a very ſtupendous Manner, refreſhed and watered by the River Nile, which, overflowing the Country in the hotteſt Seaſon of the Year, both moderates the Heat of the Sun, and gives the Land a Fertility, ſcarce to be equalled in the habitable World. Nay, even in the Deſerts, and ſcorching Plains of Arabia, where Water is ſcarce to be met with, how wonderfully has Nature provided for the Exigence of Man by Camels, Creatures that are able to bear great Burdens, and go ſeveral Days without drinking; and by Dromedaries, that will go an hundred Miles in a Day, and live on a ſmall Quantity of Food, and without Water; ſingular, and wonderful Advantages in thoſe Parts, where there is no Proviſion for Man or Beaſt!

Some remarkable Particulars. [y] WHAT is reported of Ferraria, an Iſland belonging to the Canaries, ſeems miraculous. The Soil is dry and uncultivated; nor is there a Drop of freſh Water to be found any where, but on the Sea-Coaſt, which is of no great Uſe, becauſe of its Diſtance: And therefore, to ſupply this Defect, there grows, in the Middle of the Iſland, a certain Tree, the like of which is not to be found in the Univerſe. It is always covered with a thick Miſt or Cloud, which neither increaſes nor diminiſhes: Its Leaves are pointed, like thoſe of a Walnut-Tree, and from them there diſtils perpetually ſuch a Quantity of pure Cryſtal Water, as equals the moſt plentiful Springs, which, being received into Ciſterns, and other Veſſels, ſerves the Occaſions of the whole Iſland.

OF no leſs ſingular and beneficial Virtue is the Palm-Tree, though more commonly known, as affording excellent Wine, Fruits, Vinegar, Thread, and Leaves, which make a durable Covering for Houſes; and (to name no more) the [z] Tree, that bears Cacao, or the Indian Nut, is prodigious in its Uſes; for out of it is yearly drained drained a great Quantity of Juice, which, according to the Seaſon it is drawn in, and the different Way of preparing it, taſtes exactly like Oil, or Butter, or Milk, or Wine, for all which it is indifferently uſed; and when it is dried, it imitates Sugar. The Fruit of it uſually makes Bread; the Leaves ſerve for Paper; the Rind affords Materials for Cables and Sails; and the Trunk is employed in the Building of Houſes and Ships. Thus bountiful is Providence in one ſingle Tree! And, if we were to conſult the Writings of modern Botaniſts, we might probably meet with many more Inſtances of the like Nature.

[y] Grot. Arthus Ind. Orien. Cap. 6.

[z] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. I.

WHAT hath been ſaid is enough to convince us, that God taketh Care both of Man and Beaſt; that he provideth for the Maintenance of his Creatures all the World over; and the natural Defects of every Country richly ſupplies, in a very wonderful and ſurprizing Manner: And therefore, not to forget the Pſalmiſt's Recognition upon a Review of this Nature: [a] O Lord, how manifold are thy Works! In Wiſdom haſt thou made them all: The Earth is full of thy Riches: So is the great and wide Sea alſo, wherein are Things innumerable, both ſmall and great Beaſts. Theſe wait all upon thee, that thou mayeſt give them Meat in due Seaſon; when thou giveſt it them, they gather it; when thou openeſt thy Hand, they are filled with Good; when thou hideſt thy Face, they are troubled; when thou takeſt away their Breath, they die, and are turned again to their Duſt.

ANOTHER Act of God's Providence is, his conſtant Concurrence and Co-operation with all Things. For ſince his Eſſence is in every Place, and his Power extended to all Things, the proper End of Power is Action; and therefore, wherever God is, he muſt be acting. [b] It may be ſuppoſed perhaps, after the Creation was finiſhed, and every Thing ſettled in a proper Order, that it might then become the Wiſdom of God to withdraw his Hand, and leave all Things to act of themſelves, by Virtue of the primary and general Laws of Motion impreſſed on them: But that there are no ſuch Laws of Motion, whereby Things can act independently on God, [c] is plain from the Principles of the beſt modern Philoſophers, which demonſtrate, that the Parts of Matter, in what Order ſoever we ſuppoſe them to be diſpoſed, neither gravitate, nor communicate Motion, nor, in any Reſpect, act upon one another, but in Conſequence of God's immediate directing and aſſiſting Hand. And indeed, if we take a ſhort Survey of a very few Things in Nature, we ſhall find their Operations ſo far tranſcending their Capacities, as to neceſſitate the Belief of a Divine Concurrence in what they do. The Sun, for Inſtance, (for whether we ſuppoſe the Sun or the Earth to move, 'tis the ſame Thing to our Enquiry) the Sun, I ſay, is void of Underſtanding, and therefore can have no Deſign or Contrivance in it: [d] How then comes it to purſue ſuch a regular Courſe in its Motions? What makes this vaſt and mighty Body move round the Earth, rather than any other Part of that infinite Space, wherein it hangs, and, through ſo many Ages, each twenty-four Hours, conſtantly perform its Period, without being ſo much as one Moment faſter or ſlower, to give regular Returns of Day and Night to both Hemiſpheres? And, ſince it moves equally round the Earth, what makes it not always move in the ſame Circle, but every Day ſhift almoſt a Degree farther Northward or Southward, and that ſo regularly, as, in ſix thouſand ſucceeding Revolutions, always to have obſerved the ſame Excurrences, thereby to give the different Seaſons of the Year to all Parts of the Earth? The Revolution of Day and Night, and the Return of annual Seaſons it is not ſenſible that it occaſions, and muſt therefore be every Day under the Divine Conduct to direct it into the different Courſes, that produce them; ſo that the Royal Pſalmiſt might juſtly ſay unto God, [e] The Day is thine, the Night alſo is thine: Thou haſt prepared the Light; thou haſt ſet all the Borders of the Earth, (according to the different Poſitions of the Heavens) and haſt made Summer and Winter, according to the Proximity or Diſtance of the Sun.

3. Concurrence.

The heavenly Bodies.

PLANTS, we know, have neither Senſe nor Reaſon to diſcern the Periods of their own Growth and Decay; and yet, when they have almoſt ſpent themſelves, and are ready to wither and die, they run up into Seed, as if they foreſaw their own approaching End, and did thereupon bethink themſelves of propagating their Kind, before it was too late, and leaving a numerous Poſterity behind them. Such as are naturally weak, and yet ſhoot up on high, run out into little Strings or Tendrils, Plants.

[a] Pſal. civ. 24, &c. [b] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. [c] Vid. Sir Iſaac Newton's Principia, and Jenkins's Reaſonableneſs, page 215. Vol. II. [d] Scott's Chriſtian Life, Vol. I. [e] Pſal. lxxiv. 16, 17.

Tendrils, with which they lay hold of ſome Thing, that is ſtronger than themſelves, as if they were conſcious of their own Weakneſs, and deſignedly twiſted about other Bodies, that were better able to ſupport them. Since therefore they neither know how they grow, nor how they decay, and are neither ſenſible of their own Weakneſs, or the Strength of thoſe Bodies they depend on; 'tis evident, that the Providence of God co-operates with them, and not only influences their Growth, but directs them likewiſe to the proper Means of their Safety and Preſervation.

Animals. In the brute and irrational World, to make the induſtrious Bee one Inſtance for all: With what ſtrange and wonderful Art do theſe little Creatures frame their Combs, which they divide into innumerable ſix-corner'd Cells, ſupporting them with middle Walls and Pillars, to make them more ſtrong! With what Aſſiduity do they wander up and down, to gather the ſweet Dews of Heaven, from the Herbs and Flowers of the Field, and treaſure them up in their little Houſes, againſt the Approach of Winter! And, when they have filled their Cells, with what Care and Providence do they cloſe, and cover them over with a Sort of thin Membrane, leſt any of the grateful Liquor ſhould drop out and be loſt! In a Word, with what Order and Regularity do they live, all reſting and labouring together, and, in the Diſcharge of their ſeveral Offices, all conſpiring to the ſame Work! Some preſs the Flowers with their Feet: Others gather the Moiſture as it is preſſed, and carry it home; ſome bring the Matter for making the Cells; others diſburthen them of it; others build with it; and others plane and poliſh the Building. Thus all Hands are at Work, to build the Houſe they are to dwell in, to divide it into fit Apartments, and ſtore it with Proviſion againſt the Time of Need. All theſe are great Inſtances of Reaſon and Contrivance, and yet it is certain, that they have no Reaſon of their own. They conſider not, when they begin to build, how needful Houſes are for themſelves and their Winter-Proviſions; nor do they underſtand the Neceſſity there is for dividing them into diſtinct Apartments. They know not the Nature of the ſweet Dews they gather, whether they be Food or Poiſon; and when they gather more than they have preſent Need of, they cannot conceive why they do it. They reaſon not with themſelves that Winter is approaching, wherein neither the Dews, upon which they live, will fall, nor themſelves be able to go forth and gather them; and that therefore it behoves them to ſtore themſelves before-hand againſt the enſuing Famine: Theſe Things they know nothing of, and yet they perform them all with as much Regularity and Art, as if they had thoroughly weighed, and conſidered, and perfectly underſtood the Reaſons of them; which is a plain Evidence, that they are acted by ſome ſuperior Principle, and guided in their Motions and Contrivances, by the Ordination and Aſſiſtance of Almighty God.

Mankind. We are now come to the rational World: And to ſay, that Man can act any Thing without the Concurrence and Co-operation of God, [g] in whom we live, and move, as well as have our Being, is impious, and inconſiſtent with the Dependence we owe to our Creator: But then the Queſtion is, how far this Concourſe of God is to be extended; whether it implies any extrinſick, determining Motion from him, or only his aſſiſting our natural Powers and Faculties of Action. In the Inſtances, we juſt now produced from the irrational Part of the Creation, the Co-operation of God ſeems to have a larger Scope and Influence; becauſe the Things, that have no Reaſon in themſelves, muſt be ſuppoſed, where they are found acting rationally, to be determined in their Motions, and guided to ſuch Ends, as are above their Natures to purſue, by ſome immediate, ſuperior Power: But the Caſe is not ſo with Man. God has not only endowed him with natural Powers and Principles of How far. Action, but given him likewiſe an Underſtanding and a Will, whereby he reaſons, and judges, and determines for himſelf; and [h] therefore the Divine Co-operation, with Reſpect to him, ſeems to extend no farther, than to the natural Power of acting, and not to any ſpecifick Acts. It does not improve his Underſtanding, nor incline his Judgment, nor determine his Choice: It makes no Alteration in the Powers of Nature, but only enables them to act according to their Natures, and is ſomething like the winding up of a Watch, which ſets it a-going indeed, but gives it no preternatural Motion, leaving its Motion to be guided by its own Springs and Wheels. Whatever then the Co-operation of God, that is thought neceſſary to actuate our natural Faculties, be, it muſt be ſuppoſed, that it gives no new Byaſs to us: It leaves leaves us perfectly in a State of Nature, and only enables us to do ſuch Things, as we ſhould have done of ourſelves, without any ſuch Co-operation, could we at all move or act without it.

4. Government of Cauſes natural.

ANOTHER Act of Divine Providence is the Rule and Government of all Cauſes. That all natural Cauſes are under the immediate and abſolute Government of God, who keeps the Springs of Nature in his Hand, and turns them as he pleaſes [k]; that whenever they ſtray from their Courſes, ſuſpend or precipitate their Motions, or move counter to their natural Tendencies, 'tis by his Appointment and Ordination; that 'tis he, who guides the heavenly Bodies, impreſſes the Degree, and chalks out the Path of their Motions, and, by his own Almighty Hand, turns round thoſe ſtupendous Wheels in a perpetual Revolution, is evident from the Expoſtulation God holds with Job: Knoweſt thou the Ordinances of Heaven, and canſt thou ſet the Dominion thereof on the Earth? Canſt thou lift up thy Voice to the Clouds, that Abundance of Waters may cover thee? Canſt thou ſend Lightnings, that they may go, and ſay unto thee, Here we are? This is above human Power, but belongs to the Government and Providence of God.

In what Manner.

GOD indeed has beſtowed different Virtues and Powers on natural Cauſes, and, in ordinary Cauſes, makes Uſe of theſe Powers to ſerve the wiſe Ends of his Providence in the Government of Mankind; for while every Thing, in the material World, exerts its natural Powers, and acts neceſſarily, he can temper or ſuſpend its Motions, and direct its Influences, without ever reverſing the Laws of Nature. Fire and Water, Wind and Rain, Thunder and Lightning, for Inſtance, have their natural Powers and Qualities, and God produces ſuch Effects with them, as they are apt to produce of themſelves: He warms us with Fire, invigorates the Earth by the benign Influences of the Sun and Moon, refreſhes and moiſtens it with Springs and Fountains, and Rain from Heaven; fans the Air with Winds, and purges it with Thunder and Lightnings, and the like: But then, when and where the Rains ſhall fall, and the Winds ſhall blow, and in what Meaſure and Proportions, Times, and Seaſons, and other natural Cauſes ſhall give or with-hold their Influences; this God keeps in his own Power, and hereby can govern the World, and reward or puniſh Men, as they ſhall deſerve, without altering the ſtanding Laws of Nature: For ſo we are told, [l] that Fire and Hail, Snow and Vapour, and ſtormy Winds fulfil his Word; [m] that he calls to the Clouds, that Abundance of Water may cover the Earth; at one Time, giveth us the former, and the latter Rain in its Seaſon: and at another, [n] ſhuts up the Heavens, that it ſhall not rain, or cauſes it to rain upon one City, and not another; [o] ſo that two or three Cities wander to one City to drink Water, and are not ſatisfied.

Accidental.

THAT there are many caſual and accidental Events, which happen to us all, and are of great Conſequence to the Happineſs or Miſery of human Life, is an Obſervation, that the wiſe Man has made long ago; [p] I returned, and ſaw under the Sun, that the Race is not to the Swift, nor the Battle to the Strong, neither yet Bread to the Wiſe, nor yet Riches to Men of Underſtanding, nor yet Favour to Men of Skill; but Time and Chance happeneth to them all, i. e. ſome ſtrange and unaccountable Accidents change the Fortunes of Men, and diſappoint the moſt proper Means of Succeſs. [q] What ſhould conquer, in a Race, one would think, but Swiftneſs? Or win the Battle, but Strength? What ſhould ſupply Mens Wants, and increaſe Riches, but Wiſdom and Underſtanding in human Affairs? What more likely Way to gain a general Favour and Eſteem, than a dextrous and ſkilful Application and Addreſs? And yet the Preacher obſerved, in his Days, what is abundantly verified in ours, that Time and Chance, i. e. ſome favourable Conjunctures, and unforeſeen Accidents, were of more Avail to this Purpoſe, than all the Means and Methods that Man can deviſe.

'TWAS from this Obſervation, [r] that the Heathen World made Fortune a Goddeſs, and attributed the Government of all Things to her. We Chriſtians know no ſuch Things as Chance or Fortune: [s] We know, that God alone governs the World, and diſpoſes of all Events; and though many Things happen, which did not appear in their immediate Cauſes, [t] yet did they as much depend upon the Will and Power of the firſt Cauſe of all, as the riſing and ſetting of the Sun, or the ebbing or flowing of the Sea. So that, how fortuitous ſoever theſe Things may be in Reſpect of the Deſign, and natural Tendency of ſecond Cauſes; yet none of them ever happen beſide the Purpoſe and Intention of God, who foreſees them before they come to paſs, and directs them to his wiſe Ends and Purpoſes. What can be more uncertain, than an Arrow ſhot [u] at a Venture? And yet that wherewith Ahab was ſlain, was pointed and directed by the unerring Hand of God. What can be more caſual, than a Lot? And yet Solomon has told us, [x] that the Lot is caſt into the Lap, but the whole diſpoſing thereof is of the Lord; deſigning thereby to intimate, that there is nothing ſo ſmall and inconſiderable, nothing ſo fortuitous and accidental, as to be exempt from the Care, and Cognizance, and Diſpoſal of Providence.

The Reaſon why.

AND indeed if we conſider with ourſelves of what vaſt Importance thoſe Events, which we call fortuitous, are in the Government of the World; how the Lives and Fortunes of Men, the Fate of Kingdoms and Empires, the Succeſſes of War, and the Changes of Government are, many Times, determined and effected by them; how Chance defeats the wiſeſt Counſels, and ſtrongeſt Powers; rewards good Men unexpectedly, and puniſhes the bad remarkably; we cannot but think, that theſe Things are the proper Province of God, and the more immediate Objects of his providential Care and Attention, ſince they are ſuch powerful Inſtruments in his Hands; and that, when we go about to exclude him from the Diſpoſal of theſe, as Things too trivial, and below his Concern, we not only rob him of a great Branch of his Dominion, but ourſelves likewiſe of the comfortable Senſe of our Security under the Wing and Shadow of the Almighty. For what can be a greater Comfort to us, than to conſider, that, amidſt all the Uncertainties of human Affairs, Chance itſelf cannot hurt us, without the Divine Commiſſion, and that, how calamitous and deſperate ſoever our external Condition ſeems to be, God never wants Means to help and defend us; that he has a thouſand unſeen Ways, a whole Army of Accidents and unexpected Events at Command, to reſcue us, when we ſeem moſt expoſed, and to ſave us, when we have no viſible Power to ſtand by and protect us?

Moral.

THAT all moral and rational Agents are immediately under the Government of God; that he can, not only over-rule the Actions, but ſway the Wills, and guide the Paſſions, and direct the Deſigns of Mankind, as it beſt ſuits with the Ends of his Providence, is a Truth confirmed unto us by all thoſe Paſſages in Scripture, where we are told, that [y] Mens Goings are of the Lord, and, [z] tho' his Heart deviſeth his Ways, yet the Lord directeth his Paths; [a] that the Way of Man is not in himſelf; [b] that the Heart of Kings is in the Hand of the Lord, which he turneth as he will; and [c] that tho' there may be many Devices in Man's Heart, nevertheleſs the Counſel of the Lord, that ſhall ſtand; but then the Difficulty is, how God can exerciſe ſuch an abſolute Government over Mankind, who are free Agents, without deſtroying the Liberty of their Choice, and conſequently, the Nature of Virtue and Vice, and the Reaſons of Rewards and Puniſhments. And therefore to remove this, we muſt diſtinguiſh between God's Government of Men, as reaſonable Creatures and free Agents, and his Government of them, as the Inſtruments of Providence: The firſt conſiders them in their own private and natural Capacity; the ſecond, in Relation to the reſt of Mankind, which makes a great Difference both in the Reaſon and Acts of Government.

In what Manner.

MAN, conſidered in his own Nature, is a reaſonable Creature, and free Agent; and therefore the proper Government of him conſiſts in giving him Laws for the Regulation of his Actions; in annexing ſuch Rewards and Puniſhments to the Obſervation or Breach of theſe Laws, as may engage his Obedience; and in affording him ſuch inward Aſſiſtances of Grace, as may ballance the Weakneſs and Corruption of human Nature; and when this is done, it becomes God to leave him to his own Choice, and to reward or puniſh him, as he deſerves. But when we conſider Men in Society, the Caſe is altered: For when the Good or Evil of their Actions extends beyond themſelves, and is to terminate upon other Men; the Providence of God becomes then concerned either to hinder it, or to permit and order it ſo, as may beſt ſerve the Ends of Government, and, as thoſe, it is to affect, have merited or demerited at his Hands. God makes no Man good or bad, virtuous or vicious by irreſiſtible Force; but he may, by a ſecret Influence upon Mens Minds, oblige them to do the Good, they have no Inclination to; and reſtrain them from [u] 1 Kings xxii. 34, 38. [x] Prov. xvi. 33. [y] Ibid. xx. 24. [z] Ibid. xvi. 9. [a] Jer. x. 23.

[b] Prov. xxi. 1. [c] Ibid. xix. 21.

from the Evil, they otherwiſe would do; and in many Caſes, to act contrary to their pre-conceived Deſigns, merely as the Inſtruments of his Providence. And this ſhews the Difference between the Government of Grace and Providence: The Government of Grace has Relation to Virtue and Vice, tends to make Men good, and to change their Natures and ſinful Diſpoſitions; and therefore admits of no greater Force, than what is conſiſtent with Man's Freedom of Choice: But the Government of Providence reſpects the external Happineſs or Miſery, Rewards or Puniſhments of Men or Nations; to which Purpoſe God may make uſe of what Inſtruments he pleaſes, and exerciſe ſuch an Authority, as is neceſſary to accompliſh his wiſe Counſels of Mercy or Judgment to Mankind.

5. Direction of Events.

ONE Branch more of the Providence of God is, his ordering and directing all the Events, that attend human Affairs, ſuch as long Life and ſudden Death, Health and Sickneſs, Honour and Diſgrace, Riches and Poverty, Famine and Plenty, War and Peace, and thoſe many great and ſurprizing Changes and Revolutions, which many Times happen in Kingdoms and States. That all the Bleſſings and Comforts of human Life are of God's immediate ſending upon us, is acknowledged by all that believe a Providence; the only Difficulty is about the Calamities of it: And to form an Idea of God's Proceeding in this Reſpect:

Private, how effected.

[d] LET us ſuppoſe this to be the Caſe of an earthly Prince, —— that he perfectly underſtood all the Deſerts, and all the Inclinations of his Subjects, and had ſuch an inviſible and inſenſible Authority over them, that, without giving them any Directions, without letting them know any Thing of his Intentions, or offering any Violence to their own Inclinations, he could determine them to do that Hurt, which he had a Mind to do, to thoſe, and to thoſe only, whom he intended to puniſh; and to do that Good, they are inclinable to do, to thoſe, and to thoſe only, whom he intended to reward: In Caſe ſuch a Prince took Care, that no Subject of his ſhould ſuffer more from the Wickedneſs of others, than he had deſerved, and the Reaſons of Government required, would any Man charge ſuch a Prince with all the Iniquity that is committed in his Kingdom, only becauſe he ſo wiſely orders it, that ſome bad Men ſhould execute his Vengeance upon other bad Men, and ſerve inſtead of Judge and Jury, and Executioners? Nay, would not every one ſay, that this is the moſt perfect and abſolute Form of Government in the World? Earthly Princes indeed cannot do this; they have not a ſufficient Knowledge of the Deſerts, nor are the Wills and Inclinations of their Subjects at their Diſpoſal: But this is exactly the Government of God, who accompliſhes his own wiſe Counſels, and the Puniſhment of ſuch, as have tranſgreſſed his Laws, by the Miniſtry of Men.

BAD Men there are enough in the World, that deſerve Correction, and others that are ready enough to fall upon their Brethren, if the Reſtraint be taken off them: Suppoſe then, that a Man has forfeited his Life, or Eſtate, or Reputation to Providence, or (without any criminal Forfeiture of it) that God thinks fit, for other wiſe Reaſons, to remove him out of the World, or to reduce him to Poverty, or Contempt; the Murtherer, the Oppreſſor, the Slanderer are always forward enough to execute ſuch Decrees; and 'tis but God's bringing ſuch Perſons, as he appoints for ſuffering, into the Reach of ſuch other Men, as he deſigns to be the Executioners of his Will, and their own Malice and Wickedneſs do the reſt. This is the ſtated Method of God, in bringing Calamities upon particular Perſons, and all the Hand, that he has in it, is only withdrawing the Reſtraint, and ſuffering bad Men to follow the Impulſe of their own Luſts: If, for the main, however, God chains them up, and never lets them looſe, but only to execute his righteous Judgments, nothing can be more honourable to Providence, or a greater Security to Mankind.

Publick.

OF what Subſerviency both good and bad Angels are to God, in the Government of the World, and how well qualified and appointed, to be the Inſtruments of publick Bleſſings and Calamities, is [e] what we have ſufficiently conſidered before. 'Tis uſually, by the Miniſtry of thoſe Spirits, or by the unruly Paſſions of Princes, that the ſore Judgments of Heaven, the Sword, and Famine, and noiſome Peſtilence fall upon a guilty Land. God gives the Commiſſion only, the Execution is entirely done by them: And accordingly, in Ezekiel's Viſion, the Angels of God are repreſented as buſily employed in the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem: [f] Cauſe them, that have Charge over the City, to draw near, every Man with his deſtroying Weapon in his Hand. And behold ſix Men came from the Way of the higher Gate, which lieth towards towards the North, and every Man had a Slaughter-weapon in his Hand; and one Man among them was cloathed with Linnen, with a Writer's Inkhorn by his Side; and the Lord ſaid unto him, Go through the Midſt of the City, through the Midſt of Jeruſalem; and ſet a Mark upon the Foreheads of the Men, that ſigh, and that cry for all the Abominations that be done in the Midſt thereof: And to the others he ſaid, Go ye after him, through the City, and ſmite; let not your Eye ſpare, neither have ye Pity: Slay utterly Old and Young, both Maids and little Children, and Women, but come not near any Man, upon whom is the Mark.

Revolutions. IT ſeems moſt ſuitable therefore both to the Majeſty and Purity of God to believe, that the Calamities, which are ſent upon a Nation for the Iniquity thereof, are either fomented by the Unrulineſs of Mens Spirits, or inflicted by the Miniſtry of Angels: But there are other Events, wherein the Hand of God is more eminently viſible, viz. in ſuch publick Changes and Revolutions, as many Times happen in Kingdoms and States. [g] For the Providence of God concerns itſelf more eſpecially in producing theſe amazing Events, that its Influence on Things below may be obſerved and acknowledged; which would go near to be forgotten, did he not, by ſome remarkable Inſtances of his Interpoſition in human Affairs, raiſe Men up, at fit Times, to a lively and vigorous Senſe of it.

IN the greateſt and moſt publick Tranſactions of the World, when they go on in ſuch a Manner, as to look like the Effects of human Foreſight and Contrivance, we are apt to ſtop ſhort in our Reflections upon them, without carrying our Thoughts up to that inviſible Hand, which wields the vaſt Machine, and directs all its Springs and Motions. But now, when the great Scene of Government is ſhifted all at once, and the Cauſes, that viſibly contribute to the Production of this Effect, bear no Proportion to it; then we look out for others of a more extended Force, we perceive a Divine Providence intereſting itſelf in human Affairs, and adore the Footſteps of it. Since therefore we are ſo apt to forget God's Adminiſtration of the great Affairs below, when they go on even and regularly, he is pleaſed, by awakening Notices, now and then to put us in the Mind of it; to preſent to our View ſome aſtoniſhing Revolution of State, like a glaring Comet, hung up in the Air, whoſe extraordinary Appearance and irregular Motion ſhall ſooner lead our Thoughts up to the Author of Nature, and imprint a deeper Awe of him upon our Minds, than the Sight of the whole Hoſt of Heaven, in orderly Array, continually moving round us.

THE Truth is, were it not for ſuch ſurprizing Turns and Revolutions of State, as not only rouze and awaken the Attention of the Negligent, but make the Heads of the ableſt and moſt experienced Lookers-on giddy at the Sight; God would, in the Opinion of many of his Creatures, be ſhut out from the Government of the World, and the Honour of his Conduct devolved upon ſome of the mean and ſubordinate Inſtruments of it; thoſe poor Inſects, (as an ingenious Author [h] expreſſes it) that ſit upon the Wheels of State, and imagine themſelves to be the Authors of all its Motions, and able to check or to quicken them, at their Pleaſure; and therefore, in Vindication of his Providence, and in Manifeſtation of his Government over the World, God ſometimes is pleaſed to give ſuch Men a convincing Proof of their Folly, by unravelling all their Meaſures at once, and bringing about a new Scene of Things, which they could not foreſee with all their Skill, nor prevent with all their Prudence: [i] That ſo the wiſe Man may learn not to glory in his Wiſdom, and the mighty Man not to glory in his Might: But he that glorieth may glory in this, that he underſtandeth and knoweth me; that I am the Lord, which exerciſe Loving-Kindneſs, and Judgment, and Righteouſneſs in the Earth; for in theſe Things I delight, ſaith the Lord.

THESE are ſome of the Acts and Offices, wherein the Providence of God conſiſts, and whereby he makes himſelf known [k] to be the Moſt High, that ruleth in the Kingdoms of Men: And we come now to produce ſome of the Arguments, that prove the Exiſtence of ſuch a Providence inſpecting, preſerving, governing, directing, and co-operating with all Cauſes, and all Events.

SECT.

SECT. I.

The PROOFS of PROVIDENCE.

GOD never acts without a Design, and his Designs do always bear the Characters of his Attributes: [l] To suppose therefore, that he made the World, only to give a glorious Essay of his Power, of his Wisdom and Goodness in making it, without any other View, or the least Intention of taking any farther Care of it, will not sufficiently account for the Reasons, upon which, we ought to believe that he was induced to make it at first. For whatever Effects of his Wisdom and Power appeared in the first Production of Things, since it was impossible for them to continue in their original Order, without his presiding over them, the subsequent Irregularities, which must necessarily have happened in his Work, would have tended as much to the Derogation of his Wisdom, as the Work itself had antecedently done to its Manifestation. It is hardly to be imagined therefore, for what End God should make the World at first, unless to have it governed; and if the World was to be governed, the only Power and Wisdom capable of doing that, must be the same that created it. [m] It is only creating Wisdom that perfectly understands the Nature of all Things; that sees all the Springs of Motion, that can correct the Errors of Nature, that can suspend, or guide the Influences of natural Causes, that can govern Hearts, inspire Wisdom and Counsel, change Mens Purposes, and restrain, or let loose their Passions. It is only an infinite Mind that can take Care of all the World; that can allot every Creature its Portion; that can bring Good out of Evil, and Order out of Confusion: In a Word, the Government of the World requires such Wisdom and such Power, as no Power has, but he who made it, and therefore, if the World be governed, it must be governed by the Maker of it.

God, who, made the World, governs it.

AND indeed, if we consider the Nature and Attributes of God, we shall soon perceive, that he is not only qualified, but, in some Measure, necessitated to take Care of the World. For what would his Majesty be without a Providence? [n] Placed upon an high Throne, and in a Palace enriched with Rays of Glory, it would be a simple Beholder of all that passes in the World, and would see (without taking any Part in them) all the Disturbances, that Men, the noblest of all sublunary Creatures, incessantly raise; and that Part of the World, which they inhabit, abandoned to their capricious Humours: And is there a King upon Earth, that would not think his Majesty debased, if he remained, all his Life long, in such a State of shameful Inactivity? The Sovereignty of God therefore, unless it is exerted in Rule and Dominion, is only a majestick Sloth, that sits sleeping on an awful Throne, with its Hands in its Bosom, without ever doing any Thing deserving Observation; and all the Attributes, wherewith he is invested, are only so many Cyphers, and empty Names. For of what Use would his Wisdom be, if he had nothing to design or direct? To what Purpose would be his Power, if all Things were done without him? What would become of his Goodness, if he had no Concern in the World? What of his Loving-Kindness, if he left Mankind a Prey to Misfortunes? What of his Justice, if he took no Notice of their Crimes? And what of his Veracity, if he had no Threats or Promises to fulfil? [o] The very End and Perfection of all these Attributes consists in their Exercise: The End of Goodness is doing good; and how then can we suppose that an infinite Power, whose End in Action, should be present, where a World of Things are to be done, and do nothing? That infinite Wisdom, whose End is ordering and contriving, should be present, where a World of Things are to be ordered, and order nothing? Or that infinite Goodness, whose End is doing good, should be present, where a World of Good is to be done, and do none at all? This is reviling our Maker with a Witness, and transforming the Divine Perfections into so many senseless Idols, that have Eyes, but see not, Hands, but act not, and many boundless, but useless and insignificant Powers.

Proved from the Nature of God.

[l] Fiddes's Body of Divinity Vol. I. [m] Sherlock, of Divine Providence. [n] Martin, of Natural Religion. [o] Scott's Christian Life, Vol. I.

His Love and Tenderneſs.

[p] GOD, we find, has implanted in moſt Creatures a natural Care of their Offſpring, and made it an Argument of Want of Underſtanding, in the [q] Oſtrich, that ſhe leaveth her Eggs in the Earth, and warmeth them in the Duſt; forgetteth that the Foot may cruſh them, or that the wild Beaſt may break them, and is hardened againſt her young Ones, as though they were not hers; and can we think that an infinitely wiſe Being ſhould be as unconcerned for the World, as the Oſtrich is for her Eggs? Can we ſuppoſe, that, when every Creature is tender of its Young, every good-natured Parent ſtudies, Day and Night, for the comfortable Maintenance of thoſe, that have deſcended from him; there ſhould be no Bowels of Affection in God, that ſhould prompt him to provide for that large Family of the Univerſe, which depend conſtantly upon him for their daily Suſtenance and Support? The Repreſentation, that the holy Scriptures make of God's tender Love and Kindneſs to his Creatures, ſpeaks Things quite contrary to this: [r] Can a Woman forget her ſucking Child, that ſhe ſhould not have Compaſſion on the Son of her Womb? Yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee: Behold I have graven thee upon the Palms of my Hands, to have thee in my Sight always, and in everlaſting Remembrance. Is it then a Thing natural for a Mother to be fond and affectionate to her Child? [s] Is it a Pleaſure to a Nurſe to fill it with her Milk, and ſee it thrive under her Care? Does the Sun rejoice to help the World with its conſtant Light? And does a Fountain murmur, till it be delivered of its Streams, which may refreſh the Ground? And is it no Delight to the Divine Nature, to behold the Effects of his Care and Loving-kindneſs extended to the World? His Mercy is over all his Works; and it is a Title, wherein he glories, no leſs than in his ſupreme Majeſty, to be a Father to the Fatherleſs, a Deliverer of the Poor and Needy, and a Refuge to him, that has no Helper.

2. From the Nature of Man, in his ſocial,

ANOTHER Evidence of Divine Providence ariſes from the Nature of Man, in what Capacity ſoever we conſider him. If we conſider him in a ſocial Capacity, we ſhall find the Corruption of Nature to be ſuch, ſome Spirits ſo fiery, and others poſſeſſed with ſuch a ſettled Malignity of Temper, as would make thoſe, of a different Diſpoſition, very unhappy in the World, did not God reſerve to himſelf a Power of interpoſing. The cruel or ambitious Views of one great Man would be enough to run whole Kingdoms into Diſtraction; and good Men more eſpecially, the more innocently they conducted themſelves, would but be more expoſed to the common Rapine and Inſults of the Wicked: [t] For if now, that a wiſe and good Providence governs the World, there is ſo much Confuſion and Injuſtice in it, what a diſmal Scene of Miſery muſt it have been, without an over-ruling Power, either to prevent the Deſigns of the Wicked, or to convert them to an End, different to their Intentions? The Truth is, Mankind is become ſo deſtitute of Bowels, and ſo full of Rancour to one another, that the Bonds of Society would be diſſolved, the World become a Field of Blood, and Fraud and Violence the principal Actors in it, were it once abandoned by Providence. That therefore it is kept in ſuch good Order, and, in the main, is a tolerable Habitation, for the Time that we are to continue here; that the Wicked have not always their Will, nor the Innocent fall a Prey to the Oppreſſor, is entirely owing to that Divine Wiſdom, that diſappointeth the Devices of the one, ſo that that they are not able to perform them; and to that Divine Goodneſs, which takes the other under Protection, and to thoſe, that have no Might, increaſeth Strength: [u] For God preſerveth thoſe that love him, but ſcattereth abroad all the Ungodly.

Private,

IF we conſider Man in a more private Capacity, the Reaſons of a Providence, to guide and direct them, are equally conſpicuous. The many Accidents of Life, eſpecially of Infancy, expoſe him to ſo great and continual Dangers, that, to human Appearance, 'tis ſcarce poſſible, that he ſhould avoid them all with Safety, if a particular Providence (how inviſible ſoever the Methods of it may be) ſhould not ſometimes interfere to protect and deliver him. The Pſalmiſt has given us a beautiful Inſtance of one Sort of Men, whoſe whole Life is nothing elſe, but one continued Round of providential Eſcapes; [x] They that go down to the Sea in Ships, and occupy their Buſineſs in great Waters, theſe Men ſee the Works of the Lord, and his Wonders in the Deep; for, at his Word, the ſtormy Wind ariſeth, which liſteth up the Waves thereof: They are carried up to the Heaven, and down again to the Deep; they reel to and fro, and ſtagger like a drunken Man, and are at their Wit's End: So, when when they cry unto the Lord in their Trouble, he delivereth them out of their Diſtreſs; for he maketh the Storm to ceaſe, that the Waves thereof are ſtill, and ſo he bringeth them to the Haven, where they would be. But, without entering into ſuch dangerous Occupations, there are very few Perſons, if any perhaps, living, who muſt not, upon their own Experience, aſſent to the Truth of what we are here obſerving, if they will but duly attend to all the Circumſtances of their Deliverance, upon certain, nice, and critical Conjunctures; and therefore 'tis very probable, that holy David, who had himſelf many wonderful Eſcapes, founded the following Ejaculations concerning Providence, upon his own Remembrance, as well as the Reaſon of the Thing: Thou art my Hope, O Lord God, thou art my Truſt from my Youth; [y] by thee have I been holden up from the Womb; by thee have I been made to dwell in Safety. [z] He holdeth our Soul in Life, and ſuffereth not our Feet to be moved; [a] he ſhall defend us under his Wings, and we ſhall be ſafe under his Feathers; his Faithfulneſs and Truth ſhall be our Shield and Buckler.

ONCE more, if we conſider Man as a religious Creature, capable of worſhipping and doing Honour to God, how reaſonable ſoever this Capacity may be of itſelf, yet, without the Belief of a Providence, it would be of little or no Uſe. And religious Capacity.

"For if the Gods (as [b] the Roman Orator excellently expreſſes it) do not extend "their Care and Inſpection to the Affairs of human Life, what Piety, what Holi-"neſs, what Religion will there be in the World? If the Gods cannot, or will "not, concern themſelves with our Neceſſities, to aid and ſuccour us; if they take "no Notice of our Actions, what Advantage is it to honour them, to build Tem-"ples, and to pray unto them? And if, by a juſt Conſequence, we thus take all "Religion out of the World, there will be nothing left among Men, but Trou-"bles, Confuſions, and Diſorders, and all Sincerity, Security, and Society will be "baniſhed from the Earth."

THE Truth is, moſt of the Acts of religious Worſhip conſider God, not merely as an univerſal Cauſe, but as our particular Patron, Protector, and Preſerver; and therefore, unleſs we are perſuaded, that God takes an immediate Care of all his Creatures, in the Government of all Events, that can happen to them, there can be no Reaſon given for many particular Duties of Religion. [c] To fear God, and to ſtand in Awe of his Juſtice; to truſt and depend on him in all Conditions; to ſubmit patiently to his Will under all Afflictions; to pray to him for the Supply of our Wants, or the Relief of our Sufferings; and to love and praiſe him for the Bleſſings, both ſpiritual and temporal, that we enjoy; theſe are not the Acts of reaſonable Men, unleſs we believe that God has the ſupreme Diſpoſal of all Things, and takes a particular Care of us. For if any Good or Evil can befal us, without God's Order and Appointment, we have no Reaſon to love and praiſe him for every Bleſſing we receive, becauſe we know not, whether it came from him or not; we have no Reaſon to bear our Sufferings ſubmiſſively and patiently at his Hands, becauſe we know not whether our Sufferings be his Will or not; and 'tis to no Purpoſe to pray to him, upon any Want or Emergency, if he confines himſelf to a ſuperior Region, and caſts no Regard upon us. Such are the Conſequences, that our very Reaſon muſt dictate, if we acknowledge not a Providence, watching over every Thing that happens in the World, and directing all Events to their proper and reſpective Ends.

ANOTHER Evidence of Divine Providence, is the Continuation of all Things, in the ſame comely Order, wherein they were at firſt created. [d] It cannot but be a very delightful Entertainment to the Mind, to take a Survey of all the Curioſities and ſurpriſing Wonders in Nature; to obſerve, with what Art and Contrivance particular Creatures are formed, and how the Parts of the Whole are fitted to each other, and make a regular and uniform World; and to perceive how all Creatures are adapted to the Uſe and Purpoſes of their ſeveral Natures, and yet have as mutual a Connection and Dependence, as the Wheels of a Clock. Now, if the Beauty, and Uſefulneſs, and wiſe Contrivance of the Works of Nature, prove that the World was at firſt made by a wiſe and powerful Being; the Continuance and Preſervation of all Things, the regular Motions of the Heavens, and the uniform Productions of Nature, prove the World to be upheld, directed, and governed by the ſame omnipotent Wiſdom and Counſel. 3. From the Continuation of all Things,

To ſay no more of the great Regularity of celeſtial Bodies; [e] the very Elements, whereof this World is compoſed, have all Qualities, we ſee, very different, and vaſtly repugnant to each other; and yet this Repugnancy is ſo ordered, and their natural Animoſities ſo happily tempered and reſtrained, that the Fire invades not the Air, nor the Water the Earth, but every one keeps within its proper Bounds: And though, in ſundry Places, the Water is above the Earth, yet, contrary to its own Nature, which is to expatiate, it only overlooks, not overflows its Banks; being bounded by that Decree, which ſays to its proud Waves, Hitherto ſhall ye go, and no farther. [f] When therefore we conſider, how this great Machine of the World, whoſe Parts are infinite for Number and Variety, has ſtood, ſix thouſand Years together, always one and the ſame, unimpaired in its Beauty, unworn in its Parts, unwearied and undiſturbed in its Motions; through what an infinite Series of Generations and Corruptions all its Plants and Animals have paſt, and yet how, after they have been corrupted over and over, their whole Frame broken in Pieces, and all their Parts divided and diſperſed, they have ſtill been generated a-new, and reſtored to the ſame ſpecifick Natures; when we conſider theſe ſtrange and wonderous Things, I ſay, we cannot but conclude, that there is a wiſe unerring Providence, [g] great in Counſel, and mighty in Work, that guides the Motions of the Heavens, and [h] bears up the Pillars of the Earth; recruits the Decays, and preſerves the Face of Nature always the ſame.

4. From Miracles.

AND as the conſtant Preſervation of the World, ſo the ſtrange and wonderful Occurrences, that ſometimes happen in it, are another Evidence of a Divine Providence over-ruling it. The Nature of Matter and Motion is ſuch, that they cannot ſerve the Deſigns of their Creator without his Aſſiſtance, and therefore he conſtantly does aſſiſt, according to a certain Tenour, which he hath preſcribed to himſelf; but this Tenour and Courſe he ſometimes alters, upon great and important Occaſions. [i] In a natural and ordinary Way, he cures Diſeaſes, and ſends Rain or dry Weather, or elſe our Prayers are inſignificant; he feeds the Hungry that cry unto him, and he puniſhes the Wicked, when he ſees fit, by Famine or Peſtilence; but ſometimes he alters theſe ordinary Methods, (to ſignalize his Mercy or his Judgments) as Chriſt fed ſo many Thouſands in the Wilderneſs, and God rained down Fire upon Sodom and Gomorrah, by a particular and miraculous Diſpenſation: For Miracles are God's wonderful Works, when he interpoſes in an extraordinary Manner, and alters the Method, which he has preſcribed to himſelf in the common Courſe of Things. [k] Now, we muſt either flatly deny all human Teſtimony, and condemn the Records of every Age for Cheats and Impoſtures, or we muſt allow, that there have been ſundry Miracles done in the World: And if, of all thoſe Miracles that have been ſo well atteſted, there happens but one to be true, that one is a ſufficient Argument of an over-ruling Providence. For it is not conceivable, how any natural Cauſe, that has no Will of its own to move and determine it, ſhould either ſtop its own Motion, and then move again, or deviate from its Courſe, and then return again, (which is the Caſe of Miracles) if it were not under the Command of ſome ſuperior Being, that guides and diſpoſes it, according to his own Will.

5. Prodigies.

THERE are other ſtrange Occurrences, ſuch as Signs, and Comets, and Apparitions in the Air, (not to mention Famines, and Peſtilences, and Earthquakes here below) which lead us to the Acknowledgment of this great Truth: For how much ſoever we may, in other Caſes, impute a great deal to ſecond Cauſes, in theſe, the Lord ſeems to [l] make bare his holy Arm in the Sight of all the Nations, and to hang up an Enſign from afar, that all the Ends of the Earth may ſee, and fear, and do no more wickedly.

[m] BEFORE the ſacking of Jeruſalem by Antiochus, the Author of the Book of Maccabees tells us, that, [n] for the Space of almoſt forty Days, there were ſeen, in the Air, Troops of Horſemen in Array, encountering and running at one another, with ſhaking of Shields, and drawing of Swords, and caſting of Darts, and glittering of golden Ornaments. Before its laſt and final Overthrow by Titus, not only Joſephus, but Tacitus, who lived in thoſe Days, tells us, (what our bleſſed Saviour had predicted almoſt forty Years before) [o] that Troops of Men appeared in the Sky, all in bright bright Armour, and that a fiery Sword, or a blazing Star in the Shape of a Sword, hung over the City for a whole Year together, and was gazed on by all its Inhabitants; and to mention one Inſtance of a later Date; before the firſt coming of the Turks to beſiege Vienna, we have two [p] ſufficient Authors, who aſſure us, that Armies in the Air, and other ſtrange Sights and Noiſes were, for ſome Time, ſeen and heard, about that Place.

NOW if ſome wiſe Men, (as [q] a great Author of our own Nation expreſſes it) not ſuperſtitiouſly, but diſcreetly do think, that prodigious Signs from Heaven, or on Earth, are not to be neglected; if all the great Changes and Commotions (as [r] one, that had no great Kindneſs for Providence, confeſſes) which have at any Time, happened to Cities or Countries, have been foreſhewn by Prodigies and Signs from Heaven; and if Comets (as [s] many wiſe Men imagine) are Prognoſticks and Forerunners of remarkable Events, and deſigned by Heaven to forewarn Men of enſuing Judgments and Calamities; then are theſe Prodigies loud Declarations of God's Government of the World; ſince they repreſent him, not only acting above the Power of Nature, but predicting what is to come to paſs.

NOR is it only in theſe wonderful Events, but even the moſt ordinary Occurrences, that the Footſteps of Providence may be ſometimes plainly ſeen; for whatever ſavours of deep Counſel and Deſign, and is of mighty Conſequence to the Government of the World, and yet brought about without any human Foreſight and Contrivance, not only beſides, but contrary to, the Intentions of the viſible Actors, ought, in all Reaſon, to be attributed to an inviſible Wiſdom. 6. And ordinary Events.

[t] WHEN therefore great and wonderful Things are done by an unſeen Concurrence of many caſual and fortuitous Events; when the greateſt Politicians are outwitted, their Counſels diſtracted, and Meaſures broken, and Deſigns defeated, without any viſible Wiſdom or Power to oppoſe them; when the Hearts of Princes are turned, like the Rivers of Waters, and ſuch an unaccountable Change manifeſtly ſerves ſome great and wiſe Ends of Providence; when Men of contrary Intereſts and Factions, without either reconciling their Quarrels, or adviſing with one another, ſhall, unexpectedly, conſpire in the ſame Thing, intending to ſerve their own contrary Ends by it; in theſe, and many more Caſes of the like Nature, the Hand of God is very viſible.

WHEN the Puniſhment of bad Men carries the Marks and Characters of their Sins on them; when thoſe, that, in a drunken Quarrel, have killed their Neighbours or Friends, and eſcaped Juſtice, fall, in the ſame Manner, in a drunken Quarrel; when an unjuſt Oppreſſor is ruined by an unjuſt Oppreſſor; and thoſe that have ſpoiled Widows and Orphans, leave their own Widows and Orphans a rich Prey to other Spoilers; when ſecret Sins, eſpecially barbarous Murthers, are diſcovered by ſome ſtrange Accidents, and ſuch Sinners brought to Puniſhment; when wicked and miſchievous Conſpiracies are defeated, juſt as they are become ripe for Execution; when Men venture upon a Wickedneſs, to avoid a Miſchief they foreſee, and, by that very Means, bring the Miſchief upon themſelves, which they intended to prevent: Theſe and ſuch like are remarkable Inſtances of a ſecret and Divine Juſtice, which governs the World. And (not to inſiſt too long upon this) whatever we may think of the preſent Irregularities, the Afflictions of good Men, and the Proſperity of the Wicked; yet, if we conſider Things ſeriouſly, we muſt confeſs, that it is no ſmall Argument of a Providence, that the World is kept in ſuch good Order as it is; that good Men are no greater Sufferers than they are, ſeeing there are ſo many wicked Men to oppreſs them; that Mens Ambition is bounded, and the moſt threatning Torrent kept within its Banks; that Juſtice is ſo equally adminiſtered, and human Society not broken and diſſolved, conſidering the general Corruption of Mankind, and the Fury and Violence of their Luſts and Paſſions.

SINCE therefore the Proofs of a Providence, which Way ſoever we turn ourſelves, come ſo ſtrong upon us; whether we look up to God, and his Attributes, 7. From univerſal Conſent.

[p] Scheretzius, & Lavater de Spectris. Lucan recounts the Prodigies, which happened before the Civil Eruptions between Cæſar and Pompey, and acquaints us that the whole Theatre of the World was filled with them:

——— ſuperique minaces
Prodigiis terras implerunt, æthera, pontum. Pharſ. Lib. i.

And Ovid, upon another Occaſion, takes more eſpecial Notice upon this Kind of Prodigies:

Arma ferunt, inter nigras crepitantia nubes,
Terribileſque Tubas, auditaque Cornua Cœlo Præmonuiſſe nefas ——— Metam. Lib. xv.

or on ourſelves and our Capacities; into the Senſe of the Scriptures, or the Suggeſtions of Reaſon; the conſtant Courſe of Nature, or the miraculous Interruptions of it; the common and ordinary Events, or the great and wonderful Occurrences, that happen in the World; we have ſufficient Grounds to conclude, that this is a Principle, wherein all Mankind are agreed, and that [u] no Nation was ever yet ſo barbarous (if their Notions and Practices were ſufficiently enquired into) but what believed, that the World was governed by ſome excellent Being or other: [x] Their Prayers and Invocations, their Oblations and Sacrifices, their Vows and Obteſtations were all direct Acknowledgments of a Providence: And therefore they profeſſed, [y] that with the ſame Eyes, wherewith they ſaw God in his Works, they could not but perceive him there directing every Thing, diſpoſing of every Thing, and encompaſſing every Thing with the immenſe Extent of his Power and Wiſdom.

SECT. II.

The ATTRIBUTES of PROVIDENCE.

HOW conſpicuous ſoever God's Government of the World may be, yet there have not, in all Ages, been wanting Objections againſt it; and therefore to reduce them under proper Heads, we ſhall firſt explain the ſeveral Characters, or eſſential Attributes of the Divine Providence, which theſe Objections ſeem to affect, and then form our Replies accordingly.

The abſolute Power of Providence.

NOW one of the firſt Properties, that we conceive in God, as a Being, that is qualified for the Government of the World, is Power, and a Power that is abſolute and uncontroulable. For if we could ſuppoſe any Power ſuperior to his, he could not [z] do whatever he pleaſed in Heaven and in Earth, in the Seas, and in all deep Places; nor could it, with any Juſtice, be affirmed of him, [a] that none can ſtay his Hand, or ſay unto him, What doſt thou? He is wiſe in Heart, and mighty in Strength: Who hath hardened himſelf againſt him, and hath proſpered? Abſolute and uncontroulable Power, among Men, has indeed been brought into great Diſgrace, by Reaſon of the arbitrary and tyrannical Government of ſome Monarchs, that have thought themſelves inveſted with it. But, properly ſpeaking, there is no ſuch Thing as abſolute Power upon Earth; for a thouſand and ten thouſand Things may be named, that the moſt ſovereign Potentate muſt acknowledge himſelf unable to perform. [b] Abſolute Government among Men ſignifies only an uncontroulable Liberty to do all, that it will, and can do; a Will, which is under no human Reſtraints, which may will whatever it pleaſes, and do whatever it wills, as far as it can; but this has not Power to do all that it would; and this is the Reaſon, why Men, in the Exerciſe of ſuch a Government, are tempted ſo often to do what is wrong. Their Paſſions, which are the Weakneſſes of human Nature, when they are not under the Government of Reaſon, put them upon hoping, or deſiring, or fearing what they have not Power to eſcape or accompliſh, without doing Injury to others; and therefore they regard leſs the Means, ſo they may but attain their End; laying Countries waſte, and ſhedding a Deluge of innocent Blood, to pleaſe their Ambition, or gratify their Malice and Revenge. But now, in God, his Perfections (however we may conceive them) are but one Being, abſolutely perfect; and therefore his abſolute Power cannot be ſeparate from his abſolute Juſtice. In God there can be no Want of any Thing; for he, that is the ſole Lord and Proprietor of the World, and whoſe Power and Wiſdom can accompliſh whatever he has a Mind to do, without doing the leaſt Injuſtice, can never be tempted to injure his Creatures: And in God, none of thoſe injurious Paſſions, which diſturb the Peace and Poſſeſſions of Mankind, can be ſuppoſed to dwell. His Power therefore, which is always actuated by calm and ſteady Wiſdom, joined with unerring Juſtice, cannot be capable of doing Wrong: It ſecures him againſt receiving any Injury, and conſequently, raiſes him above the Temptation of doing any. 'Tis the Power, which is conſcious of its own Weakneſs and Danger, that is is cruel, inſolent, and miſchievous: The Power, that knows itſelf out of Danger, out of the Reach of Envy and Ill-will, is a generous Adverſary; never inſults its proſtrate Enemies, but looks upon them all as the Objects of its Pity, and not of its Revenge.

AND if that little Power, which Men have upon Earth, gives them ſuch a Greatneſs of Mind, as ſets them above Affronts and Injuries; if a Temper like this is ſo natural to Power, that every one expects a Generoſity proportionate to the Man's high Station and Authority; then what may we not expect from the perfect and abſolute Power of God, that can have no Temptation to do us hurt, and is under the ſtrongeſt Inclinations to do us good; ſince to do good is certainly an higher Act of Power, as well as a more beautiful and glorious Thing in its Nature, than to do harm? His Juſtice indeed we have Reaſon to fear, becauſe his Juſtice will puniſh our Tranſgreſſions; but his abſolute Power we have no more Reaſon to fear, than we have his abſolute Goodneſs: Nay, abſolute Power, which will do no Wrong itſelf, and rectify the Wrongs, which are done by others, is our only Security againſt ſuffering Wrong, and gives us great Relief and Satisfaction of Mind, under ſome providential Iſſues.

2. Unſearchable Wiſdom.

ANOTHER Property conceivable in God, to qualify him for the Government of the World, is Wiſdom; for Wiſdom ſeems to bear the ſame Relation to the Acts of the Mind, that the Eye has to the Motions of the Body, viz. to diſcern the End, and direct the Means, and foreſee the Impediments, that lie in the [c] Way. The beſt End, and the wiſeſt Means, we may be ſatisfied, are always in the Breaſt of God: But, becauſe the Depth of his Wiſdom and Knowledge is infinite, his Judgments unſearchable, and his Ways paſt finding out; it may not be amiſs to ſuggeſt a Reaſon or two for this Unſearchableneſs, the better to ſettle our Minds in a fixed Acquieſcence upon God.

'TIS very obſervable, that, in God's Conference with Job, in order to vindicate the Ways of his Providence, he does not enter into a Diſplay of the ſecret Reaſons of it, but only propoſes ſome abſtruſe Queſtions to him; [d] Where is the Way, where Light dwelleth? And as for Darkneſs, where is the Place thereof? Haſt thou enter'd into the Treaſures of the Snow? Or haſt thou known the Treaſures of the Hail? Hath the Rain a Father? Or who hath begotten the Drops of the Dew? Out of whoſe Womb came the Ice? And the hoary Froſt of Heaven, who hath gendered it? By which Words, elegantly enough expreſſed, God endeavours to make Job ſenſible, how unqualified he was to underſtand the Ways of Providence, who was not acquainted with the moſt common and familiar Works of Nature. And indeed if we conſider the Extent of our Knowledge, (or rather of our Ignorance) we ſhall ſoon perceive, how unfit we are to enter into the ſecret Adminiſtrations of Providence. We are ignorant of Men, and know nothing of their Hearts and Intentions; we ſee little of their private Converſation, and cannot look into their Cloſets and ſecret Retirements; and can therefore form no rational Conjecture, what they have deſerved from the Hands of God: We are ignorant of the Ends and Purpoſes, that Providence has laid down to itſelf, and can therefore underſtand the Wiſdom of the intermediate Events, that are to bring them about, no more, than we can judge of the juſt Contrivance of the Plot, by ſeeing only one or two Scenes of the Play: And, what is more, we are ignorant of the State of the other World, which has a manifeſt Relation to this; and therefore cannot pronounce any Thing concerning Providence, until we ſee what the Reſult of Things is elſewhere, and in what Manner every one's Fate is to be ſettled by an eternal Award. That we are to live in another World, is a general Anſwer to all the Difficulties we may imagine, and gives us a ſatisfactory Reaſon, why we muſt not expect to underſtand all the particular Paſſages of Providence, in this. Though therefore the Reaſons of Providence be a Matter too difficult for our Enquiry; yet what greater Security can Creatures have, than to know, they are under the Care and Guidance of infinite Wiſdom, that can do nothing amiſs? Infinite Wiſdom indeed is incomprehenſible to a finite Mind, the Methods of it may ſeem intricate and perplexed to us, full of Myſtery and ſurprizing Events; and thus it muſt be, while infinite Wiſdom governs the World, which is ſo much above the Reach of our moſt improv'd and elevated Thoughts. But, would not any wiſe Man rather chuſe to be governed by ſuch a perfect and excellent Wiſdom, as can never miſtake, though it vaſtly exceeds his Underſtanding, than to be governed by a Being, no wiſer, or not much wiſer, than himſelf, whoſe Counſels he he can fathom, and find out the Reaſon of all his Proceedings? The more complete and excellent the Wiſdom is, the leſs we underſtand it indeed, but then the more ſafe and ſecure we are under its Care and Conduct. 'Tis Folly to think, that we are the leſs perfect and happy Creatures, becauſe we know not how God made us; how he formed us in the Womb, and breathed into us the Breath of Life: And 'tis as abſurd to imagine, that the World is leſs wiſely governed, becauſe we cannot ſee into the Adminiſtration of it. We find ourſelves wiſely made, though we know not how God made us; and, if we follow God, and adhere to him, we ſhall find and feel ourſelves very happy, though we may not underſtand the Reaſons of all intermediate Events, nor the ſeveral Steps and Advances of Providence, to make us ſo.

3. Juſtice. ANOTHER Character of Divine Providence, required in the Rule and Government of the World, is ſtrict and unerring Juſtice, without which, Mens Rights and Properties would be precarious, and Rewards and Puniſhments diſpenſed at Random: And therefore the Scriptures take Care to aſſure us, [e] that the righteous Lord loveth Righteouſneſs, and his Countenance ſhall behold the Thing that is juſt; that Mercy and Truth go before him, [f] and Righteouſneſs and Judgment are the Habitation of his Seat; [g] ſhall not the Judge of all the World do right? We muſt obſerve however, that, although the general Notion of Juſtice and Righteouſneſs be the ſame both with Reſpect to God and Man; yet there is a Manifeſt Difference, as to the Acts and Exerciſe of it. [h] No Man can, by Right, take away that, which is another's, and which he has no Authority to take away, whatever wiſe and good Ends he can ſerve by it: But, conſidering God, as the ſole Lord and Proprietor of the World, he may give, or take away a Man's Riches, and Honours, and Powers, when he pleaſes, without being chargeable with any Injuſtice; for what he gives, and what he takes away, are both his own, and may he not do what he will with his own?

How exerciſed.

IT would ſeem hard, in human Governments, to puniſh a virtuous and innocent Man; to deprive him of his Eſtate, or Honours; to expoſe him to publick Scorn, confine him to a noiſome Priſon, and, at laſt, take away his Life with exquiſite Pains and Torments: But the ſovereign Authority of God extends to all this, when he can ſerve his own Glory, and the wiſe Ends of his Providence by it, without doing any real Injury to his Creatures. His Wiſdom indeed requires, that there ſhould be very wiſe and excellent Reaſons for doing this; and his Goodneſs requires, that ſuch Men ſhould be both greatly ſupported under their Sufferings, and amply rewarded for them: And having provided for this, his ſovereign Dominion gives him Authority to make uſe of the Services of his Creatures, in what Manner he pleaſes; for [i] ſhall we receive Good at the Hands of God, and ſhall we not receive Evil?

IT may be thought ſome Infraction upon human Laws, if an earthly Judge ſhould delay the Releaſement of an innocent Perſon, or defer the Puniſhment of an enormous Criminal; but, conſidering God as the ſupreme and abſolute Judge of the World, he is not tied up to the Rules and Formalities of Law, as inferior Miniſters of Juſtice are; but is left to the ſole Rule of his own ſovereign Will and Wiſdom. 'Tis required indeed of him, that good Men ſhould be rewarded, and the Wicked puniſhed; but there is no Limitation as to Time; that is left in his own Breaſt; only it is expected from him, that, whenever he does reward or puniſh, the good Man ſhould have no Cauſe to complain, nor the bad Man any Reaſon to glory in the Delay of their Rewards or Puniſhments, becauſe the Greatneſs of each ſhall compenſate for all his Delays.

THE Juſtice of Providence therefore does not conſiſt in rooting all bad Men out of the World, and rewarding the good with temporal Felicity; which, conſidering the preſent State of Things, cannot be done without conſtant Miracles, and the viſible Interpoſition of the Divine Power: But the Buſineſs of Providence is, to govern bad Men, and protect the good; to reſtrain and over-rule the Luſts and Paſſions of the one; to make them the Inſtruments and Executioners of his Will, and ſometimes notorious Examples of his Juſtice; and to chaſtiſe the Miſcarriages, and exerciſe the Graces of the other, that their Souls may be found acceptable in the Day of the Lord. If this be but done, the Juſtice of Providence is acquitted, [e] Pſal. xi. 7. [f] Ibid. xcvii. 2. [g] Gen. xviii. 25. [h] Sherlock, of Divine Providence. [i] Job ii. 10.

acquitted, whatever ſeeming Irregularities may appear in the World, not ſo conſonant to the Laws of human Juſtice.

4. Holineſs.

ANOTHER Character of Divine Providence, required in the Government of the World, is Holineſs, as it is oppoſed to all Sin and Impurity; and therefore the Scripture declares, that the [k] Lord is, not only righteous in all his Ways, but holy in all his Works; [l] that he is not a God that has Pleaſure in Wickedneſs, neither ſhall Evil dwell with him; for he hateth all the Workers of Iniquity, he will deſtroy them that ſpeak leaſing; the Lord will abhor both the bloody and deceitful Man. But to ſet this Character in a clear Light, we muſt conſider what the Holineſs of God requires of him, as the Governor of the World; and what it does not.

Wherein it conſiſts, 1. In preſcribing holy Laws.

AS the Governor of the World, [m] it requires of him to preſcribe ſuch a Rule of Life, as is agreeable to Holineſs, and may have a proper Tendency to promote it. That God has preſcribed ſuch a Rule, is evident from the Light of our Minds, as it diſcovers itſelf by Way both of Reaſon and Reflection: For we need only conſult it, in order to know, what is fit and reaſonable to be done; or, if we have done any Thing, whether it is agreeable to the Senſe of our Minds, and the Perfection of our Nature: In which Senſe the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the Gentile World, that [n] they did by Nature the Things contained in the Law, their Conſcience alſo bearing Witneſs, and their Thoughts, the mean while, accuſing, or elſe excuſing one another.

BUT the Law of Nature is not the only Rule we have to follow: God has made a Revelation of his Will, and preſcribed us therein ſuch Rules of Holineſs, as deſerve the Commendation of the Pſalmiſt: The Law of the Lord is an undefiled Law, converting the Soul; the Teſtimony of the Lord is ſure, and giveth Wiſdom to the Simple; the Statutes of the Lord are right, and rejoice the Heart; the Commandment of the Lord is pure, and giveth Light to the Eyes; the Fear of the Lord is clean, and endureth for ever; the Judgments of the Lord are true, and righteous altogether; ſo that the great Complaint is, not that the Laws of God are defective in Point of Purity, but that they are too holy, too righteous for the corrupt State of the World; lay too much Reſtraint upon our Appetites, and require Things above the Power of human Nature to perform.

2. In diſcouraging Vice.

THE Holineſs of God, as the Governor of the World, requires farther, that he ſhould encourage the Practice of Virtue, and diſcourage Wickedneſs, by the viſible Indications of his Approbation or Diſlike. And, that God has abundantly done this, not only the Threats and Promiſes of the other Life, but even what he hath ſet before our Eyes in this, is a ſufficient Demonſtration. [o] If we believe the Scriptures, we muſt acknowledge, that Mortality and Death, and conſequently, all the Infirmities and Decays of Nature, all thoſe Pains, and Sickneſſes, and Diſeaſes, which are not the Effects of our own Sins, nor the Entail of our Anceſtors, are owing to Adam's Tranſgreſſion, and are left upon our Nature, as ſtanding Monuments of God's Diſpleaſure againſt Sin. If we look into human Life, we ſhall find that moſt, if not all the Troubles and Calamities incident to it, are occaſioned by Sin: For what Miſeries could diſturb our Quiet and Repoſe, if all Men were juſt, and honeſt, and charitable, and loved one another, as they do themſelves? Perfect Virtue is not only an harmleſs and innocent, but a very kind and beneficial Thing: And therefore God, in ordering the Circumſtances of our Life ſo, as to make Sin and Miſery, Virtue and Happineſs, inſeparably go together, the one the certain Parent of the other, has given us a ſenſible and convincing Proof of his Abhorrence of the one, and Encouragement of the other. If we look into the World, we ſhall meet with ſtill ſeverer Tokens of God's Indignation againſt Sin, ſuch as War, and Plague, and Peſtilence, and Famine, and Deluges, and Earthquakes, which devour the moſt populous Cities, turn whole Nations into Deſtruction, ſhake the Foundations of the Earth, and make the Pillars of the round World tremble. Theſe are the declared Effects of God's Indignation againſt national Sins; and muſt therefore be ſuppoſed to proceed from his immediate Infliction: [p] Son of Man, when the Land ſinneth againſt me, by tranſgreſſing grievouſly, then will I ſtretch out mine Hand upon it, and will break the Staff of the Bread thereof, and will ſend Famine upon it; or if I bring a Sword upon it, and ſay, Go through the Land, ſo that I cut off Man and Beaſt from it; or if I ſend a Peſtilence into it, and pour out my Fury upon it in Blood, to cut off from it Man and Beaſt; though Noah, Daniel, and Job were in it: As I live, ſaith the Lord God, they ſhall deliver neither Son nor Daughter; they ſhall but deliver their own Souls by their Righteouſneſs.

[o] Sherlock, of Divine Providence. [p] Ezek. xiv. 13, &c.

So far then, as the Preſcription of good and wholeſome Laws, the Miſeries incident to human Nature, the Connection of Sin and Suffering, of Virtue and Happineſs, and the many ſore Judgments and Calamities, that are inflicted on a wicked People, together with the diſtinguiſhing Preſervation of the Righteous, are Encouragements to Virtue, and Diſcouragements to Vice, the Providence of God has expreſſed its Concern for the Promotion of Holineſs: And we muſt not therefore infer, that the Permiſſion of Sin in the World is any juſt Imputation upon it.

3. But not in prohibiting it.

THE internal Act of Sin is nothing elſe, but the bad Choice of a Man's Will, upon the Preſentation of any Object: And if God muſt not allow of this, he muſt not allow us to will or to chuſe any Thing, that is wicked; muſt conſequently chain up our Wills, and over-rule our Minds, to incline us to Good, and Good only; which is far from being the Government of free Agents, and deſtroys their very Capacity to Virtue or Vice.

IF then the Government of Mankind, conſidered as rational and free Agents, requires that God ſhould leave them to the Liberty of their Choice, which is the only Thing capable of Rewards or Puniſhments; then is it no reaſonable Objection againſt the Holineſs of Providence, that God permits Men to chuſe wickedly; that he does not always, by an irreſiſtible and ſovereign Power, hinder the internal Act of Sin; eſpecially conſidering, that God has given Mankind all thoſe Aſſiſtances of Grace, and Reſtraints upon their Luſts and Paſſions, that are conſiſtent with the Liberty of their Actions; inſomuch that even bad Men muſt acknowledge (if they would confeſs what they feel) the Strugglings, they find in their Mind, before they can yield to the Temptations of Sin; that, in ſome Caſes, (eſpecially at their firſt Entrance upon a wicked Courſe) natural Modeſty, in others natural Pity and Compaſſion, and in others, a natural Greatneſs and Generoſity of Mind, give a frequent Check to their Enormities: That, at firſt, they bluſh at the Thoughts of any Wickedneſs, and feel the Remonſtrances of Conſcience upon Reflection; tremble at the Apprehenſion of a future Judgment, or ſome preſent Vengeance to overtake them; and can never ſin with Eaſe and Security, until they have eraſed the Thoughts of God and another World. Such Care has God taken, to make Sin uneaſy to the Minds of Men, and to reconcile them to the Love of Virtue; and if, after all this, they will be wicked, (as free Agents may be, if they pleaſe) this can be no Blemiſh to the Holineſs of Providence, becauſe it is no Fault of Providence to leave free Agents to the Liberty of their Choice.

THE external Act of Sin may be a natural or political Evil, but the moral Evil is in the Will and Choice; and therefore, if it is no Blemiſh to the Holineſs of Providence, that God permits Men to conceive Iniquity in their Hearts, it can be no juſt Imputation, that he ſuffers them to proceed to the Commiſſion. [q] To hinder them, there is no other Way, but either to deprive them of Life, or of their natural Powers of acting, which would be a perpetual Violation of the Order of Nature. To ſuffer them, may be of more Uſe than Damage to the World: It may be a Means to make Sin infamous and hateful, and to expoſe the Sinners themſelves to Shame and Puniſhment, which may both deter others, and bring them to a Senſe of their Offences; beſides the many wiſe Deſigns, that God can bring about by the Permiſſion of Sin, both for the Good of Mankind, and the Advancement of his own Glory. So that there is no Obligation upon God, in Point of Holineſs, to prevent the Commiſſion of Sin, though, conſidering the ſad Degeneracy of Mankind, and the many timely Diſcoveries of publick Treaſons, and of wicked Deſigns againſt the Lives and Fortunes of private Men, there is Reaſon to believe, that he hinders an hundred Times more, than he permits.

5. Goodneſs.

5. I MENTION but one Character more of Divine Providence, requiſite in the Government of the World, and that is Goodneſs; which is not indeed ſo properly a Subject for our Enquiries, as for our conſtant and devout Meditations. We ſee, and feel, and taſte it every Day: Our Being, our Preſervation, and the Comforts of our Lives are all owing to it; nor can we once conſider either what we are, or what we enjoy, without being under ſtrong Engagements to praiſe the Lord for his Goodneſs, and to declare the Wonders, that he doth for the Children of Men. [r] But to form a right Notion of the Nature and Exerciſe of God's Goodneſs,

How exerciſed.

in the Government of the World, we muſt obſerve, that, at the firſt Production of all Things, the Divine Goodneſs diſplayed itſelf in a moſt beautiful and glorious Scene; for the new-made World and the new-created Man were as perfect, as the Idea of their Natures in the Divine Mind, and as happy as their Faculties would bear. But Man did not continue what God had made him: He ſinned; and by his Sin brought Death and Miſery into the World, which changed the Face of Things, and made a mighty Alteration in God's Conduct. The World before was all Happineſs and Tranquillity, without any Thing to deface the Beauty, or diſturb the Harmony of it; but, upon the Admiſſion of Sin, God's Juſtice interpoſed (as it needs muſt do, when Mankind became Sinners) to limit and confine the Divine Benignity from exerting itſelf ſo graciouſly, as it had done before.

'JUSTICE requires the Puniſhment of Sinners, but Goodneſs is inclined to ſpare; and Wiſdom judges when, and in what Manner, it is fit to puniſh, or to ſpare. An incurable Sinner is the Object of ſtrict and rigorous Juſtice; a corrigible Sinner is the Object both of Juſtice and Goodneſs; his Sin deſerves Correction and Puniſhment; but that he is corrigible, makes him the Object both of Patience and Diſcipline. Hence it is, that the preſent State of Mankind, in this World, is a State of Trial and Probation, in order to reclaim and reform Sinners, by the various Methods of Grace and Providence; and that we are forbid to expect any other Tokens of the Divine Goodneſs, than what ſuch a State will admit of.

IT will not indeed admit of compleat and perfect Happineſs, which is inconſiſtent with the Diſcipline of this Life, where Miſeries and Afflictions become neceſſary, to wean good Men from the Love of the World, and to lay a Reſtraint upon the bad; but the Goodneſs of God requires that our preſent Habitation ſhould be tolerable, and attended with its Pleaſures, as well as its Pains; for there would be no Room for the Exerciſe of many Moral and Chriſtian Virtues, no Encouragement for Faith, and Hope, and Truſt in God, nor any Occaſion for Self-denial and Contempt of the World, if it were nothing elſe, but a Scene of Woe and Miſery: It requires, that there ſhould be more Good than Evil, more Happineſs than Miſery in the World; that the Bad ſhould not be puniſhed beyond the Proportion of their Faults, nor [t] the Rod of the Wicked come too often into the Lot of the Righteous, leſt the Righteous alſo put forth his Hand to Wickedneſs: It requires, that God ſhould be patient and long-ſuffering with Sinners, and not only give them Time to repent, but invite and encourage them to do it, by all the Arts and Methods of Endearment; for Hope is as powerful a Principle as Fear; and Love and Kindneſs may melt ſome Tempers into Compliance, whom Severity and Judgments cannot bow: And laſtly it requires, that he ſhould make ſome remarkable Difference between the Bad and the Good; for ſince the Deſign of Providence, in a State of Trial, is to encourage Virtue, and deter Men from Sin, there muſt be ſome viſible Diſcrimination, that thoſe, who ſee it, may ſay, [u] Verily there is a Reward for the Righteous, and doubtleſs there is a God that judgeth the Earth.

THIS is all, that can, in Reaſon, be expected from the Divine Goodneſs, as it relates to a State of Diſcipline, which muſt be conſidered in the Government of the World: And that God has effectually taken Care of this, we ſhall have Occaſion to make appear, when we come to the Objections, wherein this Attribute is concerned.

SECT. III.

OBJECTIONS againſt PROVIDENCE.

ONE Objection, that ſeems to affect the Providence of God, as a Matter above his Power to do, is the vaſt Multitude of Beings, that are in the World; the Variety of our Thoughts and Motions, and the many minute Occurrences, that happen here below; which he can ſcarce be ſuppoſed to attend to, all at one Time, without the utmoſt Difficulty and Diſtraction: For thus we find the Roman Orator repreſenting

1. 'Tis above God's Power to govern all Things.

repreſenting [x] the Senſe of the Epicureans upon this Subject. "If there be ſuch a "God in the World, as rules and governs it; if he takes Care about the Conſerva- "tion of the Courſe of the Luminaries of Heaven, the Succeſſion of the Times and "Seaſons of the Year, and the ſeveral Viciſſitudes and Orders of Things here below; "if he contemplates the vaſt Tracts of Land, and the wide Sea, and provides for "the Life and Welfare of Mankind; then truly has he a great deal of troubleſome "and laborious Work to do." But this is meaſuring God by ourſelves, and judging of the Divine Operations by the Model of our own narrow Capacities. We cannot conceive how God can govern all Things in the World: But neither do the Beaſts conceive, how we Men make Ships, and tame the unruly Ocean; how we frame and govern Kingdoms and Common-wealths; how we meaſure the Courſes of the Stars; how we take Obſervations of heavenly Bodies; how we diſcourſe of Religion and Divine Matters: And yet it is certain, that we do all theſe Things, and equally certain, that the wiſeſt and greateſt Men are infinitely inferior to the ſupreme God, much more than the meaneſt Beaſts are to them.

This confuted.

WE cannot conceive how God ſhould inſpect all Things at once here below: But if we look up to that glorious Luminary of Heaven, the Sun, we may perceive how, in the ſame Moment, it diffuſes its Light and Heat into all the ſeveral Parts and Corners of the wide Earth, and peeps thro' every Crevice of every, the moſt ſecret Place thereof: How then can we ſee this wonderfully diffuſive Influence of a created Light, and not allow of a far more extenſive Efficacy in the great Creator and Father of Light? The Diſtance from Heaven to Earth may perhaps be thought too wide for God's Inſpection to reach: But if we open our Eyes, we ſtraight perceive, that we, in a Moment, can dart our Sight to Heaven; and how then can we think, but that he, who made us ſee from Earth to Heaven, ſhould himſelf [y] look down from Heaven, with ten thouſand Times more Facility, to behold all the Children of Men, and from the Habitation of his Dwelling, to conſider all them, that dwell on the Face of the Earth,

WE cannot conceive how God is able to guide and direct all Things at once, becauſe a Multitude of Buſineſs, we find, is uneaſy to us, by Reaſon of the Weakneſs of our Faculties; But the Lord, [z] the everlaſting God, the Creator of the Earth, fainteth not, neither is he weary. [a] He acts with the ſame Eaſe, wherewith he exiſts, knows all Things by one omniſcient Thought, and does all Things by one omnipotent Act; and therefore he can provide for all the World, as well as for one ſingle Man, and govern all the Beings in it, with the ſame Facility, as if he had only one Being to take Care of: [b] For if we ourſelves can manage one Buſineſs, that we thoroughly underſtand, why may not God, for the ſame Reaſon, manage all? He certainly underſtands all, much better than we do one; and therefore, ſuppoſing the Things in the World to be infinite, yet ſince his Knowledge and Power are likewiſe infinite, there is the very ſame Proportion of infinite to infinite, as of one to one.

2. 'Tis beneath his Majeſty.

THERE is another Objection againſt Providence, that runs in a contrary Strain, making it beneath the Majeſty of God, to concern himſelf with the little Affairs of this World: For [c] thus we find the Epicurean brought in again by [d] Cicero: "God "deſpiſes ſuch Things as theſe, ſays he, he does not trouble himſelf about every "Countryman's Grounds and Vineyards, nor takes he any Notice of the Damage "they receive by Blaſting, or Hail, or the like: Theſe are poor inconſiderable "Things, and not worth the Care of the ſupreme Being:" [e] But this is a very irrational Thought, proceeding from the Want of a right Knowledge of the Deity, and due Apprehenſions of his tranſcendent Nature, which is not like ours, finite and ſtinted, but infinite and immenſe; ſpreading itſelf as wide as the Univerſe, and having, conſequently, the leaſt and loweſt Matters under its Inſpection and Government.

This confuted.

How far God is concerned in the Government of all Events, even ſuch as depend upon natural Cauſes, is what we have ſufficiently conſidered before; and have only Need to obſerve farther, that, ſince the World is a Dominion of ſuch vaſt Extent, the [x] Si in ipſo mundo Deus ineſt aliquis, qui regat, qui gubernet, qui curſus aſtrorum, mutationes temporum, rerum viciſſitudines ordineſque conſervet, terras & maria contemplans, hominum commoda vitaſque tueatur; næ ille eſt implicatus moleſtis negotiis & operoſis. the moſt glorious Employment, that the largeſt Mind can undertake, muſt certainly be to rule and govern it; for what can we conceive ſo great and Godlike, as to ſit at the Helm of this floating Univerſe, and ſteer all its Motions to their reſpective Ends, with a ſteady and unerring Hand?

'TIS far therefore from being derogatory to the Majeſty of God, to undertake the Adminiſtration of the Affairs of this World; and, if we conſider farther, that he himſelf is the Father of all this great Family of Beings, it cannot but be conſiſtent with his Goodneſs, to have Concern for his own Off-ſpring: For why ſhould it be below him to take Care of any Thing, that it was not below him to create? The leaſt and moſt inconſiderable Creatures that we ſee, are always of the niceſt and moſt elegant Compoſition: The Gnat (which is [f] Pliny's beloved Inſtance) has Taſte, and Sight, and Smell, and Muſcles, and Joints, and Sinews, of a much finer Texture, than thoſe of a larger Animal; and, if God has been pleaſed to expend ſo much Pains (if any Thing were painful to him) in the Formation of an Inſect, it would ſavour of Capriciouſneſs in him, not to think it, afterwards, a fit Object of his Care. And therefore, to avoid the Danger of ſuch a Miſconſtruction, our bleſſed Saviour has aſſured us, that [g] the Fowls of the Air, and the Lilies of the Field, [h] the Sparrows in the Hedge, and the Hairs on our Head, i. e. the moſt trivial and inſignificant Things, we can imagine, are under God's providential Care and Obſervation.

3. Delay of Rewards and Puniſhments.

"BUT if God concerns himſelf about ſuch minute Things, his Care, one would "think, ſhould certainly extend to greater; and yet we ſee, that he takes no Cog- "nizance of human Affairs; for if he did, why ſhould Rewards and Puniſhments "be delayed ſo long, and placed ſo incongruouſly? This is inconſiſtent with the "Wiſdom of Government, as it gives Countenance to Vice, and Diſcouragement "to Virtue; for [i] when Sentence againſt an evil Work is not executed ſpeedily, when "the Righteous are brought low, and the Wicked allowed to flouriſh, the Heart of "the Sons of Men is fully ſet in them to do Evil." A ſpeedy Execution of Rewards and Puniſhments is indeed a great Security to any civil Government, and a mighty Encouragement to all Manner of Virtue; but in God's Adminiſtration of the World, there is not that Neceſſity for it, becauſe he has ſo contrived human Nature, that Wickedneſs is its own Puniſhment, and Virtue, in ſome Meaſure, its own Reward; that the bad Man muſt be miſerable, the good Man cannot entirely be ſo, come what will.

This confuted.

THE bad Man, I ſay, muſt be miſerable; becauſe there is nothing that can make a Man miſerable in this World, but what is the natural and neceſſary Effect of ſome Sin or other. [k] If Pain and Torment of the Mind be Miſery; furious and irregular Paſſions, a confounding Shame, diſtracting and terrifying Fears, raging Anger, Malice, and Revenge, and great Perplexity and Anxiety of Thoughts will make a Man miſerable; and yet theſe are the neceſſary Product of Sin. Shame ariſes from a Conſciouſneſs of Guilt; for nothing is truly infamous, but what is wicked: The Virtuous may be afraid of ſome Events, as well as other Men; but 'tis Sin, which diſtracts Men with thoſe guilty Fears, that are ſo intolerable to human Nature: An uneaſy Concern and Anxiety of Thought ariſe from a Diffidence of God's providential Care: And as for the Paſſions of Anger, Malice, and Revenge, and the like, they owe their Original chiefly to Pride, Covetouſneſs, Injuſtice, and other ſuch ſelfiſh Vices, as make Men eager to heap Injuries upon one another, and impatient to bear them. If the Man is to be affected by outward Circumſtances, then is Pain and Sickneſs, Poverty and Diſgrace, an untimely or an infamous Death, a very ſore Miſery; and yet theſe are the natural Effects of Sin: For Luſt, Gluttony, and Drunkenneſs, will deſtroy our Health, and afflict us with tormenting Diſeaſes; they will ſhorten our Lives, and waſte our Eſtates, and make us infamous: And for the Proof of this, go viſit the Hoſpitals and Gaols; ſee there the miſerable Spectacles of Rottenneſs and Poverty; and enquire into the Cauſes of them, and how many Martyrs there are to Intemperance, or Luſt, or ſome other deſtructive Vice: Enquire into the Decays of noble and [f] Pliny, in conſidering the Body of a Gnat, which, as himſelf owns, is none of the leaſt Inſects, has made many Queries full of Aſtoniſhment and Admiration, where Nature has diſpoſed ſo many Senſes in ſo ſmall a Creature. *Ubi viſum prætendit? Ubi Guſtatum applicavit? Ubi Odoratum inſeruit? Ubi vero truculentam illam & portione maximam vocem ingeneravit? Quâ ſubtilitate pennas adnexuit? Prælongavit pedum Crura? flouriſhing Families; how goodly Lordſhips and Manors came ſo often to change their Maſters; and what makes Riches ſuch uncertain and mutable Things: Look into the Streets, and ſee what Crowds of miſerable and diſtreſſed People Sloth, and Idleneſs, and Diſhoneſty have ſent thither; and then conſider, what loud Clamours we ſhould have againſt the Juſtice of Providence, if Men ſuffered half as much for the Sake of Piety and Virtue, as they do in the Service of their Luſts.

BUT now, on the other Hand, Virtue has its natural Rewards: It gives Peace and Satisfaction to the Mind, and ſo governs our Paſſions and Appetites, that they cauſe no Pain or Diſturbance in us. It is the beſt Means to preſerve our Health, to increaſe our Fortune, to procure Friends, to reconcile Enemies, to give us Credit and Reputation, to eſcape the Injuries of bad Men, and to paſs thro' the World with as little Juſtling and Oppoſition as poſſible, i. e. tho' it be not of itſelf ſufficient to make a good Man compleatly happy in this World, (for there is no ſuch Thing to be expected) yet it is the only Thing that can make him as happy, as he can be here, both by preventing many Miſchiefs, which other Men incur, and by enabling him to bear thoſe patiently, which it cannot prevent. If then the Wiſdom of God has ſo contrived the Matter, that Virtue, in a great Meaſure, is its own Reward, and Vice its own Puniſhment; there is not that Neceſſity for any viſible Interpoſition in the Government of the World: 'Tis but letting Things go on in their regular Courſe, and the neceſſary Effects, which Virtue and Vice produce, will bring upon Men their certain Puniſhments and Rewards.

BUT admitting theſe Rewards and Puniſhments, which God has interwoven in the Nature of Things, be not ſo certain, as is pretended; yet the Conſideration of the State wherein we live, a State of Trial and Probation, not of Reward and Puniſhment, is a ſufficient Argument for God's Delay and Long-ſuffering, in this Particular: For [l] if God were always crowning the Righteous, and dragging Offenders to Execution, ſuch a Procedure would determine our Liberty, and leave us no Room for the Exerciſe of our Faith and Ingenuity: For then Rewards and Puniſhments would be ſo ſenſibly and continually preſent with us, and ſo urgently preſs upon our Hopes and Fears, that it would be impoſſible for us not to believe in God, and next to impoſſible not to obey; and being thus forced to believe in and obey, there would be no more Excellency in our Virtue and Piety, than there is Charity in a Miſer, who lends his Money upon Aſſurance of twenty per Cent. or Loyalty in a Traitor, that diſcovers his Conſpirators within Sight of the Rack. 'Tis for our Sakes therefore, and we ought to account it our Privilege, as well as our Happineſs, that [m] God is ſlack, as ſome Men account Slackneſs, in the Diſpenſation of our Rewards and Puniſhments, ſince thereby he gives us an Opportunity of ſerving him, not out of Neceſſity, but of Choice; and of making our Faith and Obedience become our Virtue and our Excellency, becauſe we believe and obey without Force, nay, againſt ſome ſlight Temptations to the contrary.

INSTANCES there are, all along, of God's Love of Virtue, and Hatred of Sin; and, upon proper Occaſions, Examples have never been wanting of his rewarding the Good, and puniſhing the Bad, ſufficient to acquit his providential Juſtice; but, ſince in this State, the Good and Bad are ſo intermixed in the ſame Country, in the ſame Neighbourhood, and ſometimes in the ſame Family; [n] 'tis impoſſible for him to puniſh all the Wicked, without involving ſome of the Good in their Calamities, or to reward all the Good, without making ſome of the Wicked partake in their Felicities. The Good, unleſs their Tempers were altered, could not ſee the perpetual Executions, and amazing Miſeries of Sinners, without having their Compaſſion moved, and their Eaſe and Felicity diſturbed at the Sight. Many of them may have very wicked Relations, Parents, or Brethren, or Children, or thoſe that are nearer to them, whoſe Miſeries, unleſs they were diveſted of natural Affection, they could not behold, without a grieved Heart, and a weeping Eye; and therefore God, in pure Pity to Mankind, defers the Time of ſtrict Retribution, until he has an Opportunity of making an exact Separation between the Righteous and the Wicked, which the promiſcuous Condition of this World will not permit: [o] Let both grow together until the Harveſt; and, in the Time of Harveſt, I will ſay unto the Reapers, Gather ye together firſt the Tares, and bind them into Bundles to burn them; but gather the Wheat into my Barn.

" BUT,

[l] Scott's Chriſtian Life, Vol. I. [m] 2 Pet. iii. 9. [n] Sherlock, of Judgment. [o] Matt. xiii. 30.

" BUT, if Providence be not engaged to make ſuch ſpeedy Manifeſtations of its " Juſtice, in rewarding the Righteous, and puniſhing the Wicked; yet certainly " there ought, in the mean Time, to be ſome viſible Diſtinction or other; whereas " the Goods and Evils of this Life are diſtributed with ſo careleſs an Hand, that " the Obſervation of the wiſe Preacher ſeems every Day to be verified, [p] all Things " come alike to all: There is one Event to the Righteous and the Wicked, to the Clean " and to the Unclean, to him that ſacrificeth, and him that ſacrificeth not. Nay, " well it were, if their Portions were equal; but we very often ſee ſome Men " flowing in Wealth and Plenty, ſurrounded with all the Pomp, and having all the " Pleaſures of Life at their Command; while others (without any viſible Cauſe " for ſuch Diſcrimination) are expoſed to all the Miſeries and Hardſhips of a poor " and deſpicable Condition." Now this Objection, if thoroughly looked into, has no other Foundation than this, —— that God has been pleaſed to appoint different Ranks and Conditions of Men, ſome high, ſome low, ſome rich, and ſome poor; which is ſo far from being an Argument againſt the Goodneſs of Providence, that it is a glorious Demonſtration of it. [q] For how many of the Conveniencies and Beauties of civil Life are owing to the Invention and Improvement of Arts and Sciences, or other continued Effects of human Induſtry? How much Evil is prevented in the World, by the Obligation Men are under, for their neceſſary or more commodious Subſiſtence, of minding their own Buſineſs, and working with their Hands the Things that are good? The Inequality of our Conditions [r] makes ſome induſtrious to provide for themſelves and Families; inſpires others with Emulation to raiſe their Fortunes, gives Life and Spirit to the World, and makes it a buſy Scene of Action, wherein we are labouring to keep what we have, and make new Acquiſitions, to excel our Equals, and rival thoſe that are above us: And though, in this Purſuit, much Iniquity may be committed; yet that is owing to the Depravity of our Tempers, and not the Inequality of our Fortunes. Our Fortunes indeed lay us under no Conſtraint to uſe any indirect Means for their Advancement; and, ſo long as they are removed from extreme Want and Poverty, are not exceeded, by the moſt Opulent, in the true Enjoyments of Life. There is very little Difference in Eating and Drinking, while we have wherewithal to ſatisfy Nature; for Appetite makes every Thing delicious. [s] The Sleep of a labouring Man is ſweet, whether he eat little or much, but the Abundance of the Rich will not ſuffer him to ſleep: And though the hard Labour of the Poor be not a Matter of ſo eaſy a Contemplation; yet it is much more tolerable, than Gout and Stone, and thoſe many ſharp or languiſhing Diſeaſes, which ſo commonly attend the Softneſs and Luxury of the Rich.

4. Unequal Diſtributions.

This confuted.

SINCE therefore an unequal Diſtribution of the good and evil Things of this Life has ſo many Benefits, and few, or no Inconveniencies in it; [t] God, who ſees them with far better Eyes than we, knows very well that they are Trifles, in Compariſon of thoſe endleſs Goods or Evils, we muſt enjoy or ſuffer in another World; and therefore he looks on it (as juſtly he may) a Diſparagement to his infinite Wiſdom, to be exact and curious in proportioning theſe momentary Allotments to the Merit or Demerit of immortal Creatures. We indeed entertain other Notions of them, but 'tis becauſe we look upon them through the magnifying Glaſs of our own Imaginations; but why ſhould he partake of the Errors of a vulgar Opinion? He knows very well, that the beſt of them are too mean to be our Crown, the worſt of them too light to be our Puniſhment, and therefore it is no Wonder, if he, who ſendeth down his Rain upon the Juſt and Unjuſt, in other trivial Diſpenſations, makes no viſible Diſcrimination.

" BUT, though no Regard be due to the Things themſelves, yet ſome Reſpect " ſhould be had to the Perſons of Men; and if a ſtrict Equality cannot be expected " in this Life; yet ſuch a palpable Incongruity in the Divine Diſpenſations, ſuch a " manifeſt Oppreſſion of the Righteous, and Exaltation of the Wicked, is hardly " conſiſtent with the Notions we have of God. And yet, if we look into the Ad- " miniſtration of Things, we may find Reaſon enough to take up the Complaint, " that Job uttered, and ſay, [u] Wherefore do the Wicked live, and become old, and are " mighty in Power? Their Seed is eſtabliſhed in their Sight; their Houſes are ſafe " from Fear, neither is the Rod of God upon them: They ſpend their Days in " Mirth and Wealth, and in a Moment, with a quick and eaſy Paſſage, go down " to the Grave: Whereas I, he might have ſaid, (and doubtleſs he alluded to it) " I, who " Sighing comes before I eat, and my Roarings are poured out like the Waters, and I

" long for Death, but it comes not."

This confuted. THIS triumphant State of the Wicked, and extreme Wretchedneſs of the Righteous, has, in all Times and Ages, been a popular Argument againſt Providence; and therefore, to give it a full Anſwer, we ſhould do well to conſider, [a] that, as Men always pity the Miſerable, and envy the Proſperous, theſe Paſſions naturally bribe their Judgments to think worſe of the one, and better of the other, than they deſerve: For thoſe, whom we pity, we are inclined to love, and thoſe, whom we love, we are inclined to think well of; as, on the contrary, thoſe, whom we envy, we are inclined to hate, and thoſe, whom we hate, we are inclined to think ill of; by which Means it comes to paſs, that the Miſerable run away with our Eſteem of being very good, and the Proſperous too often fall under our Cenſure of being very bad Men; whereas, could we look into the Cloſet of their Hearts, we might perceive Reaſon to alter our Opinion. For, as there are many cloſe Hypocrites that, under a mighty Shew and Oſtentation of Piety, ſecretly indulge themſelves in ſuch Abominations, as deſerve a ſevere Chaſtiſement from God; ſo, there are Abundance of good Men, that, in the Courſe of a modeſt and unaffected Godlineſs, make little Shew in the Eyes of the World, and yet engage the Favour of him, that ſeeth it in ſecret, and will reward it openly. 'Till therefore we can both penetrate into other Mens Hearts, and diveſt our own of their Partiality, we are under a manifeſt Incapacity of judging, who are the good, and who are the bad Men; and conſequently, whether God's Dealings with them be, or be not, according to Right.

THIS however we know, without any laborious Enquiry, [b] that a good Man, in any Condition on this Side ſtarving, is, ordinarily, in this Life, far more happy, than the moſt gay and proſperous Sinner; whoſe outward Glory and Greatneſs is uſually nothing, but the gaudy Cover of a tragical Inſide; of a Mind that is tortured with Pride and Envy, with boundleſs Hopes, inſatiable Deſires, and horrible Reflections, which ſpoil and embitter all his Enjoyments; while the good Man, under his mean and ſimple Appearance, carries a great and happy Soul, a contented Mind, a chearful Heart, and a ſmiling Conſcience, that improves every Enjoyment, and makes his homely Morſel out-reliſh the moſt elaborated Luxuries.

WE miſtake the true Notion of Happineſs then, when we place it in the Outſide only: Nor can we tell, what properly to pronounce concerning the State of any Man, until we ſee the Effects and Conſequences that attend it. We ſee, for Inſtance, a good Man oppreſſed with Sorrows and Afflictions, and a bad Man crowned with Pleaſures and Proſperities; and conſidering theſe Things a-part, we are apt to conclude, that the one is in an happy, and the other in a very wretched Condition: But did we, at the ſame Time, ſee the Conſequents of the one's Adverſity, and the other's Proſperity, 'tis probable that our Sentiments would be quite contrary, viz. that the good Man's Adverſity was a Bleſſing, and the bad Man's Proſperity a Curſe. For I dare venture to ſay, that good Men reap more ſubſtantial Benefit from their Afflictions, than bad Men do from their Proſperities. The one ſmarts indeed at preſent, but what follows? Perhaps his Mind is cured by it, of ſome Diſeaſe, that is ten Times worſe to him, than his outward Affliction; of Avarice or Impatience, of Envy or Diſcontent, of Pride or Vanity of Spirit: His Riches are leſſened, but his Virtues are improved by it; and what he has loſt in Health or Wealth, in Pleaſure or Honour, he hath gained, with vaſt Advantage, in Wiſdom and Goodneſs, in Tranquillity and Self-Enjoyment. On the other Hand, the bad Man triumphs and rejoiceth at preſent, but what follows? His Proſperity only bloats and ſwells him; makes him proud and inſolent, griping and oppreſſive; increaſes his Deſires, inrages his Luſts, fills his Mind with Cares, and his Conſcience with Guilt, and by theſe woeful Effects inflames his Reckoning with God, and treaſures up Wrath for him againſt the Day of Wrath. [c] Well was it for me therefore, ſays holy David, that I was afflicted; for, before I was afflicted, I went aſtray, but now I have kept thy Commandments: But, on the contrary, [d] when the Wicked ſpring as the Graſs, (as

(as the ſame Author obſerves) and all the Workers of Iniquity do flouriſh, [e] they ſhall be rooted out at the laſt.

[f] SENECA has compoſed an excellent Treatiſe upon this Subject, in order to remove the Difficulties, that are raiſed againſt Providence, in afflicting the Good, and proſpering the Bad; and, among other wiſe Solutions, there is this Paſſage, that muſt not eſcape our Obſervation. "When you ſee the righteous Men, ſays he, "Men deſerving the Love and Favour of the Gods, groan in Pain, ſweat under "their Travel, and obliged to ſtruggle with Adverſity; and, on the contrary, wicked "and flagitious Wretches paſs their Days in Eaſe, and live in Plenty; call to mind, "that we ourſelves are willing, our Children ſhould be modeſt and ſober, whereas "we give Licence to our Slaves, whom we do not value: We are ſevere to our "Children, and indulgent to our Slaves: Paſs then the ſame Judgment upon God; "the Regard he has for the righteous Man ſuffers him not to live in Pleaſure; he "brings him to Trial, and inures him to Hardſhips, and ſo prepares him for him-"ſelf." Where the Philoſopher has happily hit upon the ſame Sentiment with the Apoſtle, [g] Whom the Lord loveth, he chaſteneth, and ſcourgeth every Son whom he receiveth. If ye endure Chaſtening, God dealeth with you as with Sons: For what Son is he, whom the Father chaſteneth not? But if ye be without Chaſtiſement, whereof all are Partakers, then are ye Baſtards, and not Sons.

THERE is therefore no knowing the Love or Hatred of God by the preſent Diſpenſations of Providence: The Good are often afflicted for the Chaſtiſement of their Sins, or the Exerciſe of their Virtues, which looks like Hatred; and the bad Men are often pampered with Eaſe and Plenty, and promoted to Honour and Renown, which looks like Love, when the Intentions of God are the very reverſe. Theſe Inconſiſtencies continue for ſome Time; nor can we conceive what Conſtruction to put upon them, until we carry our Eye a little farther, and obſerve the different Cataſtrophes that attend them. [h] Job's Sufferings were a Puzzle to his Friends, that came to viſit him, and might, to this Day, have been a Riddle to us, had his Story broke off in the Middle; but now, that we are acquainted with the Reaſons of God's ſending them, and with the great Proſperity, wherewith he afterwards requited them, we not only acquit, but applaud the Goodneſs of Providence, in providing us with ſuch a conſpicuous Pattern for our Imitation. Some few Scenes in the Life of a proſperous Villain may ſeem very ſtrange and unnaccountable; but, waiting with Patience, until the whole Drama be concluded, the Spectator goes out with an [i] Oh! How ſuddenly do they conſume, periſh, and come to a fearful End! God ſeldom fails to manifeſt the Reaſons of his Diſpenſations in this Life; but if he ſhould, 'tis only to give us a more perfect Aſſurance of (what ſilences all Objections) [k] the Revelation of his righteous Judgment, when he will render to every Man according to his Deeds; to them, who by patient Continuance in Well-doing ſeek for Glory, and Honour, and Immortality, eternal Life; but to them, who obey not the Truth, but obey Unrighteouſneſs, Indignation, and Wrath, Tribulation, and Anguiſh upon every Soul of Man that doeth Evil.

6. The many Miſeries that are in Life.

"BUT, if there be a juſt and gracious Providence over-ruling the World, how "comes it to permit ſuch ſad Calamities to befal its Subjects? Its Care ſhould be, "one would think, to make their Habitations as commodious as poſſible: And "yet, if we look into the World, the Miſeries incident to human Life, whether "from natural or moral Cauſes, are ſo many, ſo great, ſo univerſal, that they "quite out-ballance the Pleaſures and Comforts of it; inſomuch, that he, who "gives himſelf Liberty to think, muſt neceſſarily come into the wiſe Man's Con-"cluſion: [l] Wherefore I praiſed the Dead, which are already dead, more than the "Living, which are yet alive: Yea, better is he than both they, who hath not yet "been, who hath not yet ſeen the evil Work, that is done under the Sun." This looks like a ſharp Satire upon human Life, and, were it univerſally true, would be a ſad Reproach to the Goodneſs of Providence in the Government of the World; but to come firſt to a fair State of the Caſe, and then to the Senſe of the Preacher's Words.

As to natural Evils.

ONE Part of this Objection againſt Providence is taken from ſome Irregularities, that uſually occur in the Courſe of natural Things. [m] Thus, the Hopes and Expectations of a fruitful Spring are many Times fruſtrated by ſome unſeaſonable

Blaſts or Winds, or by the ſudden Inundation of a River. We obſerve frequently whole Countries overwhelmed by the Irruption of the Sea, and fair Cities buried in their Ruins, by the Violence of an Earthquake. What Wrecks and Miſeries do ariſe at Sea from outrageous Tempeſts and Hurricanes? What Havock is frequently made at Land by the Fury of Winds? Thunder and Lightning have done vaſt Injuries; the ſudden Eruptions of Fire have ruined many Places; and the Devaſtations of a Peſtilence have reduced many Kingdoms to the utmoſt Extremity, &c. But, in Anſwer to theſe, we are to conſider, [n] that as there are different Sorts of Bodies in the World, ſubject to different Laws; and endowed with different Powers and Qualities; unleſs the uniform Laws of the Creation were to be altered or ſuſpended every Moment, it cannot otherwiſe be, but that they muſt ſometimes interfere with one another, and produce many Irregularities, which are the natural Effects of ſuch different Compoſitions. But then, [o] theſe Irregularities are ſo few and inconſiderable, when we reflect upon the whole Courſe and Syſtem of Nature, that they derogate no more from the providential Care of God, than the little Flaws and Blemiſhes, which happen in the Stones of the nobleſt Fabricks, detract from the Art and Ingenuity of the Architect.

IT is to be conſidered farther, that the ſeveral Irregularities, here mentioned, are not of ſo great Damage to the World, but that the Benefits, which attend them, are many Times greater. If the Labour and Expectation of the Huſbandman be ſubject to Caſualties, the Reſidue will bear the better Price, and beget a greater Diligence in him, which, in the End, makes a full Return: If fruitful Meadows be, for a Time, waſted by the Diſorders of a Flood, the Injury is recompenſed by the rich Mud and Fatneſs, it leaves behind it: If ſome Countries are expoſed to the Irruptions of the Sea, they are induced, by ſuch Misfortunes, to truſt to their Ships, and, by that Means, become the wealthieſt Traders in the World: If Earthquakes and Tempeſts ſubvert Houſes, by looſening the Roots of Trees, they contribute to their Fruitfulneſs, and, by opening the Bowels of the Earth, diſcover many Times new Treaſures. Strong Winds are often injurious, but they are always of Uſe to agitate the Air, and give it a due Mixture: [p] Thunder and Lightning may do here and there ſome Miſchief, but nothing in Compariſon to the Benefit of their conſuming thoſe noxious Steams and Exhalations, without which there would be no living. Sulphureous Eruptions may look terrible, but their Aſhes enrich the Places, where they happen: Nay, even Peſtilence itſelf (ſo great a Slaughter as it ſeems to make of Mankind) is generally ſucceeded with healthful Seaſons; for, by ripening the Diſeaſes and Corruptions of Nature, and by drawing them into one common Sore or Iſſue, it leaves no tabifick Matter or tainted Humours for future Diſeaſes to feed upon. Thus graciouſly has God provided, that thoſe very Judgments, which the Wickedneſs of Mankind obliges him to inflict, ſhould not be deſtitute of ſome beneficial Effects: And therefore we find the devout Pſalmiſt, exciting us to the Worſhip and Praiſe of God, even upon the Conſideration of theſe Topicks: [q] It is the Lord that commandeth the Waters: It is the glorious God that maketh the Thunder: It is the Lord that ruleth the Sea: The Voice of the Lord is mighty in Operation; the Voice of the Lord is a glorious Voice; therefore bring unto the Lord, O ye mighty, bring young Rams unto the Lord; aſcribe unto the Lord Worſhip and Strength.

As to common Evils.

THE other Part of the Objection againſt Providence, is taken from the more common Calamities, that attend human Life; [r] and yet, if we look into the World, we ſhall find the much greater Part of Men the apparent Authors of thoſe very Evils, which they complain of. Thus, how many are there, that complain of Want, and yet owe that Want to their own Sloth or Prodigality? How many, that complain of Diſgrace, and yet owe that Diſgrace to their own unworthy Behaviour? How many, that complain of Enemies, and yet owe thoſe Enemies to their own Pride and Contention? How many, that complain of Deſertion of Friends, and yet owe that Deſertion to their own Ingratitude? And, to name no more, how many, that complain of Pains and Diſeaſes, and yet owe theſe Maladies to their own Luxury or Laſciviouſneſs? But [s] wherefore doth a living Man complain, a Man for the Puniſhment of his Sins; eſpecially for ſuch Puniſhments, as are the neceſſary Effects and Conſequences of his Sins? And how-unreaſonable unreaſonable a Thing is it, to reproach the Divine Providence with thoſe very Miſeries, which Mankind bring upon themſelves? [t] Whether God govern the World or no, Intemperance, Luxury, and Luſts will deſtroy Men's Health; Sloth and Prodigality, and expenſive Vices will make them poor; Pride, Ambition, and Revenge will breed Quarrels, and occaſion Wars, and bring upon the World all the Calamities of them. Theſe Evils are not owing to Providence, becauſe Providence does not bring them: Men make themſelves wicked, and Wickedneſs makes them miſerable; and we may as well charge the Providence of God with all the Wickedneſs of Men, as with all the Miſeries, which their own Wickedneſs brings upon them. We ought to bleſs God indeed, that he has made the Ways of Wickedneſs ſo unpleaſant, and ordered Sin to be attended with ſuch puniſhing Conſequences; but 'tis Fooliſhneſs, and a ſad Impiety in Man, firſt [u] to pervert his own Ways, and then, when the natural Puniſhment overtakes him, to let his Heart fret againſt the Lord.

SOME Calamities may not indeed be of our own procuring, but ſuch as the Direction of Providence lays upon us; but then it is to be conſidered, that, whenever this happens, God has made abundant Proviſion for the Support of good Men under them. [x] Natural Courage and Strength of Mind, the Power of Reaſon, and a wiſe Conſideration of the Nature of Things, the Belief of a good Providence, which takes Care of us, and orders all Things for the beſt, and the certain Hopes of immortal Life, will make all the Afflictions, that God ſends upon us, light and eaſy. And, if by theſe Helps God enables us to bear our Sufferings, and to enjoy ourſelves under them, [y] as ſorrowful, yet always rejoicing, as poor, yet making many rich, as having nothing, and yet poſſeſſing all Things, we may ſuffer, but we cannot be miſerable; and Sufferings, without Miſery, are no formidable Objection againſt Providence.

'TIS not ſo much therefore the external Sufferings, (which is all that can be charged upon Providence) as the Diſorders of a Man's Mind, that make him miſerable: An immoderate Love of this World, a furious Guſt of Pride or Hatred, Ambition or Revenge, makes every Condition uneaſy, and any great Affliction intolerable. Poverty and Diſgrace, the Loſs of Eſtate and Honour, the Frowns of Princes, and the Clamours of the People, (which a wiſe and good Man can both bear and deſpiſe) fall heavy upon a proud ambitious Spirit, eſpecially when Guilt adds a Sting to his Suffering, that makes him look upon every croſs Accident as a Token of Divine Vengeance, and a terrible Preſage of thoſe endleſs Miſeries, that are provided for him.

THIS then is the State of the Caſe, in Relation to the Miſeries and Calamities of Life:—They are either the natural Effects of the Courſe of this World, which, without a miraculous Interpoſition, cannot be prevented; and when they happen, are always attended with ſome Advantages; or they are the neceſſary Conſequences of our own Sins, and would have befallen us, whether God concerned himſelf in the Government of the World or no; or they are the kind Severities of Providence for our Good, and what we are ſufficiently enabled to bear, if we betray not the Succours that are given us. The Comforts of Life, on the other Hand, are innumerable: We want no Senſe, that is pleaſant and uſeful; we want no Objects to gratify thoſe Senſes; (what is very conſiderable) the moſt uſeful, the moſt neceſſary, and moſt delightful Objects are the moſt common, and ſuch as we all pretty equally ſhare in. Nay, we want not Pleaſures of an higher Nature, but thoſe are not felt by every one; and therefore we muſt aſk the Learned and Contemplative what the Delights of Knowledge and Wiſdom are? Aſk the good-natured Man, what the Pleaſure of doing kind Offices is? Aſk the juſt Man, what the Feaſt of a good Conſcience means? Aſk the religious and devout Man, what the Senſe of loving and being beloved by God brings in? What Joy, what Exaltation of Heart he feels, when he is upon his Knees; when, with St Paul, he is wrapt up into the third Heaven, and by an Anticipation of Bliſs is already juſtified, already glorified, and ſitting in celeſtial Places, among the Church of the Firſt-born? Aſk of theſe Men, I ſay, and they will inform us, that there are real Pleaſures and Satisfactions to be enjoyed in this Life, ſuch as out-ballance the few Fatigues of it, and grow every Day more delightful, and freſh upon the Palate, as they are heightened and improved by the certain Expectations of a better.

IT

[t] Sherlock, of Providence. [u] Prov. xix. 3. [x] Sherlock, ibid. [y] 2 Cor. vi. 10.

IT muſt be confeſſed, indeed, that the World may ſometimes come to that Paſs, as to make a wiſe Man deſire to leave it; and the Preacher ſeems to put a Caſe, which induced him to make the above-mentioned Concluſion: So I returned, and conſidered all the Oppreſſions that are done under the Sun; and beheld the Tears of ſuch as were oppreſſed, and they had no Comforter; wherefore I praiſed the Dead that are already dead, more than the Living who are yet alive. [z] When a Kingdom or Nation is ſo far degenerated, as to have loſt all Senſe of Goodneſs and Juſtice, or common Honeſty; when thoſe, that are in Authority, have no Compaſſion for ſuch as are beneath them, nor any Regard to the Adminiſtration of Juſtice; when Oaths and Promiſes paſs for nought, and Faith and Friendſhip are poſtponed for Gain; when there is no Truſt, no Confidence to be put in Man, but Traps and Snares are every where laid, to betray the Innocence, or make Advantage of the Weakneſs of others; when every Man's Sword, or (or what is as fatal) every Man's Tongue is ſet againſt his Brother, ſo that no one's Fame, no one's Life is ſecure, but a ſlandering Tongue may blaſt the one, and a perjured Tongue may deſtroy the other: When, in ſhort, we cannot live in the World, without ſeeing, and hearing, and feeling ten thouſand Villainies, that are committed; 'tis high Time then to take up old Simeon's Requeſt, Lord, now letteſt thou thy Servant depart in Peace; ſuch a tumultuous melancholy State of Things muſt needs make all conſidering Men be as glad to get out of this World, as a Mariner is to recover his Haven, after a violent Storm at Sea.

BUT this is not the ordinary State of Things. The World, bleſſed be God, is not yet become ſo bad, but that a Man, with ſome Caution, and much Innocence, a ſmall Subſtance, and a large Share of Health, may paſs through it with Pleaſure. [a] Nor is the Preacher's Deſign to make us deſpiſe Life upon Account of its Troubles and Calamities, but only to wean our Affections from it, in order to place Happineſs in the Practice of Virtue, and in the Hopes and Expectations of ſomething better; for, [b] let us hear the Concluſion of the whole Matter: Fear God, and keep his Commandments; for this is the whole Duty of Man; nor is it only his Duty, but his Happineſs too; for God ſhall bring every Work into Judgment, with every ſecret Thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.

7. The miſerable Condition of the Heathen World.

I MENTION but one Objection more, that ſeems to affect the Goodneſs of Providence; and that is, the wretched State and Condition, to which we behold the greateſt Part of Men abandoned. "[c] For, if there were a good and gracious Pro- "vidence, that over-rules the Affairs of this World, how is it imaginable, that ſo "great a Part of Mankind, as the Infidel World contains, ſhould be left ſo perfectly "deſtitute of the Knowledge of God, and the Means of attaining everlaſting Sal- "vation?" [d] This Objection is chiefly occaſioned by ſome Men, who, without any Authority from Scripture, confidently affirm, that ignorant Heathens ſhall ſuffer the ſame Condemnation, which Chriſt has threatened againſt wilful Infidels, and wicked Chriſtians.

This anſwered.

NOW, to ſet the Caſe of the Infidel World in a true Light, we muſt lay it down for a Foundation, that the efficient or meritorious Cauſe of procuring Salvation to Mankind can be no other, than Jeſus Chriſt, who, by his Obedience, and Oblation of himſelf, has redeemed good Men, and made them capable of eternal Happineſs. [e] Put the Caſe then, that the King of England ſends a conſiderable Sum of Money to redeem all Engliſh Slaves throughout the Turkiſh Dominions; and that thoſe, who hear the joyful News, embrace it with all Thankfulneſs, while others, that hear nothing of it, ſit ſilent: Now, would it not ſeem very hard, that theſe Latter ſhould be excluded from all the Benefit of this Act of Grace and Bounty, and left in perpetual Bondage, becauſe they did not lay hold on what they never heard of; and what, doubtleſs, they would have embraced with the ſame Gratitude, had they had the ſame Notice of it, with others? The Caſe is the ſame between the Governor of the Univerſe, and thoſe Nations that ſit in Darkneſs; and the Compariſon indeed is too plain to need any Application. Cornelius, we read, tho' he was an Heathen, by his Alms and Prayers, and devout Regulation of his Family, procured the Grace and Favour of God to ſuch a Degree, as to have St Peter ſent to him for his farther Inſtruction: And of ſuch Force and Conviction was the Truth, we are now upon, that even St Peter himſelf, tho' he was the Apoſtle of the Circumciſion, could not forbear making an open Profeſſion of it; [f] Of a Truth I find, that that God is no Reſpecter of Perſons, but, in every Nation, he that feareth God, and worketh Righteouſneſs, is accepted of him: Where the Apoſtle's Words plainly imply, that, in every Nation, there might be ſome, who feared God, and wrought Righteouſneſs, and if ſo, of a Truth they were accepted of him.

St PAUL had an hiſtorical Knowledge of the Life, Doctrines, and Sufferings of Jeſus, and was a violent Perſecutor of thoſe, that believed on him; and yet, as he himſelf teſtifies, he obtained Mercy, becauſe [g] he did it in Ignorance and Unbelief: [h] How then ſhall we exclude from all Mercy thoſe, that never heard of Jeſus, and yet would have embraced him, and ſuffered for him, as readily as others, had he been revealed unto them? They are not by Baptiſm indeed admitted into the Pale of the Church: But then it ought to be conſidered, that as the Jewiſh Church was a Type of the Chriſtian, tho' much narrower, both in its Dimenſions, and Terms of Communion; ſo Baptiſm under the Goſpel is of the ſame Import and Neceſſity, that Circumciſion was under the Law; and as in the Time of the Law, we read of many, who were not circumciſed, ſuch as Job, Melchiſedech, Lot, and others, of whoſe Salvation we can in no ways doubt; ſo there is no Reaſon why we ſhould limit the boundleſs Mercy of God, nor any Authority from Scripture to confine it to ſtated and ordinary Means; eſpecially ſince St Paul has aſſured us, (and therein determined the whole Matter) that [i] God will give Glory, and Honour, and Peace, to every Man that worketh good; to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Gentile; for there is no Reſpect of Perſons with him.

THE Infidel World, however, is not ſo deſtitute, as we may imagine: [k] They have the Law of Nature to direct them, which, as to the main Points of their Duty, is ſo plain and intelligible, that no ſincere Enquirer can be ignorant of it; and if, when they may underſtand it, they will not, or if, when they do underſtand it, they will wilfully tranſgreſs it, the Guilt and Puniſhment muſt be theirs. They have not indeed our Advantages of becoming good, and growing to a State of Perfection; but then they have this Mitigation and Allowance, that a leſs Degree of Good will be accepted of thoſe, that do well; and a leſs Degree of Puniſhment exacted of all thoſe, that do ill; which brings Matters much to an Equality: And tho' their Condition, at preſent, afford but a melancholy Conſideration; yet God can abundantly compenſate that in the World to come. Between this and the Day of Judgment he has Ways enough, and Time enough, to ſupply their Souls with all ſpiritual Advantages, which, for Reaſons beſt known to himſelf, he has hitherto with-held. We indeed, who have had our utmoſt Trial already, have no Reaſon to expect a Repetition of it: But 'tis no unſeaſonable Conjecture, that God may extend their Probation beyond this Life, and, in the World to come, diſcover the Light of the Goſpel to ſo many of them at leaſt, as have here made any tolerable Improvement under the Light of Nature. And therefore, ſince Providence can as yet, and (as we have Reaſon to believe) will at laſt, be infinitely kind to them, notwithſtanding their preſent unhappy Condition, we ſhould be far from objecting any Thing againſt it, until we ſee the final Iſſue, when Matters no doubt will be ordered ſo, that every Mouth ſhall be ſtopped, and all the Nations of the World ſhall ſee the Salvation of our God.

A general Reflection.

THESE are ſome of the chief Objections againſt Providence, and in this Manner they may be reſolved. But if, after what has been ſaid, any Doubts remain in our Minds, or any freſh Scruples do, at any Time, ariſe, it may be of general Uſe to allay, if not to ſatisfy our Enquiries, to bear always in Mind the immenſe Diſtance between God and us: To think with ourſelves, "That he, whoſe Proceedings I am going to examine, is that infinite and eternal Being, which made "me and all the World, in whoſe Eſteem [l] the Nations are as a Drop of a Bucket, and are counted as the ſmall Duſt of a Balance; and how then ſhould I comprehend his Ways, (his Ways, that are as far above me, as the Heavens are higher than the Earth) or diſcern the Reaſon of his Actings? [m] Many Ends his Wiſdom may have in View, that I cannot diſcern; and his Deſigns may be conducted in the niceſt Manner, when to me they may ſeem to be running to Confuſion:

[g] 1 Tim. i. 13. [h] This Doctrine of the Poſſibility of Salvation for the Gentiles has all along had its Abettors: Among the primitive Fathers, Juſtin Martyr, Clemens Alexandrinus, Epiphanius, St Chryſoſtom, &c. have affirmed it of the Heathens, that lived before Chriſt: Franciſcus à Victoria lays it down as a Doctrine of Thomas Aquinas, that the Indians, who never heard of Chriſt, were not guilty of the Sin of Infidelity; and, among the Reformed, Zuinglius, in his Expoſition of the Chriſtian Faith, places Ariſtides, Socrates, the Scipios, and the Catos, among the Number of the Bleſſed. Eſſays on Natural and Revealed Religion. [i] Rom. ii. 10, 11. [k] Scott's Chriſtian Life, Vol. I. [l] Iſa. xl. 15. [m] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. I.

" My Mind is too ſhort-ſighted to ſearch into the Divine Secrets; ſuch Knowledge
" is too great, and too excellent for me; and therefore it becomes me rather to cry

" tisfied in this, that, let Things appear never ſo perplexed and intricate, the Judge
" of all the Earth cannot but do Right; and he, who puniſhes others for doing
" Wrong, will never do Wrong himſelf."

AND thus we proceed to the Inferences, that more immediately reſult from the foregoing Doctrine, and to inſtance in ſome of the principal Duties, that ariſe from the Conſideration of a Divine Providence.

SECT. IV.

The DUTIES we owe to PROVIDENCE.

1. A due Senſe of it.

THE Prophet Iſaiah has given us a lively Deſcription enough of ſome gay unthinking People, that, in one continued Round of Pleaſures, filled up the Vacancies of Time; [n] the Harp and the Viol, the Tabret and Pipe, and Wine is in their Feaſts, but they regard not the Work of the Lord, neither conſider the Operation of his Hands. The Generality of Mankind, 'tis to be hoped, are not ſo giddy and inconſiderate: Moſt Men retain the Notion and Belief of a Providence; but then, the Misfortune is, they are apt to impute moſt Events to the immediate and viſible Cauſes; by that Means, overlook the Divine Hand, in what befals them, and conſequently, rob God of the Glory of his Diſpenſations, and themſelves of the Benefit, that might have accrued from ſuch a ſober Recollection. [o] If then we will own Providence, to the true Ends and Purpoſes of Religion, we muſt not content ourſelves with a general Belief of God's governing the World, but, whatever our State and Condition be, or whatever extraordinary Good or Evil happens to us, receive it all, as coming by the Divine Appointment. If we are poor, we muſt remember it to be the Will and Ordination of God, that we ſhould be poor; if we are rich, we muſt conſider, that it is God's Bleſſing which maketh us rich; if we loſe our Eſtates by Injuſtice or Oppreſſion, we muſt acknowledge, with Job, that the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; and whatever Miſeries or Misfortunes befal us, betake ourſelves to David's Practice and Behaviour: [p] I was dumb, and opened not my Mouth, becauſe it was thy Doings.

2. An humble Submiſſion to it.

WHEN we have thus affected our Minds with a due Senſe of the Divine Providence, in every Thing that befals us, we muſt take Care, in the next Place, to compoſe our Souls into a quiet and humble Submiſſion to the Almighty's Will, in order to bear the Sufferings, which he lays upon us, with Decency, and to continue in the State, wherein he hath placed us, with Content: But then the Queſtion is, in what Manner we are to do this? 'Twas an idle Notion that of the Stoicks, that Pain was but an imaginary Thing, and an empty Boaſt, that their Wiſemen could be happy in Phalaris's Bull. The Folly of this Oſtentation is proved by Senſe; Pain will make an uneaſy Impreſſion upon the moſt abſtracted Mind; ſo that our Submiſſion to the Divine Will, in this Reſpect, cannot require, that we ſhould not feel our Sufferings, that we ſhould not be afflicted with them, that we ſhould not complain or deſire a Removal of them; but only, that we ſhould not reproach or cenſure Providence, ſhould not think it ſevere or mercileſs in ſuch Diſpenſations, but give them a kind Conſtruction, and, with humble Thoughts, and Eyes lift up to Heaven, wait patiently upon God, until he have Mercy upon us. [q] Afflictions will be Afflictions, do what we will; and though we are to bear them in Obedience to our great Creator's Will, yet we muſt bear them as Afflictions can be borne, and as human Nature will permit; with Pain, and Grief, and Reluctancy; with Sighs, and Groans, and Complaints; with vehement and importunate Deſires and Prayers to God and Man, to help and deliver us. God, who has implanted in our Nature a ſtrong Averſion to Suffering, indulges us in this: Our Saviour, who is the beſt Pattern of our Behaviour, expreſſed himſelf to the ſame Purpoſe: [r] Father, if it be poſſible, let this Cup paſs from me; but when he conſidered the Hand that held it it out, nevertheleſs not as I will, but as thou wilt. To bring ourſelves to the like Behaviour, we muſt poſſeſs our Souls with a firm Perſuaſion of the Wiſdom and Goodneſs of God in every Thing he ſends upon us, not conſidering him, as a ſovereign and arbitrary Lord, but as an univerſal Parent, who has a tender and compaſſionate Regard to all his Creatures, who does not afflict willingly, nor grieve the Children of Men, but corrects us for our Profit, that we may be Partakers of his Holineſs, and proportions the Severity of his Diſcipline to the Wants and Exigencies of our Souls.

In our Sufferings.

In our State of Life.

ANOTHER Inſtance of our Obedience to Providence, is to abide in that State, wherein it has thought fit to place us. [t] We can no more chuſe our own Condition of Life, than we can chuſe when and where to be born, what our Parents ſhall be, how they ſhall educate, and diſpoſe of us in the World; what Succeſs we ſhall have, what Friends, what Enemies we ſhall meet with, what Changes or Revolutions we ſhall ſee, either in our private Fortunes, or in public Affairs: And therefore, be our Circumſtances what they will, ſo far as we are not acceſſory to them, they are no Shame or Diſgrace to us, ſince they are the Ordination and Appointment of God. We may endeavour indeed to advance our Fortunes by all honeſt Means; and the Exaltation of ſome, from very low Beginnings, ſeems to be deſigned by Providence to excite our Endeavours this Way, and to ſhew us what Virtue and Induſtry can do: But if our Attempts want Succeſs, and our Deſigns prove abortive, we muſt take it patiently, and wait God's Time, and be contented to tarry where we are, (without envying the Promotion of others, or uſing any indirect Arts to raiſe ourſelves) until the Hand, wherein our Fortune is repoſited, ſhall think fit to lift us up. Tho therefore our Submiſſion to Providence does not debar us from uſing all honeſt Endeavours to better our Fortune; yet it makes us eaſy and contented in a low Eſtate, patient of Diſappointments, not envious of the better Succeſſes and greater Proſperity of others; but every where, and in all Things, teaches and [u] inſtructs us, both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound, and to ſuffer Need.

3. Truſt and Reliance on it.

WHEN we have thus compoſed our Souls into a reſolved Acquieſcence in God's good Pleaſure, come what will; the next Duty we owe to Providence will be, to put our whole Truſt and Confidence in it, as our beſt and only Security in all our Concerns, and againſt the Contingencies both of Want and Danger. [x] Put the Caſe, we had the entire Management of our Affairs in our own Hands, and yet, upon Experiment, found, that we are not ſufficient to diſcharge it, but knew of a Perſon much wiſer, and more powerful than ourſelves, and who had given us innumerable Proofs of his Love and Affection for us; out of Kindneſs to ourſelves, one would think, we ſhould not fail to aſk his Counſel and Aſſiſtance; and, if we could prevail with him to undertake the Conduct of what we are incompetent for, account ourſelves vaſtly happy. Now God is exactly ſuch a Friend as this: He loves us as well as we do ourſelves; he deſires our Happineſs as much, and knows infinitely better, than we do, what Means are conducive to it, and will moſt effectually ſecure it: And every Man, that believes thus of God, would, the firſt Thing he did, apply himſelf to him, and beſeech him, with all Earneſtneſs and Importunity, to take him and his Concerns under his Care and Government. Now, if God has prevented us herein, and, without our Deſire, taken this Charge upon himſelf, we ought to rejoice in it, as the greateſt Happineſs, that could poſſibly have befallen us: For what Reaſon has he to fear, who has a God of infinite Power for his Protector? Or what Reaſon has he to be anxious, that has a God of infinite Goodneſs for his Purveyor? Againſt Want.

In all our Concerns.

'Tis from the Conſideration of his great Care in providing for us, that our bleſſed Lord gives the Advice, which ſome worldly Men may think a Paradox: [y] Take no Thought for your Life, what ye ſhall eat, or what ye ſhall drink, nor yet for your Body, what ye ſhall put on: Is not the Life more than Meat? Is it not an harder Matter to make a living Creature, than to find out Means to feed it? Is not the Body more than Raiment? Is it not a Work of more Difficulty to make a Man's Body, than to provide him with a Suit of Cloaths? Behold the Fowls of the Air, conſider the Lilies of the Field, and if God feed and cloath them, ſhall he not much more you, O ye of little Faith? 'Tis from the Conſideration of God's providential Care in protecting us, that the Royal Pſalmiſt ſpeaks with ſo much Boldneſs; [z] The Lord is my Light and my Salvation, whom ſhall I fear? The Lord is the Strength of my Life, of whom ſhall I be afraid? And in another Place, carries his Intrepidity to an higher higher Pitch, [a] We will not fear, though the Earth be moved, and though the Hills be carried into the Midſt of the Sea; though the Waters thereof rage and ſwell, and tho' the Mountains ſhake at the Tempeſt of the ſame; the Lord of Hoſts is with us, the God of Jacob is our Refuge. Not that any of theſe Scriptures countenance a ſupine throwing ourſelves upon Providence, without any farther Concern for our Maintenance and Preſervation; for this is not truſting but tempting God: And therefore, the Meaning of the Paſſages muſt be, that after we have done the beſt we can, and acquitted ourſelves both as diligent and provident Men, we may depend upon God, and live ſecurely under his Care and Protection, without diſturbing our Peace with what is to come; without perplexing our Minds with fruitleſs Anxieties, or ſcaring or terrifying ourſelves with empty Fears; for all Fears are empty, when we know ourſelves under the Defence of the moſt High, and that the Perſon, who is our Enemy, can do nothing againſt us, without the Permiſſion of our Protector.

OUR Enemy may be great and powerful indeed, have ſtrong Alliances, and vaſt Advantages againſt us; but the Words of Hezekiah are applicable to ſuch a Caſe as this: [b] Be ſtrong and courageous; be not afraid nor diſmayed for the King of Aſſyria, nor for the Multitude that is with him; for there be more with us, than with him; with him is an Arm of Fleſh, but with us is the Lord our God, to help us, and to fight our Battles.

4. Prayer and Thankſgiving.

WHEN we have thus fixed our Truſt and Dependence on Providence, there are two Duties more, that will call upon us, almoſt every Moment, and theſe are, Prayer and Thankſgiving; Prayer, whereby we requeſt of God the Mercies and Bleſſings that we want; and Thankſgiving, whereby we return our moſt grateful and devout Acknowledgments for whatever we receive. And indeed, if we are once firmly convinced of this, that all we are, and all we have, all we fear, and all we hope for, comes originally from the Hands of God, and that he, who has ſuch a Controul over our Fate, is of himſelf good and gracious, full of Long-ſuffering and Truth; concerned to love us, as his Offſpring; and to protect us, as his Creatures; and to provide for us, as his Penſioners; to whom we may impart our Wants and Secrets, and in whoſe Boſom unburthen our heavy and diſconſolate Hearts, in full Aſſurance of finding Comfort and Relief; if we conſider this, I ſay, we cannot but think it our ineſtimable Privilege, as well as our Duty, to diſcloſe our Griefs and Neceſſities to him, and to implore his Favour and Bleſſing upon our Undertakings; his Grace and Aſſiſtance in both our ſpiritual and temporal Concerns; his Protection againſt what we would avoid, and his Help and Concurrence to what we deſire to attain. Nor can we once reflect upon the Number and Extent of his Benefits to us; [c] how our Life and Motion, our Health and Vigour, our Senſe and Perception, our Reaſon and Underſtanding, are his Gifts; how we move upon his Earth, and breathe upon his Air, drink of his Springs, and are fed from his Granaries, and are cloathed from his Wardrobe, beſides many ineſtimable Benefits, extended to our better Part, from the ſame inexhauſtible Bounty; without finding our Hearts ſwell with a grateful Senſe of theſe Things, and our Tongues ready to break out into that devout Rhapſody of the Prophet David, [d] How precious are thy Thoughts, thy kind and merciful Thoughts, unto me, O God! How great is the Sum of them! If I ſhould count them, they are more in Number than the Sand.

WHAT we thus learn by Self-Reflection, the univerſal Practice of all Nations, that ever believed the Exiſtence of a God, abundantly confirms: And yet, ſome of the ancient Philoſophers were much puzzled how to reconcile Prayer and Thankſgiving with their Notions of Neceſſity and Fate. And indeed, were Providence nothing elſe, but a neceſſary Chain of Cauſes, or fixed and immutable Decrees, there would be no great Encouragement to preſent our Prayers or Praiſes to God, who, upon this Suppoſition, can help us no more, than he can alter Deſtiny, and conſequently, for whatever befals us, deſerves no Thanks. [e] But if God governs the World with as great Liberty and Freedom, as a wiſe and good Man governs his Family, or a Prince his Kingdoms; there is as much Reaſon to pray to him, and to praiſe him for the Benefits we daily receive, as there is to offer up our Petitions, or return our Thanks, to our Parents or our Prince; nay, infinitely more; foraſmuch as he is the true Source and Original of all; they only the Conduits, that convey ſome few of his Bleſſings to us.

GOD

[e] Sherlock, of Providence.

GOD, indeed, needs not to be reminded of our Wants, nor is he to be charmed or captivated with our Praiſes: A good Man overlooks popular Applauſes, and much more ſhould a ſelf-ſufficient Deity, were not our Oblations of this Kind beneficial to ourſelves, as well as reſpectful to him; but therefore he expects the Homage of our Prayers, that his Power and Providence might be univerſally owned and acknowledged by Mankind; that we might live in a conſtant Dependence on him, and be ſenſible, that all, we receive, is his Gift; that we might have a ſtanding Remedy againſt Misfortunes, and a never-failing Friend to fly, and unboſom ourſelves to, in every Exigence and Diſtreſs; and that we might be conſtrained to break off our League with Sin, from the Dread of approaching a God of Purity with our Pollutions about us, and to keep our Appetites in Subjection, that as we can never expect Succeſs without Prayer, ſo we may never dare to attempt any Thing, for which we dare not pray: And, in like Manner, he expects the Tribute of our Praiſe, [f] not only as a ſmall Quit-Rent for the many valuable Bleſſings we hold under him; but as an Exerciſe likewiſe, wherein our own Pleaſure and Advantage are concerned; as it is a mighty Aid and Furtherance to all our other Duties; as it gives a true Reliſh to all God's Favours and Benefits; as it teaches the right Uſe and Improvement of whatever we poſſeſs; as it lays an Obligation on God to continue his Kindneſs unto us; and as it is the beſt Expedient to confirm our Faith, and eſtabliſh our Truſt and Dependence on him, for the Time to come. For what Reaſons.

THESE are ſome of the Reaſons, for which God has inſtituted Prayer and Thankſgiving, not only as a proper Acknowledgment of the Divine Goodneſs, ſuperintending the World, but as a Thing neceſſary both to our own Happineſs, and the wiſe Improvement of his Bleſſings: Only there is one Qualification requiſite to make all Services of this Kind acceptable, and that is, a Conſcience void of Offence, towards God, and towards Man, which is a conſtant lively Senſe of the Divine Providence, always preſent with us, always overlooking us, obſerving our Ways, and directing our Concerns, purſuing us with Puniſhments, when we do amiſs, and crowning us with Bleſſings, when we do our Duty, is the moſt effectual Means to attain.

OF

PART III.

Of the most memorable Transactions from the Beginning of the World, to the Coming of Christ; with proper Dissertations upon each.

CHAP. I.

The most memorable Transactions, from the CREATION to the FLOOD.

WE left our first Parents, not long ago, just come out of the Hands of their Maker, adorned with his Image, and accommodated with every Thing, that might contribute to their Happiness; and we come now to make some Enquiry for the Place of their first Habitation, and in what Manner they behaved themselves in it.

Paradise, what.

THE Word Paradise, [a] which the Septuagint make Use of, (whether it be of Hebrew, Chaldee, or Persian Original) signifies a Place inclosed for Pleasure and Delight; either a Park, where Beasts do range; or a Spot of Ground, stocked with choice Plants, which is properly a Garden; or curiously set with Trees, yielding all Manner of Fruit, which is an Orchard: In all which Senses the Word may fitly enough be applied to the Place, where our first Parents were to live; since it was not only a pleasant Garden, and a fruitful Orchard, but a spacious Park and Forest likewise, [b] where all the Beasts of the Field met together, we are told, in order to be named: The great Question is, in what Region of the World it was situate; and 'tis a Question that has, in all Ages, much perplexed and divided the Opinions of learned Men.

Different Opinions concerning its Situation.

[c] SOME have placed it in the third Heaven, [d] some in the Orb of the Moon, [e] some in the middle Region of the Air, and others beyond the Earth, in a Place hidden, and and remote from the Knowledge of Men. Of thoſe, that maintain it to be a Part of the ſublunary World, [f] ſome tell us, that it is ſeated in an unknown Country, far diſtant from the Company of the Wicked; [g] ſome ſay in Africa, under the Equinoctial; others in America, in the warmeſt Country there; ſome few have pleaded for our Europe, but the moſt general Opinion has carried it for Aſia; only in what Part of Aſia, whether in Armenia, Syria, Perſia, or Meſopotamia, it is to be fixed, great and laſting Controverſies have aroſe.

'TIS very probable, that, in Prejudice taken to theſe Diſputes, [h] ſome have imagined this whole Narration of Moſes to be allegorical, and that the Virtues or Faculties of our Minds are to be underſtood by Paradiſe, and the four Rivers that watered it: But Moſes is too plain and familiar an Author, to be ſuppoſed capable of writing in ſuch a myſtical Manner: He had a rude and illiterate People to inſtruct: His Hiſtory he ordered to be read in the Ears of all the People, and commanded the Parents to teach it to their Children; ſo that to accommodate his Senſe to their Capacities, muſt be his Deſign, and not to conceal it from them in figurative Adumbrations.

[i] OTHERS have ſuppoſed, that there was never any Place of peculiar and ſuperlative Beauty, but that the whole Earth, in its primitive State, was equally Paradiſaical. [k] But, if all Places were equally pleaſant and delightful, where would have been the Puniſhment in expelling our firſt Parents out of the Garden of Eden, or what Neceſſity would there have been, for placing a flaming Sword about the Tree of Life, or appointing an Hoſt of Cherubims to guard the Entrance, againſt their Return? Moſes, as we ſaid, is far from being pompous in his Manner of Writing; but nevertheleſs it cannot be denied, but that he gives a manifeſt Preference to this Spot of Ground above all others, and is very happy in this Particular, that he has the concurrent Teſtimony of all antient Authors, both Poets and Philoſophers, to confirm what he ſays: For their fortunate Iſlands, their Elyſian Fields, their Garden of the Heſperides, their Ortygia and Toprabane, as deſcribed by Diodorus Siculus, are but borrowed Sketches of what our inſpired Penman tells us, concerning the firſt Terreſtrial Paradiſe.

[l] OTHERS again affirm, that, if there ever was ſuch a beautiful Place upon the Earth; yet the violent Concuſſions, that happened at the Deluge, have ſo intirely changed the Face of Nature, that it is almoſt impoſſible to find it out. How far the Flood prevailed, and what Alterations were brought upon the Earth by its Force and Overflow, we ſhall have Occaſion to obſerve, when we come to conſider that Subject expreſsly. In the mean Time, I cannot but take Notice, that how great ſoever we may ſuppoſe the Changes affected by the Deluge to have been; [m] yet unleſs there are ſome Marks and Characteriſticks of this earthly Paradiſe ſtill remaining, it would not have been ſo congruous for Moſes, who wrote eight hundred and fifty Years after the Flood, to give us ſo particular a Deſcription of it; nor for the Prophets, who lived ſo long after Moſes, to make ſuch expreſs Mention of it. Tho' therefore there have been vaſt Alterations in the Face of Nature, and almoſt every Place, as it changed its Owner, changed its Name likewiſe; yet it is not to be doubted, but that, with ſome Care and Attention to what the holy Scriptures make the Boundaries of Paradiſe, we may, in ſome Meaſure, find out its Situation.

The Situation of Paradiſe.

NOW the Deſcription, that Moſes gives us of it, is delivered in theſe Words: [n] And the Lord God planted a Garden eaſtward, in Eden, and a River went out of Eden, to water the Garden, and from thence it was parted, and became into four Heads. The Name of the firſt is Piſon: That is it, which compaſſes the whole Land of Havilah, where there is Gold, and the Gold of that Land is good: There is the Bdellium and the Onyx-Stone. And the Name of the ſecond River is Gihon: The ſame is it that compaſſes the whole Land of Cuſh. And the Name of the third River is Hiddekel: That is it, which goes before Aſſyria; and the fourth is Euphrates. So that to diſcover the Place of Paradiſe, we muſt firſt find out the true Situation of the four Rivers here ſpecified by Moſes.

THE firſt River is Piſon, or Phiſon, that which compaſſeth the whole Land of Havilah. Now, for the better Underſtanding of this, we muſt obſerve, [o] that, when [f] Bellarmine, de Grat. primi hominis, Cap. 14. He derived this Opinion from ſome of the Antients, who had it from Papias. [g] Maimonides, Aben-Ezra, and other Jewiſh Doctors. [h] Noviomagus, on Bede. Burnet's Theory of the Earth. [i] Philo, Origen, &c. [k] Burnet, ibid. [l] Whiſton's and Burnet's Theories. [m] Sir Walter Raleigh. [n] Gen. ii, 8, &c. [o] Wells's Geography, and Patrick's Commentary.

Moſes

Moſes wrote his Hiſtory, he was, in all Probability, in Arabia Petræa; on the Eaſt of which lies Arabia Deſerta, but the Sterility of the Country will not admit of the Situation of the Garden of Eden in that Place; and therefore we muſt go on Eaſtward, as our Author directs us, until we come to ſome Place, thro' which Euphrates and Tigris, which are our only ſure Marks to diſcover where Eden lay, are known to ſhape their Courſe. Now, Euphrates and Tigris, tho' they both riſe out of the Mountains of Armenia, yet take almoſt contrary Courſes: Euphrates runs to the Weſt, and paſſing thro' Meſopotamia, waters the Country, where Babylon once ſtood; whereas Tigris takes towards the Eaſt, and paſſing along Aſſyria, waters the Country, where the once famed City of Nineveh ſtood. After a long Progreſs, they meet a little below Babylon, and, running a conſiderable Way together in one Stream, ſeparate again not far from Baſſora, and ſo fall in two Channels into the Perſian Gulph.

Now, taking this along with us, we may obſerve farther, that there are two Places in Scripture that make mention of the Land of Havilah: In the one, we are told, [p] That the Iſhmaelites dwelt from Havilah unto Shur, that is before Egypt; and in the other, that [q] Saul ſmote the Amalekites from Havilah, until thou comeſt to Shur, that is before Egypt: Where, by the Expreſſion from Havilah unto Shur, is probably meant the whole Extent of that Part of Arabia, which lies between Egypt to the Weſt, and a certain Channel or River, which empties itſelf into the Perſian Gulph on the Eaſt. That Havilah is the ſame, with this Part of Arabia, is further evinced from its abounding with very good Gold; for all Authors, both ſacred and prophane, highly commend the Gold of Arabia, that it is of ſo lively a Colour, as to come near to the Brightneſs of Fire, and of ſo pure a Kind, as to need no Refinement. Bdellium, which by ſome Interpreters is taken for Pearl, and by others, for an Aromatick Gum, is in both theſe Senſes applicable to theſe Parts. For the Bdellium of Arabia [r] was always held in great Eſteem; [s] nor is there any Place in the World, which produces finer Pearls, or in greater Quantities, than the Sea about Baharen, an Iſland ſituate in the Perſian Gulph. [t] And as for the Onyx-ſtone in particular, if we will believe what Pliny tells us, the Ancients were of Opinion, that it was no where to be found, but in the Mountains of Arabia. It ſeems reaſonable therefore to conclude, (according to all the Characters which Moſes has given us of it) that that Tract of Arabia, which lies upon the Perſian Gulph, was, in his Days, called the Land of Havilah, and that the Channel, which, after Euphrates and Tigris are parted, runs Weſtward into the ſaid Gulph, was originally called Piſon, and [u] this the rather, becauſe ſome Remains of its ancient Name continued a long while after this Account of it.

THE ſecond River is Gihon, that which encompaſſes the whole Land [x] of Cuſh; where we may obſerve, that Moſes has not affixed ſo many Marks on the Gihon, as on the Piſon, and that probably for this Reaſon, [y] becauſe, the Piſon being once found out, the Situation of the Gihon would eaſier be diſcovered: For Piſon being known to be the firſt River, in Reſpect to the Place where Moſes was writing, it is but natural to ſuppoſe, that Gihon, as being the ſecond, was the River next to it, and conſequently, that other Channel, which, after Euphrates and Tigris are parted, runs

And Pliny, having commended the Pearls of the Indian Seas, adds, that ſuch as are fiſhed towards Arabia, in the Perſian Gulph, deſerve the greateſt Praiſe. Pliny, Lib. vi. Cap. 28. [s] Galen, comparing the Bdellium of Arabia with that of Scythia, gives ſome Advantage to the firſt, which he denies to the other. De Simpl. Medic. Lib. vi. And Pliny prefers the Bdellium of Arabia before that of any other Nation, except Bactriana. Pliny, Lib. xii. Cap. 9. [t] Strabo tells us, that the Riches of Arabia, which conſiſted in precious Stones, and excellent Perfumes, (the Trade whereof brought them a great deal of Gold and Silver, beſides the Gold of the Country itſelf) made Auguſtus ſend Ælius Gallus thither, either to make theſe Nations his Friends, and ſo draw to himſelf their Riches, or elſe to ſubdue them. Lib. xvi. Diodorus Siculus deſcribes the Advantages of Arabia, and eſpecially its precious Stones, which are very valuable both for the great Variety and Brightneſs of Colour. Lib. ii. And, to name no more, Pliny, who is very curious in remarking the Countries of precious Stones, aſſures us, that thoſe of the greateſt Value come out of Arabia, Lib. ult. [u] It is a great while ſince both this River and the River Gihon have loſt their Names: The Greek and Roman Writers call them ſtill, after their parting, by the Names, they had before they met, Euphrates and Tigris: But there was ſome Remainder of the Name of Piſon preſerved in the Eaſtern River Piſitigris, which is Piſon mixed with Tigris; (as Mr. Carver takes Notice) it is by Xenophon called ſimply Phyſeus, in which the Name of Phiſon is plainly enough retained, and it went under that Name, until the Time of Alexander the Great: for Quintus Curtius commonly calls Tigris itſelf by the Name of Phiſis, and ſays it was ſo called by the Inhabitants thereabout; which, in all Probability, was, at firſt, the Name of this other River Phiſon, but, in Proceſs of Time, loſt by the many Alterations, that were made in its Courſe, as Pliny tells us. Patrick's Commentary. [x] Our Tranſlators follow the LXX, in rendering the Hebrew Name Cuſh, by Ethiopia, not meaning that in Africa, but this in Aſia. Patrick's Commentary. And Sir Walter Raleigh ſhews, in many Inſtances, the bad Tranſlation of it, page 51, &c. [y] Well's Geography.

runs Eaſtward into the Perſian Gulph: For all Travellers agree, that the Country, (which other People call Suſiana) lying upon the Eaſtern Stream, is, by the Inhabitants, to this Day, called [a] Chuzeſtan, which carries in it plain Footſteps of the original Word, Cuſh, or, as ſome write it, Chuz.

[a] THOUGH therefore no Remains of the Name of this River Gihon are to be met with in the Country itſelf; yet, ſince it lies exactly the ſecond in Order, according to the Method, that Moſes has taken in mentioning the four Rivers; and ſince the Province, it runs along and waſhes, was formerly called the Land of Cuſh, there is no Doubt to be made, but that the ſaid Eaſterly Channel, or Mouth of the Euphrates, or Tigris, (call we it as we pleaſe) is the very Gihon deſcribed by Moſes.

THE third River is Hiddekel, that which goeth towards the Eaſt of, [b] or, as it is better tranſlated, that which goeth along the Side of Aſſyria. 'Tis allowed by all Interpreters, as well as the Septuagint, that this River is the ſame with Tigris; and [c] though it may be difficult to ſhew any juſt Analogy between their Names, yet if we either obſerve Moſes's Method of reckoning up the four Rivers, or conſider the true Geography of the Country, we ſhall eaſily perceive, that the River Hiddekel could properly be no other. For as, in Reſpect to the Place, where Moſes wrote, Piſon lay neareſt to him, and ſo, in a natural Order, was named firſt; and the Gihon, lying near to that, was accordingly reckoned ſecond; ſo having paſſed over that Stream, and turning to the Left, in order to come back again to Arabia Petræa, where Moſes was, we meet, in our Paſſage, with Tigris in the third Place, and, ſo proceeding Weſtward through the lower Part of Meſopotamia, come to Pherath, or [d] Euphrates at laſt: For Tigris, we muſt remember, parts Aſſyria from Meſpotamia, and, meeting with Euphrates, a little below Babylon, runs along with it, in one common Channel, until they ſeparate again, and make the two Streams of Piſon and Gihon, which, as we ſaid before, empty themſelves into the Perſian Gulph.

THE Land of Eden therefore, according to theſe four Rivers, which Moſes has made the Boundaries of it, muſt lie upon the grand Channel, which the Tigris and Euphrates make, while they run together; and where they part again, muſt there terminate: For ſo the ſacred Text informs us, that a River went out of Eden to water the Garden, and from thence it was parted, and became into four Heads; which Words manifeſtly imply, that, in Eden, the River was but one, i. e. one ſingle Channel, but from thence, i. e. when it was gone out of Eden, it was parted, and became four Streams, (for ſo the Hebrew Word may be tranſlated) two above and two below. For ſuppoſing this Channel our common Center, we may, if we look one Way, ſee the Tigris and Euphrates coming into it, and, if we look another, ſee the Piſon and Gihon running out of it.

IT ſeems reaſonable to ſuppoſe therefore, that this Country of Eden lay on each Side this great Channel, partly in Chaldea, and partly in Suſiana; and [e] what may confirm us in this Opinion, is, the extraordinary Goodneſs and Fertility of the Soil. For as it is incongruous to think, that God would make Choice of a barren Land, wherein to plant the Garden of Paradiſe; and, accordingly, all ancient Hiſtorians and Geographers inform us, that not only Meſopotamia, Chaldea, a good Part of Syria, and other neighbouring Countries, were the moſt pleaſant and fruitful Places in the World; but modern Travellers likewiſe particularly aſſure us, that, in all the Dominions, which the Grand Seignior has, there is not a finer Country, (though, for want of Hands, in ſome Places, it is uncultivated) than what lies between Bagdat and Baſſora, the very Tract of Ground, which, according to our Computation, was formerly called the Land of Eden.

[a] Benjamin of Navarre tells us, that the great Province of Elam, whereof Suſa is the Metropolis, and which extends itſelf as far as the Perſian Gulph, at the Eaſt of the Mouth of the River Euphrates or Tigris, (as we pleaſe to term it) is called by that Name. Wells's Geography. [a] Patrick's Commentary. [b] This Senſe is more agreeable to the plain and primary Intent of the Hebrew Word, and accordingly is followed by the great Hebrician Arias Montanus: And not only ſo, but the LXX Interpreters likewiſe, and the Authors of the vulgar Latin and Syriac Tranſlation, render the Hebrew Word over-againſt, or along the Side of Aſſyria, not reſtraining it to the Eaſtern Side. Wells's Geography. [c] The People of the Levant call the River Tigris Diglath which, by taking away the Aſpiration from Hiddekel, has ſome ſmall Affinity to it. Ibid. [d] Euphrates is of the ſame Signification with the Hebrew Word Perah, and is probably ſo called, by Reaſon of the Pleaſantneſs, at leaſt the great Fruitfulneſs of the adjacent Country; for ſo the Greek Word Ευφραίνειν (from whence it is derived) ſignifies to rejoice or make fruitful, according to that of Virgil, Quid lætas faciat ſegetes. [e] There is this farther Conſideration to prove that the Country of Eden, referred to by Moſes, was ſeated in the Parts we aſſign it:——That when Sennacherib, King of Aſſyria, thought to terrify Hezekiah, who had rebelled againſt him, we find him boaſting, that he had deſtroyed the Countries of Gozan, of Haran, of Rezeph, and of the Children of Eden, which were in Telaſſar, 2 Kings xix. 12. Now the Learned generally agree, that Gozan is the Gauzanitis, a Province in Meſopotamia; that Haran and Rezeph are Charræ and Reſcipha, two Cities in the ſaid Province; that Telaſſar is Talatha, a City in Babylonia, placed by Ptolomy at the Bottom of the common Channel above-mentioned; and conſequently, that Eden muſt be the ſame Country where Moſes placed Paradiſe; extending itſelf from Meſopotamia, or the joining of Euphrates and Tigris, as far as Telaſſar, or the parting of theſe Rivers again into two other Streams, called the Rivers Piſon and Gihon. Wells, ibid.

IN what Part of the Land of Eden the Garden of Paradiſe was planted, the ſacred Hiſtorian ſeems to intimate, by informing us, that it lay [f] Eaſtward in Eden: For he does not mean, that it lay Eaſtward, from the Place where he was then writing, (for that every Body might eaſily know) but his Deſign was, to point out, as near as poſſible, the very Spot of Ground, where it was anciently ſeated. If then the Garden of Paradiſe lay in the Eaſterly Part of the Country of Eden, and [g] the River, that watered it, ran through that Province (as the Scripture tells us) before it entered into the Garden; [h] then muſt it neceſſarily follow, that Paradiſe was ſituated on one of the Turnings of the River, which goes from Weſt to Eaſt, and, very probably, at the loweſt great Turning, which Ptolomy takes Notice of, and not far from the Place, where Arecca at preſent is known to ſtand.

The State of Paradiſe.

HERE it was, that [i] God made to grow every Tree, that was pleaſant to the Sight, or good for Food; and not thinking it ſo proper for Man, even in a State of Innocence, to be idle and unemployed, here he placed him [k] to dreſs and keep this happy Plantation, which he knew would want their Care, becauſe it was ſo luxuriant. [l] Here he was to employ his Mind, as well as exerciſe his Body; to contemplate and ſtudy the Works of God; to ſubmit himſelf wholly to the Divine Conduct; to conform all his Actions to the Divine Will; and to live in a conſtant Dependence upon the Divine Goodneſs: Here he was to ſpend his Days in the continual Exerciſes of Prayer and Thankſgiving; and it may be, the natural Dictates of Gratitude would prompt him to offer ſome of the Fruits of the Ground, and ſome living Creatures, in Way of Sacrifice unto God. Here were thouſands of Objects, to exerciſe his intellective Faculties, to call forth his Reaſon, and employ it: But that, wherein the ultimate Perfection of his Life was doubtleſs to conſiſt, was the Union of his Soul with the ſupreme Good, that infinite and eternal Being, which alone can conſtitute the Happineſs of Man. This was the deſigned Felicity of our firſt Parents: Neither they, nor their Poſterity, were to be liable to Sorrow or Miſery of any Kind, but to be poſſeſſed of a conſtant and never-failing Happineſs: And, after innumerable Ages and Succeſſions, were, in their Courſes, to be taken up into a heavenly Paradiſe. For, [m] that the Terreſtrial Paradiſe was to Adam a Type of Heaven, and that the never-ending Life of Happineſs promiſed to our firſt Parents (if they had continued obedient, and grown up to Perfection, under that Oeconomy, wherein they were placed) ſhould not have been continued in this earthly, but only have commenced here, and been perpetuated in a higher State; that is to ſay, after ſuch a Trial of their Obedience, as the Divine Wiſdom ſhould think convenient, they ſhould have been tranſlated from Earth to Heaven, is the joint Opinion of the beſt [n] ancient, both Jewiſh and Chriſtian Writers.

I AM not inſenſible, that ſome Men of late, who have taken an uncommon Liberty of interpreting Scripture, contrary to the Senſe of the primitive Church, have had Courage enough to deny all this; affirming poſitively, "That the Law "given to Adam was a mere Law, eſtabliſhed only with a Threatning, and without "any [f] Gen. ii. 8. [g] Ibid. ii. 10. [h] Wells's Geography. [i] Gen. ii. 9. [k] Ver. 15. [l] Edwards's Survey, Vol. I. [m] Bull's State of Man before the Fall. [n] This ſame learned Writer has compiled a great many Authorities from the Fathers of the firſt Centuries, all full and ſignificant to the Purpoſe: and to which I refer the Reader, only mentioning one or two, of more remarkable Force and Antiquity, for his preſent Satisfaction. Juſtin Martyr, ſpeaking of the Creation of the World, delivers not his own private Opinion only, but the common Senſe of Chriſtians in his Days: We have been taught, that God, being good, did, in the Beginning, make all Things, out of uninformed Matter, for the Sake of Men, who, if by their Works they had rendered themſelves worthy of his Acceptance, we preſume ſhould have been favoured with his Friendſhip, and reigned together with him, being made incorruptible and incompaſſible, Apol. 2. p. 58. Theophilus, the Sixth Biſhop of Antioch, after the Apoſtles, is more expreſs to this Purpoſe: God tranſlated Adam, ſays he, from the Earth, out of which he was taken, to Paradiſe, adminiſtering to him Matter, or Occaſion of Proficiency; that increaſing, and being made perfect, he might at length be canoniz'd, and conſecrated, and ſo aſcend into Heaven itſelf. Lib. 2. ad Autolyc. p. 101. Athanaſius, among other Things worthy our Obſervation concerning the primordial State of our firſt Parents, has theſe remarkable Words: He brought them therefore into Paradiſe, and gave them a Law, that if they ſhould preſerve the Grace then given, and continue obedient, they might enjoy, in Paradiſe, a Life without Grief, Sorrow, or Care; beſides that, THEY HAD A PROMISE ALSO OF AN IMMORTALITY IN THE HEAVENS. De Incarnatione Verbi: And therefore we need leſs wonder, that we find it an Article inſerted in the common Offices of the primitive Church, and in the moſt ancient Liturgy now extant, [that of Clemens] read theſe Words concerning Adam: When thou broughteſt him into the Paradiſe of Pleaſure, thou gaveſt him free Leave to eat of all the other Trees, and forbadeſt him to taſte of one only, FOR THE HOPE OF BETTER THINGS; that, if he kept the Commandment, HE MIGHT RECEIVE IMMORTALITY AS THE REWARD OF HIS OBEDIENCE. Apoſt. Conſtit. Lib. 8. Cap. 12.

"any Promiſe to recommend it; that Adam was naturally made mortal, and, do "what he would, muſt have undergone the Laws of his Creation; that his Obe- "dience could have procured him no Exemption, becauſe God had made no ſuch " Contract, nor had he any Title to Immortality, becauſe no ſuch Grant or Do- "nation is ever heard of; and therefore the Covenant of eternal Life before the Fall, "which the Scriptures call the Covenant of Works, and which the Apoſtle to the "Gentiles explains ſo fully, and makes the Baſis of the ſecond Covenant, or the "Covenant of Grace, is, with them, all Cant and Mummery, and deſtitute of any "rational Evidence." How much the very Foundations of Chriſtianity are ſtruck at by this Hypotheſis, needs no great Sagacity to perceive; and therefore we cannot do a better Service to our holy Profeſſion, than to ſtate the true Nature of this Covenant of God with our firſt Parents, and thence evince the Reaſon and Equity, as well as Graciouſneſs of it.

SECT. I.

GOD's Covenant with ADAM: Or, The Firſt Covenant.

A Covenant, what.

A COVENANT is a mutual Conſent and Agreement, entered into by Perſons, and whereby they ſtand bound each to other, to perform the Conditions contracted and indented for; ſo that, in this Senſe, a Covenant is the ſame Thing with a Contract or Bargain; and, in a ſtrict and proper Bargain, there are two Things preſuppoſed: ° 1*ſt*, That the Perſons contracting be naturally free and independent on each other, i. e. That the one be not bound to the other, as to the Things covenanted for, antecedent to that Compact and Agreement made between them. And, 2*dly*, That each Party voluntarily, and in Conſideration of his own Benefit, engage himſelf to the other; for, where both are free and independent, 'tis generally the Apprehenſion of ſome Good that will thence mutually accrue, which makes them enter into a federal Engagement.

How God's Dealings with Man differ from a Covenant.

FROM this Senſe of the Word, 'tis eaſy to obſerve, that there never was, nor ever will be, a ſtrict and proper Covenant between God and Man. The Reaſon is, becauſe though God be originally free, and has no Obligation to Man, antecedent to his own gracious Will and Promiſe; yet Man is naturally bound to God, as he is his Creator; and, upon that very Relation, has a ſufficient Obligation upon him, though he never entered into Covenant. The beſt of his Services too can do God no Benefit, and are ſo vaſtly diſproportionate to the Reward, that the Reward, in Strictneſs, cannot be his Due, and is rather to be accounted a free Beneficence, upon an arbitrary Promiſe. The Terms of the Contract therefore being ſo infinitely to his Advantage, as there can be no Reaſon imagined, why he ſhould diſſent; ſo neither is there any room to expect, that there ſhould always, on his Side, be an explicit Conſent for the Ratification of it.

And from a Law.

AND as, upon theſe Accounts, God's Tranſactions with us are not ſo ſtrictly and properly a Covenant; ſo neither are they ſtrictly and properly a Law, though they are frequently called the Law of Works, and the Law of Faith. For God does not deal with us out of abſolute Sovereignty, but is graciouſly pleaſed to oblige himſelf to us by Promiſe, which belongs not to a Sovereign as ſuch, but has ſome Reſemblance of a Covenant: So that the Agreement, which God has made with Man, is not merely a Law, not merely a Covenant, but in ſome Meaſure partakes of both; inſomuch that if God had only ſaid, Do this, without adding, Thou ſhalt live, this had not been a Covenant, but a Law; and if he had only ſaid, Thou ſhalt live, without adding, Do this, this had not been a Covenant, but a Promiſe: So that, removing the Condition, we make it a ſimple Promiſe; and removing the Promiſe, we make it an abſolute Law: But ſince both theſe are found in the Contract, it is both a Covenant and a Law, though both in a larger Acceptation; and accordingly, in Scripture, is indifferently uſed under either Denomination.

The Reality of a Covenant between God and Man.

NOW, that there was a Covenant (or whatever other Appellation we pleaſe to give it) between God and our firſt Parents, tending to this Purpoſe, "That, "if they and their Race continued in Obedience, they ſhould never die, but be "always ° Hopkins's Doctrine of the two Covenants.

" always bleſſed and happy, but in Caſe of Diſobedience, be ſubject to Death, " and all other Calamities," [p] is plain from the Preface, which uſhers in the Prohibition given to Adam, concerning his not eating of the Tree of Knowledge, with this expreſs Donation or Grant; that of every Tree of the Garden (not excepting the Tree of Life) he might freely eat: For, whether the Tree of Life was a Sacramental Sign, or a Natural Means of Immortality, 'tis evident, [q] from the Words of God himſelf, that whoever made uſe of it, was put in a Capacity of living for ever. Nay, the very Commination itſelf imports all this: For, how inſignificant would have been the Threatening of Death to a Man's eating of the forbidden Fruit, if he ſhould certainly and neceſſarily have died, whether he had eaten of it or not? There was, doubtleſs, therefore the Tender of a Covenant from God, and the Sanction of the eternal Life or Death annexed to it: And that our firſt Parents fully conſented to it, in the Name of themſelves and their Poſterity; that they approved of the Condition on their Part, viz. Obedience; accepted of the Reward promiſed on God's Part, viz. endleſs Felicity, or engaged to undergo the Penalty, viz. everlaſting Death, is demonſtrable from one plain Paſſage in the Old Teſtament, (to ſay nothing of the New at preſent) where God complains of the ſad Prevarication of the Jews, in theſe Words: [r] O Ephraim, what ſhall I do unto thee? O Judah, what ſhall I do unto thee? For your Goodneſs is as the Morning Cloud, and, as the early Dew, it goeth away. I deſired Mercy, and not Sacrifice, and the Knowledge of God, more than Burnt-Offerings; but they, LIKE ADAM, have tranſgreſſed the Covenant, and have dealt treacherouſly with me; [s] which plainly refers to God's Covenant with Mankind, in the Beginning of the World, when Adam was their Repreſentative; which Covenant he could not have properly tranſgreſſed, unleſs he had firſt conſented to it.

The Nature of it.

NOR did he only conſent to it himſelf, in his private and perſonal Capacity, but, as our Repreſentative and Federal Head, he brought all his Poſterity under the like Engagement. What the Apoſtle ſays of Levi, [t] that he paid Tithes in Abraham, becauſe he was yet in the Loins of his Father, when Melchiſedec met him, is very applicable to the Caſe now before us. We all entered into Covenant, at the very Beginning of the World; for we were then in the Loins of our Father Adam, when the Covenant was made: So that when we conſider either Adam or ourſelves, with Relation to this Covenant, we muſt ſo form our Apprehenſions, as if all we were Adam, and Adam all of us. For though we then lay hid in our Cauſes and firſt Principles, yet the Covenant took hold of us, and bound us, either to the Obedience, which Adam promiſed both for himſelf and us, or to the Penalty, unto which he expoſed both himſelf and us.

" OUR covenanting Adam, however, muſt be underſtood in Senſu Forenſi, as the Divines term it, (for it is utterly impoſſible that we ſhould actually enter into Covenant before we were) in the ſame Manner as Parents may contract for their Children, or any Teſtator bind his Executors or Aſſigns; and therefore the Meaning only is,——" That the Covenant, which God made with Adam, does as lawfully " and ſtrongly bind us to Obedience, and, in Caſe of Failure, to Puniſhment, as it " did him, becauſe God made this Covenant with him, not in his perſonal only, but " in his repreſentative Capacity likewiſe, and as he had a Power to indent for his " Poſterity, from the natural Right he had over them, as their common Parent." [u] Whether Adam knew himſelf to be this publick Perſon, and to ſtand as the Repreſentative of all Mankind, has been long enough diſputed, without any Hopes of a certain Reſolution: It ſeems very probable, however, that (this Affair being of ſo vaſt and general Concernment) ſome ſuch Apprehenſions, either by Natural Inſtinct, or Divine Revelation, might be impreſſed upon him; and if ſo, the more inexcuſable was his Fault, who, knowing himſelf intruſted with no leſs a Stock, than the Happineſs of all his Race, ſhould ſo wilfully break, and thereby ruin and deſtroy both himſelf and them. This being the Form of the Covenant, we come next to conſider the Nature of its Sanctions; Life, as we ſaid, upon the Performance, and Death, upon the Violation of God's Commands.

Its Sanctions, 1. Life.

SOME have imagined, that by Life here is meant the Continuance and Perpetuity, here on Earth, of that Condition, wherein Adam was created; a State of perfect Happineſs and Bliſs, free from Sin, and therefore free from Miſery; in a perfect Concord and Agreement with God; in a continual Calm and Serenity within; poſſeſſed

[p] Bull's State of Man before the Fall. [q] Gen. iii. 22, &c. [r] Hoſea vi. 4. [s] Edwards's Survey, Vol. I. [t] Heb. vii. 9, 10. [u] Hopkins, of the two Covenants.

poſſeſſed of Empire and Dominion without; and enjoying all the innocent Delights, that Nature could afford; and all this to eternal Ages. But others, [x] who think, that ſuch everlaſting Continuance here would have occaſioned a Populouſneſs above what the World is able to contain, are rather inclinable to believe, that when the Multitude of Mankind had ſo far increaſed, as to ſtreighten the Bounds of their Abode, God would have tranſlated them into Heaven, without their ſeeing or taſting of Death; as a wiſe State, when a Land is ſurcharged with Inhabitants, tranſplants whole Colonies of them into other Countries. Whether of theſe Opinions is more conformable to Truth, is not ſo eaſy to determine, tho' the great Inconvenience, conſequent upon the Former, may incline a conſidering Mind rather to adhere to the Latter: However that be, 'tis certain, that this Life, promiſed in the Covenant of Works, was a State made happy and bleſſed by the Confluence of all good Things, outward and inward, ſpiritual and temporal, whatever Man's Condition could need, or his Will deſire; though it came not up to the Proportion of that immenſe Glory and Felicity, which is now promiſed to Believers, under the Covenant of Grace.

2. Death, what.

BY the Death, that is threatened, in the Covenant of Works, is meant Temporal Death, which conſiſts in the Separation of the Soul and Body, together with all its Forerunners and Concomitants, Pain, Grief, Weakneſs, Sickneſs, and whatever either cauſes or attends it: 2. Spiritual Death, which conſiſts in the Loſs of the Image and Favour of God, and deſpoiling the Soul of the Ornaments of Knowledge, Grace, and Righteouſneſs, wherein it was originally framed: 3. And laſtly, Eternal Death, which conſiſts in a State of Wretchedneſs and ſore Miſery, not to be ended, as long as God endures. In this Latitude of Senſe is the Word taken by Divines; but then we muſt remember, that whatever Puniſhment had been eternally inflicted, either upon the ſeparated Soul alone, (as ſome hold) or upon the whole Man, both Soul and Body, (as others affirm) it had been more mild and mitigated, under the Covenant of Works, than now the Torment of the Damned will be, who have rejected the Covenant of Grace. For, as the Life promiſed then was inferior to the Life promiſed now; ſo the Death threatened then is not ſo rigorous and tormenting, as the Death threatened now: For a deſpiſed Saviour, an abuſed Grace, a neglected Salvation, are ſuch Things, as will add Rage to the unquenchable Fire, and make it eat deeper into the Soul, than if there had been no Saviour provided, no Grace offered, no Salvation purchaſed.

Its Condition.

THESE are the Terms of the Covenant on God's Part: And the Condition, upon which it was accepted by Man, was Obedience, both in its Perfection and Perſeverance. For the Covenant of Works required of Adam all thoſe Things, which are now required of us, under the Covenant of Grace, except it be ſuch as pre-ſuppoſe the Sin and Imperfection of our Nature. To love God, to reverence and worſhip him, to depend upon him, and believe in him, and commit all our Affairs to his Guidance and Government; to reſtrain our Appetites, and improve our Reaſon; to live ſoberly and wiſely; and to be good, and beneficial in our Generation, &c. which right Reaſon dictates to be our Duty, were then as much incumbent on Adam, as they are now upon us, and what he was much more enabled to perform. [y] For, in the State of Innocence, God ſuited the Power of his Creature to the Law, he intended to give him, and made his Obligation to Duty commenſurate with his Ability to perform it.

Its poſitive Precept, what, and the Nature and Difficulty of it.

THAT Adam, [z] in Caſe he had tranſgreſſed againſt any of theſe Duties, and done Things contrary to the Dictates of right Reaſon, had ſinned, and been liable to Puniſhment from God, no Man, who conſiders what he ſays, can deny: But the Difficulty of the Queſtion is about his Obedience, and whether, in Caſe no poſitive Law had been ſuper-added, his Obſervance of theſe Laws of Nature had entitled him to the Reward of Immortality: And the Anſwer to this, I think, muſt be in the Negative; for, if Immortality had been due to the Obſervance of the Law, implanted in Man from his Creation; then certainly the Legiſlation ſuper-added, wherein that Immortality was promiſed to Man, no otherwiſe, than upon the Obſervance of the poſitive Precept, would have been ſuperfluous, if not abſurd. [a] In a Word, the Protoplaſt could have no Right to Immortality, but what was founded in the gratuitous Stipulation, and Covenant of God; and therefore ſince we read of no other Stipulation, or Promiſe of Life eternal made to him, but what was annex'd to this positive Law, we must conclude, that this positive Law was to be, not only the Grand Criterion of his Submission and Obedience, but that his everlasting Weal or Woe depended upon the Observance or Violation of it.

The forbidden Tree, what.

THE Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, to which this positive Law related, was so called, [b] either because it had a Virtue to open the Man's Understanding, and to make him more wise and knowing, than he was before, as the Tempter pretended; or (what is more probable) [c] because the eating of it would eventually teach him the Difference between the Good of Obedience, and the Evil of Transgression: [d] For, as People in Health have not a thorough Sense of the Pain and Uneasiness of Sickness, until they come to feel it; so Adam, by his Transgression, learned the Difference between Good and Evil, which he knew not so perfectly before; [e] but he learned the Difference to be this, that Good is that, which gives the Mind Pleasure and Assurance; whereas Evil is that, which is necessarily attended, sooner or later, with Shame and Regret.

BUT how fatal soever the Tree was in its Consequences, yet the Scripture informs us, that it was [f] pleasant and desirable to the Eyes; more alluring than the rest of the Trees in the Garden, having indeed no Rival, [g] but the Tree of Life, and therefore much exceeding any tempting Delight, which the Earth, impoverished by Adam's Transgression, now affords. [h] This Tree Adam was to approach, and behold, as oft as, for his Necessity, he had Recourse to the Tree of Life; but touch it, taste it, he must not, upon Pain of Death; which was no small Trial: Besides, that the Restraint, laid upon our first Parents, in this one Instance, was, no doubt, a general Hint and Intimation given them, to call them from the Animal to the Divine Life.

WHAT particular Tree this Tree of Knowledge was, has been a Matter of much Conjecture among the Learned: [i] The Vine, the Apple, the common and Indian Fig-Tree have all put in their Claims; and tho' the general Voice has gone for the common Fig-Tree, yet what the Scriptures have industriously concealed, is above the Power of Man exactly to discover. This however we know of Certainty, because the Word of God has revealed it to us, that the Fruit of this Tree was desirable to make one wise; and the Desire of Knowledge, we are sensible, is so connatural to the Soul of Man, that, even in this lapsed Estate, some have been observed to quit all the Pleasures of Sense, to forget their very Meat and Drink, and macerate their Flesh with Study, in the Pursuit of some new Discovery, which, when they have attained, they seem better pleased, than if they were Masters of both the Indies. And if this Thirst after Knowledge was so great and natural in Man, here again was no small Trial of Adam, in that he was commanded to repress and keep it within due Bounds, i. e. to acquiesce, for the Present, in what Understanding he had, and to content himself with that blessed Simplicity, which, as the Child of God, he enjoyed, not [k] hunting after new Inventions, but waiting upon him, in the Way of Prayer and Obedience, for the Increase of all useful Knowledge, to be dispensed, as it should seem good to his Divine Wisdom. [l] This Injunction therefore of abstaining from the Tree of Knowledge, is not such a slight and easy Precept, as some (to inhance the Guilt of Adam's Transgression) have been pleased to imagine, either mistaking the first natural Constitution of Man, or not rightly weighing the Nature of the Precept itself; since it was a general Call to a Divine Life, a Bridle to the Deliciousness of his Sense, a Check to the Curiosity of his Reason, and a great Experiment of his Self-denial in both: And they, in my Opinion, cast a Slur upon the Divine Wisdom, who seem to disparage that very Precept, upon which the main Stress of the whole Covenant, and the great Reward promised to the Performance, and Penalty threatened to the Disobedience of it, are certainly suspended.

The Reasonableness of the positive Precept.

IT may be thought perhaps, that some great Precept of moral Virtue, or some of those consummate Rules, which Christ had brought to Light by his Gospel, had been a more competent Trial of Man's Obedience, in his State of Integrity: But, if we consider the Thing seriously, we shall find, that in such Circumstances, there was no Possibility of transgressing against these; and these consequently could be no Test

Teſt of his Obedience. The Decalogue is reckoned on all Hands a good Syſtem of Morality; let us then, for Inſtance, run over ſome of its chief [m] Precepts, to ſee how they would have ſuited with the State of Man's Integrity. Had God prohibited the Worſhip of falſe Gods, or the Worſhip of carved Images, can we ſuppoſe, that Adam and Eve, but juſt created by God, and viſited every Day, either with the Light of his Preſence, or with ſome bright Courtier, ſent from Heaven to attend them, could have ever been guilty of theſe? The Worſhip of Images and falſe Gods came not into Practice, till Men grew ſo ſtupid, as to take the Sun and Moon for Deities, and ſo ſervile and abject, as to flatter their Princes into Divine Honours. Had he prohibited Perjury, or vain Swearing, what poſſible Place could theſe have found in the infant and innocent State of Mankind? Perjury was never heard of till the World was better peopled, and Men began to cheat one another, and then deny it, and ſo forſwear it: And Oaths and Imprecations could never have any Being in a State of Innocence; they borrow their Original manifeſtly from the Depravity and Sinfulneſs of our Nature: And ſo of all the reſt. How could Adam and Eve have honoured their Father and their Mother, when they never had any? What poſſible Temptation could they have, to be guilty of Murder, when they muſt have acted it on their own Fleſh? How could they commit Adultery, when they were the only two upon the Face of the Earth? How be guilty of Theft, when they were the ſole Proprietors of all? How bear falſe Witneſs againſt their Neighbour, or covet his Goods, when there was never a Neighbour in the World, for them to be ſo unjuſt to? And ſo, if we proceed to Chriſtian Precepts, how could they love Enemies, how could they forgive Injuries, when they had no one in the World to offend againſt them? And the Duties of Abſtinence, and Mortification, and the like, how could they poſſibly exerciſe theſe, when they had no Luſt to conquer, no Paſſion that was irregular, to ſubdue, but were all ſerene and calm within?

SINCE therefore, all the moral Precepts, that we are acquainted with, were improper for the Trial of Man's Obedience, in the State of his Integrity, it remains, that his Probation was moſt properly to be effected, by a Command of doing or forbearing ſome indifferent Action, neither good or evil in itſelf, but only ſo far good or evil, as it was commanded or forbidden. And if ſuch a Command was to be choſen, what ſo natural and agreeable to the State of our firſt Parents, (conſidering they were to live all their Lives in a Garden) as the forbidding them to eat of the Fruit of a certain Tree in that Garden; a Tree hard at Hand, and might every Moment be eat of, and would therefore, every Moment, give them an Opportunity of teſtifying their Obſervance of the Divine Command, by their forbearing it. To ſpeak all in one Word. [n] Had the Prohibition been grounded on any internal moral Evil, in the Nature of the Thing itſelf, there had not been ſo clear a Teſtimony of God's Dominion, nor of Adam's Subjection to it: But when that, which in itſelf was indifferent, became unlawful merely by the Will of God; when the Command had no other Excellency, but merely to make his Authority more ſacred; to command in this Manner was perfect Sovereignty, and to abſtain, in ſuch a Caſe, was pure Obedience.

AND now, from what has been ſaid on this Subject, we may form ſome tolerable Notion to ourſelves of the Nature of that Covenant, which God, in the Beginning of the World, made with the firſt Man, viz. That God, on his Part, promiſed to ſupply him with all the Means of Happineſs, both Spiritual and Temporal, while he continued on Earth; and, in due Time, to tranſlate him, without paſſing through the dark Entry of Death, into a State of greater Glory and Perfection, if he adher'd to his Duty, which he had Power and Capacity to do; but, on the other Hand, threatened to inflict on him all thoſe Pains and Miſeries, that Death, in its utmoſt Latitude of Signification, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal, means, in caſe he revolted: That Man, on his Part, accepted the Condition, and both for himſelf and his Poſterity, as their Repreſentative, and federal Head, promiſed a perfect and unſinning Obedience, from whence this is called the Covenant of Works: That the main of Man's Duty lay in following the Dictates of his Nature and right Reaſon; but to try his Obedience, God was pleaſed to put one ſpecial Clauſe in the Covenant, which laid great Reſtraint both upon his rational and ſenſitive Appetite, and which he notwithſtanding undertook to perform. In this Situation ſtood the Contract between tween them; but how long it continued in this Situation, has been a Matter of ſome Diſpute.

How long this Covenant laſted.

° MOST of the Jews, and ſome of the Chriſtian Fathers, are of Opinion, that Adam preſerved his Integrity but a very ſhort while indeed; that in the Cloſe of the ſame Day, wherein he was made, he tranſgreſſed the Covenant, and the very ſame Day was caſt out of Paradiſe: But this ſeems to be too haſty a Conjecture. In the Hiſtory of the Acts of that Day, wherein Adam was made, (and every Thing ſeems to be ſet down very minutely) we find no Mention of his Apoſtacy, nor can we conceive with what Propriety it could be ſaid, that ᵖ God ſaw every Thing that he had made, and behold it was good, (which happened in the Cloſe of the Day, becauſe it immediately follows, that the Evening and the Morning, which make the Day compleat, were the ſixth Day) if Man had not continued good till then, and if Sin, the greateſt Evil of all, was entered into the World at that Time.

'TIS more worthy of God, and more conſonant to Reaſon therefore to believe, that our firſt Parents were not baffled ſo ſoon after their Creation, nor ſo excellent a Frame ſuffered to be ſpoiled immediately. God's Propoſal of the Covenant to them, (on which depended the whole Reſult of this Affair) their mutual Conſenting to it, and Ratification of it, in ſome ſolemn Manner or other, muſt have taken up ſome Space of Time; ſo that the Parley between the Serpent and Eve might have been of a long Continuance, tho' it is briefly ſet down by Moſes. 'Tis probable, that ſhe, at firſt, gave a Repulſe to the Aſſault, and that ſeveral Onſets were made, before ſhe yielded. In that Perfection of Knowledge and Holineſs, wherein our Parents were created, 'tis not likely, that they ſhould, on a Sudden, be drawn from their Obedience to God. ᵍ Thoſe high Endowments could not eaſily be loſt; thoſe Divine Gifts could not decay but by little and little; and therefore it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that theſe Perſons ſhrunk from their Integrity by Degrees, and that the Compaſs of Time, between their Temptation, and actual Tranſgreſſion in eating the forbidden Fruit, was of ſome Length, much more than can reaſonably be crowded into one ſingle Day; and therefore, if we may be allowed to follow others in their Conjectures, it was either ʳ on the tenth Day of the World's Age, that Adam fell, and was expelled Paradiſe; in Memory of which Calamity, the great Day of Expiation, ˢ which was the tenth Day of the Year, in which all were required to afflict their Souls, was, in After-times, inſtituted; or, (as ᵗ others would rather have it) on the eighth Day, that, as the firſt Week in the World ended with the Creation of Man and Woman, the ſecond was probably concluded with their fatal Seduction and Fall.

SECT. II.

Of the FALL of MAN.

The Hiſtory of the Fall, literal.

BEFORE we proceed to enquire into the Occaſion and Inſtrument, the Nature and Quality, and the Effects and Conſequences of our firſt Parents Fall, there is one Thing that muſt be obviated; and that is, the Suggeſtion ᵘ of ſuch, as pretend, that this whole Account of Moſes is to be underſtood in a figurative and allegorical Senſe: ˣ That the Hiſtory of the Fall exhibits the Defection of the Soul; the Serpent repreſents Concupiſcence; the Man, to whom he durſt not apply himſelf, is the Picture of Reaſon: and the Woman, whom he ſo eaſily ſeduced and overcame, is the Emblem of Senſe, and ſo on. * Now, tho' it cannot be denied, but that ſome of the Heathen Philoſophers had a ſtrange Affectation for ſuch an allegorical Way of writing, in order to conceal their true Notions from the Vulgar, and to keep their Learning within the Bounds of their own School; yet, ſince it is apparent, that Moſes had no ſuch Deſign; that he, in his Writings, induſtriouſly avoids all hard Metaphors, and no where affects to gain a Popularity by the Invention of new Notions: Since he ſets up for nothing but a plain Hiſtorian, and pretends to relate Matters, juſt as they happened, without any Diſguiſe or Embelliſhment of Art; it cannot be ſuppoſed, but that the Hiſtory of the Fall, as well as the reſt of the Book of Geneſis, is to be taken in a literal Senſe. All the reſt of the Book is allowed to be literal, and and why ſhould this Part of it only be a Piece of Egyptian Hieroglyphick? Fable and Allegory, we know, are directly oppoſite to Hiſtory: The one pretends to deliver Truth undiſguiſed, the other to deliver Truth indeed, but under the Veil and Cover of Fiction; ſo that, if this Book of Moſes be allowed to be hiſtorical, we may as well ſay, that what Thucydides relates of the Plague of Athens, or Livy of the Battle of Cannæ, is to be underſtood allegorically, as what Moſes tells us of the Prohibition of the Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge, and of Adam and Eve's Expulſion from the Garden of Paradiſe for breaking it, is to be interpreted in a myſtical Senſe, and quite foreign to what the Words import.

Occaſioned by Man's Conſtitution.

THIS being premiſed, we come now to conſider what might poſſibly be the Occaſion of Man's tranſgreſſing in this Kind; [y] which we may, in ſome Meaſure, impute to his original Conſtitution. For it muſt be conſidered, that [z] no created Being can, in its own Nature, be incapable of Sin and Default: Its Perfections, be they what they will, are finite; and whatever has Bounds ſet to its Perfections, is, in ſome Reſpect, imperfect, i. e. it wants thoſe Perfections, which a Being of infinite Perfections only can have, and whatever wants any Perfection is certainly capable of miſcarrying. And as every finite Creature is capable of Default, ſo every rational Being muſt naturally have a Liberty of Choice, i. e. it muſt have a Will to chuſe, as well as an Underſtanding to reaſon; becauſe a Faculty of Underſtanding, without a Will to determine it, (if left to itſelf) muſt always think of the ſame Object, or proceed in a continued Series and Connection of Thoughts, without any End or Deſign; which will be a perpetual Labour in vain, and tedious Thoughtfulneſs to no Purpoſe. And as every rational Being has a Liberty of Choice; ſo, to direct that Choice, it muſt, of Neceſſity, have a preſcribed Rule of its Actions. God, indeed, who is infinite Perfection, is a Rule to himſelf, and acts according to his own Eſſence, from whence it is impoſſible for him to vary: But the moſt perfect Creatures muſt act by a Rule, which is not eſſential to them, but preſcribed them by God, and is not ſo intrinſick in their Natures, but that they may decline from it; for a free Agent may follow, or not follow, the Rule appointed him, or elſe he would not be free.

NOW, in order to know, how it comes to paſs, that we ſo frequently abuſe our natural Freedom, and tranſgreſs the Rules, that God has ſet us, we muſt remember,—— [a] that the Soul of Man is ſeated in the Middle, as it were, between thoſe more excellent Beings, which live perpetually above, with which it partakes in the Sublimity of its Nature and Underſtanding; and thoſe inferior terreſtrial Beings, with which it communicates through the vital Union, which it has with the Body; and that, by Reaſon of its natural Freedom, it is ſometimes aſſimilated to the one, and ſometimes to the other of theſe Extremes. We muſt obſerve farther, [b] that, in this compound Nature of ours, there are ſeveral Powers and Faculties, ſeveral Inclinations and Diſpoſitions, ſeveral Paſſions and Affections, differing in their Nature and Tendency, according as they reſult from the Soul or Body; that each of theſe has its proper Object, in a due Application to which it is eaſy and ſatisfied; that they are none of them ſinful in themſelves, but may be Inſtruments of much Good, when rightly applied, as well as occaſion great Miſchief by a Miſapplication: Whereupon a conſiderable Part of Virtue will conſiſt in regulating them, and in keeping our ſenſitive Part ſubject to the rational.

THIS is the original Conſtitution of our Nature: And ſince the firſt Man was endowed with the ſame Powers and Faculties of Mind, and had the ſame Diſpoſitions and Inclinations of Body, it cannot be, but that he muſt have been liable to the ſame Sort of Temptations, and, conſequently, capable of complying with the Dictates of Senſe and Appetite, contrary to the Direction of Reaſon, and the Conviction of his own Mind: And to this Cauſe the Scripture ſeems to aſcribe the Commiſſion of the firſt Sin, when it tells us, that [c] the Woman ſaw the Tree, that it was good for Food, and pleaſant to the Eye, and deſirable to make one wiſe, i. e. it had ſeveral Qualities, that were adapted to her natural Appetites; was beautiful to the Sight, and delightful to the Taſte, and improving to the Underſtanding, which both anſwered the Deſire of Knowledge implanted in her ſpiritual, and the Love of ſenſual Pleaſure reſulting from her animal Part; and theſe heightened by the Suggeſtions of the Tempter, abated the Horror of God's Prohibition, and induced her to act contrary to his expreſs Command.

And the Temptation of Satan.

WHO this great Tempter and Seducer was, and by what Method of Inſinuation he drew our firſt Parents into their Defection, [d] Moſes, who contents himſelf with relating Facts, as they happened outwardly, without any Comment or Expoſition of them; [e] or who, by a Metonymy common in the Hebrew Tongue, uſes the inſtrumental for the efficient Cauſe, tells us expreſſly, that it was the Serpent; and, for this Reaſon, ſome of the [f] ancient Jews are of Opinion, that this whole Paſſage is to be underſtood of a real Serpent, which Creature they ſuppoſe to have had originally the Gift of Reaſon and Speech, ſo that Eve might have very well underſtood him. Others, thinking Reaſon and Speech too groſs a Fiction in a Brute, have imagined that it was not a Serpent, properly ſo called, which appeared, but that only the Devil, under that Name, is ſignified and denoted; but this Opinion is no leſs liable to Exception: For, though it cannot be denied, but that the Devil is frequently ſtiled, in Scripture, the Serpent, the old Serpent, and the like; yet why he ſhould be called the ſubtleſt Beaſt of the Field, we cannot conceive, neither will the Puniſhment, inflicted on the Serpent, ſuffer us to doubt, but that a Serpent's Body, at leaſt, was employ'd in the Tranſaction.

Different Opinions concerning the Serpent.

THE moſt common therefore, and indeed the only probable Opinion is, that it was the Devil, ſome wicked and malicious Spirit, (probably the Chief of that Order) who envied the Good of Mankind, the Favours God had beſtowed on them, and the future Happineſs he had ordained for them, and was thereupon reſolved to tempt them to Diſobedience, thereby to bring them to the ſame forlorn Condition with himſelf, and his other apoſtate Brethren; [g] and that, to effect his Purpoſe, he made uſe of a Serpent's Body, as the propereſt Organ, whereby to tranſact his Fraud and Impoſture.

That it was the Devil.

THAT it was the Devil, who all along managed the Deceit, we may ſatisfy ourſelves, not only from the Incongruouſneſs of a brute Beaſt's over-reaching Mankind, in their higheſt Pitch of Underſtanding, but from the Atteſtation of the Holy Scriptures likewiſe: For the Author of the Book of Wiſdom, who well underſtood the Doctrines and Traditions of the Jewiſh Church, tells us, that [h] by the Envy of the Devil, Death came into the World; and our bleſſed Saviour, who was a better Explainer of theſe Matters, informs us likewiſe, that the Devil was a Murderer from the Beginning, or from the firſt Creation, alluding to his miſchievous Deſtruction of Mankind then: For this Reaſon, we find him expreſsly, in Scripture, called the Serpent: [i] And the Dragon was caſt out, that old Serpent, called the Devil and Satan; which is again repeated in the ſame Book, [k] and he laid hold on that old Serpent, which is the Devil and Satan; all which Places are undoubted References to his firſt Deception of Mankind, under the Form of a Serpent.

In a Serpent's Body.

NOW, why the Devil choſe rather to aſſume [l] the Form of a Serpent, than that of any other Creature, we may, in ſome Meaſure, learn from the Character which the Scripture gives of that Animal, viz. That [m] it was more ſubtle than any Beaſt of the Field, that the Lord God had made; where the Word ſubtle may not ſo much denote the Craft and Inſidiouſneſs, as the gentle, familiar, and inſinuating Nature of this Creature. That the Serpent, before the Fall, was mild, and [f] Joſephus, in the firſt Book of his Antiquities, Chap. 2. pretends, that all Creatures uſing the ſame Language, and conſequently, being endowed with Reaſon and Underſtanding, the Serpent, excited by Envy, tempted Eve to Sin, and, among other Things, received this ſignal Puniſhment, viz. That he ſhould be deprived of his Feet, and ever after crawl upon the Ground; which Aben-Ezra and ſeveral Rabbins confirm. [l] What is an Argument ex Poſteriori, of the Devil's having aſſumed the Form of a Serpent, in his Temptation of our firſt Parents, is, the Pride, he has ever ſince taken, of being worſhipped under that Form, to inſult, as it were, and trample upon fallen Man. To this Purpoſe we may obſerve, that the Serpent has, all along, been the common Symbol and Repreſentation of the Heathen Deities. Jul. Firmic. de Errore Profan. Relig. p 15. That the Babylonians worſhipped a Dragon, we may learn from the Apocrypha, and that they had Images of Serpents in the Temple of Belus, Diodorus Siculus [Lib. II. Cap. 4.] informs us. Grotius, out of ſeveral ancient Authors, has made it appear, that, in the old Greek Myſteries, they uſed to carry about a Serpent, and cry Εὔα, the Devil thereby expreſſing his Triumph, in the unhappy Deception of our firſt Mother. The Story of Ophioneus, among the Heathens, was taken from the Devil's aſſuming the Body of a Serpent, in his tempting of Eve. Orig. contra Celſ. Lib. 6. And, to name no more, what Philip Melanchon tells us, of ſome Prieſts in Aſia, is very wonderful, viz. That they carry about a Serpent, in a Brazen Veſſel, which they attend with a great deal of Muſick, and many Charms in Verſe, while the Serpent, every now and then, lifts up itſelf, opens its Mouth, and thruſts out the Head of a beautiful Virgin, to ſhew the Devil's Triumph in this Miſcarriage, among theſe poor deluded Idolaters. Nicholls's Conference with the Theiſt, Vol. I. [m] Gen. iii. 1.

and gentle, and [n] more familiar with Man, than any other Creature; that he did not then creep on the Ground, but went with his Head and Breaſt reared up and advanced; that, by frequently approaching our firſt Parents, and playing and ſporting before them, he had gained their Good-liking and Eſteem, is not only the Sentiment both of [o] Jews and [p] Chriſtians, but what ſeems likewiſe to have ſome Foundation in Scripture: For when God ſays, that [q] he will put Enmity between the Serpent and the Woman, and between his Seed and her Seed, the Implication muſt be, that there was ſome Sort of Kindneſs and Friendſhip between them before.

'TIS no Way unreaſonable therefore to ſuppoſe, that this Creature was beloved both by Adam and Eve: She eſpecially was delighted with it, and uſed to play and ſport with it: She laid it perhaps in her Boſom, adorned her Neck with its Windings, or made it a Bracelet for her Arms. So that its being ſo intimate with the Woman, made it the properer Inſtrument for the Devil's Purpoſe, who, ſliding himſelf into it, might wantonly play before her, until he inſenſibly brought her to the forbidden Tree, and then, twiſting round its Branches, might take of the Fruit and eat, to ſhew her, by Experience, that there was nothing of Death contained in it, before he began to beſpeak her; and his Speech might be the leſs ſurprizing to her, becauſe ſhe might probably think, (as [r] he might poſitively affirm) that this new-acquired Faculty proceeded from the Virtue of the Fruit.

What Kind of Serpent.

BUT there is another Conjecture ſtill more probable, if we will but allow, that the Serpent, whoſe Body the Devil poſſeſſed, was not of a common ordinary Species, [s] but one very probably ſomething like that flying fiery Sort, which, we are told, are bred in Arabia and Egypt. They are of a ſhining yellowiſh Colour, like Braſs, and by the Motion of their Wings, and Vibration of their Tails, reverberating the Sun-beams, make a glorious Appearance. Now if the Serpent, whoſe Body the Devil abuſed, was of this Kind, (though perhaps a Species far more glorious) it was a very proper Creature for him to make uſe of for his Deſign: For theſe Serpents we find called in Scripture Seraphs, or Seraphim, which gave the Name to thoſe bright lofty Angels, that were frequently employed by God, to deliver his Will to Mankind, and, coming upon that Errand, were wont to put on certain ſplendid Forms; ſome of them the Form of Cherubim, i. e. beautiful flying Oxen, and others the Shape of Seraphim, winged and ſhining Serpents. The Devil therefore, who is accuſtomed to imitate the Divine Actions by an artificial Mimickry, obſerving that good Angels attended the Divine Majeſty, and ſometimes miniſtered to Adam

Conſider'd all Things viſible in Heaven,
Or Earth, or Middle.——— Paradiſe Loſt, Book IX.

This whole Scene of the Devil's tempting Eve in the Form of a Serpent, is wrote with ſo much Art, as well as thorough Knowledge of the beſt Interpreters, that I cannot but recommend it to my Reader, as an excellent Comment on that Part of the third Chapter of Geneſis. [s] Tenniſon, of Idolatry, and Patrick's Commentary.

Adam and Eve in this bright Appearance, uſurped the Organs of one of theſe ſhining Serpents, which, by his Art and Skill in natural Cauſes, he might improve into ſuch a ſurpaſſing Brightneſs, [t] as to repreſent to Eve the uſual Shechinah, or Angelical Appearance, ſhe was accuſtomed to; and having done this, [u] it was no Wonder, that he more eaſily deceived our firſt unhappy Mother, who might then probably take him for one of the Angels, appertaining to God's glorious Preſence, and now ſent down from Heaven to aſſiſt her, as ſhe had often perhaps experienced before, during her Stay in Paradiſe.

[x] HOWEVER this be, it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe that it was ſome beautiful Creature, whom Eve took to be an Angel, that wiſhed her well, while he diſcourſed with her. For, 'tis impoſſible to conceive, that ſhe ſhould be ſo ſimple and ignorant, as to think that Beaſts could ſpeak, much leſs, that they knew more of God's Mind than herſelf: Nor ſeems it credible, how ſhe could be deceived any otherwiſe, than by ſome Creature, which appeared ſo gloriouſly, as to make her miſtake it for an heavenly Miniſter coming, as ſhe might ſuppoſe, to explain unto her the Senſe and Meaning of the Divine Command. And, accordingly, if we obſerve in what Manner the Tempter addreſſes himſelf to her, we ſhall find our Suppoſition confirmed.

The Manner of his tempting Eve.

A LEARNED Jew [y] has expounded this Tranſaction in a very new and ingenious Manner. He pretends that the Serpent did not ſpeak at all, neither did Eve ſay any Thing to it; but that, being a very nimble and active Creature, it got upon the Tree of Knowledge, took of the Fruit, and eat of it; that Eve, having ſeen it ſeveral Times do ſo, and not die, concluded with herſelf that the ſaid Fruit did not occaſion Death, and that it might be grateful to the Taſte. By this Action, ſays he, the Serpent gave the Woman to underſtand, as much as if it had ſpoke, that ſhe ſhould not die for eating the Fruit; whereupon ſhe concluded that God had laid the Prohibition upon them, purely to debar them from the Knowledge of Good and Evil.

[z] THIS Opinion is very plauſible; and yet it muſt be owned, that the Text ſeems to expreſs ſomething more, and that there was a real Dialogue between the Woman and the Serpent, wherein the Serpent had the Advantage of her. To perſiſt therefore in our former Expoſition, it is not improbable, [a] that the Tempter, before ever he ſpoke to Eve, repreſented himſelf as one of the heavenly Court, who came to congratulate the Happineſs, that God had beſtowed upon them in Paradiſe, which was ſo great, that he could not eaſily believe, he had denied them any of the Fruit of the Garden: He deſired therefore to be ſatisfied, from her own Mouth, of the Truth of what he pretended to have heard, or to know, how they underſtood the Command of God: Yea, hath God ſaid, ye ſhall not eat of every Tree of the Garden? And, as the Woman acquainted him with the whole Tenor of the Prohibition, (to weaken her Faith) he firſt ſuggeſts her Miſtake in the Meaning of it, Ye ſhall not ſurely die; and then (to flatter her Ambition) he deludes her with a falſe Promiſe: God does know, that in the Day ye eat thereof, your Eyes ſhall be opened, and ye ſhall be as Gods, knowing Good and Evil. As if he had ſaid,

" AND, can it poſſibly be, that ſo good a God, who has ſo lately been ſo boun" tiful to you, as to give you a Being, and inveſt you with Dominion, and make " you the chief Favourites, that he has, ſhould now deny you any Thing? Has he " indeed forbid you the Uſe of the Tree of Knowledge, but why did he plant it
" at all? Why did he adorn it with ſuch beautiful Fruit? Why did he place you " in this Garden, to ſee and behold it daily, but that he has a ſecret Deſign (however
" he

[t] This ſeems to be the Opinion of Tertullian, when he tells us, that Eve gave Attention to the Serpent, as to the Son of God, and again, that the Serpent from the Beginning was one, that ſacrilegiouſly uſurped the Divine Image. De Præſcrip. Hæret. pag. 220. Et adv. Valent. Cap. 2. pag. 251. [u] Our learned and ingenious Mr Mede has another Way of accounting for the Devil's Succeſs, in his Temptation of the Woman. He ſuppoſes, that, as it was the Law of Spirits, in their Commerce with Men, to preſent themſelves under the Shape of ſome viſible Thing; ſo it was to be likewiſe under the Shape of ſome ſuch Thing, as, more or leſs, reſembled their Condition; and that, as the Glorious Spirits might take no other Shape, than that of Man, ſo the Apoſtate Spirits could appear in no other Likeneſs but that of a Beaſt, thereby to denote their Abaſement: And yet, becauſe the Devil here took upon him the Shape of the moſt wiſe and excellent of all Beaſts, he ſo blinded the Woman's Eyes with an Opinion of his Excellency and Sagacity, that, in a Manner, ſhe forgot, or regarded not, that he was one of the wicked and apoſtate Spirits; which occaſioned her miſerable Ruin and Overthrow. Diſcourſe xiv. But this Opinion turns upon too many Suppoſitions: It accounts not ſo well for the Woman's complying with the Tempter, nor does it anſwer the great Difficulty, how ſhe came to be ſo very culpable, if ſhe knew not who the Tempter was, much better than the other. [x] Patrick's Commentary. [y] Iſaac Abarbinel. [z] Howell's Hiſtory of the Bible. [a] Patrick, ibid.

" he may conceal it from you) that you ſhould eat it, as well as the reſt? And " therefore he conceals it from you, becauſe he is minded to keep you in Ignorance, " and not admit you to that Plenitude of Happineſs, which your eating of this Tree " would confer upon you. [b] Its ſovereign Quality is to illuminate ſtrangely the " Underſtanding, and advance all the other Faculties of the Soul to ſuch a Sublimity, " that eat but of it, and ye ſhall be like Angels; nay, ye ſhall be like Gods; " your Beings ſhall be ſecure in your own Hands, and your Happineſs vaſt and " inconceivable, and independent on any other. Why ſhould you ſhrink back, or " be afraid to do it then? You have now an Opportunity of making yourſelves for " ever; and the Treſpaſs is nothing: What Harm in eating a little Fruit? Why this " Tree of Knowledge more ſacred than all the reſt? Can ſo great a Puniſhment as " Death be proportionate to ſo ſmall a Fault? I come to aſſure you that it is not; " that God has relaxed the Rigour of the Prohibition, and eat you what you will, ye " ſurely ſhall not die."

The Fall of the Woman.

THIS ſeems to be a natural Paraphraſe upon the Tempter's Words; and by ſome ſuch cunning Harangue as this it was, that he gained the Ear of Eve: And when he had done this, [c] he prevailed with her to fix her Eye upon the Fruit; he remarked to her its Pleaſantneſs to the Sight, and left her to gueſs at the Deliciouſneſs of its Taſte. Eve, in the very Midſt of the Temptation, had a Freedom of Choice; but the wild Conceit of knowing Good and Evil, of becoming like God, and of changing her Felicity (great indeed, but ſubordinate) for an independent State of Happineſs; and eſpecially the deceitful Bait of a preſent ſenſual Pleaſure blinded her Reaſon by Degrees; and, as ſhe ſtood gazing on the Tree, filled all her Thoughts, and the whole Capacity of her Soul. The Sight of the Fruit provoked her Deſire; the Suggeſtions of the Tempter urged it on; and the very Prohibition itſelf added ſomething to inflame it; ſo that, at all Adventures, ſhe put forth her Hand, and plucked, and eat:

[d] Earth felt the Wound, and Nature from her Seat,
Sighing thro' all her Works, gave Signs of Woe,
That all was loſt.

Of the Man.

SHE however had no ſuch Senſe of her Condition, but fancying herſelf already in the Poſſeſſion of that chimerical Happineſs, wherewith the Devil had flattered her, ſhe invited her Huſband to partake with her. The moſt abſurd Arguments appear reaſonable, and the moſt unjuſt Deſigns equitable, when the Perſon, that propoſes them, is beloved. [e] The Devil therefore knew very well what he did, when he made his firſt Application to the Woman, perceiving her not only to be weaker by Nature, but to have ſuch a powerful Aſcendency over her Huſband's Affections, that he could not well deny her any Thing. Her Charms and Endearments, he knew, would be of more Efficacy, than all the ſubtle Motives, which he could ſuggeſt; and therefore he made Uſe of her to engage him in the Defection. And [f] he, like an uxorious Man, (after ſome Reluctancy, we may ſuppoſe) was prevailed on, by her Intreaties, contrary to his Senſe of Duty, and the Convictions of his own Breaſt, to violate the Command, merely becauſe ſhe had done it, and to ſhare whatever Fate God's Indignation for this Tranſgreſſion ſhould bring upon her: For ſo the Words of his Excuſe ſeem to imply, The Woman, whom thou gaveſt to be with me, (and to be my other Self) gave me of the Tree, and I did eat: 'Twas through her Perſuaſion, and out of the paſſionate Affection I had for her, that I was likewiſe drawn in to commit this Sin. Thus the Sollicitations of the Woman ruined the Man, as the Inchantments of the Temper ruined the Woman: She held forth the fair

[b] Eve, upon the Sight of the forbidden Tree, unto which the Serpent had conducted her, ſeems ſurprized, and refuſes to eat, alledging the ſevere Prohibition of God; whereupon the Poet makes the Tempter artfully break out into this rapturous Commendation of it:

O ſacred, wiſe, and Wiſdom-giving Plant,

Why God permitted it.

"BUT why did God permit them thus to be undone? Why did he not ſend them "Succours from above? When ſo great a Price, as the Lives of all Mankind, was "ſet upon their Heads, why did not he enable them to overcome the Wiles of "the Tempter? Why did not he order a Guard of Angels, or ſome more plentiful "Influxes of his bleſſed Spirit, to aſſiſt them, in this unequal Conflict?" Theſe are Enquiries that may well enough be made, and therefore, to ſatisfy them, and withal to vindicate the Wiſdom and Goodneſs of Almighty God, in permitting this Event, we ſhould do well to conſider, that God having created Man a Free-Agent, and now put him in a State of Probation, he could not lay any Reſtraint upon him, nor communicate any Aſſiſtance to him, but what was conſiſtent with the Nature he had given him, and the State he had placed him in. [g] Had God, to prevent Man's Sin, taken away the Liberty of his Will, he had thereby deſtroyed the Foundation of all Virtue, and the very Nature of Man himſelf; for Virtue would not have been ſuch, had there been no Poſſibility of acting contrary, and Man's Nature would have been Divine, had it been made impeccable: [h] Had God given our firſt Parents ſuch powerful Influences of his holy Spirit, as to have made it impoſſible for them to ſin, or had he ſent a Guard of Angels to watch and attend them ſo, as to hinder the Devil from propoſing any Temptation, or them from hearkening to any; had he, I ſay, ſupernaturally over-ruled the Organs of their Bodies, or the inward Inclinations of their Minds, upon the leaſt Tendency to Evil, in this Caſe, he had governed them, not as free, but as neceſſary Agents, and put it out of his own Power to have made any Trial of them at all. All therefore that he could do, and all that in Reaſon could be expected from him to do, was to give them ſuch a ſufficient Meaſure of Power and Aſſiſtance, as might enable them to be a Match for the ſtrongeſt Temptation: And this, there is no Queſtion to be made, but that he did do.

He no ways to be blamed.

[i] WE indeed, in this degenerate State of ours, find a great deal of Difficulty to encounter with Temptations: We feel a great Blindneſs in our Underſtanding, and a Crookedneſs in our Will: We have Paſſions ſtrong and ungovernable, and experience oftentimes an Inclination to do Evil, even before the Temptation comes. But our firſt Parents, in their primitive Rectitude, ſtood poſſeſſed of every Thing as advantageous the other Way. They had an Underſtanding large, and capacious, and fully illuminated by the Divine Spirit: Their Will was naturally inclined to the ſupreme Good, and could not, without Violence to its Nature, make Choice of any other; by which Means it came to paſs, that it was as hard for them to ſin, as it is difficult for us to abſtain from ſinning; as eaſy for them to elude Temptations then, as it is natural for us to be led away by Temptations now. And therefore, if, notwithſtanding all theſe mighty Advantages towards a State of Impeccancy, they would chuſe to expreſs a Contempt of God's Authority, and to break thro' all Reſtraints to come at their Sin, their Perverſeneſs and Obſtinacy are only to be blamed, and not the Inſufficiency of the Divine Aſſiſtance.

IT cannot be denied indeed, but that the Diſorder, brought upon us by their Tranſgreſſion, was great and grievous; and yet there will be no Cauſe to complain, much leſs any Reaſon to impeach the Goodneſs of God for it, eſpecially if it be conſidered farther, —— that what he thought not fit to prevent by his Almighty Power, he has nevertheleſs thought fit to repair by the Covenant of Mercy in his Son Jeſus Chriſt. By him he has propounded the ſame Reward, eternal Life after Death, which we ſhould have had, without Death, before, and given us a better Eſtabliſhment for our Virtue now, than we could have had, had we not been Sufferers by the firſt Tranſgreſſion.

FOR let us ſuppoſe, [k] that, notwithſtanding our firſt Parents had ſinned, yet God had been pleaſed, that original Righteouſneſs ſhould have equally deſcended upon all their Poſterity; yet we muſt allow, that any one of their Poſterity might have been been foiled by the Wiles of the Tempter, and fallen, as well as they did: Now had they ſo fallen, (the Covenant of Grace being not yet founded) how could they have ever recovered themſelves to any Degree of Acceptance with God? Their Caſe muſt have been the ſame, as deſperate, as forlorn, as that of fallen Angels was before: Whereas now, in the preſent State of Things, our Condition is much ſafer. Sin indeed, by Reaſon of our preſent Infirmity, may more eaſily make its Breaches upon us, either through Ignorance or Surprize; but it cannot get Dominion over us, without our own deliberate Option; for it is an expreſs Goſpel-Promiſe againſt the Power of Sin, that [l] it ſhall not have Dominion over us; againſt the Power of the Devil, that greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the World; againſt the Power of Temptations, that [m] God is faithful, who will not ſuffer us to be tempted above what we are able; againſt Diſcouragement from the Pretence of our Infirmities, that [n] we may do all this through Chriſt that ſtrengthens us; and in Caſe of failing, [o] that we have an Advocate with the Father, and a Propitiation for our Sins. Thus plentifully did God provide for Man's Stability, in that State of Integrity; thus graciouſly for his Reſtoration, in this State of Infirmity; in both Caſes his Goodneſs has been conſpicuous, and has never failed.

The Heinouſneſs of the Crime.

BUT it may be objected perhaps againſt this Attribute, "that the Sin of our "firſt Parents could hardly deſerve ſo ſevere a Puniſhment, as what was inflicted "upon them; that the eating of a Fig, an Apple, or whatever the Fruit was, ſeems "to be a ſlight and venial Offence, and no Way proportionate to God's Indigna"tion againſt them, and their Poſterity for it." We take wrong Meaſures however, [p] if we ſuppoſe that Good and Evil are only in the Nature of the Thing, and not in the Commands and Prohibitions of God, and ſo eſtimate the Degree of an Offence from the Quality of the Thing forbidden, more than the Authority of the Legiſlator. [q] Whatever God is pleaſed to command or forbid, how indifferent ſoever it be in itſelf, is, for that very Reaſon, ſo far as it is commanded or forbidden by him, as truly Good or Evil, as if it were abſolutely and morally ſo; becauſe it is enacted by the ſame Divine Authority, that makes all moral Precepts obligatory to us. [r] Nay, the lighter and more indifferent the Matter of the Precept is, the greater is the Impiety of the Tranſgreſſor in preferring ſo trivial a Thing before God's Will and Pleaſure, and in deſpiſing his Wrath and Indignation, when it might ſo eaſily have been avoided.

The Aggravations of it.

LET it not then be thought, that the eating of the forbidden Fruit was a light and inſignificant Matter; for if we conſider it in all its aggravating Circumſtances, we muſt allow, that it was not only a bare Diſobedience to God's Command, but a perfect Infidelity to his Promiſes and Threats: That it was [s] a Kind of Idolatry in them, to believe the Devil, and to put a greater Truſt in him, than in God; [t] a prodigious Pride, to deſire to be like God, and ſuch a diabolical Pride, as made the evil Angels fall from Heaven; [u] Envy and Diſcontent, to think that God had denied them the Perfections belonging to their Nature; Covetouſneſs and [x] Sacrilege, to deſire and rob God of that, which he had made holy to himſelf, in Token of his Dominion and Sovereignty; [y] ſtrange and accountable Folly, to part with his Favour, which is better than Life, for the Pleaſures of Taſte and Curioſity; and one of the moſt barbarous Cruelties, that ever was committed, to deſtroy the poor Souls of ſo many of their Offſpring, to diſinherit all their Children, before they were born, and doom them to Slavery, before they knew the Price of Liberty.

ADD to this, that it was a Diſobedience againſt God; a God, [z] who not only knew beſt how to govern them, and what was moſt for their real Good and Advantage; [a] but who ſo lately had given them Being, and beſtowed ſo much Happineſs on them, and made them Lords over all, and reſtrained nothing from them, but only the Uſe of this one Tree: Add again, that they committed this Sin, in [b] the very Place of God's ſpecial Preſence, againſt the cleareſt Conviction of Conſcience, with Minds fully enlightened to diſcern it, with Wills ſufficiently fortified to decline it, and without any outward Compulſion, or inward Propenſity of Nature to induce them to it; and laying all this together, it will appear, that this was a Crime of ſo ſingular an Enormity, and Guilt of ſo heinous a Complexion, that nothing now-now-a-days can be ſuppoſed to reſemble it: As will farther appear in the dreadful Effects, that thereupon enſued, both to themſelves and their Poſterity.

To themſelves.

FOR, [c] after the intoxicating Juice of the forbidden Tree was gone off, and the Man begun to return to his Senſes again; after the Eyes of his Underſtanding came to be opened, and he to reflect within himſelf upon what he had done, whom he had offended, and whom he had gratified by his Tranſgreſſion; when he began, I ſay, [d] to perceive his own Nakedneſs, and the foul Degradation of his Nature; how his Innocence, which cloathed him before like a Garment, was fled, and Luſt, and other irregular Appetites, which he was an utter Stranger to till that unhappy Hour, had taken Poſſeſſion of his Soul, in what Condition muſt he be? How is Man diſfigured by his Fall! How is he transformed in an Inſtant from the Image of God into the Image of the Devil!

ADAM, while he continued in his Obedience, enjoyed Peace with God, a ſweet Serenity of Mind, a Divine Calm in his Conſcience, and was full of Satisfaction in himſelf; but after his Sin, he trembled at God's Voice, and was tormented at his Preſence: [e] I heard thy Voice, and was afraid, ſays the poor guilty Man: [f] He looked on God as angry and armed againſt him, ready to execute the ſevere Sentence: Conſcience began an early Hell within him: Paradiſe, with all its Pleaſures, could not ſecure him from the Sting in his Breaſt; and that ſharpened by the Hand of God. What a Confuſion of Thoughts, what a Combate of Paſſions was he in? When the Temptation, which deceived him, vaniſhed, and his Spirit recovered out of the Surpriſe, and took a clear View of its Guilt, in its true Horror, what Indignation did it kindle in his Breaſt? How did Shame, Sorrow, and Deſpair, theſe ſecret Executioners, torment his Spirit? The intelligent Nature (his peculiar Excellency above the Brutes) armed Miſery againſt him, and put a keener Edge upon it, by reflecting on the fooliſh Exchange, he had made, of the Favour of God, for the Fruit of a Tree, and by his foreſeeing the Death, he juſtly deſerved, hanging over his Head, and ready to devour him.

WE may imagine in Part, but cannot ſufficiently relate, how ſad and deplorable the Condition of Adam and Eve was, upon their Loſs of God's Favour, and Expulſion from Paradiſe. They could not but ſpend their Days in languiſhing Grief, and in continual Sighs and Tears. Paradiſe, they ſaw, ſhut againſt them, and the Guard ſtand menacing with a flaming Sword [g]. The Face of God was

[c] Bates's Harmony. [d] Immediately upon eating the forbidden Fruit, the ſacred Hiſtorian tells us, that our firſt Parents knew themſelves to be naked, i. e. they were ſenſible, they had tranſgreſſed. Thus, after the Golden Calf was conſecrated Moſes is ſaid to have ſeen the People naked, Exod. xxxii. 25. And in the New Teſtament γυμνος is ſometimes taken for a Sinner, Rev. xvi. 15. Others indeed ſuppoſe, that the Fruit of this forbidden Tree provoked our firſt Parents to Luſt, and ſome indecent Motions of the Body; for, according to the Modeſty of the Hebrew Tongue, Nakedneſs may well enough denote an irregular Appetite to Venereal Pleaſures; but, beſides that this Conjecture is without any Manner of Foundation, 'tis hard to conceive, how Adam and Eve ſhould not know themſelves to be naked before their Fall, or why they ſhould be more aſhamed of their Nakedneſs then, than they were before. When they were the only Inhabitants of the World, their Bed, under the Canopy of Heaven, was equally as chaſte, as if it had been covered with a Roof, and ſecured with a Wall, and Ceiling, and Tapeſtry, and therefore this Nakedneſs of theirs muſt be underſtood in a figurative Senſe. M. Le Clerc's Diſſertations. [e] Gen. iii. 10. [f] Milton makes Adam, after his Recovery from his Infatuation, expreſs his Shame and Regret to Eve in Terms, that deſerve our Obſervation:

——— ——— ——— How ſhall I behold the Face
Henceforth of God or Angel, earſt with Joy
And Rapture ſo oft beheld? Thoſe heavenly Shapes,
Which dazzle now this Earthly, with their Blaze
Inſufferably bright. O might I here
In Solitude live ſavage, in ſome Glade
Obſcur'd, where higheſt Woods impenetrable
To Star or Sun Light ſpread their Umbrage broad,
And brown as Evening! Cover me, ye Pines,
Ye Cedars, with innumerable Boughs
Hide me, where I may never ſee them more. Book ix.

[g] What is here meant by the flaming Sword, repreſented to be in the Hand of the Cherubims, at the Entrance of the Garden of Paradiſe, is variouſly conjectured by Learned Men. But of all Eſſays of this Kind, that of Tertullian, who thought it was the Torrid Zone, is the moſt unhappy. Tertul. Apolog. Cap. 47. Nor is that of Pſeudo-Anſelm, who will have it to be a Wall of Fire encompaſſing Paradiſe, much better. Anſelmi Elucidare, Cap. 15. And yet we find this followed, in a great Meaſure, by a Learned Man of our own Nation, who, pretending that the original Word ſignifies a dividing Flame, as well as a flaming Sword, ſuppoſes, that this Flame was an Accenſion of ſome inflammable Matter, round about the Garden, which excluded all Comers to it, till ſuch Time as the Beauty of the Place was defaced. Nicholls's Conference, Vol. I. Some Rabbins are of Opinion, that this flaming Sword was an Angel, which they found upon that Paſſage in the Pſalms, where it is ſaid, that God maketh his Angels Spirits, and his Miniſters a flaming Fire, Pſal. civ. 4. Maimonides More Nev. Part I. Cap. 49. And hereupon another Learned Man of our Nation has imagined, that this flaming Sword, which was eſteemed by the Jews a ſecond Angel, was of a different Kind to the Cherubim, viz. a Seraph, or flaming Angel, in the Form of a flying fiery Serpent, whoſe Body vibrated in the Air with Luſtre, and may be fitly deſcribed by the Image of ſuch a Sword. Tenniſon, of Idolatry.

was alienated from them, and no Hopes of Conſolation to be expected thence. Sweat and hard Labour were come upon the Man, and great Pain in her Child-bearing had ſeized upon the Woman, ſo that they could not but be filled with Regret and Remorſe, whether they reflected on their paſt Felicity, or looked forward, and ſaw the innumerable Miſeries attending human Life, all conſequent upon their Folly. And, to augment their Sorrow, there ſoon happened a diſmal Effect of their Fall and Depravation, in the unnatural Murther of their dear Son Abel, whoſe Name (as ſome expound it) ſignifies Mourning, and was given, by a particular Direction of Providence, to denote the Grief, that his Death would occaſion to his diſconſolate Parents. This made their Hearts bleed afreſh, and cauſed them to look back with more Seriouſneſs and Self-reproaches upon their vile Apoſtacy, which was the Spring of all the Miſeries they underwent.

Whether they repented of it.

BUT whatever temporal Calamities befel theſe Sinners, ſince the Scripture makes no Mention of their Repentance, ſome have not ſtuck to affirm, that they died impenitent. This, however, ſeems to be too raſh and uncharitable a Conjecture: The ſacred Hiſtory, indeed, is ſilent as to many Particulars, becauſe a great Space of Time, eſpecially in its Introduction, (as this Part of it may very well be called) is included in the Compaſs of a very few Pages; but as the Promiſe of the Meſſiah, who was to redeem and ſave Mankind, was made [h] immediately after the Fall, and ſo concerned them, as well as others, we have Foundation for a pious Belief, that God's Mercy would not overpaſs theſe poor Offenders, at its firſt ſetting out, but rather begin with them, to give an Inſtance of his preſent Pity and Kindneſs, and an Aſſurance of his future Goodneſs and Clemency. [i] His Wiſdom and Honour can hardly be ſuppoſed to ſuffer Satan to boaſt, that his firſt Conqueſt and Spoils remained entire, and met not with an After-defeat. And therefore, [k] if the Eaſtern Traditions were to be credited, we might add, that, for a long Time after their Fall, they plunged themſelves into the deepeſt Sorrow: They bemoaned their Fate; they bewailed their Sin; begged Pardon, and performed all the Offices of a ſincere Penance, until God was pleaſed to diſpatch an Angel to comfort them, and to give them Aſſurance of their Reſtoration to the Divine Favour.

Its evil Effects upon the Serpent.

THESE were the evil Effects and Conſequences, which, by Reaſon of their Apoſtacy, more eſpecially befel our firſt Parents: We come now to thoſe of a larger Extent, and wherein their whole Race is concerned. But, before we enter upon theſe, it may not be amiſs briefly to take Notice of the Sentence denounced againſt the Serpent, and that the rather, becauſe it may poſſibly ſeem ſtrange to ſome, why God ſhould be ſo incenſed againſt this Creature, for what it could no Ways help; having no Intention to ſin, nor any Cognizance of what the Devil did with its Body. Now, if we conſider what a bright and glorious Creature the Serpent was before, we cannot but ſuppoſe, that God intended this Debaſement of it, not ſo much to expreſs his Indignation againſt it, [l] as to make it a Monument of Man's unhappy Fall, a Teſtimony of his Diſpleaſure againſt Sin, and an inſtructive Emblem to deter all future Ages from the Commiſſion of that, which brought ſuch Vengeance along with it. [m] In the Levitical Law we find an expreſs Command, that if a Man committed any Abomination with a Beaſt, the Beaſt was to be ſlain, as well as the Man: And, by Parity of Reaſon, the Serpent is here puniſhed, if not to humble the Pride, and allay the Triumph of the Devil, by ſeeing the Inſtrument of his Succeſs ſo ſhamefully degraded; at leaſt to remind the Delinquents themſelves of the Foulneſs of their Crime, and the Neceſſity of their Repentance, whenever they chanced to behold ſo noble a Creature, as the Serpent once was, reduced to ſo vile and abject a Condition, merely by the Means of their Tranſgreſſion. And now to proceed.

Upon the Ground.

[n] WHATEVER we read in the antient Poets, of the Plenty and Happineſs of the Golden Age, was certainly nothing elſe, but ſome broken Notions and Traditions of Man's firſt Eſtate in Paradiſe, and of that univerſal Harmony, wherein the World, and all Things would have continued, had not his Fall introduced a Change. The Fruits of the Earth, at firſt, were ſpontaneous, and the Soil, without being torn and tortured, ſatisfied the Wants and Deſires of Man; but, upon his Apoſtacy from God, as a Puniſhment for his Sin, God [o] curſed the Ground, and the Ground immediately brought forth Thorns and Thiſtles: For we muſt not ſuppoſe, [p] with ſome, that the original Fertility of the Earth continued until the Deſtruction brought upon it by the univerſal Deluge. The Deluge may be ſaid, indeed, to be the Completion of the Curſe of Barrenneſs, but the Curſe commenced, in Part, long before; otherwiſe how could Adam be ſaid, [q] in Sorrow, and in the Sweat of his Face, to eat of it all the Days of his Life? He died not till about ſeven hundred Years before the Flood, and therefore the Antediluvian Earth muſt have loſt Abundance of its natural Riches, if Men were neceſſitated to till it for their Bread; and perhaps it every Year ſenſibly declined in its Fecundity, until that deſtructive Inundation came.

Mens Bodies. [r] WE may lay it down therefore for an irrefragable Truth, becauſe it is founded upon the holy Records, that the Earth was impoveriſh'd upon Man's Tranſgreſſion, and every Creature degenerated when he fell. [s] The Earth and Air, and other Elements became diſordered, in ſome Meaſure unwholeſome, and ſometimes fatal. Hence proceeded Dearth, Scarcity, Peſtilences, Earthquakes, Storms, Tempeſts, Thunder and Lightning, and all Manner of natural Calamities. Man's Body, which is made of earthly Principles, feels the Power of noxious Elements, and every Day participates of the Curſe; from whence proceeds ſuch an innumerable Variety of Diſeaſes and Diſtempers, [t] that the Maſters of Medics have not yet been able to furniſh out a perfect Catalogue of all the Maladies that infeſt us. We conſume our Days, in this Valley of Tears, amidſt a Multitude of Pains and Uneaſineſſes, of Wants and Neceſſities, of Croſſes and Diſaſters, both in our private, and in our relative Capacity, which (if no ſudden Caſualty overtakes us) waſte and wear us out by Degrees, till at laſt our Bodies ſink into the Grave, and Stench and Rottenneſs become our Portion.

Their Souls. NAY, not only the Bodies, but the Souls likewiſe of Adam's Poſterity feel the ſad Effects of his Apoſtacy from God. The rational and divine Part of Man (which was once the Crown and Glory of his Conſtitution) is defaced; its original Righteouſneſs perverted, and all the Faculties of his Mind miſerably impaired. His intellectual Powers are clouded with Ignorance and Error; the Notions of Good and Evil have loſt their Perſpicuity, and Reaſon itſelf become ſo weak, that it can hardly do its Office. His elective Faculty is influenced too much by his Affections and Paſſions, [u] to ſay that it is abſolutely free: And though he cannot but perceive, that he has loſt that happy Inclination to Good, which was ſtamped upon his Nature at firſt, yet he has not the Senſe to bemoan his Loſs. His Love and Hatred, his Deſires, his Fears, his Joys, his Anger, his Sorrows, Paſſions that were originally innocent and regular, are all unbridled and ungoverned now; they hurry him into Miſchief; they fill him with Perturbation; make him reſtleſs and uneaſy, and are always ending in Vanity and Vexation of Spirit. Theſe are the Bruiſes that our Nature contracted by her Fall: But there is ſtill a more melancholy Conſideration behind, viz. That theſe Diſorders in the Underſtanding, Will, and Affections, make Way for more viſible ones in the Actions of Mens Lives. From hence proceed Impiety, Profaneneſs, Blaſphemy, Perjury, Covetouſneſs, Injuſtice, Theft, Violence, Malice, Murther, Drunkenneſs, Lewdneſs, Sins of all Degrees, and and Vices of all Dimenſions, which not only exclude Men from Heaven and Happineſs, but make them obnoxious to eternal Miſery and Puniſhment in the World to come: [x] For the Wages of Sin are Death, eternal Death it muſt be expounded, becauſe it is ſet in Oppoſition to the Gift of God, which is eternal Life, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

THUS we ſee, that all Mankind by Nature [y] is wretched, and miſerable, and poor, and blind, and naked; [z] born to Trouble, and liable to Sin, as the Sparks fly upwards; incapable of Heaven, and in no Condition to eſcape Hell, without the Divine Interpoſition: And to account for this dire Effect, ſome have been apt to imagine, [a] that the Fruit of the forbidden Tree might be impregnated with a very fermenting Juice, which put the Blood and Spirits into great Diſorder, and thereby diveſted the Soul of that Power and Dominion, which it had before over the Body; and, by a cloſer and more intimate Union with Matter, reduced it to that miſerable Condition, which has been propagated, along with human Nature, down to Poſterity; as ſome Poiſons, we know, will ſtrangely affect the Nerves and Spirits, without cauſing immediate Death, but make ſuch Alterations in the Body, as, with all the Help of Phyſick, cannot be repaired. But whatever the Nature of the Fruit might be, ſince its Qualities were created by God, to him we muſt have Recourſe in this Enquiry; and, whether the Death, (with all its Train of Evils) that has deſcended to us, lay in the Tree, or in the Will of God, there is no Queſtion to be made, but that our wiſe Creator might very juſtly decree, that human Nature in general ſhould be affected with, and our Happineſs or Unhappineſs depend upon the Obedience or Diſobedience of our firſt Parents. We daily ſee, that Children very often inherit the Diſeaſes of their Parents, and that a vicious and extravagant Father leaves commonly his Son Heir to nothing elſe, but the Name and Shadow of a great Family, with an infirm and ſickly Conſtitution. And if Men generally now partake of the bad Habits and Diſpoſitions of their immediate Parents, why might not the Corruption of human Nature in the firſt, have equally deſcended upon all the reſt of Mankind? The Rebellion of a Parent, in all civil Governments, reduces his Children to Poverty and Diſgrace, who had a Title before to Riches and Honours: And, for the ſame Reaſon, why might not Adam forfeit, for himſelf, and all his Deſcendants, the Gift of Immortality, and the Promiſe of eternal Life? God might certainly beſtow his own Gifts upon his own Terms, and therefore, ſince the Condition was Obedience, he might juſtly inflict Death, i. e. with-hold Immortality from us; he might juſtly deny us Heaven (for the Promiſe of Heaven was an Act of his free Bounty) upon the Tranſgreſſion and Diſobedience of our firſt Parents. They were our Repreſentatives, and in them we fell. But then, amidſt all this Calamity, we have one Thing to comfort us, that [b] Adam was the Figure of him, that was to come, and therefore, as by the Offence of one, Judgment came upon all Men to Condemnation; even ſo, by the Righteouſneſs of one, the free Gift came upon all Men unto Juſtification of Life.

How this was effected.

SECT. III.

Of ORIGINAL SIN.

I KNOW of no Argument in Divinity, that is ſurrounded with more Difficulties, and has occaſioned a greater Diverſity of Opinions, than this of Original Sin. Original Sin indeed is not, in expreſs Terms, mentioned in the holy Bible; but the Nature of the Thing itſelf, and in what Manner it came to be committed, is ſufficiently related, ſo that thoſe, who admit of the Authority of the Scriptures, make no Queſtion of the Fact: The great Matter of Diſpute is, what the Effect of this Tranſgreſſion was, what Guilt it contained, what Puniſhment it merited, and in what Degree its Guilt and Puniſhment both may be ſaid to affect us.

Different Opinions about it.

THE Pelagians and Socinians agree in [c] affirming, —— that, in the Beginning of the World, there was no ſuch Thing as a Covenant between God and Man; that Adam was no Proxy, or Repreſentative for his Poſterity, as is pretended; that the Prohibition was given to our firſt Parents only, and they alone were culpable in the Tranſgreſſion;

Tranſgreſſion; that their Sin, in ſhort, was perſonal, their Nature mortal, and the very ſame with ours; that we have all alike a Liberty of Choice, muſt be puniſhed all for our own, and not other People's Miſconduct; and that the Imputation of Guilt, down to this Time, for an Offence ſo many thouſand Years ago committed, ſeems to bear hard upon the Goodneſs and Juſtice of Almighty God.

THE Remonſtrants are of Opinion, that Adam indeed, as to the Compoſition of his Body, was naturally mortal; yet, by the Bleſſing of God, whereof the Tree of Life was a Symbol or Sacrament, or elſe by the Phyſical Virtue of the Tree itſelf, which could cure all Diſeaſes, and fortify and reſtore Life, he was to be immortalized. They ſuppoſe therefore, that the Threat made to Adam, upon eating the forbidden Fruit, that he ſhould die, is to be underſtood literally; but to be carried no farther than natural Death; [d] which, conſidering the Fears and Terrors, the Miſeries and Uneaſineſſes, that it occaſions, they think, is Puniſhment ſevere enough; though fairly reconcileable to the Notions of God's Juſtice and Goodneſs, becauſe it is but a temporal Puniſhment, and is abundantly recompenſed by the Redemption and Reparation that all Mankind ſhall have in Chriſt Jeſus.

OTHERS do ſo far approve of all this, as to think it is a Part of Original Sin; but then they believe, that it goes much farther, and that, beſides Mens natural Mortality, there is a Weakneſs and Corruption ſpread through the whole Race of Mankind, which diſcovers itſelf in their Inclination to Evil, and Impotency to that which is good. [e] Of this the Philoſophers, ſay they, from the Light of Nature, and their own Experience and Obſervation of themſelves and others, were very ſenſible; of this the holy Scripture gives us abundant Teſtimony, when it tells us, that [f] God made Man upright, but he ſought out to himſelf many Inventions, ſince which Time, [g] the Imaginations of the Thoughts are evil continually; and therefore they conclude, that ſince Man was not originally made ſo, (for God created him after his own Image) he muſt have contracted all this from his Fall, and that therefore the Threatening of Death had an higher Signification than the Diſſolution of the Soul and Body, viz. the Loſs of Divine Favour, of all ſupernatural Gifts and Graces, and a total Defection of Mind from God, which immediately commenced upon the Tranſgreſſion.

THE Supralapſarians, and other Diſciples of St Auſtin, carry this Matter ſtill farther: They believe, that a Covenant was made with all Mankind in Adam, as their Head and Principal, and a Perſon appointed by God to repreſent them all; [h] that our firſt Parents, by their Tranſgreſſion, fell from their Righteouſneſs, and Communion with God, and ſo became dead in Sin, and wholly defiled in all the Faculties of their Soul and Body: That, whatever Death was due to them for their Tranſgreſſion, the ſame is conveyed to all their Poſterity, by the Way of ordinary Generation: That, from this original Corruption, all actual Tranſgreſſions do ariſe; but that, without actual Tranſgreſſion, even in its own Nature, it brings Guilt upon every one, that is born into the World, whereby he is bound over to the Wrath of God, and Curſe of the Law, and ſo made ſubject to Death, with all the Miſeries that attend it, Spiritual, Temporal, and Eternal.

THESE are the principal Opinions (for the little Singularities are innumerable) in this great and controverted Argument; and, in order to perceive which of them approaches neareſt to the Standard of Truth, we muſt make ſome ſhort Enquiry,

1. INTO the Corruption of human Nature, and how far it is criminal in us.

2. INTO the Nature of Original Sin, and how far it it imputed to us; and,

3. INTO the Puniſhment, that becomes due thereupon, and who are the proper Objects of it.

Natural Corruption, its Reality.

THE Corruption of human Nature is what not only we, who have the Revelation of God for our Information in this Particular, have Reaſon to bewail; but what even thoſe, who had no Vouchſafement of this Kind, have experienced in themſelves, though they were unable to account for its Original. Hence it is, that we

we find Ariſtotle compared the State of the Soul in the Body to thoſe Etruſcan Robbers, who joined dead and living Bodies together; and Tully (as he is brought in by St Auſtin) ſadly complaining, [l] That Nature had brought Man into the World, more like a Step-mother than a Mother; with a Body naked, frail, and infirm; with a Mind anxious in Troubles, and dejected in Fears; too weak for Labour, and too propenſe to Luſt; with ſome Sparks of the Divine Fire in his Mind indeed, but theſe ſmothered and obſcured: Whereupon that Father obſerves, "That Tully did "not ſpeak of the unhappy Effects occaſioned by the Diſobedience of our rebellious "Parents, but only drew up an Accuſation againſt Nature; he very well ſaw the "Thing, but was ignorant of the Cauſe; he knew not the Reaſon, why ſo heavy a "Yoke was laid upon the Sons of Adam, and, being unacquainted with the Sacred "Records, was quite a Stranger to Original Sin."

Conjectures concerning it.

AND indeed the Father's Remark was no more than juſt upon that Occaſion; for, if we look into the ſeveral Accounts of the beſt Philoſophers, we ſhall find them very incompetent, if not abſurd, in this Point of Original Corruption. Some of them have imputed it to a Principle infinitely evil, a Sort of Anti-God, eternally co-exiſting with the true God, and eternally oppoſing him, by annoying and perverting Mankind. But this is a wild and abſurd Notion: [k] For if we conſider, that what is infinitely evil muſt, by neceſſary Conſequence, be infinitely imperfect and weak, we ſhall ſoon perceive, that what is infinitely weak (however malicious and miſchievous in itſelf) can never be in a Capacity, either to contrive Miſchief, or to execute it: [l] Others therefore, with more Plauſibility, have imagined, that this general Depravation of human Nature proceeded from a pre-exiſtent State, and our Propenſity to Sin in this World was an ill Habit of the Soul contracted in another, by a voluntary Deviation from God; for which Reaſon it is ſent into the Body by Way of Puniſhment and Expiation. But this is a mere Conjecture, without any Poſſibility of Proof, and has this plain Reaſon againſt it,——[m] That no Man can be puniſhed for his Amendment, (as the Suppoſition in this Caſe runs) who knows nothing of his Offence; becauſe it is inconſiſtent with the Nature and End of Puniſhment, that the Offender ſhould not be made ſenſible of his Fault, eſpecially when the Puniſhment is deſigned for his Amendment: Beſides, that it ſeems a very improper Way of Correction for paſt Offences, to impriſon the Soul in a Body, where, by the Fleſh's luſting againſt the Spirit, it is every Day expoſed to the Commiſſion of more.

The Scripture-Account of it.

THE only true and ſatisfactory Account therefore of this Matter is what we have from the Word of God, which ſtates the Corruption of human Nature in ſuch Terms as theſe, viz. That [n] by one Man Sin entered into the World, by whoſe Diſobedience many were made Sinners; that [o] by Nature, therefore, we are the Children of Wrath, and [p] unable to receive the Things of the Spirit, or to know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned; for [q] what is born of Fleſh is Fleſh, and [r] who can bring a clean Thing out of an unclean? The Royal Pſalmiſt, therefore, makes this free Confeſſion of his natural Depravity, [s] Behold I was ſhapen in Wickedneſs, and in Sin hath my Mother conceived me; and St Paul, this publick Declaration of his natural Imbecillity to Good, [t] I know that in me (i. e. in my Fleſh) dwelleth no good Thing; for to will is preſent with me, but how to perform that which is good, I find not: For though I delight in the Law of God after the inward Man, yet I ſee another Law in my Members, warring againſt the Law of my Mind, and bringing me into Captivity to the Law of Sin, which is in my Members. O wretched Man that I am! who ſhall deliver me from the Body of this Death?

Various Opinions hereupon.

THESE are plain and undeniable Texts; but then the Queſtion is, in what Senſe they are to be taken. [u] Thoſe, that take them in a ſtrict and literal Senſe, are apt to infer, that human Nature has not only loſt its Clearneſs of Underſtanding, and Freedom of Will, and Order of Affections, together with the ſupernatural Graces, which conſtituted the Image of God; but contracted a poſitive Malignity likewiſe, and ſtrong Bent and Inclination to every Thing that is evil and ſinful; inſomuch, that Infants, from the very Womb, have all the Seeds and Principles of Wickedneſs in them, which, as they grow up to Maturity, viſibly exert themſelves, unleſs reſtrained by Grace, and purified by Baptiſm: And they give this Reaſon for it,——[x] That Adam, by Generation, could tranſmit nothing to his Poſterity, but what he had himſelf; ſince therefore he himſelf was polluted with Sin, he muſt neceſſarily have begotten Sinners like himſelf; for the Scripture-Maxim will always hold true, that as the Root is, ſuch are the Branches.

OTHERS are willing to underſtand moſt of theſe Paſſages in a different Senſe, ſo as to relate, not to original, but actual Sin; to the Iniquity we contract by our living in the World, and not any natural Depravity, that we bring into it. [y] Hereupon they tell us, that when Job aſſerts that no Man can bring a clean Thing out of an unclean, his Meaning only is, that God alone can cleanſe and purify the Sinner; that when David complains of the Iniquity, wherein he was conceived, he means no more than to aggrandize his Sinfulneſs, or to own himſelf to be wholly and entirely wicked; that when our Saviour affirms, that what is born of Fleſh is Fleſh, he intends it of our natural Birth, wherein nothing can tranſcend the Principle, from whence it is deriv'd; that when St Paul tells us, we are by Nature the Children of Wrath, and find a Law in our Members warring againſt the Law in our Mind, &c. the whole is to be underſtood of Perſons long accuſtomed to Sin, and thereby brought, as it were, under a natural Neceſſity of committing it.

FROM theſe Expoſitions they infer, that the Scripture makes mention of no ſuch Corruption and Depravation of our Souls by Adam's Tranſgreſſion; that human Nature is the ſame in us, that it was originally in him, only with this Difference, that he was created in the full Maturity of his Underſtanding, whereas we are born Infants, and for ſome Years after live a mere animal Life, and are entirely guided by our ſenſitive Appetite, which, falling in with the corrupt Cuſtoms of the World, and the Prevalency of bad Examples, betray us into ſinful Practices, before we come to the free Exerciſe of our Reaſon. [z] This they account the true Cauſe of the univerſal Wickedneſs of Mankind; for to impute it to any natural Origin, is to make God, who is the Author of Nature, the Author of Wickedneſs likewiſe: * Since whether the Soul come by Traduction or Divine Infuſion, it ſeems equally hard to condemn it to ſuch an Union with the Body, as immediately depraves all its Faculties.

Concerning the Guilt of it. THE Sentiments of Mankind about the Guilt or Sinfulneſs of our natural Corruption, ſeem to vary according to the different Conceptions they have of the Thing. The Socinians, and ſuch as eſteem human Nature as perfect now, as it was in its primitive State, deny all Propenſity to Evil, naturally born with us, and make the whole of our own contracting. They remember in Scripture no Directions concerning Original Guilt, nor did they ever find any Liturgy, either in the Jewiſh or Chriſtian Church, wherein there is any penitential Commemoration of it. The Jews, ſay they, knew nothing of it, nor was the Word ever deviſed among Chriſtians, until the Times of St Auſtin. The Doctors of the Church of Rome believe, that Original Sin is quite taken away by Baptiſm; and therefore, perceiving, that a depraved Diſpoſition ſtill remains in us, they conclude from thence, that it is no Part of Original Sin, but what Adam, in his State of Integrity, was not exempted from: Otherwiſe, they can hardly imagine how it was poſſible for the Devil, in his Temptation, to have any Acceſs to him. The Followers of Calvin are generally of Opinion, that this Corruption of Nature is truly and properly a Sin, or rather a ſinful Habit inherent in the Will, and impreſſed upon all the Faculties of the Soul; and ſome have carried the Matter ſo far as to affirm, that we are doomed to Damnation before we [a] are born, and are all by Nature the Image of the Devil. The Church of England, though more moderate in her Expreſſions, has nevertheleſs declared this to be her Sentiment,——[b] that by Nature we are the Children of Wrath, born in Sin, and under ſuch a faulty State, as naturally inclines us to Evil, and juſtly deſerves God's Wrath and Damnation. Thoſe, that adhere to the Articles of our Church (for it muſt not be diſſembled, that, in this Point more eſpecially, ſome of her Communion have not been afraid to diſſent from her) to ſhew the real Sinfulneſs of our Original Condition are apt to maintain——[c] that, as when Nature is obſtructed in its ordinary Method of Working,

Working, the Production is monſtrous, and, by its natural Irregularity, odious to all Beholders; ſo when a rational Creature is defective in any moral Qualities, which belong to the Perfection of his Nature, he becomes morally evil, and odious in the pure Eye of God: And, therefore, if there be Error in the Underſtanding with regard to our Duty, Diſobedience in the Will, or Irregularity in the Affections, it is not material to enquire how they came there, whether contracted by evil Cuſtoms, or born with us; they are evidently [d] a Tranſgreſſion of the Law, and therefore have in them the true and formal Nature of Sin. 'Tis hardly conceivable however (ſince all Sins confeſſedly proceed from an Act of the Will) how Infants, who have no Knowledge between Good and Evil, ſhould any other Way be accounted Sinners, than by the Imputation of another's Guilt: Let us then ſee, in the next Place, what this Imputation means.

Imputation of Guilt.

[e] TO impute Guilt, is to reckon a Perſon a Tranſgreſſor of the Law, and therefore liable to the Puniſhment of it, whether he has, in his own Perſon, tranſgreſſed the Law, or not. This in Civil Affairs has often taken Place: And that it is the ſame in the Divine Adminiſtration, we have ſome Preſumption from Scripture to believe. 'Tis confeſſed on all Hands, [f] that by Chriſt we have an Imputation of the Merit of his Death, as well as a Purity and Holineſs of Nature conveyed to us by his Doctrine and Spirit: In Oppoſition then to this, (if the Compariſon be cloſely purſued) there muſt be an Imputation of Sin, as well as a Corruption of Nature transfuſed to us by Adam. This is the more conſiderable (ſay the Patrons of this Opinion) in the Point of Imputation; becauſe, St Paul in his Epiſtle to the Romans, is very expreſs and particular in it: He tells us, [g] That by one Man, Sin entered into the World, and Death by Sin, and ſo Death paſſed upon all Men; in whom all have ſinned; that by the Offence of one, Judgment came upon all to Condemnation, and that by one Man's Diſobedience, many were made Sinners. Now as theſe Words are poſitive and full, ſo does the Oppoſition, which they bear to the Effects and Benefits of Chriſt's Death, make them of more Weight and Conſideration in this Caſe: Nay, the whole Deſign of the Apoſtle's Diſcourſe ſeems to be defeated, if the Imputation of Adam's Tranſgreſſion be denied; nor can Adam, in any Senſe, be called [h] the Figure of the Meſſiah, unleſs all Men were made Sinners by his Sin, even as they are juſtified by the Righteouſneſs of Chriſt.

How effected.

How this Tranſgreſſion comes, at ſuch a Diſtance of Time, to be imputed to us, the Maintainers of this Opinion undertake to explain, by telling us, —— [i] That God, of his free Grace, being willing to enter into Covenant with Adam, and in Adam to extend his Mercy to all Mankind, made him ſtand forth, as the Repreſentative and Surety of his Poſterity, to indent for them, as well as for himſelf; that the Conditions of this Covenant were Eternal Life, and all its conſequential Bleſſings, in caſe of Obedience; but, upon the Violation of the Divine Command, Eternal Death, and all its long Train of Miſeries; that in this caſe Adam might properly enough ſtipulate for his Poſterity, as he was their common Parent, and had conſequently a natural Right to diſpoſe of them; eſpecially when, in all Appearance, the Conditions of the Covenant were ſo vaſtly to their Advantage; upon his Diſobedience therefore, the Death threatened is as much due to us, as to him; [k] ſince, properly ſpeaking, we ſinned originally in the ſame Inſtant, that he ſinned actually; becauſe we were then in him, as our Repreſentative, and upon that Account, his Tranſgreſſion was legally ours.

Differently underſtood by others.

[l] BUT to many other Divines all this ſeems to be a very harſh Opinion, nor can they perceive how it can be conſiſtent with the Goodneſs and Juſtice of God to reckon Men guilty of a Sin, that was committed ſo many thouſand Years ago, and wherein they had no perſonal Concern. [m] We can readily conceive, ſay they, how God, in the Richneſs of his Grace, may transfer Merit and Bleſſing from one Perſon to another: This is an Oeconomy of Mercy, wherein all is free, and ſuch a Method is taken herein, as beſt demonſtrates the Goodneſs of God; but, in the Imputation of Sin and Guilt, which are Matters of ſtrict Juſtice, the Caſe is widely different; and therefore we find God often appealing to Mankind concerning the Righteouſneſs of of his Ways; [n] denying expreſsly, that Children are to ſuffer for their Parents Tranſgreſſion; and affirming poſitively, [o] that every one ſhall bear his own Burden, and [p] give an Account of his own Works.

St PAUL indeed ſeems to allude to a certain Covenant made between God and Adam, whereon this Imputation of Guilt principally depends; but it looks very ſtrange, that we ſhould not find one Syllable of this in the Hiſtory of the Creation, and that a Point of ſuch high Concernment ſhould not be delivered with a little more Plainneſs and Perſpicuity, than what ariſe from theſe obſcure Hints. The Apoſtle makes a Compariſon likewiſe between the different Tranſactions of the firſt and ſecond Adam; but then it muſt be conſidered, that there are many Compariſons in Scripture, which are not to be carried up to an exact Equality. In the Caſe now before us, St Paul intends a plain Imparity, when he tells us, that [q] not as the Offence, ſo alſo is the free Gift; for he thereby certainly means, (as himſelf ſeems to explain it) that the Grace of God, through the Merits of Jeſus, is of more Extent and Efficacy, than the Offence of Adam ever could be: Adam indeed condemned, and Chriſt juſtified us; the one by his Tranſgreſſion, and the other by his Obedience; but the Penalty, we receive from the one, is but a temporal Death; whereas the Reward, we are intitled to by the other, is everlaſting Life. This, ſay they, is what the Apoſtle principally intends, and enough to juſtify the Compariſon between Adam and Chriſt. The only Difficulty is, what he means, when he tells us, that, [r] by one Man's Diſobedience, many were made Sinners; and to this they reply, [s] that as Sin is frequently put for the Puniſhment of it, ſo to be made a Sinner, ſignifies no more, than to be treated, or puniſhed, as if one were a Sinner. The Puniſhment then, or what we may call the Effects and Conſequences of Adam's Tranſgreſſion, conſiſting in the Troubles and Miſeries of Life, and the Pains and Agonies of Death, we are all of us deſtined to undergo, and in this Senſe may be called Sinners: But, as for the Guilt and Enormity of his Tranſgreſſion, that we have no Concern in; it was his own, not ours; on him alone it reſted; nor did any Thing more, than its temporal Effects, deſcend upon his Poſterity.

The Puniſhment of Original Sin.

THE Opinions are no leſs various concerning the Puniſhment of Original Sin, and its Objects, than they are in Regard to the Imputation of it. The Cries of Infants, ſay ſome, who are only eloquent to Grief, but dumb to all Things elſe, diſcover that Miſeries attend them. [t] The Tears, which are born in their Eyes, ſignify, that they come into a State of Sorrow, and the many Troops of Diſeaſes, that are ready to ſeize them immediately after their Entrance into the World, ſhew the apparent Effects of God's Diſpleaſure, and that Man, from his very Birth, is guilty of ſome great Crime, and conſequently, liable to great Puniſhment. The Smiles and harmleſs Looks of tender Infants, ſay others, are ſtrong Indications of their native Innocence. They bring no Tokens of Guilt, nor any Dread of Puniſhment into the World with them. [u] By our bleſſed Saviour they are made the Patterns of our Imitation; [x] by his Apoſtle to the Gentiles, we are inſtructed in what Inſtances we are to reſemble them: 'Tis their Innocence that we muſt imitate, if we would enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; and can we then ſuppoſe, that thoſe, who are ſo highly commended in Scripture, come into the World polluted with the blackeſt Guilt, and obnoxious to eternal Vengeance?

Different Opinions about it.

THE Schoolmen indeed, ſuch as follow St Auſtin in this Particular, moſt commonly maintain, that Original Sin, ſimply conſidered, deſerves no more, than a bare Loſs of Heaven, without any Miſery or Suffering: [y] And therefore, for ſuch Infants, as happen to die without Baptiſm, they have invented a quiet Repoſitory, wherein they are to abide for ever in a State of Sleep and Inactivity, as it were, and without any Senſe of Pain. The Calviniſts carry the Matter much farther, aſſerting, that Original Sin (beſides an Excluſion from Heaven) deſerves the Puniſhment of Damnation; and therefore they conclude, that ſuch Infants, as die unbaptized, and are not of the Number of the Elect, (which have always a particular Exemption) are, for the Tranſgreſſion of our firſt Parents, condemned to the eternal Torments of Hell-Fire. It muſt be confeſſed, that the Doctrine of the Church of England

England make too near Approaches to this Opinion, when it tells us, that in every Perſon born into the World, Original Sin deſerves God's Wrath and Damnation; for [z] tho' the Words might be invented with a particular View to the Controverſies, which were managed with ſo much Heat, at the Beginning of the Reformation, and, perhaps, with a Deſign to bring all Sides to a better Temper and Accommodation; yet they ſeem to be too ſtrong and expreſs, to admit of thoſe mollifying Conſtructions, which [a] ſome, by Way of Apology, have thought proper to put upon them.

The whole Queſtion ſtated.

TO extricate ourſelves, in ſome Meaſure, out of the Maze of theſe Opinions, and withal to diſcover, amidſt ſuch Intricacies, what Path will be ſafeſt for us to follow; we may reſolve the whole Controverſy into this one Queſtion, "Whether human "Nature be ſo far corrupted, and the Guilt of our firſt Parents Tranſgreſſion ſo "far imputed to their Poſterity, that every Perſon, from the Mother's Womb, muſt "neceſſarily go aſtray, and muſt certainly fall into everlaſting Perdition, without the "Means appointed in the new Covenant for his Preſervation:" And to bring ourſelves to a Determination in this Matter, our chief Enquiry muſt be, which Side of the Queſtion is more conſonant to the true Senſe of the Scriptures, and our ſettled Notions of the Divine Nature.

THE Sentiments of the Fathers of the Church, much leſs the Altercations of the Schoolmen, will help us very little in our Diſquiſitions: [b] The former are ſo divided in their Opinions, and the latter ſo abſtruſe in their Arguments upon this Subject, that an honeſt Enquirer will find himſelf bewildered, rather than inſtructed; and therefore our ſafeſt Recourſe will be to the Declarations of God's Will, explained in a Manner comporting with his Attributes.

Which Opinion ſuits beſt with God's Attributes.

THAT God, who is the Fountain of our Being, is infinitely pure and holy, and can therefore be neither the Author nor Promoter of any Sin in us, is obvious to our firſt Conceptions of him: And therefore, if the Corruption of our Nature be ſuppoſed to be ſuch, as neceſſarily and unavoidably determines us to Wickedneſs, without the leaſt Tendency to Good to give it a Counterpoiſe, thoſe that maintain the negative of the Queſtion are in the Right ſo far, as they ſtand in Defence of God's immaculate Purity, and are known to be Aſſerters of the Freedom of human Choice; without which, the common Diſtinctions of Virtue and Vice, and the certain Proſpects of Rewards and Puniſhments, are entirely loſt: But when they carry the Point ſo far, as to deny any Alteration in human Nature now, from what it was at its firſt Creation; as to deny, that Adam, in his State of Uprightneſs, had any Gifts and Graces ſupernatural, any Clearneſs in his Underſtanding, or Strength in his Will, or Regularity in his Affections, more than any Man of Maturity and competent Faculties has at this Day: When they adventure to affirm, that there is no Neceſſity of Grace in our preſent Condition, to aſſiſt our hereditary Weakneſs, to enlighten our Minds, and incline our Wills, and conduct our Affections to the Purpoſes of Holineſs; but that every Man may do what is good and acceptable to God, by the Power of his own natural Abilities; they then run counter to the common Experience of human Infirmity; they overlook the Declarations of God's Word concerning his gracious Aſſiſtance, and greatly diſeſteem the kind Operations of that Holy Ghoſt, by which we are renewed, and ſanctified in the Spirit of our Minds.

1. As to the Corruption of human Nature.

IN like Manner, when the Maintainers of abſolute Depravation contend, that Man, in his preſent Condition, is far gone from Original Righteouſneſs, and, of his own Accord, much inclined to Evil; that the Order of his Faculties is deſtroyed, and thoſe Graces, which conſtituted the Image of God, departed from him; that, in this State, he is unable to raiſe himſelf from the Level of common Impotence, but requires the Intervention of ſome ſuperior Principle, to aid and aſſiſt him in his Progreſs towards Heaven: They ſay no more than what Experience teaches us, and [z] Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. I. [a] Taylor's Polemical Diſcourſes. [b] Voſſius, in his Hiſtory of Pelagianiſm, aſſures us, that the whole Catholick Church was always of this Opinion, that the Guilt of Adam's Sin was imputed to his Poſterity to their Condemnation; ſo that Children, dying therein, were conſigned to everlaſting Puniſhment, at leaſt, to an everlaſting Separation from God: And, to confirm this Aſſertion, he quotes a Multitude of Paſſages out of almoſt all the Doctors of the Greek Church. Taylor and Whitby, and ſome other Writers upon this Argument, produce the Teſtimony of the ſame Fathers, to evince the very contrary Poſition; ſo that there is no depending upon any Thing, where Authors are ſo inconſiſtent with themſelves, and ſo repugnant to one another. The Truth is, before Pelagius appeared in the World, moſt of the ancient Writers of the Church were very inaccurate, both in what they thought, and wrote concerning Original Sin and Free Will, and it ſeems as if the Providence of God permitted that Heretick to ariſe, that thereby he might engage the Maintainers of Orthodoxy to ſtudy thoſe Points more maturely. Whitaker, de Peccato Origin. Lib. II.

what the ſacred Records, which acquaint us with the Diſpenſation of Grace, are known to authorize. But when they carry their Poſitions to a greater Extent, than they will juſtly bear; when they affirm, that, ever ſince the firſt Defection, the Mind of Man is not only much impaired, but grievouſly vitiated in all its Faculties, having a ſtrong Averſion to every Thing that is good, and an invincible Obſtinacy in what is evil; not one Thought, Word, or Wiſh, that tends towards God, but the Seeds and Principles of every Vice, that bears the Image and Lineaments of the Devil, inherent in it: When they advance ſuch Doctrines as theſe, I ſay, they debaſe human Nature too low, and impute ſuch Iniquity to its Maker, as can hardly be wiped off, if every human Soul be naturally inclined to all Kind of Wickedneſs, when it comes out of the Hand of his Creating Power. [c] For if God, by Derivation, has given us a Nature thus wholly bent upon Evil; how can it be ſaid, that all, which he has made, is good? Adam might have corrupted himſelf indeed, but, properly ſpeaking, we did not; this, if any Way, muſt be occaſioned by the Tenour of God's Decree; and if ſo occaſioned, where is the Excellency of his Power and Providence? Or where the Glory of Man's Creation?

THERE is certainly, therefore, another Way of accounting for this, without any Prejudice to the Divine Attributes, and that is, [d] not by aſcribing any Poſitive Malignity to human Nature, but only the Loſs of the Image of God; becauſe a mere Privation of Rectitude in an active Subject will ſufficiently anſwer all the Purpoſes, for which a poſitive Corruption is pleaded. The Soul of Man, we know, is a buſy Creature; by the Force of its own Nature it muſt be in Action; but then, without Grace, and the Image of God aſſiſting and adorning it, it cannot act regularly and well: So that the Difference between Adam and us, is not that we have violent Inclinations to all Manner of Wickedneſs implanted in our Nature, any more than he, in his Innocence, had in his; but that we, in our preſent Condition, want ſundry Advantages, which he, in the Height of his Perfection, was not without. He had the free Power of Obedience; he had the perfect Image of his Maker, in all the Divine Qualities of Knowledge and Holineſs, which we have not; and therefore, when we ſay, that he communicated to his Poſterity a Corrupted Nature, it muſt not be underſtood, as if that Nature, which he received, was infected with any vicious Inclinations, or Habits, to ſway and determine our Will to what is evil; but the Meaning is, that he communicated to us a Nature, which has, indeed, a Power to incline and act variouſly, but did not withal communicate to us the Image of God, nor that Fulneſs of Knowledge and Power of Obedience, which was requiſite to make all its Actions and Inclinations holy and regular: And our Nature is therefore ſaid to be corrupted, becauſe it is comparatively bad, becauſe it is reduced to its mere natural State, which at the beſt is a State of Imperfection, and deprived of that Grace, which ſhould have reſtrained it from Sin, and of thoſe other high Endowments, wherewith it was at firſt inveſted. This is a fair Account of our Original Corruption: It ſtands clear of the Difficulties that attend the other Opinions, and is not inconſiſtent with the Notions we have of the Divine Attributes: For barely to withdraw thoſe extraordinary Gifts, which were not eſſential to Man's Nature, but ſuch as God additionally had beſtowed upon him, and he, by his Tranſgreſſion, unworthily forfeited, is what agrees very well with the Wiſdom, and Juſtice, and Holineſs of God to do; tho' to infuſe a poſitive Malignity, or ſuch a ſtrong Inclination to Wickedneſs in us, as induces a Neceſſity of ſinning, moſt certainly does not.

z. As to the Imputation of Guilt and Puniſhment.

THAT the Judge of all the World cannot but do right, and he, who keepeth Mercy from Generation to Generation, can have no Hand in any cruel Action, is a certain Truth, and what our firſt Reflections on the Divine Nature teach us. [e] Thoſe therefore, who maintain, that Adam's Sin is not imputed to us to our Damnation, or that Children unbaptized are not the Objects of Divine Vengeance, nor ſhall be condemned to Hell, or an eternal Expulſion from God's Preſence, for what was done many thouſand Years before they were born, are ſo far in the right, as they oppoſe an Opinion, that clouds the amiable Attributes of God, and repreſents him in a Dreſs of Horror, and engaged in Acts of extreme Severity at leaſt, if not of Cruelty prepenſe. Hell certainly is not ſo eaſy a Pain, nor are the Souls of Children of ſo cheap, and ſo contemptible a Price, that God ſhould ſnatch them from their Mother's Womb, and throw them into Perdition, without any Manner

[e] Taylor, ibid, and Whitby,

Manner of Concern. His Goodneſs (as the Generality of Chriſtians believe) pardoned Adam his great Crime, and received him into Favour again; but, if after the Original Tranſgreſſor is forgiven, his Poſterity are ſtill obnoxious to everlaſting Miſery, for no other Reaſon, but becauſe they deſcend from him, what is become of that adorable Attribute? Nay, to condemn Infants to Hell, for a Fault that is not properly their own, is to deal more ſeverely with them, than God did with the Devils, who periſhed by their own Act, for a Sin of their own free Choice. When therefore Men argue, in this Manner, againſt ſuch Poſitions as theſe, they are to be commended, inaſmuch as they vindicate the ſacred Attributes of God: But when they carry their Oppoſition to a greater Length than it will juſtly go, ſo as to affirm——That there was no ſuch Thing as a Covenant between God and Adam; or, if there was, that Adam contracted for himſelf only; that his Guilt conſequently was perſonal, and cannot, in Juſtice, be imputed to us; that, ſince we had no Share in the Tranſgreſſion, there is no Reaſon why we ſhould bear any Part in its Puniſhment: That we are all born, in ſhort, in the ſame State of Innocence, and are under the ſame Favour and Acceptance with Almighty God, that Adam, before the firſt Tranſgreſſion, was. When they advance ſuch Poſitions as theſe, in Maintenance of their Oppoſition, they ſadly forget, that, while they would ſeem Advocates for God's Mercy and Goodneſs, they are taking away the Foundation of the ſecond Covenant, deſtroying the Neceſſity of a Divine Mediator, and overlooking thoſe Declarations in Scripture, which affirm, that [f] all the World is become guilty before God; that all Men, both Jews and Gentiles, are under Sin, have come ſhort of the Glory of God, and [g] are by Nature the Children of Wrath.

To make an Agreement then between the Word of God and his Attributes in this particular, we may fairly allow, that there was a Covenant between God and Adam at his firſt Creation; that, in making that Covenant, Adam, as their Head and common Repreſentative, ſtipulated for all Mankind, as well as himſelf; and that, in his Tranſgreſſion of it, his Guilt, and the Puniſhment due thereupon, was imputed to all his Poſterity: This, we may allow, was the State and Condition, wherein Adam left us; but then we muſt remember, [h] that the whole Scheme and Deſign of Man's Salvation was laid, from all Eternity, in the Divine Counſel and Decree; that God, foreſeeing Man would fall, determined to ſend his Son to redeem him, and determined to do this long before the Tranſgreſſion happened: So that the Wiſdom and Goodneſs of God had effectually provided beforehand againſt all the ill Conſequences of the Fall, and made it impoſſible that Adam's Poſterity ſhould become eternally miſerable, and condemned to the Flames and Pains of Hell, any other Way, than through their own perſonal Guilt and Tranſgreſſions. The Redemption of the World, by Chriſt, was decreed, I ſay, from Eternity, and was actually promiſed before any Child of Adam was born, even before the Sentence was pronounced upon our firſt Parents; and, as ſoon as it was promiſed, its Benefits, without all Controverſy, commenced. So that, upon this Hypotheſis, every Infant, that comes into the World, as it brings along with it the Guilt of Adam's Sin, brings along with it likewiſe the Benefits of Chriſt's meritorious Death, which God has ſet forth as a ſtanding Propitiation for the Sins of the whole World. Nor can the Want of Baptiſm be any Obſtruction to this Remedy, ſince the Remedy was exhibited long before any ſuch Rite was inſtituted; and ſince the Rite, when inſtituted, (as [i] ſome learned Fathers tell us) was more a Pledge of good Things to come, a Type of our future Reſurrection, a Means of communicating, in our Lord's Death and Paſſion, a Form of Adoption into the heavenly Family, and of Admiſſion to thoſe rich Promiſes of God, which are hid in Jeſus Chriſt, than any Ordinance appointed for the myſtical waſhing away of Sin.

'TIS a great Error, therefore, in thoſe, who have ſtudied this Argument, that they have run their Enquiries only one Way; either attending to nothing, but what they conceive delivered in the Holy Scriptures, or rejecting every Thing, but what they think congruous to Reaſon, and the received Notions of the Divine Nature. Whereas,

Whereas, if they would take both the Word and Attributes of God along with them in their Enquiries, and interpret the one by the other, they might poſſibly reduce the ſeveral Queſtions, ariſing in their Way, to proper Solutions, and the Whole to a rational Syſtem, without either charging God with Unholineſs and Cruelty, or putting any forced Conſtructions upon plain Texts of Scripture.

The Whole ſummed up.

As long as St Paul's Epiſtles are read, the Original Compact between God and Man, the Depravation of human Nature, and the Imputation of Adam's Guilt, muſt be received as ſtanding Doctrines of the Church of Chriſt: But then we are to take great Care, in our Manner of explaining them, that no unworthy Imputation fall upon God. And this may happily be effected, if we will but ſuppoſe, that our hereditary Corruption is occaſioned, not by the Infuſion of any poſitive Malignity into us, but by the Subduction of ſupernatural Gifts from us; that the Covenant of Grace commenced immediately after the Covenant of Works was broken, and has included all Mankind ever ſince; that the Blood of Chriſt ſhields Children from the Wrath of God; and the Imputation of Adam's Guilt and Obnoxiouſneſs to his Puniſhment are effectually taken away by the meritorious Oblation of that Lamb, which was ſlain from the Foundation of the World. But this we advance, only as a probable Hypotheſis, to make the Word and Attributes of God, as near as we can, in an Argument of this abſtruſe Nature, conſiſtent and uniform.

SECT. IV.

The Murder of ABEL, and Tranſlation of ENOCH.

Of the World, 128, &c. Before Chriſt, 3876, &c.

THE firſt ſad Example of the Corruption of human Nature, that we find recorded in Holy Writ, is that of Cain's murdering his Brother Abel, for no other Reaſon, but that his Brother was a more righteous Man, and [k] offered unto God a more acceptable Sacrifice than he. [l] Whence the Right of ſacrificing originally came; whether from Man's Conviction of Guilt, and Deſire to appeaſe the Wrath of Heaven; from a Senſe of Gratitude to God, and Willingneſs to return him ſome of his own Bleſſings; or rather, [m] as ſome imagine, from a Divine Intimation and Preſcription, though the Scripture is ſilent as to that Particular: Whether they offered their Sacrifices any where indifferently, or had a particular Place, choſen by Adam, or rather appointed by God, and diſtinguiſhed by the more viſible Tokens of his glorious Preſence: And, laſtly, Whether they brought their Sacrifices to Adam, to be preſented by him, or directly offered them themſelves (as every Man ſeems anciently to have had Power, in his own Family, to do the Office of a Prieſt): Theſe are Queſtions hard to be determined, ſince the ſacred Hiſtorian has made no Mention of them. All that appears from the Account is, that both theſe Brothers brought Offerings, ſuitable to their reſpective Callings; Cain, who was an Huſbandman, preſented [n] the Fruits of the Ground; and Abel, who was a Shepherd, brought of the Firſtlings of the Flock, and of the Fat thereof, and [o] that the Lord had Reſpect unto Abel, and his Offering, but unto Cain, and his Offering, he had no Reſpect.

[p] THE Manner of God's teſtifying his Acceptance of Abel's Sacrifice, the Jews are of Opinion, [q] was by Fire deſcending from Heaven, or rather by a Stream of Light, iſſuing from the SHECHINAH, or glorious Preſence of God, to whom it was offered, and conſuming it; while he expreſſed his Diſlike of Cain's Offering, (as we may conjecture) by forbearing to ſhine upon his Sheaves, or to cauſe them to aſcend, ſo much as in Smoak, towards Heaven. The true Reaſon why God made this Diſcrimination between the two Worſhippers, was not ſo much the Quality

[q] God's teſtifying his Acceptance of a Worſhipper, by conſuming his Oblation with Fire, is of very early Date; there are ſome Footſteps of it in the Lamp of Fire, which paſſed between the Pieces of Abraham's Sacrifice, Gen. xv. 17. but, in After-Ages, the Examples of it became more numerous and common. When Moſes offered the firſt Burnt-Offering according to the Law, Lev. ix. 24. when Gideon offered upon the Rock, Judges vi. 21. when David ſtayed the Plague, 1 Chron. xxi. 26. when Solomon conſecrated the Temple, 2 Chron vii. 7. and when Elijah contended with the Prieſts of Baal, 1 Kings xviii. 38. In all theſe Inſtances God anſwered by Fire. Nay, the very Heathens had ſome Notions of their Gods anſwering in this Manner, and therefore we find Homer deſcribing the Trojans, going upon a ſucceſsful Attack, in theſe Words, Ζευς δι σφι κεραιδης ἐνδειξια σημαλα φαινων, Ἀστεροπητης. — Iliad X.

Quality, of their Oblations, (as ſome imagine) as the different Diſpoſition of their Minds. Abel offered [r] by Faith, or with a true Spirit of Piety; Cain, without a due Senſe of God, or any ſincere Affection to him; and this made the Preference to be given to the former. Cain, however, could not brook the Diſtinction; and therefore, from that very Time, began to meditate his Brother's Death. 'Tis poſſible, indeed, that Eve might have inſtilled into him an Opinion, that he, being the Firſt-born, was the bleſſed Seed, which God had promiſed ſhould bruiſe the Serpent's Head, and hereupon he might ſuſpect that God intended to give his Birth-right to his Brother, when he ſaw ſuch a diſtinguiſhing Mark of his ſpecial Favour to him, in the very Act of Sacrificing; for which Reaſon he might look upon Abel with a jealous Eye, and, to prevent his ſupplanting him, be tempted to fall upon him, and kill him.

THE ſame Principle, however, which leads wicked Men to commit Crimes, throws them into Deſpair, upon the Denunciation of Puniſhment; and therefore, we find Cain complaining of the Severity of his Sentence, though it fell far ſhort of the Heinouſneſs of his Guilt; [s] My Puniſhment is greater than I can bear, a Fugitive and Vagabond I muſt be on the Earth, and every one that findeth me, ſhall ſlay me. To ſecure him againſt this Dread, and withal to prolong his Life in this miſerable Eſtate, in order to deter others from committing the like horrid Actions, the Lord is ſaid to have baniſhed him into the Land of Nod, and to have [u] ſet a Mark upon him, leſt any finding him, ſhould ſlay him; but what this Mark was, as alſo in what particular Country the Land of Nod was ſituated, are Queſtions, that have long exerciſed the Conjectures of the Learned. [x] Some think, that God ſtigmatized Cain on his Forehead with a Letter of his own Name, or rather ſet ſuch a Brand upon him, as ſignified him to be accurſed. Others fancy, that God made him a peculiar Garment, to diſtinguiſh him from the reſt of Mankind, who were cloathed with Skins. Some imagine, that his Head continually ſhaked; others, that his Body trembled all over; and others again, that his Face was blaſted with Lightning [y] from the Preſence of the Lord. Whatever the Mark might be, 'tis reaſonable to imagine, that it was a notorious Indication of the Divine Diſpleaſure, that all that ſaw him might ſhun him; and therefore R. Solomon fancies, that the very Ground ſhook under him, and made People run away from him, ſaying, This is the cruel Man, that killed his Brother.

The Mark ſet upon Cain.

THERE is not that Variety of Opinions concerning the Situation of the Land of Nod: The Scripture places it on the Eaſt of Eden, and tells us, that therein Cain built a City, and called it after the Name of his Son, Enoch: [z] Whereupon the learned Huetius obſerves, that Ptolomy, in his Deſcription of Suſiana, places there a City, called Anuchtha, and that the Syllable tha, which ends the Word, in the Chaldee Tongue, is a Termination pretty common to feminine Nouns, and conſequently, no Part of the Name itſelf; from whence he infers, that this Anuchtha, mentioned by Ptolomy, is the ſame with the City Enoch, mentioned by Moſes; eſpecially ſince Ptolomy places it on the Eaſt of Eden, which agrees very well with what Moſes ſaith of the Land of Nod. But, though it be allowed that Anuchtha and Enoch be both the ſame Name; yet it will not therefore follow, that there

[x] Almoſt all the Verſions have committed a Miſtake in tranſlating Gen. iv. 5. that God had put a Mark upon Cain, leſt any, finding him, ſhould kill him. The Original ſays no ſuch Thing, and the Septuagint have very well rendered it thus, that God ſet a Sign before Cain, to perſuade him, that whoſoever ſhould find him, ſhould not kill him. This is almoſt the ſame with what is ſaid in Exod. x. 1. that God did ſet Signs before the Egyptians; and Iſa. lxvi. 19. that he would ſet a Sign before the Heathen: Where it is evident, that God did not mean any particular Mark, which ſhould be ſet on their Bodies, but only thoſe Signs and Wonders, which he wrought in Egypt, to oblige Pharaoh to let his People go; and the miraculous Manner, wherein he delivered them from the Babyloniſh Captivity. This Explication is natural, and agreeable to the Methods of Divine Providence, which is wont to convince the Incredulous by Signs and Wonders. Nor could any leſs Thing aſſure Cain, (in the Fear he was under) that the firſt who did meet him, ſhould not kill him, after what God had ſaid to him, in upbraiding him with his Crime. Howel's Hiſtory of the Bible. Vid. Patrick's Commentary, and Saurin's Diſſertations. Upon God's denouncing his Judgments againſt Cain, our Tranſlators make Cain reply, My Puniſhment is greater than I can bear, Gen. iv. 13. But, as the Hebrew Word, Aven, denotes Iniquity, rather than Puniſhment, and the Verb Naſha ſignifies to be forgiven, as well as to bear, the Words may be rendered, by Way of Interrogation, Is my Sin too great to be forgiven? Can I find no Mercy, no Mitigation of the Puniſhment, I have brought upon myſelf? Behold every one, that findeth me, ſhall ſlay me, ver. 14. Hereupon God was pleaſed ſo far to favour him, as to give Orders, that no one ſhould kill him; and to this Purpoſe, (as our Tranſlators render it) he ſet a Mark upon him: But, as the Word Aoth is a Sign or Token, (for ſo the Bow in the Firmament is called) the Paſſage more properly ſignifies, that God gave, or appointed to Cain a Sign or Token, i. e. he aſſured him, that no one ſhould kill him; which vacates all the Gueſſes and Conjectures, about the particular Mark which God ſet upon him. Shuckford's Connection of the ſacred and profane Hiſtory, Vol. I. was no other City ſo called, but that which was built by Cain. 'Tis certain, that there was another Enoch, the Son of Jared, and Father of Methuſelah, a Perſon of remarkable Piety in the Antediluvian Ages; and why might not the City, mentioned by Ptolomy, be called after him, in Reſpect to his illuſtrious Character, and miraculous Exemption from Death? Or rather, why might it not take its Name from ſome other Enoch, different from both the former, and living ſome Generations after the Flood? For it is ſcarce imaginable, how the City of Enoch built before the Flood, ſhould either ſtand, or retain its ancient Name, after ſo violent a Concuſſion, and total Alteration of the Face of Things.

IT is to be obſerved farther, that the Province of Suſiana, where Huetius places the Land of Nod, is one of the moſt pleaſant and moſt fruitful Countries in the World: But, conſidering that Cain's Baniſhment was intended by God to be Part of his Puniſhment, it ſeems more reaſonable to think, that he ſhould, upon this Account, be ſent into ſome barren and deſolate Country, remote from the Place of his Nativity, and ſeparate by Mountains, and other natural Obſtructions, from the Commerce of his Relations: For which Reaſon the learned Grotius is clearly of Opinion, that the Country, into which Cain was ſentenced to withdraw, was Arabia Deſerta, to the Barrenneſs of which, the Curſe, that God pronounces againſt him, ſeems not improbably to relate: [a] And now thou art curſed from the Earth, which has opened her Mouth to receive thy Brother's Blood from thy Hand; and, when thou tilleſt the Ground, it ſhall not henceforth yield unto thee her Strength.

THE only Objection againſt this Opinion, [b] is, that the Land of Nod is ſaid to lie on the Eaſt of Eden, whereas Arabia Deſerta is certainly on the Weſt: But if it be conſidered, that the Word, which we render on the Eaſt of Eden, means no more, than over-againſt, or on the Side of Eden, (as the LXX have rendered it) and at the ſame Time, remember, that Moſes, when he wrote this Hiſtory, was himſelf in Arabia Petræa; we may then perceive, that the Deſerts of Arabia, which join to Eden Weſtward, lay, in Reſpect to the Place, where Moſes wrote, directly before, or over-againſt Eden, and ſo may ſtill be the Place, where the Land of Nod, or the Land of the Vagabond, was ſituate.

HOWEVER this be, 'tis certain, that Cain, after his Expulſion from the Preſence of God, became reprobate to all Senſe of Goodneſs. He forſook the Worſhip of the Creator of the Univerſe, and turned his religious Adoration (as ſome have imagined) to the Sun, Moon, and all the Hoſt of Heaven. The Infection of a bad Example took Poſſeſſion of his Poſterity; and they, by their Authority (as [c] being the Inventors of many curious Arts) made Vice faſhionable, and ſo introduced that total Corruption, which, in Proceſs of Time, brought on the Flood.

Of the World, 987, &c. Before Chriſt, 3017, &c.

AMIDST this Antediluvian Corruption, Moſes makes particular Mention of one Perſon of eminent Sanctity, who [d] walked with God, and [e] perſiſted in a long Courſe of ſingular Piety, notwithſtanding the Wickedneſs of the Age, wherein he lived.

Enoch's Character.

ENOCH was certainly, in other Reſpects, an extraordinary Perſon; [f] St Jude diſtinguiſhes him as a [g] Prophet; the Arabians repreſent him as a great Scholar; the Babylonians

[e] Patrick's Commentary. [f] Ver. 14, &c. [g] There was, in the firſt Ages of Chriſtianity, a Book, not unknown to the Jews, and which had for its Title, The Prophecies of Enoch; but the Fragments of it, which the Fathers have preſerved, give us no very advantageous Notion of it. Tertullian, however, has defended it with the greateſt Warmth, and laments, that all the World is not as zealous, as he, in the Maintenance of its Authenticalneſs. He pretends, that it had been ſaved by Noah in the Ark, from thence tranſmitted down to the Church; and that the Jews, in his Days, only rejected it, becauſe they thought it too favourable to Chriſtianity. Saurin's Diſſertations. The great Objection againſt this Book is, that neither Philo nor Joſephus (thoſe diligent Searchers into Antiquity) make mention of it; and that it contains ſuch fabulous Stories, as are monſtrous and abſurd: But to this we may anſwer, with Pererius, that ſuch a Book there certainly was, notwithſtanding the Silence of theſe Jewiſh Antiquaries; and that, after the Apoſtles Time, it might be corrupted, and many Things added to it by ſucceeding Hereticks, who might take Occaſion, from the Antiquity thereof, and from the Paſſage of Michael's contending with the Devil about the Body of Moſes, to interpolate many Fables and Inventions of their own. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World. St Jude, in his Epiſtle, ver. 14, ſeems to cite a Paſſage from Enoch, but the Notion of Enoch's leaving any Work behind him, has been little credited. There is a Piece indeed, pretending to be his Work; and Scaliger, in his Annotations upon Euſebius's Chronicon, has given us conſiderable Fragments, if not the whole of it. It was vaſtly admired by Tertullian, and ſome other Fathers; but it has ſince their Time been proved to be the Product of ſome Impoſtor, who, according to Scaliger, Voſſius, Kircher, &c. ſeems to have made it ſome Time between the Captivity, and our Saviour's Birth, but according to Jurieu, (Crit. Hiſt. Vol. I. page 41.) there are good Reaſons not to believe it even ſo old. Shuckford's Connection, Vol. I. Lib. i.

Babylonians looked upon him as the Author of their Aſtrology; the Greeks call him their Atlas, and affirm, that he was the firſt, who taught Men the Knowledge of the Stars, and was himſelf taught by the Angels of God. But it was not for theſe rare Qualities ſo much, as for his conſummate Piety and Virtue, that God allowed him the peculiar Privilege of not ſeeing Death, and was graciouſly pleaſed to take him to himſelf, [h] that thereby he might ſupport and comfort Mankind, in their State of Mortality, with the Hope of a better Life in the World to come: And for this Reaſon it is not improbable, that he was tranſlated, in ſome ſuch viſible Manner, (as Elijah was afterwards) by a glorious Appearance of the Schechinah, from whence ſome heavenly Miniſters were ſent to carry him above: For it is an idle Dream to ſuppoſe, that he was only removed into a Terreſtial Paradiſe, to live in the ſame State of happy Enjoyment, that our firſt Parents had, before their Fall. How tranſlated.

[i] WE acknowledge now no other Paradiſe, but what is repreſented in the Scriptures, as a Place, in which God gives bright Evidences of his Preſence, and communicates his Glory with the utmoſt Majeſty; a Place, which St Paul calls [k] the third Heaven, [l] whereunto Elijah was tranſlated, and, [m] whereinto our bleſſed Saviour requeſts of his Father to enter. And therefore 'tis worthy our Obſervation, that in the three great Periods of the Church, there has ſucceſſively been an Inſtance of a Man (of Enoch under the Patriarchal, of Elijah under the Legal, and of Jeſus under the Evangelical Oeconomy) in both Body and Soul taken up into Heaven, for the Confirmation of the Faith and Hope of thoſe, who lived under theſe ſeveral Diſpenſations: And (what is no mean Circumſtance) that, in each of theſe Periods, there has been a gradual Increaſe of Light in the Evidence, that has been exhibited of another State. [n] 'Twas a favourable Intimation for the Faithful in the firſt World, to ſee a good Man taken away, and, after his ſojourning upon Earth to be lodged in ſome other Place, than a Tomb: 'Twas a ſtronger Preſumption in Favour of thoſe, that lived in the ſecond Period, to ſee the Heavens open for the Reception of one of their Prophets, who was carried up thither in a Chariot of Fire: But it is a Demonſtration to Chriſtians, and, as it were, a taking Poſſeſſion of their expected Happineſs, to behold the Author and Finiſher of their Faith paſſing through theſe vaſt Spaces, which divide Heaven and Earth, and to hear the Church-Triumphant ſummoning [o] the Gates of the Palace of Glory to be opened, that they might receive him, who was going before to prepare the Places, which he had purchaſed for them in thoſe happy Manſions. Whither.

SECT. V.

Of the Longævity of the Antediluvians.

OF all the ſtrange Matters, that occur in the Story of the firſt Ages, there is nothing, which looks ſo like a Prodigy, as the Longævity of thoſe Men, who firſt inhabited the Earth; nor is any Event ſo apt to affect us with Wonder, as the vaſt Diſproportion between their Lives and ours. [p] We think it a great Thing, if we arrive to fourſcore or an hundred Years, whereas they lived to the Term of ſeven, or eight, or nine hundred, and upwards; and that they did ſo, is inconteſtably true from the joint Conſent both of Sacred and Profane Hiſtory. The Scripture ſets down the preciſe Age of a Series of Antediluvian Patriarchs, and thereby meaſures the Time from the Beginning of the World to the Deluge; ſo that all ſacred Chronology ſtands upon this Bottom. [q] The Hiſtorians of all Ages, both Greeks and Barbarians, give us the ſame Account of the long Vivacity of the firſt Inhabitants of the Earth; nor can we ſuppoſe, that all thoſe Authors, of undoubted Credit and Authority, conſpired together to make, and propagate a Fable. Proved from ſacred Hiſtory.

THE only Suſpicion, that can ariſe in our Minds, upon this Occaſion, is, that the Computation might poſſibly be made, not according to ſolar, but lunar Years, which happily reduces the longeſt of their Lives much to the ſame Period with our Their Years not lunar.

our own: But for this there is no probable Foundation. For, beſides that the Scriptures make Uſe of no ſuch Lunar Years, (nor is there any Computation, whether Literal or Prophetical, that proceeds upon them) the manifeſt Diſtinction, that they place between Months and Years, in the Hiſtory of the Deluge, and of the Life of Noah, is next to a Demonſtration, that Years were then reckoned, not by Lunar, but by Solar Revolutions. For, whereas it is ſaid, [r] that, in the ſix hundredth Year of Noah's Life, in the ſecond Month, and on the ſeventeenth Day of the Month, were all the Fountains of the great Deep broken up, and the Windows of Heaven were opened; and whereas it is ſaid again, that [s] on the ſix hundredth and firſt Year, in the firſt Month, and on the firſt Day of the Month, the Waters were dried up from off the Earth; unleſs we can ſuppoſe, that in one and the ſame Verſe and Sentence, theſe two Terms of Year and Month ſhould be ſo confounded, as to ſignify the ſame Thing: we cannot but conclude, that Noah's Years were not the ſame with Months; and, to ſuppoſe after that, that Noah's Years are to be underſtood one Way, and thoſe of his Fellow-Patriarchs another, would be a wild and unaccountable Fiction indeed.

THE Space of Time, between the Creation and the Flood, is uſually computed to be 1656 Years, which, if we ſuppoſe to be lunar, and converted into common Years, will amount to little more than 127; too ſhort an Interval by much to ſtock the World with a ſufficient Number of Inhabitants. [t] From one Couple we cannot well imagine, that there could ariſe above five hundred Perſons in ſo ſhort a Time; but ſuppoſe them a thouſand, they would not be ſo many, as we ſometimes have in a good Country-Village: And were the Flood-gates of Heaven opened, and the great Abyſs broken up to deſtroy ſuch a Handful of People? Were the Waters raiſed fifteen Cubits above the higheſt Mountains, throughout the Face of the whole Earth, to drown a Pariſh or two? This certainly is more incredible, than the longeſt Age, that the Scriptures aſcribe to the Patriarchs: Beſides, that this ſhort Interval leaves no Room for ten Generations, which we find from Adam to the Flood; nor does it allow the Patriarchs Age enough, (ſome of them, [u] upon this Suppoſition, muſt not be above five Years old) when they are ſaid to beget Children.

IT has generally been allowed, and may indeed be proved from the Teſtimony of Scripture, as well as other Conſiderations, that our firſt Fathers lived very long, and conſiderably longer, than Men have done ſince: But, according to this Hypotheſis, (which depreſſes the Lives of the Antediluvians, not only below thoſe, that lived next the Flood, but even below all following Generations to this Day; and makes thoſe firſt Ages of the World, which were always celebrated for Strength and Vivacity, as weak and feeble, as theſe laſt Dregs of Nature) Methuſelah himſelf did but reach threeſcore and fifteen. We muſt, therefore, charge the Patriarch Jacob with Falſhood, when he complains of the Shortneſs of his Life, in Compariſon of his Forefathers, [x] the Days of the Years of my Pilgrimage are an hundred and thirty Years; few and evil have the Days of the Years of my Life been, and have not attained unto the Days of the Years of the Life of my Fathers: For, if the Years of his Fathers were lunar, and his ſolar, his Complaint muſt be falſe and unjuſt; ſince himſelf was the oldeſt Man in the World, at leaſt, had far ſurpaſſed the Age of his Anceſtors: If his Years were lunar as well as theirs, how could he be repreſented as an old Man, and the Father of ſo many Children; when, according to that Computation, he muſt be no more than eleven Years and five Months old?

THE Patrons of this Opinion, therefore, muſt needs find themſelves at a Loſs, where to break off the Account of lunar Years in Sacred Hiſtory, if they once admit it. If they will have it extend no farther than the Flood, they make the Poſtdiluvian Fathers longer-lived than the Antediluvian; but will be puzzled to aſſign a Reaſon why the Deluge ſhould occaſion Longævity: If they will extend it to the Poſtdiluvians likewiſe, they will then be entangled in worſe Difficulties; for they muſt make their Lives miſerably ſhort, and their Age of getting Children altogether incongruous and impoſſible. Nahor, for Inſtance, when he was but two Years and three Months old, muſt have begat Terah, Abraham's Father; muſt have lived, in all, but eleven Years and ſix Months; and his Grandſon Abraham, who is ſaid to [y] have died in a good old Age, and full of Years, muſt not have been been quite fourteen: Into ſuch ridiculous Abſurdities and Contradictions muſt thoſe Men run themſelves, who will not be contented with Scripture-Chronology!

IF it be demanded, for what farther Reaſons this Scripture-Chronology may be thought true, and what poſſible Cauſes may be aſſigned for the Longævity of the firſt Patriarchs, in Compariſon of us; we might have thought it a peculiar Bleſſing and Reward proceeding from God, had it gone always in Conjunction with Innocence of Life and Manners: But ſince it was common to good and bad Men alike, and laſted until the Time of the Deluge, long after Mankind became degenerate, the Learned, in all Ages, have invented other Reaſons for it. The Cauſes of their Longævity.

SOME have imputed this extraordinary Length of Life to the Manner of their Living, and the Sobriety and Simplicity of their Diet; that they eat no Fleſh, and had none of thoſe Provocations to Gluttony, which Wit and Vice have ſince invented. This indeed might have ſome Effect, but not poſſibly to ſuch a Meaſure as we now ſpeak of; ſince there are many monaſtical Perſons, who live very abſtemiouſly all their Lives long, and yet ſeldom ſurpaſs the uſual Period. Others have imputed it to the Excellency of their Fruits, and ſome unknown Virtue in the Herbs and Plants of thoſe Days; but the Earth, we know, was curſed immediately after the Fall, and its Fruits, we may ſuppoſe, gradually decreaſed in their Virtue and Goodneſs, until the Time of the Flood; and yet we do not ſee that the Length of Mens Lives decreaſed at all, during that Interval. Nay, Methuſelah, who was Noah's Grandfather, and but one entire Remove from the Deluge, lived longer, than any of his Forefathers; and therefore we may infer, that the Longævity of thoſe Days depended neither upon the Quantity nor Quality of their Food. Different Opinions.

OTHERS have thought that the long Lives of Men of the Old World proceeded from the Strength of their Stamina, or firſt Principles of their bodily Conſtitution, which, if they were equally ſtrong in us, would maintain us, as they think, in Being as long; but though it be granted, that both the Strength and Bulk of their Bodies were greater than our's, and that a Race of ſtrong Men, living long in Health, would have Children of a proportionable ſtrong Conſtitution: Yet, that this was not the ſole and adequate Cauſe of their Longævity, we have one plain Inſtance to convince us, viz. That Shem, who was born before the Deluge, and had in his Body all the Virtue of the Antediluvian Conſtitution, fell three hundred Years ſhort of the Age of his Forefathers, becauſe the greateſt Part of his Life was paſſed after the Flood.

FOR this Reaſon, the ingenious Author, I laſt quoted, imagines, that before the Flood, the Situation of the Earth to the Sun was direct and perpendicular, and not, as it is now, inclined and oblique. From this Poſition he infers, that there was a perpetual Equinox all the Earth over, and one continued Spring; and thence concludes, that the Equality of the Air, and Stability of the Seaſons, were the true Cauſes of the Longævity of Mankind before the Flood; whereas the Change, and Obliquity of the Earth's Poſture, occaſioned by the Deluge, altered the Form of the Year, and brought in an Inequality of Seaſons, which cauſed a ſenſible Decay in Nature, and a gradual Contraction in human Life.

HIS Reaſoning upon this Point is very elegant, [a] "There is no Queſtion, ſays "he, but every Thing upon Earth, and eſpecially the animate World, would be "much more permanent, if the general Courſe of Nature was more ſteady and "uniform. A Stability in the Heavens makes a Stability in all Things below, and "that Change and Contrariety of Qualities, which we have in theſe Regions, is "the Fountain of Corruption; ſince, either by inward Fermentations, or outward "Impreſſions, Bodies are no ſooner well conſtituted, but they are tending again to "Diſſolution. The Æther in their little Pores, the Air in their greater, and the "Vapours and Atmoſphere that ſurround them, ſhake and unſettle their Texture and "Continuity: Whereas, in a fixed State of Nature, where theſe Principles have "always the ſame conſtant and uniform Motion, a long and laſting Peace enſues, "without any Violence, either within or without, to diſcompoſe them. We ſee, "by daily Experience, continues he, that Bodies are kept better in the ſame Medium, "(as we call it) than when they are ſometimes in the Air, and ſometimes in the "Water, moiſt and dry, hot and cold, by Turns; becauſe theſe different States "weaken the Contexture of their Parts. But our Bodies, in the preſent State of "Nature, Dr Burnet's Opinion.

[a] Burnet's Theory of the Earth, Vol. I. [a] Ibid. page 275.

" Nature, are put in a hundred different Mediums, in the Courſe of a Year; the " Winds are of a different Nature, and the Air of a different Weight and Preſſure, " according as the Weather and Seaſons affect them. All theſe Things are enough " to wear out our Bodies, though they were made of Oak, and that in a very ſhort " Time too, in Compariſon of what they would laſt, if they were always of one " and the ſame Temper."

Rejected. BUT his grand Miſtake is, that it was not ſo in the primitive Earth: That Earth (as we ſhewed before) had an annual as well as diurnal Motion: [b] It ſtood to the Sun in the ſame oblique Poſture and Situation, and was conſequently ſubject to the ſame Seaſons and Viciſſitudes, that the preſent Earth is; and if the Air was more mild, or the Elements more favourable at that Time, this we may account the peculiar Bleſſing of God, and not the Reſult of the Earth's Poſition to the Sun, or any fancied Stability in the Weather. The Truth is, whatever we may attribute to ſecondary Cauſes, why Bodies, that are naturally mortal and corruptible, ſhould ſubſiſt ſo long, in the primitive Ages of the World; yet the true Cauſe of all is to be aſcribed to the Will of God, who impregnated our firſt Parents with ſuch Vigour, and gave their Poſterity, for ſome Time, ſuch robuſt Conſtitutions, as depended not upon the Nature of their Diet, the Stability of the Seaſons, or Temperature of the Air.

AFTER the Flood, God made a ſudden Alteration in the Length of Mens Days: For, perceiving the general Iniquity to increaſe again, and thereupon deſigning to make an Alteration in the World's Continuance, he haſtened the Period of human Life, that the Number of Souls, he intended to ſend into the World, before the final Conſummation of all Things, might have a ſpeedier Probation. Man's Age accordingly went on, ſinking by gentle Degrees, (but ſtill in Motion and Declenſion) until, a little before David's Time, it came to be fixed in what has been the common Standard ever ſince: [c] The Days of our Age are threeſcore Years and ten, and though Men be ſo ſtrong, that they come to fourſcore Years; yet is their Strength then but Labour and Sorrow; ſo ſoon paſſeth it away, and we are gone. This is the ſtated Period; and therefore for us, who live in this Poſtdiluvian Age, and have the Term of our Trial ſo much ſhortened, the ſubſequent Prayer of the devout Pſalmiſt will always be neceſſary, always ſeaſonable; [d] So teach us to number our Days, that we may apply our Hearts unto Wiſdom.

SECT. VI.

Of the Religion of the Antediluvians, and their Corruption.

IT is a miſtaken Notion of ſome Writers, who affirm, that, for almoſt two thouſand Years, at the firſt Beginning of the World, Mankind lived without any Law, without any Precepts, without any Promiſes from God; and that the Religion from Adam to Abraham was merely natural, and ſuch as had nothing, but right Reaſon, for its Rule and Meaſure. The Antediluvian Diſpenſation, indeed, was in a great Meaſure founded upon the Law of Nature; but ſtill, it muſt be acknowledged, that there was a divine Precept concerning Sacrifices; that there was a divine Promiſe concerning the bleſſed Seed; and that there were ſeveral other Laws and Preſcriptions given the Patriarchs, beſides thoſe, that were built upon mere Reaſon.

Sacrifices appointed. [e] THE Law of Sacrifices (which at this Time, was in uſe) was partly natural, and partly divine. As Sacrifices were Tokens of Thankfulneſs, and Acknowledgments, that the Fruits of the Earth, and all other Creatures for the Uſe and Benefit of Man, were derived from God, they were a Service dictated by natural Reaſon, and ſo were natural Acts of Worſhip; but as they carried with them the Notion of Expiation and Atonement for the Sins of Mankind, eſpecially as they refer to the Meſſias, and ſignified the future Sacrifice of Chriſt, they were certainly inſtituted by God, and the Practice of them was founded upon a divine Command. If it be aſked, whether Sacrifices were preſcribed before, or after the Fall of Adam, the Anſwer may be——That ſuch Sacrifices, as were purely Euchariſtical, i. e. ſuch as as were natural Tokens of Thankſgiving for Benefits received, were, in all Probability, uſed by Adam, even while he continued in Paradiſe; but ſuch as were expiatory, and deſigned to obtain the Remiſſion of Sin, were not inſtituted by God, till after Man's Tranſgreſſion; for where there was no Sin, there was no Need of Expiation.

Publick Worſhip inſtituted.

IT is not to be doubted, but that Adam inſtructed his Children [f] to worſhip and adore God, to commemorate his Goodneſs, and deprecate his Diſpleaſure; nor can it be well ſuppoſed, but that they, in their reſpective Families, put his Inſtructions in Execution: And yet we find, that, in the Days of thoſe pious and renowned Patriarchs, Seth and Enos, (beſides all private Devotion) a publick Form of Worſhip was ſet up, and Men met together in larger Societies, [g] to call upon the Name of the Lord. For the plain and genuine Senſe of calling upon the Name of the Lord, in this Place, (both according to the Original, the Septuagint, and other Verſions which are moſt exact) is this — [h] That though Adam, Seth, and others had called on God, in their Houſes and Families, long before this Time; yet now they aſſembled together publickly, and had the Rites of the Religion, which God had appointed them, ſettled and fixed. They had Liturgies (as we call them) appointed at ſet Hours; and, perhaps, as Cain then built Cities for his Deſcendants to live in, ſo Enos built Temples, and Places of divine Worſhip, for his to reſort to.

Ceremonial,

THE Diſtinction of clean and unclean Animals was another Part of the Diſpenſation before the Flood: God refers Noah to it, as a Thing well known, when he commands him to put [i] into the Ark ſeven Pair of clean, and two of unclean Creatures. [k] And though, in reſpect of Man's Food, this Diſtinction was not before the Law of Moſes, yet ſome Beaſts were accounted fit, and others unfit for Sacrifices, from the Beginning: The former were eſteemed clean, the latter unclean; and it ſeems ſafer to make a poſitive Law of God (though we have no Record of it) the Foundation of this Diſtinction, than to imagine, that Men, in ſuch Matters as theſe, were left to their own Diſcretion.

and moral Precepts given.

THE Prohibition of marrying with Infidels was another Article of this Diſpenſation, as appears by God's angry Reſentment, when the Children of Seth entered into Wedlock with the wicked Poſterity of Cain: And (to mention no more) under this Period were thoſe great Precepts of the Sons of Noah, which the Jewiſh Doctors make ſo much boaſt of, and thus enumerate: The Firſt was, of ſtrange Worſhip, or Idolatry; the Second, of curſing the moſt holy Name, or Blaſphemy; the Third, of uncovering the Nakedneſs, or unlawful Copulation; the Fourth, of Bloodſhed, or Homicide; the Fifth, of Theft and Rapine; the Sixth, of Judgments, or the Adminiſtration of Juſtice in the publick Courts of Judicature: To theſe they add another, prohibiting the eating of Fleſh with the Blood in it; but this, ſome affirm, was only delivered to Noah and his Sons.

The general Corruption of Mankind, and the Occaſion of it.

THIS was the State of Religion in the Antediluvian World, and theſe were ſome of the Laws and Ordinances, which God appointed to the Patriarchs, who lived therein; and, indeed, their Laws were ſo few, and their Lives ſo long, the Matter of their Duty ſo eaſy, and the Means of their Inſtruction in it ſo very advantageous, that it might juſtly have raiſed our Wonder, how they came ſo univerſally to be corrupted, had not the Holy Scriptures thus pointed out to us the Occaſion: [l] It came to paſs, when Men began to multiply upon the Face of the Earth, and Daughters were born unto them, that the Sons of God ſaw the Daughters of Men, that they were fair, and they took them Wives of all, which they choſe. The chief Difficulty is, what we are to underſtand by the Sons of God, and the Daughters of Men: And in this, [m] ſeveral Interpreters have taken an uncommon Liberty; but, of all the wild Sallies of Fancy, none ſeems more extravagant, [n] than the Opinion of ſuch, as have reputed theſe Sons of God to be good Angels, or of ſuch, as have held them to be bad ones. Whether or no the Verſion of the Septuagint, which, (as St Auſtin [o] teſtifies) inſtead of the Sons of God, had anciently the Angels of God, might give Occaſion to this odd Fancy, 'tis hard to determine; but ſo it is, that this Opinion, in all Ages, has had many Followers, both among Jewiſh and Chriſtian Expoſitors. From this, they derived their Notions of [p] Incubi, or Demons having carnal Knowledge of Women;

[p] Several People have had the Trial, ſays St Auſtin, and ſeveral have heard it from thoſe, who knew it to be true, that the Sylvans and Fauns, commonly called Incubi, have been often fatal to Women, and have defiled their Bed. It is likewiſe affirmed, with ſo much Confidence, that certain Demons (called Durii by the Gauls) have not only attempted, but likewiſe perpetrated theſe Kinds of impure Actions, that it would be fooliſh to make any Queſtion of it. De Civit. Dei, Lib. LXV.

Women; from this they ſettled [q] Marriages between the upper and the lower World; and, from thoſe Marriages, produced a Race of Giants on the Earth, which became mighty Men, and of old, were Men of Renown.

BY the Sons of God, [r] others have underſtood the great Men of the World, the Nobles, and Rulers, and Judges, and other People of high Rank, and inveſted with Authority; and by the Daughters of Men, thoſe of the meaner and inferior Sort of People: Accordingly they tell us, that the Verb (labath) both here, and in ſeveral other Places of Scripture, does not only ſignify to take, but to take by Force and Violence, i. e. to raviſh. The Deſign of Moſes then, ſay they, being to aggravate the Wickedneſs of the Antediluvian Age, he ſhews, that ſuch as lived in an high Station, and ſhould have ſcorned inglorious Actions; ſuch as were placed in Authority, and, conſequently, ſhould have puniſhed and diſcountenanced Vice, were the greateſt Examples and Promoters of all Lewdneſs and Debauchery. This is no bad Interpretation; but there is another, which ſeems more natural, and comes up to the Senſe of the Holy Penman better.

THE two great Families, we know, derived from Adam, viz. that of Cain, and that of Seth, (who ſucceeded righteous Abel) at this Time divided the whole World between them; and, as they differed in their Tempers and Manners, ſo they were diſtinguiſhed by very different Appellations. The Offspring of Cain, being departed from all Senſe of Religion, and wholly given up to worldly Pleaſures, were called Men, or the Sons of Men; but the Offspring of Seth, becauſe they addicted themſelves to Virtue, and profeſſed the Worſhip of the true God, were called the Sons of God. Upon the Baniſhment of Cain, theſe two Families, at firſt, lived at a conſiderable Diſtance from each other: They inhabited different Countries, and were diſtinct Societies; but when, by the great Increaſe of Mankind in the firſt Ages of the World, they began to enlarge their Compaſs, and draw nearer to each other, the Deſcendants of Seth were ſtruck with the Beauty of the Daughters of the Race of Cain; and, to remove all Obſtacles of Separation from Creatures ſo full of Charms, they, [u] contrary to the Injunction of their Forefathers, contracted Marriages with them; and ſo, entering into a new Scheme of riotous Living, in a very few Years, bid Adieu to their Virtue and Religion. For in this Alliance it happened, as it always fell out in ſucceeding Ages, when an holy Nation mingled with a profane; viz. That the Godly adopted the wicked Manners of the Profane, but the Profane never imitated the Virtues of the Godly. The Children of Seth became, in a ſhort Time, as wicked as the Cainites; and, from this unhappy Conjunction, there aroſe a monſtrous Generation, that was ſtill more profligate. The great Ones were Tyrants and Oppreſſors; the meaner Sort were lewd and Atheiſtical; all were Profane, all Idolaters; ſo that the Earth was filled with Violence, with Cruelty, with Laſciviouſneſs, with Impiety, as if there had been a Confederacy among Mankind to exterminate Religion out of the World, and a Kind of Emulation among them, who ſhould excel in Wickedneſs; who ſhould violate the Laws of God, and trample upon his holy Worſhip with the leaſt Remorſe, and moſt Eagerneſs; until they provoked the Divine Indignation to pour out his Fury upon them in that general Inundation, wherein all were deſtroyed, except Noah and his ſmall Family, [x] who were found Perfect and Righteous in the Time of Wrath, and were left, as a Remnant unto the Earth, when the Flood came.

[q] Joſephus was of this Opinion, (Antiq. Lib. i. Cap. 4.) and is therein followed by Philo, who thus quoting the Words of Moſes, (De Gigant. pag. 284.) the Angels of God ſeeing the Daughters of Men, &c. confirms what St Auſtin ſays, that the Septuagint did anciently render it, the Angels of God, inſtead of the Sons of God. Saurin's Diſſertations. [r] Gen. vi. 4. [s] Vid. Patrick's Commentary, and Howell's Hiſtory of the Bible. [t] Patrick and Howell, ibid. [u] This was ſtill a greater Crime in the Children of Seth, if we may credit what an Arabick Writer (mentioned by Selden, in his Book de Diis Syriis) relates of them, viz. That they had ſworn, by the Blood of Abel, they would never leave the mountainous Country, which they inhabited, and go down into the Valley, where the Children of Cain lived; but what enticed them (ſays the ſame Author) to break this Oath, was the Beauty of Naamah, (whom Voſſius [de Orig. Idol. Lib. i.] takes to have been the Heathen Minerva, or Venus) and the Muſick of her Brother Jubal, who was certainly Apollo. For it is to be obſerved, that theſe Children of Cain ſpent all their Time in Feaſting, Muſick, Dancing, and other ſuch Sports and Paſtimes, as allured the others to come down, and marry with them. Patrick's Commentary. CHAP. II.

The moſt memorable Tranſactions, from the FLOOD, to the CALLING of ABRAHAM.

Of the World. 1656, &c. Before Chriſt. 2348, &c.

THE Flood is one of the greateſt and moſt terrible Events, that we find recorded in Hiſtory: It ſwept away all Mankind, except eight Perſons and with them the Memory of all Things, that had ever been tranſacted in the World until that Time, except what the holy Scriptures have preſerved. The Alteration it made in the Face of Nature, and (as [a] ſome ſuppoſe) in the very Situation and Figure of the Earth has left Monuments (as long as the World ſhall endure) of God's ſevere Indignation againſt Sin; and 'tis probably for this very Reaſon, that Moſes, who, in his Narration of other Events, is ſo brief and conciſe, in this great Inſtance of Divine Vengeance is ſo minute and particular, as to recount the Occaſion, the Time, the Cauſe, the Extent, Increaſe, Continuance, Diminution of it, and whatever other Circumſtances, are requiſite to make an Account full and awakening.

The Truth and Reality of the Flood.

THAT ſixteen hundred and odd Years after the World was made and inhabited, it was quite overflowed in a Deluge of Water, in the Manner that Moſes relates; ſo that all Things in it, Mankind, and other living Creatures, were deſtroyed, excepting only Noah and his Family, who, by a ſpecial Providence of God, were preſerved in a certain Ark, or Veſſel, made like a Ship, and ſuch Kind of living Creatures, as he received into this Ark, [b] is abundantly manifeſt, from the clear and concurring Teſtimonies of the moſt ancient Writers and Nations in the World.

JOSEPHUS, [c] in his Book againſt Appion, tells us, "That Beroſus the Chaldean, "following the moſt ancient Writers, relates the ſame Things that Moſes does, con- "cerning the great Deluge, the Deſtruction of Mankind by it, and the Ark wherein "Nochus (the ſame with Noah) was preſerved, and which reſted on the Tops of the "Armenian Mountains." Abydenus, as he is quoted [d] by Euſebius, takes Notice of the Wood of the Veſſel, wherein Xiſuthrus (ſo he calls Noah) was ſaved; he tells us, that the People of Armenia made Uſe of it for Amulets to drive away Diſeaſes; nor does he forget to relate the ſending out Birds, to know if the Flood was aſſwaged. [e] Cyril produces a Paſſage out of Alexander Polyhiſtor, wherein Mention is made of a certain Egyptian Prieſt, who related to Solon, out of the ſacred Books of the Egyptians, (as he ſuppoſes) that, before the particular Deluges, known and celebrated by the Grecians, there was, of old, an exceeding great Inundation of Waters, and Devaſtation of the Earth: And, to mention no more, [f] Lucian gives a long Account of an ancient Tradition, which the People of Hierapolis had of the Deluge, [g] varying very little from what our ſacred Hiſtorian relates of it.

[a] Burnet's Theory, Vol. I. [b] Stillingfleet's Origines Sacræ. [c] Lib. i. [d] Præpar. Evang. Lib. ix. [e] Contra Julianum. De Deâ Syriâ. [g] The Account, though ſomewhat long, is not unpleaſant, and well deſerves our Obſervation. This Race of Men, ſays he, which now is, was not the firſt: Theſe are of a ſecond Generation, and from their firſt Progenitor Deucalion, who increaſed to ſo great a Multitude, as we now ſee. Now of thoſe former Men they tell us this Story: —— They were contentious, and did many unrighteous Things; they neither kept their Oaths, nor were hoſpitable to Strangers, for which Reaſon this great Misfortune came upon them. All of a ſudden, the Earth diſſemboweled herſelf of a great Quantity of Water; great ſhowers fell; the Rivers overflowed; and the Seas ſwelled to a prodigious Height; ſo that all Things became Water, and all Men periſhed: Only Deucalion was left unto the ſecond Generation, upon the Account of his good Counſel and Piety. Now the Manner wherein he was ſaved was this: He had a great Λάρναξ, i. e. an Ark, or Cheſt, into which he came with his Children, and Women of his Houſe; and then entered Hogs, and Horſes, and Lions, and Serpents, and all other Animals, which live upon the Earth, together with their Mates. He received them all, and they did him no Harm; for, by the Aſſiſtance of Heaven, there was a great Amity between them; ſo that all ſailed in one Cheſt, as long as the Waters did predominate. But theſe are Matters that all the Greek Hiſtories of Deucalion relate. What happened afterwards (as it is told by the Inhabitants of Hierapolis) is worthy our Obſervation, viz. that in their Country there was a Gap, into which all this Water ſunk; whereupon Deucalion built Altars, and a Temple, which he conſecrated to Juno, over the very Gap. To verify this Hiſtory, not only the Prieſts, but the other Inhabitants likewiſe of Syria and Arabia, twice every Year, bring Abundance of Water, which they pour into the Temple, and though the Gap be ſmall, yet it receives a prodigious Quantity of it; and when they do this, they relate how Deucalion firſt inſtituted this Cuſtom, to be a Memorial of this Calamity, and of his Deliverance from it.

Its Univerſality.

FROM theſe, and many more Authorities of the like Nature, which [h] the Learned in all Ages have produced, it ſeems to be a manifeſt Point, that the Truth and Certainty of a Deluge was always acknowledged by the Ancients; nor was the Extent and Univerſality of it ever called in Queſtion, till ſome modern Authors, obſerving the Difficulty of finding out Waters ſufficient to drown the World, in the Manner that Moſes deſcribes it, have ventured upon a very bold Expedient. [i] They ſay,

Objections againſt it.

" That Noah's Flood was no more, than a National Inundation, confined to Judea,
" and the Regions thereabouts, or perhaps to that Tract of Ground, which lies " between the four Seas, the Perſian, the Caſpian, the Euxine, and the Syrian:
" And to ſtrengthen this Aſſertion, they preſume, that, ſince the primary Deſign of " the Flood was to deſtroy Mankind only, who could hardly be thought, in ſo ſhort
" a Time, to have overſpread the whole Face of the Earth, there was no Neceſſity
" to carry the Waters beyond the Bounds of what was inhabited; that the Waters,
" required to raiſe the Deluge ſome fifteen Cubits above the higheſt Mountains, are more " than what the Clouds, the Rivers, the Sea, and all the ſuppoſed Cavities of the " Earth are able to produce; nor can they conceive, how the Ark (even according " to the Moſaic Menſuration) could be capable of containing half the Number of " Creatures, which [k] ſeven Couple of every clean Species in the World, and one of " the unclean, would neceſſarily amount to."

Anſwer'd from Reaſon.

OF what Capacity the Ark was to receive the living Creatures, that were to enter into it, and other Things neceſſary for their Subſiſtence, we ſhall have Occaſion to take Notice, when we come to enquire into its particular Make and Menſuration. In the mean Time, we cannot but obſerve, what little Need there was for any Ark at all, wherein to preſerve Noah and his Family, in caſe the Deluge was not univerſal; [l] ſince he might have ſaved both himſelf and them, only by retiring into ſome neighbouring Country, as Lot and his Family ſaved themſelves by withdrawing from Sodom, when that City was to be deſtroyed. This had been an eaſier Thing, and much more commodious than the great Preparations he made of a large Veſſel, with Rooms for the Reception and Accommodation of Beaſts and Birds. [m] Beaſts might have poſſibly ſaved themſelves by Flight; but if they did not, he might have eaſily, after the Deluge was over, furniſhed himſelf from ſome other Places, which the Deſolation had not reached: And as for the Birds, they, without much Difficulty, might have flown to the next dry Country; perching upon Trees, or the Tops of Mountains by the Way, to reſt themſelves if they were tired; becauſe the Waters did not prevail upon the Earth all on a ſudden, but ſwelled by Degrees to their appointed Height.

From Scripture.

THE Scripture, on the contrary, is ſo far from giving us the leaſt Hint of this, that it introduces God laying this Command upon Noah, [n] Of every living Thing of all Fleſh, two of every Sort, ſhalt thou bring into the Ark, to keep them alive with thee; and gives us the fulleſt Account imaginable of their entire Deſtruction, viz. that [o] all Fleſh, which moved upon the Earth, every Creature, in whoſe Noſtrils was the Breath of Life, every living Subſtance, which was upon the Face of the Ground, whether Man or Cattle, or creeping Things, or Fowl of the Heaven, all died and were loſt; except Noah, and ſuch as were with him in the Ark.

THIS, one would think, were enough to give us Aſſurance of the Univerſality of the Deluge; and yet, to remove all Scruple and Doubtfulneſs, the Divine Hiſtorian furniſhes us with another Argument, as demonſtrative as any, when he tells us, that [p] the Waters prevailed exceedingly upon the Earth; and all the high Hills, that were under the whole Heaven (and conſequently, quite round the Earth) were covered; fifteen Cubits upward did the Waters prevail, and the Mountains were covered. To illuſtrate then, what a ſtrong Proof, againſt any partial or limited Inundation, this Account of it is, [q] let us ſuppoſe, that the Aſiatick and Armenian Mountains only were covered with theſe Waters; yet we muſt allow, that unleſs there was a Miracle to keep them upon Heaps, they would certainly flow throughout the Earth; for theſe Mountains are high enough to make them fall every Way, and join with the Seas, that encompaſs the Earth. We cannot imagine how Hills and Mountains of Water could have hung about Judea, as if they had been congealed; or how a huge Maſs thereof could have ſtood upon the Middle of the Earth, like one great Drop, [h] Vid. Grot. Annot. in Lib. I. de Verit. Relig. Chriſt. Voſſ. Iſagog. Chron. Diſſert. 4. Bochar. Geogr. Sac. Lib. I. Auguſt. de Civit. Dei, Lib. XVIII. *Euſeb. Chr. Lud. Viv. Drop, or a trembling Jelly, and all the Places about it be dry and untouched. All liquid Bodies, we know, are diffuſive; their Parts being in Motion have no Tie or Connexion one with another, but glide and fall off any Way, as Gravity and the Air preſs them; and therefore, when the Waters began to riſe at firſt, long before they could ſwell to the Height of the Hills, they would diffuſe themſelves every Way, and thereupon, all the Vallies and Plains, and lower Parts of the Earth, would be filled, all the Globe over, before they could riſe to the Tops of the Mountains, in any Part of it.

NAY, let us ſuppoſe, [r] that this Water fell not throughout the whole Earth, but in ſome particular Country, and there, at firſt, made a great Lake; yet this Lake, when it began to ſwell, would every Way diſcharge itſelf by any Deſcents and Declivities of the Ground; and theſe Iſſues or Channels, being once made and ſupplied with new Waters, puſhing them on forwards, would continue their Courſe, till they arrived at the Sea, juſt in the Manner as we ſee Rivers do at preſent. So that, from the very Nature of the Element, it appears, that Water could not aſcend to the Tops of the higheſt Mountains, without diffuſing itſelf over the Face of the Earth; and conſequently, that, if ever there was a Deluge, which roſe to the Height that Moſes deſcribes, it muſt of Neceſſity have been univerſal.

From the Number of the World's Inhabitants.

HOW many wiſe Ends the Providence of God might have in bringing this Deſtruction upon the Earth, 'tis impoſſible for us to find out; but even ſuppoſing he had but this One, viz. to rid himſelf of a Generation, that were become profligate, and paſt all Hopes of amending; [s] yet the Number of Mankind, which before the Flood was vaſtly ſuperior to what the preſent Earth, perhaps, is capable of ſuſtaining, cauſed every Place to be inhabited, and (that none might eſcape the avenging Hand) cauſed every Place to be overflowed.' Tis a groundleſs and forced Conceit therefore to imagine, that Judea only, and ſome other Parts about it in Aſia, were ſtored with People, when the Deluge was brought upon the old World; for, if we conſider the Longævity of the firſt Inhabitants of the Earth, and the pretty near Equality of their Ages, (which ſeems to have been providentially deſigned for the quicker Propagation of Mankind) we ſhall ſoon perceive, that, in the Space of ſixteen hundred Years, Mankind would become ſo numerous, that the chief Difficulty would be where we ſhould find Countries to receive them. For, [t] if in the Space of about two hundred and ſixty Years (as the ſacred Hiſtory acquaints us) the Poſterity of Jacob, by his Sons only, (without the Conſideration of Dinah his Daughter) amounted [u] to ſix hundred thouſand Males, above the Age of twenty, all able to go forth to War; what Increaſe may not be expected from a Race of Patriarchs, living ſix, ſeven, eight, nine hundred Years a-piece, and ſome, * till the five hundredth Year of their Lives, begetting Sons and Daughters? The Multiplication muſt needs be exceedingly great, and (as [x] ſome have made their Computation) the Number of the Antediluvians, in the Times near the Flood, would eaſily amount to above 500,000 Millions, i. e. to a thouſand Times as many, as our preſent Earth has, in all Probability, now upon it, and indeed to ten Times as many, as the Earth, in its preſent Conſtitution, ſince the Deluge, can well be ſuppoſed capable of maintaining, and conſequently, (to deſtroy its Inhabitants) the Inundation muſt have fallen upon every Quarter, and encompaſſed the whole Globe.

From the History of all Nations.

AND accordingly, if we take the Circuit of the Globe, and enquire, of the Inhabitants of every Climate, we ſhall find, that the Fame of this Deluge is gone through the Earth, and that there are Records and Traditions of it, in every Part of the known World. [y] The Americans acknowledge, and ſpeak of in their Continent; the Chineſe, who are the moſt diſtant People in Aſia, have the Tradition of it; [z] the ſeveral Nations of Africa tell various Stories concerning it; and, in the European Parts, the Flood of Deucalion is that of Noah, only related with ſome Diſguiſe: So that we may trace the Deluge quite round the Globe, and (what is more remarkable ſtill) every one of theſe People have a Tale to tell; ſome one Way, ſome another, concerning the Reſtoration of Mankind, which is an Argument that they thought all Mankind was once deſtroyed in that Deluge.

And from the Earth itſelf.

BUT not to go ſo far for our Proofs, if we will but turn aſide the Surface [a], and look into the Bowels of the Earth itſelf, we ſhall find Arguments enough for our Conviction; for the Beds of Shells, which are often found on the Tops of the higheſt higheſt Mountains, and the petrified Bones and Teeth of Fiſhes, which are dug up, hundreds of Miles from the Sea, are the cleareſt Evidences in the World, that the Waters have, ſome Time or other, overflowed the higheſt Parts of the Earth. The Truth of theſe Matters is not to be conteſted now by any, that have but the leaſt Inſight into Experimental Philoſophy: Nor can it, with any Degree of Probability, be ſaid, that theſe ſubterraneous Bodies are only the Mimickry, or Mock-Productions of Nature; for that theſe are real Shells, the niceſt Examination both of the Eye and Microſcope do atteſt; and that they are true Bones may be experienced by burning them, which, as it does other Bones, turns them firſt into a Coal, and afterwards into a Calx.

" BUT, if the Flood was ſo immenſe and boundleſs, where ſhall we find a ſuffi-
" cient Quantity of Element to anſwer this Purpoſe? [b] Eight Oceans of Water will " hardly be enough to overflow the whole Globe; and yet, if we ranſack every " Storehouſe, the Earth will ſay, 'tis not in me; the Sea will ſay, 'tis not in me.
" The Clouds may empty themſelves in vain, and though one Abyſs call to another
" Abyſs, yet will not they be able to ſatisfy our Demands: What then ſhall we do?
" or whither turn our Thoughts, in this our Exigence, for a Supply?"

THIS, it muſt be allowed, is a very great Difficulty upon ſuch, as are willing to exclude the Almighty Power of God, or, at moſt, allow it but a very partial Agency in this aſtoniſhing Event: And therefore, before we come to illuſtrate the Account, which the ſacred Hiſtory has given us, it may not be amiſs to examine into the Nature of the other Expedients, which the Wit of Man has deviſed, as Aſſiſtant to the common Cauſes, which God has aſſigned.

THE two learned and ingenious Perſons, whoſe Theories, [c] upon another important Subject, we had Occaſion once before to conſult, have tried the utmoſt of their Invention, in the Deſtitution of a Sufficiency of Water, as they think, to find out other Means, that may be equivalent; but in this they have had but poor Succeſs, ſince moſt of their Suppoſitions are either quite erroneous; or, upon Examination, incompetent for the Work.

The Subſtance of Dr Burnet's Theory.

THE former of theſe ſuppoſes, " That, in the Cavity of the Antediluvian Earth, " was repoſited the whole Maſs or Body of Waters belonging to it, which the " Scripture calls TEHOM RABBA, the great Deep, or Abyſs: That this Abyſs was
" incruſted, as it were, or ſurrounded with an Arch of Earth, which was neither ſo
" thick nor ſolid however, but that the Rays of the Sun, beating always upon it,
" made in Time great Cracks and Fiſſures in it, and by that Means rarified the " Waters, that were lodged within: That the Waters, thus rarified, and requiring " more Space, than they needed before, preſſed violently againſt this exterior Cruſt,
" to make it give Way to their Dilatation; and that by this Means, in the Fulneſs
" of God's appointed Time, the Fabrick of the Earth was broken, the Frame of
" it torn in Pieces, as by an Earthquake, and thoſe great Portions and Fragments,
" into which it was divided, fell down into the Abyſs, ſome in one Poſture, and
" ſome in another." So that, according to the Senſe of this Theoriſt, the Deluge was occaſioned by the Diſſolution of the primæval Earth; the Diſſolution of the Earth, by the Fermentation of the incloſed Waters; the Fermentation of the Waters, by the continued intenſe Heat of the Sun; and the great Heat of the Sun, by the perpendicular Poſition of the Axis of the Earth, to the Plane of the Ecliptick. [d] But if the Axis of the primitive Earth was inclined to the Plane of the Ecliptick, in the very ſame Manner, that the preſent Earth is, (and [e] for this we have given ſufficient Reaſons before) then was there the ſame Variety of Seaſons and Alterations of Heat and Cold, that there is now; and conſequently, all the Arguments, which he draws from the Heat and ſtrong Action of the Sun upon this primæval Earth (and this ſeems to be the chief Foundation of his whole Hypotheſis) infallibly fall to the Ground.

Anſwered and refutea. [f]

BUT ſuppoſe that the Heat of the Sun was as intenſe, as he would have it; [f] yet it contradicts Senſe and common Experience to ſay, that it would ever affect the Earth to ſuch a Degree, as to cauſe great Cracks and Fiſſures in it, or penetrate its Cruſt ſo far, as to ferment the Water, and to raiſe it into Vapour, ſince in Vaults, and other ſubterraneous Cavities, we find no ſenſible Alteration of Heat in Summer and Winter;

[b] So ſays Dr Burnet; but Mr Keill, upon the loweſt Computation, makes them twenty-two. Vide his Remarks upon Mr Whiſton's Theory. [c] Vide Page 203, an Examination of Dr Burnet's and Mr Whiſton's Theories, concerning the Creation. [d] Keill's Examination of Burnet's Theory. [e] Vid. Page 203. [f] Vid. Keill's Examinat. paſſim.

Winter; and in Barbadoes, and other Iſlands near the Equator, we perceive none of thoſe huge Cracks, which the Theoriſt ſuppoſes in the Antediluvian Earth, though the Sun has ſhone above thrice as long upon them, as it did upon it. Nay, ſuppoſe the Effect of the Sun, upon the primitive Earth, to be what the Theoriſt imagines; yet ſince (according to his Hypotheſis) the Abyſs had, at firſt, all the Water included in it, and was all along the great Store-houſe of the Rivers and Fountains, that watered the Ground; 'tis much to be feared, that, by the inceſſant Exhalations of the Sun, (if the Sun did penetrate ſo far) this Store-houſe would, [g] in the Space of ſome hundred Years, be quite exhauſted: But, if it were not, 'twould be difficult to prove, how the mere Fermentation of Water could break through an Arch of ſolid Matter lying upon it ſome hundred Miles thick; how one Ocean of Water, (for he ſuppoſes no more in the Abyſs) however toſſed and agitated, could cauſe an univerſal Deluge, [h] when himſelf, for the ſame Purpoſes, requires no leſs than eight: And laſtly, how a Deluge, thus occaſioned by the Diſruption of the Abyſs, and violent Agitation of the Waters, ſhould ever laſt ſo long, as the Scriptures inform us Noah's Flood did, [i] an hundred and fifteen Days, without abating, on the Face of the Earth. [k] Water, we know, driven with great Violence upwards, falls down again in a very ſhort Space of Time; and can we imagine, that the Water, which was raiſed by the Fall of the Cruſt of the Earth, could laſt many Days, or, indeed, many Hours, without deſcending again into its ancient Channel? Since, therefore, the Shock and Commotion of the Abyſs, by the Fall of the Arch of Earth into it, (how violent ſoever we ſuppoſe it) would occaſion no more than a tranſient Effect (whereas the Flood, related by Moſes, was of a long and laſting Continuance); for this very Reaſon it will follow, [l] that the Diſruption of the Abyſs, or Diſſolution of the primæval Earth, and its Fall in the Abyſs, could never be the Cauſe of the Deluge recorded in Scripture.

The Subſtance of Mr Whiſton's Theory.

THE Expedient, which the other learned Theoriſt has invented for the Supply of a ſufficient Quantity of Water, in order to effect a general Deluge, is the Trajection of a Comet. For he ſuppoſes, [m] "That, at the Time of the Deluge, a Comet "came very near, and paſſed by the Earth; that, as it approached, and came be"low the Moon, it raiſed a vaſt Tide, both in the Sea, that was on the Surface, and "in the Abyſs, that was under the Cruſt of the Earth; that this Tide and the At"traction of the Comet changed the Abyſs, and with it the ſuper-incumbent Earth "(after it had ſtretched it, and made innumerable Cracks in it) from a ſpherical "to an oval Figure; that this Comet, in its Deſcent towards the Sun, paſſing cloſe "by the Body of the Earth, involved it in its Atmoſphere and Tail, for a conſidera"ble Time; that preſſing the Earth very violently, it forced Abundance of ſubter"raneous Waters out upon its Surface, through the Cracks and Fiſſures, which "were made before; and, leaving a vaſt Track of its Tail behind, furniſhed Wa"ter enough to cover the Face of the whole Earth, for the perpendicular Height "of three Miles." Thus he ſupplies the Water; and then to remove it, when the Work is done, he ſuppoſes, "that a very ſtrong Wind dried up ſome, and forced the reſt "into the great Abyſs, where it was repoſited before."

Anſwered and refuted.

THESE are the chief of the Suppoſitions, whereby this learned Writer pretends to account for all the Phænomena of the Deluge: But though we may allow, (as [n] he ſeems to make it probable) that, at the Time of the Deluge, a Comet might come very near the Earth, and cauſe a prodigious Tide in the Seas, that were on its Surface; yet how it ſhould have the ſame Effect upon the Abyſs, which was incloſed

[g] Mr Keill has made a plain Calculation of this Matter, and concludes it with theſe Words: Since therefore, according to the Theoriſt, the Abyſs was the Store-houſe, which furniſhed the Antediluvian Earth with Rivers, and none of them, according to him, ran into it again; and becauſe all the Waters, which were anciently in the Abyſs, are now in the Ocean, it muſt needs follow, that in the Space of eight hundred and twelve Years, it would be quite empty, upon Suppoſition that there were as many Rivers in the primitive Earth, as there are now in ours; but becauſe there was then twice as much Land to be furniſhed with Rivers, there being then no Seas, (as the Theoriſt ſays) we muſt, in Proportion, allow twice as many Rivers to water the double Quantity of dry Land; and therefore by ſuch a double Quantity of Rivers the Abyſs would be emptied in half that Time, Page 164. [h] Burnet's Theory, p. 17. [i] Gen. vii. 24. [k] Keill's Examination. [l] Burnet's Theory, p. 104. [m] Comets are Species of Planets, or Bodies revolving about the Sun, and moving in one of the Conick Sections, (which, in all Probability, is an Ellipſis) whoſe Motions, and (if they have elliptick Orbits) whoſe periodical Times are as conſtant, certain, and regular, as thoſe of the Planets, though, till very lately, generally unknown to the World. Whiſton's Theory. The ſame learned Author endeavours to prove, that the Comet, which was ſeen in theſe Parts, A. D. 1680, (whoſe Revolution he computes to be in about 575 Years, and whoſe Trajectory Sir Iſaac Newton has delineated) was no other than that very Comet, which came by the Earth, at the Beginning of Noah's Flood, and was, as he imagines, the Cauſe of the ſame, ibid. p. 188. [n] That a Comet did really appear at the Deluge, we have the Teſtimony of ſeveral Authors in Hevelius's Cometographia; nay, Pliny too, a learned and ancient Author, not only makes Mention (very likely from the Egyptian Records) of a Comet, which appeared in the Reign of Typhon, (i. e. at the Deluge, or immediately before it) but alſo ſpeaks of the direful Effects of it, ibid. p. 200.

and fortified with a thick ſolid Cruſt of Earth, or make ſuch convenient Fiſſures in it, without ſhattering its whole Compages, is Matter of ſome Amazement. Firm and fluid Bodies, we know, are equally attracted, when the attracting Body is at the ſame Diſtance; and, if ſo, the Approach of the Comet could have no more Effect upon the Abyſs, than if it had been all one continued Solid; and if it could raiſe no Commotion in the Abyſs, it could never (in the Method the Theoriſt imagines) make any Alteration in the Figure of the Earth. Whether the Atmoſphere of a Comet be a watery Subſtance or no, is far from being clear; but admitting it were, yet that the bare paſſing through it ſhould afford ſuch a prodigious Quantity of Water, as the Theory has Occaſion for, or [o] that the Earth, a cold Planet, ſhould go off with 700,000 Miles of the Comet's Tail, which could not be ſupported by the Comet itſelf, but only by Reaſon of the burning Heat of its Body, is a Thing incredible. The Obſervations, however, of the moſt curious Enquiries into this Phænomenon [p] may induce us to think, that the Circle about the Body of the Comet is nothing elſe but the curling and winding round of the Smoak, riſing at firſt to a determinate Height, from all Parts of the Comet, and then making off to that Part of it, which is oppoſite to the Sun: And if this Opinion be true, then could the Earth gain no more Water by paſſing through the Atmoſphere of a Comet, than any Thing can do, by paſſing through the Smoak of a Chimney: Then was there, indeed, more Danger of a Conflagration, than Inundation; and Noah and his Ark ran a manifeſt Hazard of being burnt to Powder by the glowing Heat of this melting Planet.

NOR is the Theoriſt much happier in drawing off the Waters from the Surface of the Earth, than he is in bringing them on. For, whereas he ſuppoſes, that three perpendicular Miles of Water will be ſufficient to effect a Deluge, which (upon a [q] moderate Computation) will amount to twenty-two Oceans of Water, together with the Water that compoſes the preſent Ocean, where ſhall we find a Place for the Reception of ſuch an immenſe Maſs? The Air, it muſt be owned, could but receive a ſmall Proportion; the Wind could not be ſuppoſed to dry up a great deal; the Channel of the Sea was already full, and the Cracks and Cavities of the Earth muſt, of Neceſſity, be ſo too; or if we ſhould ſuppoſe (what is an impoſſible Suppoſition) that, during the Time of the Deluge, they remained empty; yet the Theoriſt ſuppoſes, that, at moſt, they could but contain half the Quantity of Water requiſite to make the Deluge; and, if ſo, what can we imagine would become of the reſt? For, after all theſe ſubterraneous Cavities are compleatly full, there would remain eleven Oceans more to be diſpoſed of, which (without the miraculous Interpoſition of a Divine Power) could not be removed: And if the Hand of God muſt neceſſarily be called upon to remove the Waters, why ſhould it be forgot, and its Operations overlook'd, in the more ſtupendous Work of bringing them in? For my Part, I cannot think him half ſo conſiſtent, and rational in his Scheme, who takes a World of Pains to bring immenſe Quantities of Waters upon the Stage, and when they have done their Work, has no Way to convey them off again; as him, who tranſmutes ſome other Body into Water, for the preſent Occaſion, and, when that is ſerved, reſtores it to its priſtine Form and Nature. For if we grant that all natural Bodies, even the Elements themſelves, may be mutually changed into one another, (as few Men doubt, and ſome think they can demonſtrate) why might not the Divine Power and Providence bring together, at that Time, ſuch natural Agents, as [r] might change the Air or Æther, or both together into Water, and ſo ſupply what was wanting in Rains, and extraordinary Eruptions of Springs. But becauſe the Scripture, aſſigning the Cauſes or Means of the Inundation, makes no Mention of any Converſion of Air into Water, but only takes Notice of the opening the Windows of Heaven, and the breaking up the Fountains of the great Deep; we proceed now to conſider, [s] whether theſe two Cauſes, under the Direction of the Hand of God, be not ſufficient to work this Effect.

[o] Keill's Remarks on Mr Whiſton's Theory. [p] Nicholls's Conference, Vol. I. [q] Vid. Keill's Remarks, p. 219. [r] This Cauſe, the Converſion of Air into Water, the learned Kircher alledges as the undoubted inſtrumental Cauſe or Means of the Deluge, in theſe Words: Dico totum illum Aëreum Spatium, uſque ad ſupremam Regionem Aëris, præpotentis Dei virtute in aquas, per inexplicabilem nubium coacervatarum multitudinem, quâ replebatur, converſam eſſe; cujus ubertas tanta fuit, ut Aër ſupremus cum inferiori in Oceanum commutatus videri potuerit, non naturæ viribus, ſed illius, cujus voluntati & imperio cuncta ſubſunt: i. e. All that vaſt Space, I ſay, which reaches up to the ſupreme Region of the Air, was, by the Power of the Omnipotent God, and Inſtrumentality of an inexplicable Multitude of Clouds, amaſſed together, and changed into Water; ſo that the upper and lower Air might ſeem to be tranſmuted into an Ocean, not by the Strength of Nature, but by the Power of him, whoſe Will and Power all Things are ſubject to, and obey. De Arcâ Noë, Lib. II. [s] Ray, of the General Deluge.

BY the opening of the Windows of Heaven muſt be underſtood the Cauſing of the Water, which was ſuſpended in the Clouds, to deſcend down upon the Earth, not in ordinary Showers, but in Floods, or (as the Septuagint interpret it) in Cataracts, or Spouts of Water; [t] which Travellers are beſt liable to form a Notion of, who have ſeen thoſe prodigious Falls of Waters, ſo frequent in the Indies, and where the Clouds many Times do not break into Drops, but fall, with a terrible Violence, in a Torrent. The Moſaic Account.

HOW far theſe Treaſures of Water in the Air might contribute to the general Inundation, we may, in ſome Meaſure, compute, from what we may have obſerved in a Thunder-Cloud, [u] which, in the Space of leſs than two Hours, has ſometimes poured down ſuch a vaſt Quantity of Water, as, beſides what ſunk into the dry and thirſty Ground, and filled all the Ditches and Ponds, has cauſed a conſiderable Flood in the Rivers, and ſet all the Meadows on float. Now had this Cloud (which, for aught we know, moved forty Miles forward in its falling) ſtood ſtill, and emptied all its Water upon the ſame Spot of Ground, it firſt hung over, what a ſudden and incredible Deluge would it have made in the Place? What then muſt we ſuppoſe the Event to have been, when the Flood-gates of Heaven were all opened, and, on every Part of the Globe, the Clouds were inceſſantly pouring out Water with ſuch Violence, and in ſuch vaſt Abundance, for forty Days together? How far the Clouds contributed.

'TIS impoſſible for us to have any adequate Conception of the Thing, [x] though the vaſt Inundations, which are made yearly in Egypt, only from the Rains, which fall in Ethiopia, and the like annual Overflowing in America of the great River Oroonoque, whereby many Iſlands and Plains, at other Times inhabited, are laid twenty Feet under Water, between May and September, may give us a faint Emblem; and be of ſome Uſe to cure our Infidelity in this Reſpect.

THE other Cauſe, that the Scriptures relate, is the breaking up of the Fountains of the great Deep; whereby thoſe Waters, which were contained in vaſt Quantities within the Bowels of the Earth, were forced out, and thrown upon the Surface of it. * That there is a mighty Collection of Waters, incloſed in the Bowels of the Earth, conſtituting a large Globe, in the interior or central Part of it; and that the Water of this Globe communicates with that of the Ocean, by Means of certain Hiatus or Apertures, paſſing between it and the Ocean, is plain by the Caſpian, and ſome other Seas, which receive into themſelves many great Rivers, and having no viſible Outlets, muſt be ſuppoſed to diſcharge the Water they receive by ſubterraneous Paſſages into this Receptacle, and, by its Intervention, into the Ocean again. [y] The Mediterranean Sea, in particular, beſides the many Rivers that run into it, has two great Currents of the Sea, one at the Streights of Gibraltar, and the other at the Propontis, which let into it ſuch a vaſt Tide of Water, that, many Ages ago, it muſt have endangered the whole World, had it not emptied itſelf by certain ſecret Paſſages into ſome great Cavity underneath: And for this Reaſon, ſome have imagined the Earth to be one great Animal, [z] whoſe Abyſs ſupplies the Place of the Heart, in the Body of the Earth, to furniſh all its Aqueducts with a Sufficiency of Water, and whoſe ſubterraneous Paſſages are like Veins in the Body, which receive Water out of the Sea, as the Veins do Blood out of the Liver, and, in a continual Circulation, return it to the Heart again. The Abyſs, its Reality from Reaſon.

HOWEVER this be, 'tis certainly more than probable, (becauſe a Matter of Divine Revelation) that there is an immenſe Body of Water incloſed in the Center of the Earth, to which the Pſalmiſt plainly alludes, when he tells us, [a] that God founded the Earth upon the Seas, and eſtabliſhed it upon the Floods; that [b] he ſtretched out the Earth above the Waters; that he [c] gathered up the Waters, as in a Bag, (ſo the beſt Tranſlations have it) and laid up the Deep, or Abyſs, as in a Store-houſe. Nay, there is a Paſſage or two in the Proverbs of Solomon, (where Wiſdom declares her Antiquity, and Pre-exiſtence to all the Works of the Earth) which ſets before our Eyes, as it were, the very Form and Figure of this Abyſs, [d] When he prepared the Heavens, I was there, when he ſet a Compaſs upon the Face of the Deep; when he eſtabliſhed the Clouds above, when he ſtrengthened the Fountains of the Abyſs. Here is mention made of the Abyſs, and of the Fountains of the Abyſs; nor is there any Queſtion to be made, but that the Fountains of the Abyſs here are the ſame with the Fountains of the From Scripture.

[t] Patrick's Commentary. [u] Ray, of the General Deluge. [x] Patrick, ibid. [y] Woodward's Nat. Hiſt. [z] Nicholls's Conference, Vol. I. [a] Stillingfleet's Origines Sacræ. [b] Pſal. xxiv. 2. [c] Ibid. cxxxvi. 6. [d] Ibid. xxxiii. 7. [e] Prov. viii. 27, 28.

the Abyſs, which Moſes mentions, and were broke up, as he tells us, at the Deluge: And what is obſervable in the Text, the Word, which we render Compaſs, properly ſignifies a Circle or Circumference, or an Orb or Sphere; ſo that there was in the Beginning a Sphere, Orb, or Arch, ſet round the Abyſs, according to the Teſtimony of Wiſdom, who was then preſent; by the Means of which, the Fountains thereof were ſtrengthened; for we cannot conceive how they could have been ſtrengthened any other Way, than by having a ſtrong Cover, or Arch made over them.

How much it contributed.

IF ſuch then be the Form of this Abyſs, that it ſeems to be a vaſt Maſs or Body of Water, lying altogether in the Womb of the Earth, 'twill be no hard Matter to compute what a plentiful Supply might be expected from thence, in order to effect an univerſal Deluge. For, [d] if the Circumference of the Earth (even according to the loweſt Computation) be 21000 Miles, the Diameter of it (according to that Circumference) 7000 Miles, and conſequently, from the Superficies to the Center 3500 Miles; and (if according to [e] the beſt Account) the higheſt Mountain in the World (taking its Altitude from the Plane it ſtands upon) does not exceed four perpendicular Miles in Height; admitted we take two hundred Miles for the Depth of the Cruſt, before we come to the Abyſs, yet if 3300 Miles deep can be ſuppoſed able to cover four or five Miles in Height; then we cannot but conclude, that in this Abyſs there would be infinitely more Water than enough (when drawn out upon the Surface of the Earth) to drown the World to a far greater Height than Moſes relates. The only Difficulty is, how it came to be drawn out from the Abyſs, and 'tis here, indeed, we muſt call in the Aſſiſtance of Omnipotence; ſince every other Hypotheſis, upon Trial, will prove miſerably lame and defective.

'TIS a groundleſs Objection then to ſuppoſe, that there could be any Defect of Water ſufficient for a Deluge, when the Store-houſes both of the ſuperior and inferior Regions were ſo well repleniſhed: And ſince it is agreed on all Hands, that, in the Time of the Chaos, [f] the Waters did cover the Earth, (we know not how deep) inſomuch that nothing of it could be ſeen, till God was pleaſed to make a Separation, raiſing ſome into the Clouds, and depreſſing others into proper Channels, and commanding the dry Land to appear; why ſhould it be thought a Wonder, if theſe Waters were raiſed up again by the ſame Hand, that appointed their Place of Abode, to cover the Earth as before; eſpecially when the Waters above the Firmament came down to join thoſe below, as they did at the Beginning? Why ſhould it be thought a Wonder, I ſay, when the Heathens themſelves were not averſe to own the Poſſibility of it; for ſo we find [g] Seneca, treating of that fatal Day, as he calls it, when the Deluge ſhall come, (for he fancied it ſtill future) and queſtioning how it might come to paſs, whether by the Force of the Ocean overflowing the Earth, by perpetual Rains without Intermiſſion, by the Swelling of Rivers, and opening of new Fountains; or (what he rather ſuppoſes) by a general Concourſe and Combination of all theſe Cauſes, concludes his Enquiry at laſt with theſe remarkable Words:

The Opinion of the wiſeſt Heathens.

" There are huge Lakes, which we do not ſee, much of the Sea, that lies hidden " and concealed, many Rivers that glide in ſecret; ſo that there may be Cauſes of " a Deluge on all Sides, when ſome Waters flow in under the Earth; others flow " round about it, and being long pent up, overwhelm it, &c. and as our Bodies
" ſometimes diſſolve into Sweat, ſo the Earth ſhall melt; and, without the Help of " other Cauſes, ſhall find in itſelf what ſhall drown it, &c. there being in all Places, " both openly and ſecretly, both from above and from beneath, an Eruption of " Waters, ready to overflow, and deſtroy it."

The Ark,

HAVING thus provided a ſufficient Quantity of Water for the Deſtruction of the old World, the next Thing they have to conſider is, the Structure of the Ark, wherein the ſeveral Animals, appointed for the Propagation of the new, were to be preſerved, [h] It is very probable, that, when Adam and Eve were turned out of Paradiſe, they were ſtill permitted to continue in the Country of Eden, and that, upon

[d] Sir Walter Raleigh's Hiſtory. [e] 'Tis very probable, that Men are exceedingly miſtaken as to the Height of Mountains, which comes ſo ſhort of what Sir Walter Raleigh allows to them, (viz. thirty Miles) that the higheſt in the World will not be found to be five direct Miles in Height: Olympus, whoſe Height is ſo extolled by the Poets, does not exceed a Mile and an half perpendicular, and about ſeventy Paces. Mount Athos, which is ſaid to caſt its Shadow into the Iſle of Lemnos, (according to Pliny 87 Miles) is not above two Miles in Height; nay, the very Pike of Teneriff, which is reputed the higheſt Mountain in the World, may be aſcended in three Days, (according to the Proportion of eight Furlongs to a Day's Journey) makes it much about the Height of a German Mile perpendicular, as Varenius confeſſes; which makes the Account of the Flood, and its over-topping the higheſt Mountains much more probable. Stillingfleet's Origines Sacræ. upon the Increaſe of Mankind, tho' other Families removed into other Parts, yet the eldeſt Son always remained where the firſt Settlement was made: Whence it rationally follows, that Noah, being the eldeſt Son in a lineal Deſcent from Seth, lived in the ſaid Country of Eden, and there built the Ark; becauſe it is confirmed by ſeveral Hiſtorians, [i] that in Babylonia, and other adjacent Countries, there was a great Plenty of Cypreſs-Trees (which the Scripture calls Gopher-wood) fit for Shipping, and not liable to rot, as having a bitter Sap, which hindered Worms from breeding in it; and, for this Reaſon, we need leſs wonder, that we find Joſephus, and ſome other Authors, teſtifying, that the Ruins of the Ark continued ſo many Ages.

Its Capacity.

[k] HAD we never ſeen a Ship, and ſhould be told, how many Men, and what Proviſions and Merchandize one of the largeſt Rate will carry, it would ſeem no leſs incredible to us, than what Moſes tells us of the Things, that were contained in the Ark. The Ark, according to his Account, was [l] three hundred Cubits in Length, fifty in Breath, and thirty in Height; and if (with ſome learned Calculators) we ſuppoſe the Cubit, here mentioned, to have been a Foot and a half long, then was the Length of it (according to that Proportion) four hundred and fifty Feet, the Breadth ſeventy-five Feet, and the Height forty-five. So that the Ark was ſix Times as long as it was broad, ten Times as long as it was high, and the whole Capacity thereof was four hundred and fifty thouſand ſolid Cubits, or one Million five hundred and eighteen Thouſand ſeven hundred and fifty Cubical Feet; which was Space abundantly enough to contain all, that was to be ſtowed in it. For it appears from the ſacred Text, that the Ark conſiſted of three Stories; and the whole Height of the Ark being thirty Cubits, or forty-five Feet, it may well be ſuppoſed, that the Height was equally divided among the three Stories, and ſo each Story was ten Cubits, or fifteen Feet high, only deducting one Cubit, or a Foot and a half, for the Slope of the Roof, or Cover of the upper Story. It is likewiſe pretty well agreed among Interpreters, that the loweſt Story was appointed for four-footed Animals, as moſt commodious for them; the middle Story for their Provender, and what they were to live upon; and the upper Story, partly for Birds, and what they were to eat; and partly for Noah and his Family, together with their Utenſils. And that [m] each of theſe Stories was ſpacious enough, to receive what was to be put therein, according to the forementioned Order, will evidently appear from any of thoſe Geometrical Calculations, which learned Men in all Ages have made of the Dimenſions of this Veſſel, and its Contents, (whereunto [n] I refer the Reader for his farther Satisfaction) but, more eſpecially, from what our renowned Countryman Biſhop Wilkins has ſaid upon this Argument, who, after an exact Computation, and Adjuſtment of every Thing to its proper Place, very truly, as well as religiouſly, obſerves, " that had the moſt ſkilful Mathematicians and " Philoſophers been ſet to conſult, what Proportions a Veſſel, deſigned for ſuch an " Uſe, as the Ark was, ſhould have in the ſeveral Parts of it; they could not have " pitched upon any other more ſuitable to the Purpoſe, than thoſe mentioned by Biſhop Wilkins's Reflections upon it.

[i] Hence the Fleet of Alexander the Great, which was made at Babylon, was all made of Cypreſs-Wood; becauſe in thoſe Parts there was Want of other Wood fit for Shipping. Appian. Hiſt. [k] Du Pin's Hiſtory of the Old Teſtament. [l] Gen. vi. 15, 16. [m] Tho' the Number of Animals may, at firſt View, appear to be almoſt infinite, yet, as Biſhop Wilkins obſerves, if we come to an exact Calculation, we ſhall find the Number of Species much ſmaller than we expect; and not to amount to one hundred of Quadrupeds, and two of Birds: And of theſe too muſt be excepted all ſuch Animals as live in the Water, ſuch as proceed from a Mixture of different Species, and ſuch as change their Colour, Size, and Shape, by changing their Climate, and thence, in different Countries, ſeem to be different Species, tho' in Reality they are not. Wilkins's Eſſay. It is to be conſidered likewiſe, that there are but few Species of very vaſt Creatures, ſuch as Elephants, Horſes, &c. that Birds are generally of a ſmall Bulk, and take up but little Room; that if we ſuppoſe Inſects to be included, they take up leſs, tho' very numerous; and that leſs Proviſion would ſerve them all, when they were ſhut up cloſe, and did not ſpend themſelves in Motion. Patrick's Commentary. Buteo, upon the whole, has demonſtrated, that all the Animals, contained in the Ark, could not be equal to 500 Horſes; and yet, it is not to be queſtioned, but that a Building, as long as St Paul's Church, and as broad as the middle Iſle of that Church is high within, is capable of affording Stabling for ſuch a Number of Horſes. Lamy's Introduction. [n] Kircher (in his Arca Noë, c. 5.) has given us large Calculations of the Dimenſions of the Ark; and from thence concludes, that this Veſſel was capacious enough to receive, not only Noah and his Family, all other Creatures and their Food, but even an entire Province beſides. Wilkins (in his Eſſays towards a real Character) has, according to Buteo, (in his Arca Noë) entered into a large Detail of Things, and given us an exact and compleat Idea of the Capacity of the Ark, and of its Proportion, together with what it was to contain. Le Peletier (in his Diſſer. ſur l'Arch de Noé) follows another Engliſh Author, Dr Chamberlain, who, in his Diſcovery of the Weights and Meaſures of the Jews, has proved, that the ancient Cubit of the Jews is the old Derab of Memphis; whereupon Peletier allows 1,781,377 Cubical Feet of Paris for the whole Contents of the Ark, ſo that it might hold, as he pretends, 42,413 Tons of Lading. Another Author has publiſhed another Diſſertation upon the ſame Subject, and upon the ſame Principles; where he compares the Ark to our modern Ships, and computes its Meaſure according to the Tons it might contain, and thereupon makes it larger than forty Ships of a thouſand Tons each. Vid. Diſſer. Hiſt. Chron. Georg. &c. D. II. Journal de Paris ſur Janvier, 1712. See alſo Sir Walter Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World, and Wells's Geography of the Old Teſtament.

" Moſes: Inſomuch that the Proportion of the Ark (from which ſome weak and " Atheiſtical Perſons have made ſome poor Efforts to overthrow the Authority of " the ſacred Scriptures) does very much tend to confirm and eſtabliſh the Truth " and Divine Authority of them; eſpecially if we duly conſider, that, in thoſe " early Times, Men were leſs verſed in Arts and Sciences; at leaſt, that the Ark " was, in all Probability, the firſt Veſſel of any Bulk that was made to go upon " the Water: Whence the Juſtneſs of the Proportion, obſerved in its ſeveral Parts, " and the Exactneſs of its Capacity, to the Uſe it was deſigned for, is reaſonably to " be aſcribed, not to bare human Invention and Contrivance, but to the Divine " Direction, expreſsly given to Noah by God himſelf, as the ſacred Hiſtorian ac- " quaints us."

Reflections upon thoſe, that were loſt.

AFTER what has been ſaid of the Capacity of the Ark, and a Proviſion of Water ſufficient to deſtroy every living Thing upon the Face of the Ground; we may here make a Stand, and conſider a little with ourſelves this dreadful and amazing Judgment, this moſt horrid and portentous Cataſtrophe, that Nature ever yet ſaw. Let us then fancy that we beheld with our Eyes the Flood-Gates of Heaven laid open, and every Cloud pouring out Water, like an huge Inundation; the Bars of the Ocean removed, and that boiſterous Element riding in Triumph over the ſubjected Land; the Fountains of the great Deep broke open, and Torrents from every Hill and Cavern of the Earth guſhing out upon us, and rolling faſt after us, wherever we fled: Suppoſe we heard the Roarings of the angry Surges, the Cracks of the falling Earth, and the Cries and Lamentations of thoſe, that were going to ſink; ſaw the Horror and Ghaſtlineſs that ſat on every Countenance, [o] Mens Hearts failing them for Fear, and for looking after thoſe Things, which were coming upon the Earth; to the Mountains, to the Tops of Trees, to the Tops of Caſtles, and of lofty Towers all flying in Haſte, but all in vain; Trees, Towers, Caſtles, Mountains, and every other Place of ſuppoſed Safety yielding to the ſwelling Tide, and giving up every Thing, Man and Beaſt together, to the mercileſs Waves: Suppoſe we ſaw, I ſay, the whole Race of Mankind floating in this immenſe Deep, and huddled all together in one promiſcuous Ruin; ſuch a Scene as this would certainly give us a right Apprehenſion of the Terrors of Almighty God, and make us very careful of offending him, who [p] ſpared not the old World, but condemned ſo many Myriads of his Creatures to an univerſal Overthrow, making them an Example unto thoſe, that ſhould afterwards live ungodly. For here we may ſee that Numbers are no Defence againſt the Divine Vengeance, and therefore no Security to Sinners: That Sinners, tho' they may think themſelves ſecure, can never be ſafe; [q] but when they ſhall ſay Peace and Safety, then ſudden Deſtruction cometh upon them, as a Thief in the Night; and that God, when he enters into Judgment with the Wicked, [r] will not pity, nor ſpare, nor have Mercy, but deſtroy; he will daſh them one againſt another, even the Fathers and the Sons together; and [s] cauſe his Fury to reſt upon them, until his Anger be accompliſhed.

WE muſt not, however, carry our Reſentment againſt the old World ſo far, as to ſuppoſe, that God's Deſign, in ſending the Deluge upon it, was to deſtroy, to Eternity, all thoſe, who were unhappily involved in that Calamity. He deſigned, no doubt, to exhibit a Spectacle of Vengeance to all future Ages; and, by a juſt Severity inflicted upon them, to demonſtrate to us his Abhorrence and Deteſtation of Sin; but it does not therefore follow, that he had no further Intention in all this, [t] His Long-ſuffering, we are told, waited in the Days of Noah, and the gradual Increaſe of the Flood, which thoſe Sinners ſaw coming upon them, and could not but know the Meaning of, muſt needs convince them of the Divine Vengeance; and [u] a ſudden Repentance upon a ſudden Conviction, might, for any Thing we know, obtain Mercy for them in the next World, tho' it did not avert their Puniſhment in this: Now, * if this was God's Deſign, (as we have great Appearance of Reaſon to believe it was) then may it well be preſumed, that ſeveral of theſe Sinners complied with it; that the Sight of his Arm, ready to avenge their Crimes, made them enter into themſelves, have Recourſe to the Clemency of their Judge, and take Advantage of all the Moments, which the Divine Mercy allowed them for Repentance, before the Deſtruction came upon them.

and thoſe, that were ſaved in the Deluge.

ON the other Hand, if we take a View of the righteous Patriarch, and his Family, preſerved from this Deſtruction, and riding over the raging Element in a Ship ſecured cured by the Providence of God, and [x] directed by the Miniſtry of Angels; a Ship, whoſe Cargo was no leſs than a whole World, that carried the Fortune and Hopes of all Poſterity; and, if this periſhed, the Earth for any Thing we know, had been nothing but a great Deſert from the Deluge to the Conflagration. If we conſider this, we ſhall ſoon perceive, that [y] the Lord careth for the Righteous, that he knoweth how to deliver the Godly out of Temptations; and many Times recommends their Deliverance by ſuch endearing Circumſtances, as are almoſt equivalent to the Preſervation itſelf. For [z] let us ſuppoſe, that, inſtead of drowning the World, God had been pleaſed to deſtroy by Plague, Famine, or ſome other ſore Judgment, all Mankind, excepting Noah and his Sons, who were to be Eye-witneſſes of this terrible Execution; to live to ſee the Earth covered with dead Bodies, and none left to bury them, and their Cities lie waſte and deſolate without Inhabitants; who can conceive what the Horror of ſuch a Sight would have been? And who would have been content to live in ſuch a World, to converſe only with the Images of Death, and with noiſome Carcaſſes? But God in Mercy ſhut up Noah in the Ark, that he ſhould not ſee the Terror and Conſternation of Sinners, when the Flood came; and he waſhed away all the dead Bodies into the Caverns of the Earth, with all the Remains of their old Habitations; ſo that when he came out of the Ark, he ſaw nothing to diſturb his Imagination, nor any Tokens of that terrible Vengeance which had over-run the World, to offend his Sight.

Where the Ark reſted.

WHERE Noah came out of the Ark, after the Decreaſe of the Flood, has been a Matter of ſome Diſpute among Geographers, becauſe they are not well agreed what the Scriptures mean by the [a] Mountains of Ararat. [b] By Ararat indeed moſt underſtand the Country, which is called by the Greeks, and from them by other weſtern Nations, Armenia; but then [c] ſome contend, that the Mountains of Ararat reach a vaſt deal beyond the Country of Armenia; and upon this Suppoſition, they will have the Ark to have reſted upon the Top of Mount Caucaſus, in the Confines of Tartary, Perſia, and India. It may be queſtioned, however, (ſince the Ark, for many Reaſons already produced, may be ſuppoſed to have been built ſomewhere in Eden, or in the Parts thereabout) whether Mount Caucaſus be not too remote, for ſuch a Veſſel, as the Ark is repreſented to be, drawing much Water, and very unfit for ſailing, to arrive at, in the Space of the Flood's Increaſe, which was an hundred and fifty Days. The Gordyean Mountains in Armenia ſeem to be at [d] a proportionable Diſtance; and ſince they are allowed to be [e] the higheſt in the World, there is no Reaſon for receding from the commonly received Opinion, viz. that theſe were the Hills whereon the Ark ſtopped. For, [f] if the Waters covered the Tops of the higheſt Hills on the Face of the Earth, fifteen Cubits, and yet the Ark reſted the very firſt Day of the Abatement of the Waters, above two Months before the Tops of the other Mountains were ſeen; 'tis evident, that it reſted on the higheſt Hill in the World at that Time, and conſequently on the Gordyean Mountains, which are ſtill deſervedly ſo accounted. Here it is, that the Generality of Geographers place the Ark; [g] here it is, that almoſt all Travellers have found the Report of it; and laſtly, here it is, that the Inhabitants of the Country ſhew ſome Relicks of it, and call Places after its Name, to this very Day.

Noah's Behaviour.

BUT not to contend too earneſtly for what is not of ſo great a Moment to know, we may obſerve of Noah, that the firſt Thing he did, after his Eſcape from the Flood, was to offer up his Sacrifice of Praiſe and Thankſgiving to his great Deliverer: And, if ever a Senſe of Fear and Gratitude was capable of producing a ſincere Worſhip

[c] Sir Walter Raleigh, in his Hiſtory, and Heylin's Coſmog. [d] The learned Huetius has obſerved, conſidering the Figure of the Ark, and the great Weight it carried, that the Time the Deluge laſted, was no more than needful to carry it from the Place where it was made, to the Gordyean Mountains. In Armenia, eſt altior mons, quàm ſit in toto Orbe Terrarum, qui Arath vulgariter nuncupatur; & in Cacumine illius montis Arca Noë poſt Diluvium primò ſedit. Et licet, propter abundantiam Nivium, quæ ſemper in illo monte reperiuntur, nemo valet illum aſcendere; ſemper tamen apparet in ejus Cacumine quoddam nigrum, quod ab hominibus dicitur eſſe Arca. Haitho Hiſt. Orient. c. 9. [e] Whiſton's Theory. [g] The Mount Gordion, called by the Turks, Ardaugh, is the higheſt in the World. The Jews, the Armenians, and the Muſſulmans affirm, that the Ark of Noah ſtopped at this Mountain, after the Deluge. La Boulaye's Voyages. The Armenians, ſays he again, have a Tradition, that one may ſee a Part of Noah's Ark upon the Top of Mount Ararat; but that People cannot get up to it; that one of their Travellers, a Man of an holy Life, endeavoured to do it, and advanced as far as the Middle of the Mountain; but being thirſty, and wanting Water, he put up a Prayer to God, who cauſed a Fountain to ſpring out of the Ground for him, and ſo ſaved his Life, but that he heard a Voice, ſaying, Let none be ſo bold as to go up to the Top of this Mountain, ibid. They tell us likewiſe, that the City of Nakſivan, which is about three Leagues from the Mountain Ararat, is the oldeſt in the World; that Noah dwelt therein, when he came out of the Ark; that the Word Nakſivan is derived from Nak, which ſignifies a Ship, and ſivan, which ſignifies to ſtop or ſtay; and that this Name was given to it, becauſe the Ark ſtopped at this ſame Mountain. Tavernier's Travels, Tom. IV.

Worſhip and Adoration, it muſt have been on this Occaſion, when the Patriarch beheld ſo many Objects of divine Vengeance and Mercy all at once; [h] when he ſaw himſelf ſtanding, as it were, amidſt the Ruins of the old World, and ſurrounded with his little Family, which, by the Concurrence of wonderful Miracles, had eſcaped the ſad Cataſtrophe; and accordingly we may obſerve, that his Euchariſt was offered with that Sincerity, and animated with that Fervour of Heart, that it found a kind Acceptance, and obtained a gracious Promiſe from God, never to bring the like Deſtruction upon the Face of the Earth; [i] Behold I ſet my Bow in the Cloud, and it ſhall be for a Token of a Covenant between me and the Earth, that the Waters ſhall no more become a Flood to deſtroy all Fleſh; and the Bow ſhall be in the Cloud, and I will look upon it, that I may remember the everlaſting Covenant between God, and every living Creature of all Fleſh, that is upon the Earth.

The Rainbow, whether before the Flood, or no.

THE Rainbow is a party-coloured Cloud, [k] whoſe fine and gay Paintings are the various Reflexion and Refraction of the Sun-beams in that watery Subſtance. Thoſe [l] who pretend that the Antediluvian Air had no groſs Maſſes of Vapours or Clouds, no large Drops of deſcending Rain or Showers, nor any violent Wind or Agitations in it, are of Opinion, that there was no Rainbow before the Flood; becauſe what Vapours there were, they ſay, either deſcended in the Night-Time, or were condenſed only into a gentle Miſt, or had not Wind enough to drive them together on one Side, and ſo clear the Air, on the other, for the free Admiſſion of the Rays of Light. [m] Others deny the Pre-exiſtence of the Rainbow upon a religious Account, and aſſert, that, ſince it was appointed by God to be a Witneſs of his Covenant with the new World, and a Meſſenger to ſecure Mankind from Deſtruction by Deluges, had it appeared before the Flood, the Sight of it afterwards would have been but a poor Comfort to Noah and his Poſterity, whoſe Fear of an Inundation was too great, to be taken away by any common or uſual Sign.

IT muſt be acknowledged however, that this [n] curious Mixture of Light and Shade in the Rainbow [o] ariſes naturally from the Superficies of thoſe Parts, that conſtitute the Cloud; and therefore there is no Doubt to be made, but that it appeared before the Deluge, though we find no Mention made of it till afterwards. For, whether we account it a [p] natural or arbitrary Sign, 'tis not at all eſſential to either, that the Matter of it ſhould not have ſubſiſted before the Flood; 'tis enough that it did not ſubſiſt as a Sign, or that it was never before diſtinguiſhed to denote ſuch and ſuch a Purpoſe. The Rainbow therefore might have appeared often before the Flood; but it then began to be a Sign of the Covenant between God and Man, when God had impreſſed this new Character upon it, and ſingled it out under a particular Denomination. Thus it was to the Sons of Noah; thus it is to the preſent Generation; and thus it will be to the final Period of all Things: And [q] therefore, as often as we view this Cloud, made ſo remarkable for the Diverſity of its Colours, and the Variety of its Tinctures, let us thence be confirmed in our Belief and Confidence in God, and look upon this delightful Spectacle, as an illuſtrious Symbol of the divine Mercy and Beneficence, or (to ſpeak in the Words of the wiſe Son of Sirach) [r] look upon the Rainbow, and praiſe him that made it; very beautiful it is in the Brightneſs thereof: It compaſſeth the Heaven with a glorious Circle, and the Hands of the moſt High have bended it.

[h] Saurin's Diſſertations. [i] Gen. ix. 13, &c. [k] Philoſophers make two Sorts of Rainbows, viz. the internal and external; the former, they ſay, is cauſed by the Rays of the Sun, which falling upon an infinite Number of Drops in a Cloud, undergo two Refractions, and one Reflection between; the latter is produced by the like Rays falling upon an infinite Number of the like Drops, and undergoing two Refractions and two Reflections, which makes them return coloured and painted to the Eye. Hartſocker's Conject. Phyſ. Lib. IV. [l] Whiſton's Theory. [m] Patrick's Commentary. [n] We may ſee in the mixed Colours of the Rainbow theſe two Things, the Deſtruction of the old World by Water, and the future Conſumption of the preſent World by Fire; whoſe flaming Brightneſs is predominant in the wateriſh Humour. Patrick's Commentary. [o] Edwards's Demonſtration of the Being of God. [p] Common Philoſophy teaches us, that a Rainbow is a natural Sign that there will not be much Rain after it appears, but that the Clouds begin to diſperſe; for it is never made in a thick Cloud, but in a thin; ſo that if it appear after Showers, which come from thick Clouds, it is a Token that now they grow thin, the God of Nature having choſe this for a Sign, that he would never thicken them again to ſuch a Degree as to bring a Deluge upon the Earth. Patrick's Commentary. SECT.

SECT. I.

Of the Tower of BABEL.

THE [r] Terror of the Deluge had made ſuch Impreſſion upon Noah, and his Poſterity, that they choſe the higheſt Places, and ſuch as were leaſt expoſed to Inundations; and therefore continued for a conſiderable Time in the hilly Countries of Armenia, not far from the Place, where the Ark reſted: But after the Space of an hundred Years, as their Numbers began to increaſe, and their Fears to abate, [s] they journied from the [t] Eaſt, and, finding a Plain in the Land of Shinar, there they dwelt, and by joint Conſent entered into a Deſign of building themſelves a City, and a Tower, or Caſtle, whoſe Top ſhould reach Heaven, to make themſelves a Name. The Land of Shinar was all that Country, along which runs the River Tigris, from the Mountains of Armenia Northwards, to the Perſian Gulph, or at leaſt to the Southern Diviſion of the common Channel of the Tigris and Euphrates to the South: And the Plain or Valley of Shinar, where the Tower began to be built, was undoubtedly the very Place, or, at leaſt, in a very near Neighbourhood to the Place, where the City of Babylon afterwards ſtood, i. e. upon the Original Stream of the River Euphrates, and not far diſtant from its Conjunction with the Tigris.

Of the World. 1536, &c. Before Chriſt. 2468, &c.

The Land of Shinar, what.

HERE it was, that they began to build themſelves a City and Tower: But who theſe Builders and Projectors were, has occaſioned no ſmall Diſpute. [u] By the Children of Men, [x] ſome underſtand bad Men and Infidels, as they are oppoſed to the Children of God, which often denote the Good and Faithful; and from hence they infer, that neither Noah, nor Shem, nor Arphaxad, nor Salah, nor Heber, were engaged in this Work; but only ſome of the worſe Sort of People, who had degenerated from the Piety of their Anceſtors. [y] Joſephus, and ſome others, make Nimrod the Projector of this Deſign, and the Ringleader of thoſe who combined in it; but though the Undertaking ſeems to agree very well with the Notion, which the Scripture gives us of that ambitious Prince; yet [z] others, better verſed in the Antiquities of the Jews, even than Joſephus himſelf, have made it appear, that Nimrod was either very young at that Time, or even not yet born, when the Project of building this Tower and City was firſt formed; though it was certainly he, who, after the Diſperſion, coming out of Arabia, or ſome other neighbouring Country, ſettled at Babel, and there building the City of Babylon, made it the Metropolis of the Aſſyrian Monarchy.

Who the Builders were.

[a] OTHERS therefore are of Opinion, that though the Name of the Children of Men be ſometimes given to ſuch as are wicked, yet it is not ſo appropriated to that Senſe, but that it often ſignifies Men in general, and muſt, in this Place, be ſo underſtood, becauſe, in the initial Words of the Chapter, they are called the whole Earth: Beſides that, while Noah and his Sons were alive, and at ſo ſmall a Diſtance from the Flood, 'tis hard to imagine, how Mankind came to be diſtinguiſhed in this Manner. For though ſome might be more pious than the reſt, yet there appears to be no Reaſon why others, ſo ſoon, ſhould be ſtigmatized with the odious Character of Unbelievers: And though Mankind, after the Flood, were certainly very fruitful in the Procreation of Children; yet the Poſterity of three Women (and that within the Compaſs of an Age) can ſcarce be thought ſufficient to have laid the Foundation of even an [r] Saurin's Diſſertations. [s] Gen. xi. 2, &c. [t] By the Eaſt, moſt underſtand Armenia, where they ſuppoſe the Ark reſted, and Noah and his Sons firſt planted themſelves; but this has a great Difficulty in it, for the Mountains of Armenia lay North of Shinar or Aſſyria, and not Eaſt. To ſolve this, Bochart imagines that Moſes, in this Place, has followed the Geographical Stile of the Aſſyrians, who called all that lay beyond the Tigris, the Eaſt-Country, though a great Part of it, towards Armenia, was really Northward; and all, that lay on this Side, they called the Weſt, though ſome of it certainly lay South. Vide Phaleg. Lib. I. But there is no Need for this Solution: For though the Gordyean Mountains (whereon the Ark probably reſted) lie in a Manner North of Babel, yet ſince the Plain or Valley of Shinar extends itſelf quite up to the Mountains of Armenia; no ſooner was Noah and his Family deſcended from theſe Gordyean Mountains into the level Country on the South, but they were very full Eaſt of the upper, or Northern Parts of the Land of Shinar: So that it might truly, and in the moſt literal Senſe, be ſaid, that as they journeyed from the Eaſt, they found a Plain in the Land of Shinar. Wells's Geography. This, however, has not hindered ſome from carrying the Ark as far as Mount Caucaſus, before it ſettled, that the People might be ſaid to journey from the Eaſt without all Controverſy: And becauſe we hear no more of Noah in the ſacred Story, only that he died at ſuch a Term of Years, they thence conclude, that he and his Poſtdiluvian Race ſettled at firſt in the Eaſt, and very likely in China itſelf; ſince the Singularity of the Chineſe Language, and Manner of Writing, and the Antiquity of their Hiſtory, their Polity, and Acquaintance with the learned Sciences, do plainly denote them to have been of a very ancient Extraction. indifferent City: Much leſs can we ſuppoſe, that any of them refuſed to give their Aſſiſtance towards an Undertaking, which required ſo many Hands, and ſeemed to have no formal Iniquity in it, whatever it might have of Indiſcretion and Contrariety to the ſecret Will of God.

Their Deſign, ſeveral Opinions concerning it.

SOME indeed have imagined, that the Deſign of theſe Builders was to raiſe a Tower ſo high, that, by the Help of it, they might get up to Heaven: But this is a wild Opinion, ariſing from a Miſrepreſentation of the Words, [b] let us build us a City and a Tower, whoſe Top may reach unto Heaven; which is no more than [c] a common Expreſſion in Scripture for any Thing of a vaſt and prodigious Height. [d] Others have thought, that it was to preſerve themſelves from a ſecond Deluge, which they much dreaded, or from the general Conflagration, whereof they had ſome Notice: But had they been apprehenſive of another Flood, they would have certainly continued in the Mountains, and not made Choice of ſuch low Ground, whereon to found the Place of their Security; or had they been providing againſt the Fire, inſtead of a Tower, it ſeems the more rational Expedient, to have built Vaults and Caves under Ground. The Scripture-Account is, that they did it, to procure themſelves a Name, and prevent their Diſperſion over the Face of the Earth; and [e] therefore ſome have looked upon it in the Nature of a Pharos, or Watch-Tower, which might be a Signal to them to return Home, in Caſe they wandered far off, and a Means to keep them united in a Body.

[f] THERE ſeems however to be nothing criminal, in attempting to perpetuate their Memory; ſomething very prudent, in marking out a Place for a general Rendezvous, in Caſe of any Exigence or Diſaſter: But as the Sequel of the Hiſtory, and the Puniſhment inflicted upon theſe Builders, ſeem to intimate ſomething impious in their Deſign; [g] a learned Divine of our own Nation has thought, that this Tower of Babel (whoſe Form was Pyramidal, as he ſays, and ſo reſembling Fire, whoſe Flame aſcends in a Conical Shape) was a Monument deſigned for the Honour of the Sun, as the moſt probable Cauſe of drying up the Waters of the Flood. "For "though the Sun, ſays he, was not merely a God of the Hills, yet the Heathens "thought it ſuitable to his advanced Station, to worſhip him upon Aſcents, either "natural; or, where the Country was flat, artificial; that they might approach, as "near as poſſibly they could, the Deity they adored." This certainly accounts for God's Indignation againſt theſe Builders, and why he was pleaſed to defeat their Deſign: But as there is no Foundation for this Conjecture in Scripture, and the Date of this Kind of Idolatry was not ſo early perhaps, as is pretended; [h] there is a more genuine Senſe of the Place, which may be expreſſed in theſe or ſuch like Words: "Let us build us a City, that may be the Metropolis of all the World; in which "let there be but one Kind of Government, and the Seat of that Government per-"petually in this City: Here let us build a magnificent Structure, to be the Center "of Unity, at what Diſtance ſoever we are removed: And to prevent our being "ſcattered all over the Earth, according to the Fancy of every rambling Family." [i] So that the Intent of theſe Men was to build themſelves a Place of fixed Reſidence, which might be the Head and Metropolis of all Nations; to make the World, in ſhort, all one Kingdom, and Babel the Royal Palace thereof.

A Deſcription of the Tower.

AND indeed, if we take a ſmall Survey of its Dimenſions, we ſhall ſoon perceive, that it was a Palace, or Citadel (if we pleaſe to term it ſo), fit for the Empire of the whole World. It was the ſame Tower (as [k] a Name of great Authority tells us) that was afterwards incloſed in the Temple of Belus, whoſe Foundation, [l] according to Herodotus, was a Square of a Furlong on each Side, i. e. half a Mile in the whole Circumference; and whoſe Height being equal to its Baſis, was divided into eight Towers, built one above another. The Paſſage to go up, ſays Herodotus, was by a circular or winding Way, carried round the Outſide of the Building to the higheſt Part; from whence it ſeems moſt likely, [m] that the whole Aſcent was by the Benching-in, drawn in a ſloping Line from the Bottom to the Top, eight Times round it, which would make the Appearance of eight Towers one above another. [n] This Way was ſo exceeding broad, that it afforded Space for Horſes and Carts, and other Means of Carriage to meet and turn; and the Towers which look look like ſo many Stories one above another, were each of them 75 Feet high, in which were many ſtately Rooms, with arched Roofs, ſupported by Pillars, and the uppermoſt of the Towers terminated in a ſpacious Dome.

Why God thought fit to put a Stop to it.

THIS is the Subſtance of what Antiquity tells us of that goodly Building; nor can we conceive, how ſo great a Deſign could have been offenſive to Almighty God, had it not been contrary to his ſecret Decree: But therefore he oppoſed and defeated it, becauſe he was willing that all the World ſhould be inhabited; that Men ſhould not live within the Limits of one Country only, and ſo be expoſed to perpetual Contentions, while every one would pretend to make himſelf Maſter of the neareſt and moſt fertile Lands; but that, poſſeſſing themſelves of the whole, and cultivating almoſt every Place, they might enjoy a proportionable Increaſe of the Fruits of the Earth. [o] He very well foreſaw, that abſolute Power and univerſal Empire was not to be truſted in any mortal Hand; that the firſt Kings would be far from being the beſt Men, but as they acquired a Superiority by Fraud and Violence, ſo they would not be backward to maintain it by Oppreſſion and Cruelty: And therefore, to remedy ſuch publick Grievances, he determined with himſelf, that there ſhould be a Diverſity of Governments in the World, that if the Inhabitants of any particular Place chanced to live under Tyrannical Power, thoſe that were no longer able to endure the Yoke, might flee into other Countries and Dominions, (which they could not do if the Whole was one entire Monarchy) and there find a Shelter from Oppreſſion. And as he knew how conducive the bad Example of Princes would be towards a general Corruption of Manners, he therefore took Care to provide againſt this Malady, by appointing ſeveral diſtinct Kingdoms and Forms of Government at one and the ſame Time, that if the Infection of Vice got Aſcendency, and prevailed in one Place, Virtue and Godlineſs, and whatever is honourable and Praiſe-worthy, might find a ſafe Retreat, and flouriſh in another. Thus all the Miſchiefs, which might poſſibly ariſe from an univerſal Monarchy, and all the Advantages, that do daily accrue from ſeparate and diſtinct Governments, were in the Divine Foreſight and Conſideration, when he put a ſurprizing Stop to the Building of theſe aſpiring Men, and their ambitious Schemes of Empire at once, by a Confuſion of Tongues.

SECT. II.

Of the Confuſion of LANGUAGES.

The Confuſion of Languages.

BEFORE this Confuſion happened at Babel, the ſacred Hiſtorian expreſſly tells us, [p] that the whole Earth was of one Lip, or, as we tranſlate it, of one Language, and of one Speech, ſince it is evident, that the Word Lip, both here, and in ſeveral other Places, ſignifies Speech, becauſe it conduces as much to the Pronunciation of Speech, as the Tongue itſelf. 'Tis a wrong Expoſition, therefore, when [q] ſome Interpreters would have this Paſſage to relate, not to an Unity of Language, as if theſe Builders ſpake all one Tongue, but to the Agreement of their Sentiments and Inclinations, as if they lived in perfect Peace and Concord, before they began this Enterprize; and conſequently, that the Confuſion of their Tongues does not denote any Change and Variation in their Dialect, which made them unintelligible to one another, but only a Spirit of Diſſenſion ſent among them by God, or ſtirred up by themſelves, which made them quarrel and diſagree, and thereupon deſiſt from their Work. It is not to be denied, indeed, but that [r] there are ſeveral Paſſages in Scripture, where, to be of one Lip, or Language, ſignifies the ſame, as to be of one Mind; but how well ſoever the Phraſe may, in other Places, bear that Conſtruction, yet here it muſt be owned, that it has no Manner of Analogy to the holy Penman's Meaning; and therefore our ſafeſt Way will be (without deviating into ſuch dangerous Paths) to follow the common Opinion, conſonant to Reaſon, and confirmed by the Teſtimony of the wiſeſt Heathens, viz. That all Mankind, in the firſt Ages of the World, ſpoke but one Language: But what this Language was, has been a Matter of much Controverſy; ſince there are few Nations, but what have had Vanity enough to put in their ſeveral Claims for the long Standing and Antiquity, if not the Priority, of their particular Tongue to every one elſe.

[s] THE

[o] Le Clerc's Diſſertations. [p] Gen. xi. 1. [q] Caſaub. de 4 Ling. & le Clerc, in Gen. xi. 1. [r] Joſh. ix. 14. 1 Kings xxii. 13. Zeph. iii. 9. Pſal. lv. 9.

Which was the first.

[s] THE Arabians, the Syrians, the Ethiopians, the Armenians, and several other Nations (as well as some Europeans) dispute, all in their Turns, for their respective Languages; but the Jews are the People, who assert the Antiquity and Excellency of theirs, with the greatest Warmth and Vigour. They maintain, [t] that it was immediately invented by God; that he spake it himself, for which Reason it is called HOLY; [u] that it is the only Language understood by the Angels, and wherein we can pray, and be heard with Effect; that, wherein the Blessed in Heaven converse; [x] that, wherein every Nation, at the general Resurrection, shall speak; and that, wherein there is a certain Propriety and Elegance, not to be equalized by any other. The Sounds, the Words, the Expressions of this Tongue, say they, are not only founded upon Custom and Consent, but even Reason has no small Share therein. Every Thing, in this holy Language, is the Production of profound Wisdom; every Thing is built upon secret Reasons and hidden Mysteries; insomuch that the Hebrew Names denote the Distinction and Property, and very Essence of Things.

The Pretensions of the Hebrew.

NAY, [y] several Christian Authors (waving these fabulous Fancies of the Jews) have acknowledged and maintained, that the Hebrew Tongue was the most ancient in the World; the very same which was spoken by Adam and Noah, and preserved in the Family of Heber, who formed a Society distinct from these, that had suffered in the Confusion of Babel, and so transmitted it pure to their Posterity. And for the Confirmation of this, they produce the Names and Etymologies of certain Persons and Things, which have some Kind of Affinity, and which Moses himself derives from the Hebrew.

Scarce allowable.

BUT, in the first Place, to obviate this Argument, taken from the Etymology of Names, [z] we may observe, that those, which seem to agree best with the Hebrew Tongue, are not so much proper Names, which Children received at their Birth, to distinguish them from all other People, as they are Sirnames, which were bestowed upon them, for some particular Event or Accident that befel them; that by these they were afterwards known to Posterity, and so, in Process of Time, they came to be looked upon as proper Names. Thus Adam, for Instance, is certainly no proper Name, but only bestowed on the first Man, by Way of Pre-eminence; for which Reason our first Father might be thus called by the Hebrews, though his Contemporaries called him otherwise, in like Manner, as the Romans might call him Homo, because he was formed ex humo, out of the Ground; though no one will say, that the Luckiness of this Paranomasia is any Reason, why the Latin should be the Primitive Language. In short, the Derivation of Words is so precarious and conjectural, and [a] the Alteration of Names, even such as are called proper, is so frequent and obvious, that no certain Arguments, for the Antiquity of any Language, can be deduced from hence; the most, that we can infer, is this, that these Words were, very probably, brought into the Hebrew Language, but it does not therefore follow, that the whole Hebrew Language descended from the same Spring, from whence these were derived.

As to its Preservation.

As for what the Jews vainly boast, that their Language remained, without any Change or Corruption, among the Descendants of Heber, this is no where attested in the sacred Records; on the contrary, they sufficiently intimate, that the Posterity of Heber, who continued on the other Side the Euphrates, spake the † Chaldee or Babylonian Tongue. This is certain of Abraham, that after he had lived seventy Years in Chaldea, by the Commandment of God he went out of it, and dwelt in Canaan; where, doubtless, he retained, at least for some Time, his Mother-Tongue; [b] but the long Stay, which he made there, the Possessions he acquired, the Alliances he contracted, the Covenant he made, and the Credit and Conversation he had with the People of the Country, make it more than probable, that he learned the Canaanitish or Phœnician Language himself, and transmitted it to his Posterity.

'TIS

[s] F. Simon's Critical History of the Old Testament. [t], [u], [x] See several Instances hereof in Buxtorf de Ling. Hebr. Orig. [y] Chrys. Tom. II. Homil. 30. in Gen. xi. Austin. de Civit. Dei. Selden de Synod. Lib. II. c. 9. and Bochart's Phaleg. Lib. I. c. 15. [z] Le Clerc's Dissertations. [a] The Reader may find enough of this in the learned Grotius's Annotations on Gen. xi. 1. and in Huetius's Demonstratio Evangelica, Prop. IV. c. 13.

† I am apt to fancy, that if any one should take Pains to examine strictly the two Languages, and to take from each what may reasonably be supposed to have been Improvements made since their Original, he will find the Chaldean and Hebrew Tongue to have been at first the very same. There are evidently, even still, in the Chaldean Tongue, great Numbers of Words the very same with the Hebrew; and though there are many in both, which are very different, yet is their Import and Signification such, as may occasion us to conjecture, that they were invented, either at or since the Confusion of Babel. Shuckford's Connection, Vol. I. Lib. II.

[b] Saurin's Dissertations.

'TIS no unreaſonable Conjecture then, that the Hebrew Tongue, inſtead of being the Mother of all, was herſelf deſcended from that of Canaan: [c] For which Reaſon, we need leſs wonder, that we find the ſacred Writers telling us ſo frequently, that ſeveral neighbouring Nations were of a Language different to the Hebrews, and yet not the leaſt Thing like this ſaid of the Canaanites. The Chaldeans were [d] a Nation whoſe Language they knew not; the Egyptians were [e] Barbarians to them; and, when Joſeph pretended to be one, [f] an Interpreter was called for between him and his Brethren: But tho' the Hebrews maintained ſuch frequent Correſpondences with the Canaanites, and tranſacted ſo much Buſineſs with them, from Abraham down to Joſhua; yet we find not the leaſt Mention of any Interpreter paſſing between them. Nay, ſo great was the Affinity, or rather Identity of their Languages, that we find the Prophet calling the one by the other's Name; [g] The Land of Judah ſhall be a Terror unto Egypt, becauſe of the Counſel of the Lord of Hoſts, which he hath determined againſt it: In that Day, ſhall five Cities, in the Land of Egypt, ſpeak THE LANGUAGE OF CANAAN, i. e. the Hebrew Language, and ſwear to the Lord of Hoſts. The Hebrew whence.

THESE are ſome Reaſons why we cannot think the Hebrew Tongue was † that great Original, ſpoken by Adam and other primitive Patriarchs, the oldeſt in the World, and the beſt preſerved in Purity and Perfection; ſince it is nothing elſe, but either a Dialect ariſing from the general Confuſion, or one that ſprung from another, which aroſe from thence.

WHAT peculiar Excellencies the Hebrew Tongue might have in its moſt flouriſhing Condition, at this Diſtance of Time, and by what we have left of it now, we can hardly determine: But if we may be allowed to judge of it by what we find it in the holy Scriptures, it will ſcarce, in our Opinion, deſerve ſuch exceſſive Commendations. As to its Excellency.

THE two great Perfections in any Language are Plenty of Words, and Perſpicuity of Speech: But now, he that attentively reads over the holy Scriptures, and conſults the Hebrew Lexicons, will ſoon be convinced, that the Language we are now ſpeaking of, has but few Words, and very few Phraſes, when he ſhall meet (eſpecially in Hiſtorical Books) with the ſame Thread of Narration, [h] and the ſame Particularities of Stile and Expreſſion, occurring almoſt in every Page. He will ſoon perceive, that he has no great Reaſon to boaſt of its Perſpicuity, when he comes to examine the various Significations of undeclinable Particles; how the ſame Word has not only different, but, many Times, contrary Senſes; how the Tenſes are almoſt all confounded in the Verbs; and the Declenſions of Nouns want a ſufficient Variety of Inflections, to denote their Number, Gender, and Perſon. Theſe Things occaſion an Ambiguity, that is almoſt inſuperable: And tho' it muſt not be denied, that the ſacred Tongue wants not its Beauties and Elegancies, (as every Language has ſomething peculiar in it) yet, whoever will take the Trouble to make the Compariſon, will find it fall infinitely ſhort either of the Greek Copiouſneſs, or the Latin Purity of Diction: And tho' ſome Reverence may be juſtly paid to it, becauſe of thoſe holy Laws, which God has been pleaſed to reveal unto us therein, yet we run into a very ignorant and ſuperſtitious Extreme, if we therefore conclude, that it is either the firſt, or fineſt Language in the World.

SOME indeed are apt to think, that, at the Confuſion of Tongues, God utterly extirpated the Memory of the primitive Language out of the Minds of Men, and ſent a new one into each Tribe or Family; but the more general Opinion is, that God [i] only diſturbed their Minds to ſuch a Degree, that they retained but a very confuſed Remembrance of the original Language, they ſpoke before, which made them ſpeak it quite differently then; that, by the various Inflections, Terminations, and Pronunciations of divers Dialects, they could no more underſtand one another, than a Perſon, who has a competent Knowledge of Latin, can underſtand thoſe, who ſpeak French, Italian, or Spaniſh, tho' theſe are Tongues which are certainly derived from it. How this Confuſion was effected.

[c] Le Clerc's Diſſertations. [d] Jerem. v. 15. [e] Pſal. cxiv. 1. [f] Gen. xlii. 23. [g] Iſa. xix. 17, 18.

† There is another Tongue in the World, which ſeems to have ſome Marks of its being the firſt Original Language of Mankind, and that is the Chineſe. Its Words are, even now, very few, not above twelve hundred; its Nouns are but three hundred and twenty-ſix; and all its Words are Monoſyllables. Noah very probably ſettled in theſe Parts, and if he did ſo, it is not unlikely that he left here one univerſal Language of the World, or whatever the Original of the Chineſe Tongue might be, there are ſeveral Properties in it, which induce us to believe, that it was actually the firſt, which was ever in thoſe Parts. Shuckford's Connection, Vol. I. Lib. ii.

[h] Le Clerc's Diſſertations. [i] Patrick's Commentary.

IT is not to be thought however, that there were as many ſeveral Dialects, as there were Men, ſo that none of them underſtood one another's Speech; for this would not be to diſperſe, but to deſtroy Mankind, ſince there is no living without Society, nor any Society, without mutual Intelligence: And therefore the moſt probable Opinion is, that every Family had its peculiar Dialect, or rather, that the ſame common Dialect and Manner of Expreſſion was given to thoſe Families, whereof God intended to make Colonies, in the future Diſperſion.

How many new Tongues.

WHAT the Number of theſe Dialects was, or how many Languages, upon this Confuſion, began to be ſpoken, is not ſo eaſy to determine. 'Tis very probable, that they were not fewer, than there were [k] Nations, nor more, than there were Families. If then there were no more Tongues, than there were Nations, or Heads of Nations, their Number is eaſily counted: Seven in Japhet, four in Ham, and five in Shem. But if there were as many, as there were Families at the Confuſion, their Number cannot be known; becauſe Moſes does not make an Enumeration of all the Families, or Heads of Families.

THE prevailing Opinion however is, that their Number was according to the Number of Families † which is commonly eſteemed to be about [l] ſeventy; tho' this is oppoſed [m] by ſome learned Men, who have endeavoured to ſhew, that, in ſeveral Places, ſo many Families concurred in the Uſe of the ſame Speech, that ſcarce thirty of the ſeventy are diſtinct.

Effected by God.

BUT ſince it is allowed, that there was but one Tongue at firſt, [n] it can hardly be ſuppoſed, that Mankind would ever of themſelves induce ſo great an Alteration, and multiply their Languages, to the certain Extinction of that mutual Society and Converſe with each other, which even Nature itſelf puts them upon. This was an Event, which muſt neceſſarily have proceeded from an over-ruling Power, who being minded to form the World into diſtinct Bodies, could not but perceive, that, [o] as the Unity of one common Language knit all Mankind in one Community; ſo a Plurality of Languages would be the beſt Means to compel them into a Plurality of Societies.

An Objection.

BUT though the Hand of God was ſo viſible in this Tranſaction, and the ſacred Hiſtory certainly relates it as a Miracle wrought by Divine Omnipotence; yet [p] ſome Interpreters have not been wanting to give it another Turn. They tell us, "That "the Builders of this Tower did not long proceed in their Work, before there aroſe "Diſcord and Contention among them, by their being obliged to make Uſe of "ſeveral Things, for which they had no proper Names, and which every one "calling after his own Fancy, occaſioned great Confuſion, and Clamour, and "Wrath; ſo that they abandoned their Undertaking, and being diſperſed in the "neighbouring Countries, ſhifted their Habitation from one Place to another, as "they chanced to be ſtraitened for Room; till, in Proceſs of Time, by living at "a great Diſtance, and maintaining little or no Correſpondence with one another, "their Language (which was at firſt but one) came to be changed, according to "the Temperature of the Air, or the Climate wherein they lived." So that, according to this Solution, here is no Miracle, no Interpoſition of a Divine Power; but all is done in a ſmooth and eaſy Manner, by the Agency of ſecond Cauſes, and the natural Influence of Time.

Anſwered.

IT is to be conſidered however, that the ſacred Hiſtorian gives us another Repreſentation of the Matter, and makes Uſe of the moſt expreſſive Words imaginable to induce us to attribute the Confuſion of Languages to a ſupernatural Cauſe. For, when he tells us, that [q] the Lord came down to ſee the City and the Tower, and ſaid, Behold

[k] For the better underſtanding the Diſtinction between Nations and Families in Scripture, we muſt obſerve, that Families are always ſubordinate to Nations, as Parts to a Whole, or Specials to a more General: So that Families are Part of a Nation, and a Nation is an Offſpring, that contains many Families. Again, a Nation is ſo called, either abſolutely, when there is no greater Offſpring, in Regard whereof it may be a Family; or reſpectively, when, tho' it be a Nation, in Regard of thoſe Families it comprehends, yet itſelf is alſo a Family, in Regard of a great Generation. Theſe ſubaltern Nations are called ſometimes Tribes, and the Parts of theſe Tribes, which be of many Orders, are not always called Families, but ſometimes Houſholds. Mede's Diſcourſes.

† This Notion, they think, is ſupported by the expreſs Words of Moſes, Deut. xxxii. 8. when the moſt High divided to their Nations their Inheritance, when he ſeparated the Sons of Adam, he ſet the Bounds of the People according to the Number of the Children of Iſrael, i. e. ſay they, he divided them into ſeventy Nations, which was the Number of the Children of Iſrael, when they came out of Egypt. Shuckford's Connection, Vol. I. Lib. ii.

[l] The Greek Fathers make them ſeventy-two, becauſe the Septuagint Verſion adds two more (Eliſa among the Sons of Japhet, and Cainan among the Sons of Shem) and the Latin Fathers follow it. Patrick's Commentary. [m] Bochart's Phaleg. Lib. i. Buxtorf's Diatr. Sec. 54. Selden de Synedr. Lib. ii. c. 9, &c. [n] Stillingfleet's Origines Sacræ. [o] Mede's Diſcourſes. [p] F. Simon's Critical Hiſtory of the Old Teſtament, and Le Clerc's Diſſertations. [q] Gen. xi. 5, &c.

Behold the People is one, and they have all one Language, and this they begin to do: Come, let us go down, and there confound the Language, that they may not underſtand one another: Though his Expreſſions be ſomewhat figurative, and ſuch, as ought to be underſtood in a qualified Senſe; yet certainly they convey this Notion to us,—— That God himſelf effected this Change and Variety of Languages; [r] for he is deſcribed coming down, and taking the Buſineſs upon him, in the very ſame Solemnity, as when he created the World, and brought the Deluge upon the Earth; which would be very trifling in the holy Penman, if a Quarrel or Difference among the Workmen had been all the Matter. Such a common Occaſion as this would never have drawn Words, of all this Weight and Energy, from any judicious Author; and therefore we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that Moſes intended them for a proper Repreſentation of a miraculous Effect; as indeed, [s] without a Miracle, it could hardly come to paſs, that Men, who underſtood one another in forming a Project of ſo vaſt an Extent, ceaſed to do ſo, when they came to put it in Execution.

A LONG Tract of Time, and Diverſity of Cuſtoms, may contribute ſomething towards the Alteration of Languages: [t] They may introduce new Words, or enrich the old Stock with ſome particular Phraſes, which the Wit or Neceſſity of Man may invent; but it will be difficult to find out any Place, where mere Length of Time has turned a Language out of Uſe, and placed another in its Room. Theſe great Revolutions are not effected but by Colonies of Men, of different Languages, gaining a Prevalency in the Place, where they are planted; but where there is not that Diverſity of Language ſuppoſed, this interfering of a People brings little or no Alteration along with it: Nor can [u] the Change of Air, or Difference of Climates amount to any more, than a ſmall Variation in ſome Letters and Syllables, and that in the Pronunciation, rather than any Diverſity of Language. In a Word, [x] if we conſider the Time, ſince the Building of the Tower of Babel, not yet four thouſand Years, and the great Variety of Languages, that are at preſent in the World; if we obſerve how entirely different ſome are to others, ſo that no Art of Etymology can reduce them to the leaſt Likeneſs or Conformity; and yet in thoſe early Days, when the World was leſs peopled, and Navigation and Commerce not near ſo much minded, there could not be that quick Progreſſion of Languages; and if we examine the Alterations which ſuch Languages, as we are acquainted with, have made in two or three thouſand Years paſt, where Colonies of different People have not been imported; we ſhall find the Difference between Language and Language to be ſo very great, and the Alteration of the ſame Language, in a conſiderable Tract of Time, to be ſo very ſmall, that we ſhall be at a Loſs to conceive, whence ſo many, and ſo various Languages could have proceeded, unleſs we take in the Account of Moſes, which unriddles the whole Difficulty, and juſtly imputes them to the ſame Almighty Power, which taught our firſt Parents to ſpeak one Tongue in the Beginning, and, in After-ages, inſpired the Apoſtles of Jeſus Chriſt with the Gift of many. The very Way, in which this Multiplication of Languages was performed, (ſays [y] the learned Bochart) i. e. immediately, and without Delay, proves it the immediate Work of God, who alone can inſtantly effect the greateſt Purpoſes and Deſigns.

THE Confuſion of Languages was ſoon followed by a general Diſperſion. Noah, as ſome think, had, before this Diſaſter happened, divided the Land, as far as he knew it, among his three Sons; either by Lot, as ſome imagine, or according to the Order of their Birth-right, as is more probable. And now was the Time (when they could no longer continue together to any Purpoſe) for them and their Poſterity to take Poſſeſſion of it. The Deſcendants of Japhet (who was the eldeſt) planted themſelves in [z] the Leſſer Aſia, and Europe: The Deſcendants of Shem ſpread themſelves The Diſperſion of Nations.

[r] Vid. Wotton's Differt. de Confuſ. Ling. Babyl. [s] Saurin's Diſſertations. [t] Stillingfleet's Orig. Sacræ. [u] Thus Bodin obſerves, that the Sharpneſs of the Air is the Reaſon why the Northern People uſe Conſonants and Aſpirates ſo much, eſpecially the Saxons, and thoſe who live near the Baltick Sea. Meth. Hiſt. c. 9. As R. D. Kimchi obſerves of the Ephraimites, (Judges xii. 6.) that it was the ſame Cauſe which occaſioned their Liſping. Stillingfleet, ibid. [x] This is a Summary of Dr Wotton's Argument; but the Reader that is minded to have farther Information in this Matter, is deſired to peruſe the whole Treatiſe, which is wrote (as he did every Thing) with a great deal of Judgment, and copious Reading. Hoc cineri debeo. [y] Geogr. Sacræ, Part I. Lib. I. [z] Moſes particularly ſets down (Gen. x. 12.) the Nations deſcended from the Sons, the Grandſons, and Great-Grandchildren of Noah. The Names of moſt of thoſe Nations being changed, many of them cannot certainly be known, but there are ſome ſtill remaining. The Names of the Sons of Shem, as Elam, Aſſur, Arphaxad, Lud, and Aram, are known in Hiſtory, where we find the Elamites, the Aſſyrians, the Arphaxadites, the Lydians, and the Aramites: The Sons of Ham gave Denominations to ſeveral Provinces; the Name of Chus is given in Scripture to the Egyptians and Arabs; of Miſraim to Egypt; and of Canaan, to the Canaanites: And ſeveral Nations have been called after the Sons of Japhet, Madai was the Father of the Medes, Javan themſelves in Syria, Armenia, Meſopotamia, Aſſyria, Media, Perſia, and India. And to the Deſcendants of Ham were Africa, Egypt, Ethiopia, Canaan, and Arabia, aſſigned. But ſince the Number of Mankind was, at this Time, but comparatively ſmall, 'tis hardly to be imagined, that they took all the Quarters of the World into the firſt Diviſion; nor is it neceſſary to believe, that this Separation was made all at once, and at the Moment of the Confuſion of Tongues. They might depart as they thought fit; and, after having repleniſhed ſome Countries, might by Degrees ſtock others, that were contiguous, with Inhabitants from Colonies of their reſpective Nations.

The Wiſdom of God herein.

THUS was Mankind divided into ſeveral little Monarchies, under the Government of the Heads of their ſeveral Families, which obliged them to a ſtricter Diſcipline, than if the whole World had been one great Empire. For when ſo many diſtinct Societies were formed, this gave them ſeparate Intereſts, and made the Laws and Cuſtoms, the very Humour and Genius of the People ſo different from each other, as would keep them diſtinct. This would neceſſarily occaſion mutual Emulation and Jealouſies, to rival their Neighbours in Riches and Power; which cannot be done, without wiſe Laws, a ſtrict Diſcipline, and the Encouragement of Labour and Induſtry, of Liberal Arts, and all ſocial Virtues, and the Suppreſſion of ſuch Vices, as weaken Government, and emaſculate Mens Spirits. In a Word, the Diſperſion of Mankind, by the Confuſion of Languages, which divided them into diſtinct Societies, Kingdoms, and Commonwealths, opened a new Scene of Providence, with all the Variety of divine Wiſdom, in the Government of the World. The Judgment itſelf was miraculous, and as plain an Evidence of the divine Power, as the Deluge was; for to new-form a Mind, to eraſe all it's old Ideas of Words and Sounds, and to imprint new ones in it in an Inſtant, ſhews ſuch a ſuperior Controul over Nature, as none but the Author of Nature has. And as it ſhewed the Power of God, ſo it occaſionally made Way for the Exerciſe of many moral, civil, and military Virtues, neceſſary for the Proſperity and Preſervation of Mankind. It put a Stop to licentious Rule, and exorbitant Oppreſſion: It prevented an univerſal Corruption to Mens Manners; and had this good Effect in all Ages, that the World never wanted Examples of States and Nations, which increaſed and grew mighty, under a prudent and virtuous Government; nor of flouriſhing Kingdoms, which were ruined by Idleneſs, Luxury, and Oppreſſion, weakening and dividing them at Home, and making them an eaſy Prey to their provoked, or to their ambitious Neighbours Abroad.

Of the Riſe of EMPIRES, and State of RELIGION.

Of the World, 1771, &c. Before Chriſt, 2233, &c.

AFTER the Diſperſion of Nations, the only Form of Government, that was in Uſe for ſome Time, was Paternal, [b] when Fathers of Nations were as Kings, and the eldeſt of Families as Princes; but as Mankind increaſed, and their Ambition grew higher, the Dominion, which was founded in Nature, gave Place to that which was acquired and eſtabliſhed by Power. Nimrod was the firſt, who reigned as Sovereign after the Flood; and by what Means he raiſed himſelf above his Brethren, (for he is ſuppoſed to be the youngeſt of all) the ſacred Hiſtorian ſeems to intimate, when he tells us, that [c] he was a mighty Hunter before the Lord, i. e. he was really very well ſkilled in Hunting, inſomuch that it became a Proverb, or common Way of commending a Man for his Valour and Strength, to ſay, that he was like Nimrod, the mighty Hunter before the Lord.

Nimrod, the firſt King.

How he advanced himſelf.

[d] THE Occaſion of Nimrod's applying himſelf to Hunting, is probably conjectured to be, in order to deſtroy the wild Beaſts, which began to grow very numerous, and to infeſt very much the Coaſts, adjoining to the Nation of Cuſh, where the Deſerts of Javan of the Javians, Thiras of the Thracians; his Son Tarſis gave his Name to the City ſo called, and Cechim and Rhodanim were the Inhabitants of Cyprus and Rhodes; which is enough to ſhew that Moſes did not invent what he ſaid, of the Original of Nations. Du Pin's Hiſtory of the Old Teſtament. [a] Sherlock, of Providence. [b] Sir Walter Raleigh's Hiſtory. [c] Gen. x. 9. [d] Wells's Geography of the Old Teſtament.

of Arabia were very convenient for them to harbour in. Hereupon, having got together a Body of ſtout young Men, like himſelf, he began, by Degrees, to be a great Maſter in the Art of Hunting, and very ſucceſsful in deſtroying the Beaſts of Prey; by which Means he not only ingratiated himſelf with the Inhabitants of the adjoining Countries, but alſo inured himſelf and his Companions to undergo Fatigue and Hardſhip, and withal to manage dextrouſly ſeveral Sorts of offenſive Weapons.

BEING thus occaſionally [e] trained up in the Art of War, and perceiving, at length, his Skill and Strength ſufficient to act offenſively even againſt Men; he invaded the neighbouring Parts of the Nation of Shem, which fell to the Lot of the Family of Arphaxad; and tempted, very probably, with the extraordinary Riches and Pleaſantneſs of the Country, made himſelf Maſter of the lower Part of the Land of Shinar; and, in the very Place (as is ſuppoſed) where the Tower and City of Babel was begun, built the Capital City of his Kingdom. This City, which the Greeks and Latins called Babylon, ſtood on each Side the Euphrates, having Streets running from North to South, parallel with the River, and others from Eaſt to Weſt. [f] The Compaſs of the Wall, which was ſurrounded with a vaſt Ditch filled with Water, was four hundred and eighty Furlongs, that is, about ſixty Miles; the Height of it three hundred and fifty Feet, and the Breadth ſo vaſtly great, that Carts or Carriages might meet on the Top of it, and paſs by one another without Danger. Over the Euphrates there was a ſtately Bridge, and, at each End of the Bridge, [g] a magnificent Palace, the one of four, and the other of eight Miles Circumference; and belonging to this larger Palace were thoſe hanging Gardens, which had ſo celebrated a Name among the Greeks. They were made in the Form of a Square, of four hundred Feet on every Side, and were carried up aloft into the Air, in the Manner of ſeveral large Terraſſes, one above another, till they came up to the Height of the Walls of the City: They were ſuſtained by vaſt Arches built upon Arches, one above another, and ſtrengthen'd by a Wall on every Side, that was twenty-two Feet thick; and as they wanted no Plants or Flowers fit for a Garden of Pleaſure, ſo there are ſaid to have grown in them Trees, which were no leſs than eight Cubits thick in the Body, and fifty Feet in Height. But this, among other pompous Things appertaining to the City, was the Work of After-Ages, and built by Nebuchadnezzar to gratify his Wife Amyitis; who, being the Daughter of Aſtyages, King of Media, and much taken with the Mountains and woody Parts of her own Country, was deſirous of having ſomething like it in Babylon.

Babylon his Capital City.

A Deſcription of it.

† NIMROD, being thus ſettled in Babylon, ſoon enlarged his Dominions, and carried his Conqueſts into Aſſyria, where he built four Cities, whereof Nineveh was one, which he called after his Son, and (as ſome ſay) his Succeſſor Ninus, and there laid the Foundation of the Aſſyrian Monarchy, which governed Aſia for above thirteen hundred Years; until, it being diſſolved by the Death of Sardanapalus, (an effeminate Prince, but who, in his Deſpair, had Courage to deſtroy himſelf in a Funeral Pile at Nineveh) there aroſe up two Empires in its Stead, the one founded by Arbaces, in Scripture called Tiglath-Pileſer, Governor of Media; and the other by Beleſis, in Scripture called Baladan, Governor of Babylon, who were the two principal Commanders that headed the Conſpiracy, whereby the former Empire was brought to an End. They had each a diſtinct Empire; Arbaces fixing his Seat at Nineveh, and Beleſis at Babylon: And, in this Condition, Succeſſions went on, until, the Blood-Royal failing at Babylon, Eſarhaddud, then King of Aſſyria, and reigning at Nineveh, obtained Babylon too, and united it to the ancient Aſſyrian Monarchy: And thus it continued united, till Cyrus, having invaded Chaldea, taken Babylon, and ſlain Belſhazzar, (as the Scripture informs us) tranſlated this Empire, which had

The Aſſyrian Monarchy.

[e] Hunting was, in all Ages, looked upon as the Rudiment of War; nor is it without ſome ſuch Reaſon, that noble Families carry in their Coat of Arms (as Enſigns of their valorous Atchievements) Lions, Bears, Tygers, &c. from their killing ſuch-like fierce Creatures. Patrick's Commentary. [f] Prideaux's Connection. It muſt be obſerved, however, that this Compaſs of Ground was not near built; that the Houſes ſtood at a conſiderable Diſtance from each other, with Gardens and Fields interſperſed, and that Babylon, indeed, was a large City, rather in Scheme, than in Reality, ibid. [g] The old Palace (which was, probably, built by Nimrod) ſtood on the Eaſt Side of the River, and the new one (which was built by Nebuchadnezzar) exactly over-againſt it, on the other Side, ibid.

† Others are of Opinion, that, ſome Time in Nimrod's Reign, Aſſur, one of the Deſcendants of Shem, led a Number of Men from Babel, who, under his Conduct, travelled up the Tigris, and, ſettling in Aſſyria, laid the Foundations of Nineveh. He governed them, as Nimrod did in Babylonia; but, after Aſſur's Death, Ninus was the ſecond King of Aſſyria; who, being of an ambitious and enterprizing Spirit, engaged in the firſt War, and, having conquered Babylonia, in a few Years over-ran many of the Infant States of Aſia, and ſo, by uniting Kingdom to Kingdom, laid the Foundations of the Aſſyrian Monarchy. Shuckford's Connection, Vol. I. Lib. IV.

now almoſt continued ſeventeen hundred Years (either in a larger or ſmaller Extent) to the Perſians.

The State of Religion.

THE Succeſs which Nimrod met with gave Encouragement to others to attempt the ſame Thing; inſomuch that, in the Reign of Ninus, who was the ſecond, if not the immediate Succeſſor of Nimrod [h], we find Mizraim in Egypt, Aricus in Arabia, Barzanes in Armenia, Pharnus in Media, Zoroaſter in Bactria, and, almoſt in every Country of the Eaſt, Kings regularly ſettled, and poſſeſſed of their ſeveral Dominions. But this Inſtitution of Regal Power, how much ſoever it might tend to the Advancement of Civil Order and Government, had a fatal Influence upon Religion. It ſubjected the World to the Will and Pleaſure of a few; and as theſe few came to be vicious, and corrupt themſelves, it gave them an Opportunity of eſtabliſhing Iniquity by a Law. Mens Minds too became either debaſed by a Courſe of Servitude, or elated by Empire and Succeſs: And as they had no Religion, but what was handed down by Tradition, and the Period of their Lives was now grown comparatively ſhort; the Inſtructions of their Anceſtors began to be forgot, their Notions of an inviſible God became obſcure, and thereupon Wickedneſs and Idolatry (as we ſhall ſhew hereafter) made large Advances.

AMONG the ſeven Precepts, that were given to Noah and his Sons, there was an expreſs Prohibition of ſtrange Worſhip, or the worſhipping of Idols; [i] and yet we find Belus (the ſame, as ſome think, with Nimrod) cauſing himſelf, in his Lifetime, to be called a God, and his Son Ninus (if the Succeſſion was ſo) commanding the Exerciſe of Idolatry, very probably, in Honour of his departed Father: So that, what through the Ignorance of Mens Minds, the Slavery of their Paſſions, the Defect of Tradition, and the bad Example of ſuch, as had Power in their Hands, the Knowledge and Worſhip of the one Supreme God was in Danger of being utterly loſt, when they came to [k] change the Truth of God into a Lye, (as the Apoſtle expreſſes it) and worſhipped and ſerved the Creature, more than the Creator, who is bleſſed for ever. Amen.

DURING this Period, however, God did not leave himſelf without a Witneſs. Immediately after the Flood, the Covenant, which he made with our firſt Parents, he renewed to Noah: The Law of Grace, which had been given to them, was now confirmed to this eminent Perſon, and in him to the reſt of Mankind. The Jews are poſitive, as to the ſeven Precepts above-mentioned, which they call a compleat Compendium of the Moral Law, that they were both enjoined, and left upon Record for Noah's Poſterity to obſerve; and [l] the Chriſtians imagine, that a farther Diſcovery of the Meſſias was certainly made to the Patriarch, and by him to his Deſcendants, though the ſacred Hiſtory ſays nothing of it. What it teaches us of Certainty is, that there were two poſitive Inſtitutions at this Time; a Permiſſion to eat Fleſh, and a Prohibition to eat the Blood thereof, appointed by God, which we come now, with their Reaſons and Obligations, to conſider.

Fleſh allowed to be eat;

I. THE former of theſe Inſtitutions is introduced with this Preface, [m] And God bleſſed Noah, and his Sons, and ſaid unto them, Be fruitful and multiply, and repleniſh the Earth, and behold every moving Thing, that liveth, ſhall be Meat for you, even as the green Herb, have I given you all Things, and into your Hand are they delivered. Here plainly the Diſcrimination of Meats is taken away, and Fleſh is granted to be eaten, with the ſame Freedom, that the Fruits of the Earth were eat before; and there was a Neceſſity for it, becauſe the Fruits of the Earth were, at this Time, deſtroyed by the Flood: But whether Fleſh was permitted to be eaten before the Flood, has been a Queſtion [n] among the Learned, though not ſo very difficult to determine. That our firſt Parents, in their State of Integrity, had not the Liberty of eating Fleſh, is very evident, becauſe they were limited by that Injunction, which appoints Herbs and Fruits for their Meats; [o] Behold I have given you every Herb, bearing Seed, which is upon the Face of the Earth, and every Tree, in the which is the Fruit of a Tree yielding Seed, to you it ſhall be for Meat. Nay, ſo far was Mankind from being indulged the Liberty of eating Fleſh, at that Time, that we find the Beaſts of the Field, Creatures, that in their own Natures are ravenous, and the Fowl of but not before the Flood.

[h] Raleigh's Hiſtory. [i] Ibid. [k] Rom. i. 25. [l] Edwards's Survey, Vol. I.
[m] Gen. ix. 1, &c. [n] The Jews generally ſay, that People, before the Deluge, fed only upon what the Earth produced, and moſt of the Chriſtian Fathers hold this to be a Divine Inſtitution; but Chryſoſtom and Theodoret ſeem to be of another Judgment. The Moderns are divided; Luther, Peter Martyr, Fr. Junius, and Muſculus hold, that Fleſh was not eaten, till after the Flood. Calvin, Rivet, Paræus, and other Reformed Divines are of Opinion, that the eating of Fleſh, as well as Herbs, was free from the very Creation; but in this they ſeem to be miſtaken. Edwards, ibid. [o] Gen. i. 29, 30.

of the Air, and every Thing that creeped upon the Earth, under the ſame Reſtraint and Limitation; having nothing allowed them for their Food, but the Herbage of the Ground; becauſe it was the Almighty's Will, [p] that, in the State of Innocence, no Violence ſhould be committed, nor any one's Life maintained, at the Loſs and Forfeiture of another's.

THIS was the Original Order and Appointment; and ſo it continued after the Fall: For we can hardly ſuppoſe, that God would allow a greater Privilege to Man, after his Tranſgreſſion, than he did before. On the contrary we find him [q] curſing the Ground for Man's Sake, and telling him expreſsly, that in Sorrow he ſhould eat of it all the Days of his Life; and tho' it ſhould bring forth Thorns and Thiſtles to him, yet here the Reſtriction is ſtill continued, of the Herb of the Field thou ſhalt eat. Now this is far from implying a Permiſſion to make Uſe of living Creatures for that Purpoſe; nor can we conceive how a Permiſſion of this Nature had been inconſiſtent with God's Intention of puniſhing him, by impoveriſhing the Earth: For had he allowed Man free Liberty to make Uſe of what he pleaſed, he might eaſily have made himſelf an Amends for the Unfruitfulneſs of the Earth, by the many Things which Nature had provided for him. The firſt Permiſſion therefore of this Kind was given to Noah and his Poſterity; and very likely for this Reaſon, [r] becauſe the Earth was corrupted by the Deluge and Saltneſs of the Seas, inſomuch that the Plants and Herbs, and all the Fruits thereof were much endamaged. The natural Virtue of Vegetables was impaired, and therefore they could not yield ſo wholeſome and ſolid a Nouriſhment, as they did before. But this Part of the Reaſon has been rejected by ſome, who have made it a Queſtion, whether the eating of Fleſh be not ſtill injurious, and a total Abſtinence from it, and living on Herbs, conducive to the Health of human Bodies; ſince thoſe who have abſtained, have been obſerved to ſurpaſs other People in the Length of their Lives: And therefore they rather imagine, that God indulged Noah and his Sons in this Particular, not ſo much out of Kindneſs, as [s] becauſe of the Hardneſs of their Hearts; in the ſame Manner, as he is ſaid to have granted the Children of Iſrael a Toleration of Divorcement, viz. becauſe he ſaw that their Appetites were ſo eagerly ſet upon eating of Fleſh, (which, very likely, they were accuſtomed to, during their Stay in the Ark) that they would not be ſatisfied without it. And therefore he gave them a free Licence to eat it, but, at the ſame Time, took Occaſion from thence, to accompliſh his Will and Determination of having the Period of human Life made much ſhorter.

The Reaſon hereof.

2. THE other Inſtitution, which Noah received, is delivered in theſe Words, [t] but the Fleſh, with the Life thereof, which is the Blood thereof, ſhall ye not eat. This is a poſitive Precept againſt eating of Blood, and [u] what is extenſive to all Mankind, ſince it was given to Noah and his Children, from whence all Mankind have ever ſince derived their Original: But then the Queſtion is, in what Senſe it is to be underſtood.

Blood prohibited.

SOME are of Opinion, that this Prohibition relates only to Things ſtrangled, and ſuch as died of themſelves, and ſo is the ſame with what [x] was enacted in the Moſaick Law, and confirmed afterwards [y] by the Determination of the Council at Jeruſalem, under the Chriſtian Diſpenſation. This Interpretation indeed, (if we take it ſeparately) agrees pretty well with the Senſe of the Text: But becauſe the Law, which relates to things that died of themſelves, (and the Reaſon is the ſame as to Things ſtrangled) permitted Strangers, tho' it inhibited Iſraelites themſelves, to eat them; [z] Ye ſhall not eat of any Thing, that dieth of itſelf, thou ſhalt give it to the Stranger, that is in thy Gates, or ſell it to an Alien, that he may eat it; it is manifeſt, that this

Some Opinions concerning it.

[p] This Notion the Pagan Poets and Philoſophers had received: For Ovid, in his Deſcription of thoſe Times, lets us know, that they fed on no Fleſh, but lived altogether on Herbs, when he introduces Pythagoras, a great Enquirer into the ancient and primitive Practices of the World, expreſſing himſelf in this Manner:

At vetus illa ætas, cui fecimus AUREA nomen,
Fœtibus arboreis, &, quas humus educat, herbis
Fortunata fuit; nec polluit ora cruore.
Tunc & aves tutæ movêre per aëra pennas,
Et lepus impavidus mediis erravit in arvis,
Nec ſua credulitas piſcem ſuſpenderat hamo.
Cuncta ſine inſidiis nullamque timentia fraudem,
Plenaque pacis erant. ——— OVID. Metam. Lib. xv.

[q] Gen. iii. 17, 18. [r] Curcellæi Diatriba. [s] Edward's Survey, Vol. I. [t] Lev. xvii. 14. [u] Matth. xix. 8. [x] Acts xv. 20. [y] Gen. ix. 4. [z] Deut. xiv. 21.

this Precept given to Noah does not relate to Things ſtrangled, nor is it a Prohibition of Blood in that Senſe; ſince we cannot ſuppoſe, that the Divine Laws, in Contradiction to themſelves, can permit and forbid the ſame Things to the ſame Perſons. Strangers, we ſee, might freely, and without any Scruple, eat Things that were ſtrangled, or torn, or that died of themſelves; but had theſe been comprehended under the Law given by God to Noah, they, no more than the Iſraelites, could have eat them; becauſe they, as well as the Iſraelites, were obliged to the Obſervation of whatever Precepts Noah delivered to his Poſterity. Nay, the very Iſraelites themſelves would not allow any Strangers to continue in their Coaſts, unleſs they bound themſelves to the Obſervation of the ſeven Precepts delivered to Noah, (whereof Abſtinence from Blood was one) and therefore this Abſtinence from Blood, which was a moral Precept, could, in no Senſe, be the ſame with that Abſtinence from Things ſtrangled, &c. to which the Iſraelites alone were obliged, as being no more than a Ceremonial Law.

[a] OTHERS imagine, that this Injunction, given to Noah, did not prohibit the eating of Blood, but only the eating of raw Fleſh, while it was yet warm, and had the Blood and Life in it: And to ſtrengthen this Interpretation, they pretend that it was a common Practice, among the old Giants before the Flood, to tear Creatures in pieces, and eat them alive; and that, in Oppoſition to this Practice, this Prohibition was given. But, beſides that we have no Notice of any ſuch barbarous Cuſtom, nor any Prohibition of the like Nature and Import ocurring in the whole Book of God; it will be no eaſy Matter to conceive, why, among the few Precepts, which God gave to Noah, any Thing ſhould be found, that ſeems vain and ſuperfluous, as the Prohibition of a Thing abhorrent to human Nature, ſuch as eating the Fleſh of Creatures reeking in Blood, or their Limbs cut off, while they themſelves were yet alive, moſt certainly is.

The right Meaning of it.

AND therefore the vulgar Interpretation is certainly the trueſt, which refers the Command to mere Blood, ſeparate from the Fleſh, and dreſſed into Food, as it ſeems to agree beſt with the Reaſons, God gives for his Prohibition of it; [b] The Blood, which is the Life of the Creature, you ſhall not eat, and ſurely your Blood of your Lives will I require at the Hand of every one that ſpilleth it: As much as if he had ſaid, "I will not allow you to eat the Blood of Beaſts, leſt it make you ſavage and, "cruel; leſt you learn thereby to delight in human Blood, and come in Time to "murther one another, which is a Crime that my Soul abhors, and what I will not "fail ſeverely to puniſh: And therefore you muſt totally abſtain from Blood, [c] which, "being the Vehicle, or chief Inſtrument of Life, is properly and ſignificantly uſed "for making Atonement for Souls. It was wholly deſigned for the Purpoſe of "Expiation; it was appointed and appropriated to the ſacred Uſe of the Altar; and, "for this Reaſon, ought not to be employed in any common Way." This is a plain Senſe of the Words: And that it is their true Senſe, we have this farther Preſumption to believe, that, [d] in thoſe very Places of the Moſaic Law, where the eating of Blood is, without all Controverſy, forbidden, there is the ſame Reaſon, expreſſed in the very ſame Words, given for it, that there is for this Precept given to Noah, viz. becauſe the Soul of the Fleſh is in the Blood; which we perſuade ourſelves would hardly have been done, had not the Scope and Deſign of all theſe Places been one and the ſame. In this Senſe [e] moſt of the beſt Expounders of the Law, and [f] all the Primitive Fathers of the Church, have underſtood this Precept; nor has it any Way loſt its Force, becauſe ſome later Ages have brought it into Diſuſe. Human Laws may be vacated indeed by contrary Cuſtoms, but it is not ſo with the Laws of God: They, when once made, are of eternal Obligation, unleſs ſome plain Declaration of his Will come and ſet us free: But ſo far are we from having any Relaxation in this Caſe, that, in the Law, which he gave to his Choſen People, not many Years after, he ſtrictly enjoins this Abſtinence from Blood; and, in the laſt Revelation of his Will,

Will, which he made by Jeſus Chriſt and his Apoſtles, he recommends it, as a Thing neceſſary, to the whole Church of Believers.

An Objection.

WE readily acknowledge, that [g] the Kingdom of God is not Meat and Drink, but Righteouſneſs, and Peace, and Joy in the Holy Ghoſt; that [h] Meat commendeth us not to God; for neither if we eat, are we the better, neither if we eat not, are we the worſe; that, [i] what goeth into the Mouth defileth not the Man, and therefore we are ordered, [k] whatever is ſold in the Shambles, that to eat, aſking no Queſtion for Conſcience-ſake. [l] To the pure, all Things are pure; and therefore [m] to command us to abſtain from Meats, which God has created to be received with Thankſgiving, is beguiling us of our Chriſtian Liberty, and impoſing upon us the Doctrine of Devils.

Anſwered.

THIS is the full Force of all the Objections, that ariſe from Scripture; and to give them a proper Solution, we muſt conſider, that theſe and ſuch like Expreſſions are not to be taken ſo univerſally, as to admit of no Exception; nor can any ſuch general Declarations diſannul a particular Law, that was made before: On the contrary, general Rules are to be expounded according to the Reſtriction, that is laid upon them by particular Precepts, rather than that theſe Particulars ſhould loſe their Obligation.

WHEN therefore our bleſſed Saviour tells his Diſciples, that not that which goeth into the Mouth defileth the Man, he has no Reſpect to the Meats, which the Law accounts clean or unclean, nor any Deſign to give them a Permiſſion to eat Blood, or any other Thing prohibited by the Law; but only to inſtruct them in this, (as [n] the Occaſion of his Diſcourſe plainly ſhews) that there was not all that Religion, or Profanation of Religion, (as the Phariſees pretended) in obſerving, or not obſerving the Traditions of the Elders, by eating with waſhed or unwaſhed Hands; becauſe theſe Traditions were Innovations in Religion, and ſuch as were of Man's Inſtitution, and not of God's.

St PAUL himſelf was one of the Council of Jeruſalem, when the Prohibition of Blood was ratified by the [o] Spirit of God, and impoſed upon the Gentiles, that were converted to the Faith of Chriſt; and therefore we can hardly think, that, in his Epiſtles, which were written not many Years after, he ſhould go about to aboliſh the Obſervation of any of thoſe Precepts, which, after mature Deliberation, were enacted by a General Aſſembly of the Church. When therefore he tells us, that the Kingdom of God, i. e. the Chriſtian Religion, conſiſteth not in Meat and Drink, and that Meat commendeth us not to God, he muſt be underſtood in a Comparative Senſe, viz. that it neither conſiſts in, nor commendeth us, ſo much as Holineſs and Purity of Life; when he gives us Permiſſion to eat whatever is ſold in the Shambles, becauſe to the pure all Things are pure, there muſt be this reſtraining Clauſe, in Caſe there be no particular Statute to the contrary; for where there is, all the Sanctity in the World will not give a Man a Toleration to break it: And laſtly, when he complains of ſome Mens commanding us to abſtain from certain Meats, as an Infringement upon our Chriſtian Liberty, and a Branch of the Doctrine of Devils; the Meats, which they forbad, muſt be ſuppoſed lawful in their Kind, and under no divine Prohibition; otherwiſe, we bring the Apoſtles, who inhibited the Uſe of Blood, under the Imputation of defrauding us of our Liberty, and being guilty of the ſame Diabolical Doctrine.

The Concluſion of the Queſtion.

THE Truth is, when we find St Paul talking of Meats at any Time, we muſt remember, that there are two Sorts of People he has a more eſpecial Regard to. [p] The one he calls weaker Brethren, who, being newly converted from Judaiſm, were not ſo far become Chriſtians, but that they thought themſelves bound by the Ceremonial Law, which enjoins a Diſtinction of Meats: The other were ſtronger, and, being grown up in the Knowledge of their Chriſtian Liberty, were fully perſuaded, that the Ceremonies of the Law, and conſequently the Difference of Meats, was aboliſhed and taken away: But, becauſe the ſtronger gave Offence to the weaker, by eating ſuch Things publickly, as the other thought forbidden, the Apoſtle addreſſes himſelf to both, in order to cure the Prejudice of the one, and the Indiſcretion of the other: This, however, is an Argument quite different to the Diſpute now before us; only if it be ſuppoſed to have any Relation to it, it certainly makes againſt thoſe, who plead for the Uſe of Blood. For, put the Caſe that the Thing is indifferent in itſelf, yet ſince there are many Chriſtians, who look upon it as a manifeſt Violation of an Apoſtolick Command, thoſe, [q] who deſire to walk charitably, ſhould take great Heed how they grieve their Brethren with their Meat. The Abſtainers from this Kind of Food, 'tis certain, give no Offence to any Body: At the moſt, if the Thing be lawful, they do but abridge themſelves a little in their Chriſtian Liberty, and 'tis the Apoſtle's Injunction, [r] to take Heed, leſt by any Means this Liberty of ours become a Stumbling-block to them that are weak. But thoſe, that allow themſelves in the Practice of eating it, have very great Reaſon to fear, leſt, [s] beſides the Miſchiefs of a very pernicious Diet, they run the Danger of offending their weaker Brother, [t] for whom Chriſt died; and therefore in this, (if this be a Caſe of an indifferent Nature) the Law of Charity and Chriſtian Compaſſion muſt take Place, and that noble Reſolution of the Apoſtle is to be our Pattern; [u] Wherefore if Meat make my Brother to offend, I will eat no Fleſh (much more no Blood) while the World ſtandeth, leſt I make my Brother to offend.

CHAP. III.

The moſt memorable Tranſactions from the Call of ABRAHAM, to the Giving of the LAW.

Of the World, 2083, &c. Before Chriſt, 1921, &c.

IT may ſeem a little ſtrange to us at firſt, why God, who is the common Father of all, ſhould chuſe but one Family out of the World to place his Name among them, and, at the ſame Time, ſeem to reject, or at leaſt but very little to regard, the reſt of Mankind. [a] But, when it is conſidered, that this was the only competent Means to ſtop the ſpreading of Idolatry, and to reſtore the Worſhip of the True God, we ſhall ſoon be induced to confeſs, that it was a glorious Inſtance of Divine Wiſdom and Providence.

Why God ſelected one Family.

NOW Experience had proved before, that neither the Creation of the World, nor the univerſal Deluge, nor the Confuſion of Tongues, could preſerve the Belief of the one Supreme God, the Maker and Governor of all Things; that the New World was as univerſally over-run with Polytheiſm and Idolatry, as the Old one was with Violence; and that the very Diſperſion of Mankind, and their Diviſion into diſtinct Kingdoms and Societies, (which might be a Remedy againſt ſome Inconveniencies) had probably occaſioned a Multiplicity of Gods, while every Nation deſired a God, as well as a King, of their own, to protect and defend them. There was therefore a Neceſſity for the Divine Wiſdom to find out ſome other Means, to convince the World of the Power and Providence of one Supreme God: And this we can hardly imagine could have been done in a more effectual Manner, than by ſelecting a Family, leaſt of all infected with Idolatry, and therefore moſt of all deſerving his Favour, and making of them a peculiar People, by planting them in a particular Country, and that with ſuch a Series of Miracles, as were an undeniable Evidence of a Divine Power; by giving them ſuch a Body of Laws, both for Worſhip, Polity, and Converſation, as were a plain Teſtimony of a Divine Wiſdom; governing them by Men appointed by God; directing them, in all their Affairs, by Divine Oracles and Prophets; bleſſing them with remarkable Succeſſes, when they adhered to the Worſhip of God; and purſuing them with as remarkable Judgments, when they forſook him, and went aſtray after other Gods, the Gods of the Countries, wherein they they lived. This was a proper Means to put a Stop to the Growth of Idolatry, as it was a visible Proof of a divine Being, excelling all those fictitious Deities, which other Nations adored; and gave sufficient Notice to the World of the Power of the God of Israel, since none could save or deliver, none could punish or afflict in a Manner any Way comparable to him. This, in some Measure, was God's Design in selecting the Family of Abraham; and with this Epocha the History of the Jews, as a distinct Nation, properly begins.

ABRAHAM, [b] according to the best Computation, was born in the forty-third Year of the Reign of Ninus, about 292 Years after the Deluge; at a Time, when the World was over-run with Idolatry, and in a Place [c], which was, as it were, the Center of it; [d] where Fire was worshipped as a God, or rather as a Sign and Symbol of the Sun, which, in those Days, when the Knowledge of the True God came to be obliterated, was their first and most renowned Deity. Whether Abraham was infected with the same Impiety, has been a Question among the Learned: There is a Passage, in Joshua's Speech to the People, which may bear but a bad Construction; [e] Your Fathers dwelt on the other Side of the Flood, i. e. of the River Euphrates, in old Time, even Terah the Father of Abraham, and the Father of Nachor, and they served other Gods: But as Abraham is not excepted in the Text, so neither is he necessarily included; and therefore God's commanding him to leave his Country, and his Kindred, and his Father's House, and his ready Compliance with that Command, is no mean Reason to make us believe, that he was one, (though perhaps the only one in the Family) who had preserved himself from all idolatrous Worship. And to this Purpose the Jewish Doctors give us a long Account, how he not only preserved his own Integrity, but endeavoured to make others Proselytes to the true Faith; that he warmly maintained the Unity of the Godhead, and declaimed with Vigour against Idolatry and Polytheism; that he he wrote a Book against the Worship of false Gods, and left it as a Legacy to his Son Isaac; that he employed his Hospitality for the Advancement of true Religion, and made it his Aphorism to those that he entertained, that there is but one God in the World. Hereupon, he being accused to the King, as an Enemy to the Guardian God of the Country, was cast into the Fire, in order to be a Victim to the Idol, he refused to adore; [f] but God delivered him by a Miracle from the Heat of the Flames, and gave him the Honour of a Martyrdom, without suffering the Torments of it.

Abraham's Birth and Character.

No Idolater.

HOWEVER this be, we cannot but suppose, that he was either a Person of extraordinary Piety and Virtue, or, if he were an Idolater, not very hard to be cured; since God thought him the fittest Person to reveal himself to, and to enter into Covenant with; [g] I will establish my Covenant between me and thee, and thy Seed after thee, in their Generation, for an everlasting Covenant. And in this Covenant, as God engages, not only to be an Almighty Helper and Assistant to him in all his Undertakings, but [h] to give him (i. e. his Posterity) the Land of Canaan in due Time; to multiply his Race exceedingly, even as the Stars in Heaven; and to bless all Nations of the Earth in his Seed, which (as [i] the Apostle expounds it) is Christ: So Abraham and his Race were obliged to renounce Idolatry, and to behave themselves answerably to such bountiful Promises. For, as God had promised to be their God; so they, by Virtue of this Covenant, undertook to be his People, to deport themselves, as such, in all the Actions of their Lives, and to do nothing unworthy this singular Honour and Favour conferred on them. This is summed up in these Words; [k] Walk before me, God's Covenant with him.

It was situated in the Eastern Part of Mesopotamia, which was some Time (as appears from Acts vii. 2, 4.) included under the Name of Chaldea; and perhaps the Country round about Ur was the first of all called, The Land of the Chaldees. Wells's Geography. [d] The Chaldeans formerly used to carry about Fire, which was their God, to fight with the Divinities of other Countries, to the End that those, who got the better in the Conflict, might be esteemed the true God. The Gods of Gold, Silver, Wood, and Stone, were easily consumed by the Fire; but, at last, a Priest of Canope found out this Stratagem. The Egyptians have large earthen Vessels, full of little Holes on every Side, wherein they strain off, and purify the Waters of the Nile; he therefore took one of these Vessels, stopped up the Holes with Wax, and so filling it with Water, and setting an Head upon it, he pretended it to be their God. The Chaldeans kindled a Fire about the Vessel, that these two Deities might combat together: But, the Wax immediately melting, the Water issued out and extinguished the Fire, and so the Priest of Canope obtained the Victory. *Ruffin. And, to this very Day, 'tis a Prayer, which the Latin Church makes to God for dying Persons, that he would deliver them from Hell-fire, as he delivered Abraham from that of the Chaldeans, Cornel. à Lapid. xi. 13.

me, and be thou perfect; for to walk before God implies, that thoſe, who do ſo, conſider that they are in God's Preſence, and therefore do nothing, but what is pleaſing to him; which is the higheſt Perfection Man is capable of attaining in this Life.

Circumciſion firſt among the Jews.

THUS was God graciouſly pleaſed to enter into Covenant with Abraham; and, for the Seal and Confirmation thereof, he appointed the Rite of Circumciſion. Circumciſion was the cutting off the Foreſkin of the Member, which is the Inſtrument of Generation, of every Male, that was the Offſpring of Abraham: But here a Queſtion will ariſe, whether God originally appointed this Rite, or only made it a Sign of his Covenant, when it was in Uſe in other Nations before; ſince ſome learned Men of late have maintained, that the Jews borrowed it from the Egyptians, and not the Egyptians from the Jews. There is a Paſſage indeed [l] in Herodotus, that ſeems to give ſome Countenance to this Opinion, where he tells us, "That the People of "Colchis and the Egyptians were the only Nations, that were circumciſed from the "Beginning; and that the Syrians and Phœnicians, who lived in Paleſtine, acknow-"ledged, they borrowed this Rite from them." But here the Hiſtorian is leſs to be blamed, for having run into an Error; [m] ſince the Egyptians were a People naturally ſo vain, and conceited of their Antiquity, that they choſe rather to impoſe upon him by a falſe Information, than confeſs that they received Circumciſion from any other People: As they manifeſtly did deceive him in the other Part of the Account, when they told him, that the Inhabitants of Paleſtine (whom he calls Syrians and Phœnicians) confeſſed they received Circumciſion from the Egyptians; whereas there were no Inhabitants in Paleſtine circumciſed, but the Jews, and theſe always profeſſed they received it directly from Abraham.

Inſtituted by God.

AND indeed, if we once ſet ourſelves to conſider, [n] of what a ſingular Nature this Ceremony is, painful, if not indecent, in thoſe of Maturity; and to ſuch as live in hot Countries, extremely inconvenient, if not dangerous; a Ceremony, wherein we can perceive no Footſteps of human Invention, as having no viſible Profit attending it; we cannot but conclude, that Mankind would never have put ſuch a Severity upon themſelves, unleſs they had been directed by a Divine Command. And for this Reaſon ſome have ſuppoſed, that this Ordinance of Circumciſion (as well as the Command of ſacrificing his Son) was impoſed upon Abraham, as a Trial of his Faith and Obedience; and that, to magnify his Triumph in this Particular, the Holy Ghoſt calls upon us to take Notice, that [o] Abraham was ninety Years old and nine, when he was circumciſed in the Fleſh of his Foreſkin.

When, and how, derived to other Nations.

AT what Time the Rite of Circumciſion came firſt among the Egyptians, 'tis not ſo eaſy to determine: But there is a Paſſage in the Prophet, which, if taken in a literal Senſe, is far from encouraging any high Pretenſions to Antiquity; [p] Behold the Days come, ſaith the Lord, that I will puniſh all them which are circumciſed, with the uncircumciſed, Egypt, and Judah, and Edom, and the Children of Ammon, and Moab, &c. for all theſe Nations are uncircumciſed, and all the Houſe of Iſrael are circumciſed in the Heart. The plain Senſe of which Words is this,—that God would viſit the Houſe of Iſrael, like the ſtrange Nations, becauſe, as the latter were uncircumciſed in the Fleſh, ſo the former were in the Heart. Not but that, in the Time of Jeremiah, the Rite of Circumciſion was known and practiſed among the Egyptians, as well as among other People; but then it was not ſo common and general, nor was it at all uſed any where, till long after Abraham's Days: And therefore, to do all poſſible Juſtice to theſe immoderate Lovers of Antiquity, the moſt rational Conjecture is, [q] that the Iſhmaelites received it from the Deſcendants of Abraham; the Arabians received it from the Iſhmaelites; the Egyptians received it from the Arabians, or perhaps from Abraham's Children by Keturah; and from the Egyptians the People of Colchis, knowing themſelves to be of Egyptian Extract, embraced it, in Imitation of their famous Anceſtors. But, whenever it came among theſe Nations, [r] the Reaſon of the Jewiſh Circumciſion was not the ſame with that of the Egyptians, and therefore the Circumciſion itſelf muſt not be accounted the ſame.

The Reaſons of Circumciſion.

IT cannot well be queſtioned, but that the primary Reaſon of God's inſtituting this Rite of Circumciſion, [s] was, with Relation to Abraham's particular Perſon, viz. becauſe Abraham believed in God, even when he was aged, and unfit for Generation, and when his Wife was decrepid and barren; he then believed, I ſay, that he ſhould be be a Father of a Child, and for that Reaſon God gave him a Sign of this Nature, viz. the Circumciſion of the Foreſkin of that Part of the Body, which then, through Age, was uſeleſs as to Procreation, but, through Faith, became otherwiſe: And 'twas to preſerve the Remembrance of the Power of God, who had given a Son to a Man of an hundred Years old, as alſo the Remembrance of the Faith of that Man, who waited and hoped for the ſame Son in Spite of his advanced Age, that God preſcribed to all ſucceeding Jews the Sacrament of Circumciſion; to the Intent that this Token ſhould bring back to their Minds, at one and the ſame Time, the Faith of their Father, [t] who againſt Hope believed in Hope, and the Fidelity of their God, who, from one Man only, and him very old, raiſed up a People, as numerous as the Stars of Heaven, and the Sands upon the Sea-ſhore.

2. A FARTHER Deſign of this Inſtitution, was to be a Seal and Token, as we ſaid, of God's Covenant made with Abraham, and, in him, with his Poſterity; and to remind them, not only of God's rich Promiſes, but of their Obligations to Obedience, purſuant thereupon. And, accordingly, [u] it was uſed and interpreted afterwards for an initiating Ceremony into the Obedience of the whole Levitical Inſtitution; for which Reaſon the Apoſtles complain of it, [x] as a Yoke, which neither they, nor their Fathers were able to bear. Not that Circumciſion was, or could be ſuch, ſingly by itſelf, but only upon the Account of its Conſequences, the long Train and heavy Burthen of Ceremonies it drew after it, and [y] the Rigour of that Sentence, which this one Act concluded them under. So that Circumciſion was, not only a Mark to diſtinguiſh the Seed of Abraham from other Nations, but a Form of Admiſſion into the Covenant; and to the Jews then of the very ſame Importance, that Baptiſm is now to Chriſtians, viz. a Sacrament of Initiation to the Service of God, and an holy Engagement to believe and do, as he had revealed and commanded.

3. AND as it was the Token of their Obedience, [z] ſo was it likewiſe a Note of Commemoration, to put thoſe, who bore it, continually in Mind, whoſe Offspring they were, and what Advantages entitled to upon that Account, provided they took Care not to degenerate from the Glories of that Stock, from whence they ſprang. And, indeed, conſidering that Abraham was the firſt we read of, whom God reſcued from thoſe general Corruptions of Faith and Manners, which the World had now, a ſecond Time, ſunk into, by relapſing ſince the Flood; and withal conſidering, that this Perſon and his Iſſue were ſingled out for a Repoſitory of Truth, a choſen Generation, a Receptacle of God upon Earth, and the Source of his Son after the Fleſh; there was Reaſon, in Abundance, why this Remembrance ſhould be very grateful to them: And apt enough, 'tis plain, upon all Occaſions, they were, to value themſelves, and deſpiſe others, upon the Account of ſo particular an Honour. But the Misfortune was the moſt uſeful Part of the Reflection, viz. the eminent Faith, and ready Obedience of ſo renowned an Anceſtor, and the noble Emulation of his Virtues, which ſuch a Pattern ought to have inſpired, this they were too apt to overlook, though any conſidering Man (as the Apoſtle [b] excellently argues) could not but perceive, that the only valuable Relation to Abraham, is, not that of Conſanguinity and natural Deſcent, but the Reſemblance of his Virtues, and claiming under him as the Father of the Faithful.

4. THIS ſuggeſts another, and indeed none of the leaſt conſiderable Ends, for which Circumciſion was inſtituted, viz. to be a Sign of inward Virtue, and to figure ſome particular Diſpoſitions of the Mind, which bore Reſemblance to the outward Ceremony, and were required to render it effectual. For this Reaſon we read ſo much, in the Old Law [c], of circumciſing the Foreſkin of the Heart, and hear the Apoſtle ſo frequently telling us, in the New [d], of the Circumciſion of the Heart in the Spirit, and [e] of putting off the Body of the Sins of the Fleſh, by the Circumciſion of Chriſt. To reduce the Metaphor then to ſome certain Virtues: The Circumciſion of the Heart implies [f] a Readineſs and willing Diſpoſition to know the Mind of God, and to ſubmit to it, when known; and the Foreſkin, in this Senſe, to be taken away, is all that Prejudice and Self-conceit, all that carnal and worldly Reaſoning, which obſtructs the Efficacy of Truth upon our Hearts and Lives. It imports the weaning ourſelves from the World, and ſettling our Affections upon God and Goodneſs;

Of the World, 2092, &c. Before Chriſt, 1912, &c.

Abraham's Victory over the four Kings.

THESE are ſome of the moſt [i] material Reaſons, for which God appointed unto Abraham the Rite of Circumciſion: And, to purſue the Patriarch thro' ſome other Paſſages of his Life, we muſt obſerve, that, during his Stay [k] in the Plain of Mamre, there happened a memorable Battle of four Kings againſt five, and that the Occaſion of it was this:—— [l] Chedorlaomer, King of [m] Elam, had, for ſome Years, held five petty Princes under tributary Subjection, whereof Bera, King of Sodom, was one: But they, willing to ſhake of his Yoke, confederated againſt him, and, being come to a deciſive Battle, were unhappily defeated, and fell a Prey to the Conqueror, who plundered their Cities, and led away the Inhabitants Captive; among whom was Lot, the Nephew of Abraham, who chanced, at this Time, to dwell in Sodom. As ſoon as the News of this Defeat was brought to Abraham, he immediately † muſters up what Force he had, to reſcue his Kinſman; and, accordingly, coming upon the Enemy by Night, loaded with Spoils, and not expecting any freſh Aſſault, he obtained an eaſy and compleat Victory; he routed the whole Army, and ſlew Chedorlaomer, and the other three Kings, that came to his Aſſiſtance; and ſo returning home in Triumph, was firſt congratulated by the King of Sodom, who gratefully acknowledged the Deliverance he had received from his Courage and Aſſiſtance; and then by Melchizedeck, King of Salem, who met him with a Preſent of Bread and Wine, to refreſh him and his Men upon their March; and both bleſſed him and God too, that had given him ſo good Succeſs; whereupon the Patriarch, in Requital of his Kindneſs, made him a Preſent of the Tenth Part of the Spoils, which he had taken in that Expedition.

Melchizedeck, who.

WHO this King of Sodom was, it concerns us not ſo much to know; but of Melchizedeck, King of Salem, ſo many great Things are recorded, both in the Old and New Teſtament, that it may well excite our Curioſity to look a little into the various Opinions concerning him. The Author to the Hebrews, indeed, has given us a Deſcription of him, that he was the King of Salem, and Prieſt of the Moſt High God, without Father, without Mother, without Deſcent, having neither Beginning of Days, nor End of Life, but made like to the Son of God, abideth a Prieſt continually: But this Deſcription

[g] Vide Deut. xxx. 6. [h] Vide Jer. v. 7, &c. Philo. and ſome others, aſſign the ſame Reaſon for it: Becauſe, among the great Variety of Pleaſures, ſay they, that of Carnal Copulation is ſaid to exceed the reſt; our Law-givers thought fit to circumciſe the Inſtrument of Coition, obſcurely intimating thereby a Circumciſion of all ſuperfluous and immoderate Pleaſures, and not of one alone; for this, being the greateſt, and that to which Mankind expreſſes the ſtrongeſt Inclination, is ſuppoſed to comprehend the reſt. [i] The ancient Jews aſſign two other Reaſons; the one is, the Prevention of a troubleſome Diſeaſe, and hard to be cured, which they call a Carbuncle, becauſe it is apt to be inflamed; and the other, the Procreation of a numerous Iſſue, for which they think Circumciſion a natural Means, and therefore pretend, that ſuch Nations as uſe it, are infinitely more populous than others: But neither of theſe Reaſons have any Weight, or Foundation of Truth. Edward's Survey, Vol. I. The Time, the Manner, and other Circumſtances relating to the Performance of this Rite, the Reader, that is curious of knowing, may find ſet down in Mr Lewis's Antiquities of the Hebrew Republick, Vol. II. [k] The Plain of Mamre was, doubtleſs, the ſame with the Vale of Hebron, mentioned in Gen. xxxvii. 14. a very pleaſant and fruitful Valley, near two Miles from Hebron Southward. Here ſtood that Oak of Mamre, ſo remarkable in ſacred Hiſtory for Abraham's entertaining three Angels under it, and ſo famous in After-Ages for Pilgrimages, and an Anniverſary Feaſt, which was ſolemnized hard by it. Some will have it, that this Tree was not an Oak, but a Turpentine-Tree; but Bochart aſſures us, that he himſelf had ſeen it, and that the Leaves of it were ſomewhat larger than thoſe of a Maſtick-Tree, but its Fruit reſembled an Acorn, Wells's Geography, and Howell's Hiſtory of the Bible. [l] Gen. xiv. [m] The Kingdom of Elam is a Southern Tract of Ground, which lies beyond the Tigris and Euphrates, when ſtrictly taken; but, when in a larger Senſe, it includes Suſiana, and the other adjacent Provinces, Wells's Geography It is generally, in this Place, ſuppoſed to be the Kingdom of Aſſyria, but our learned Hiſtorian, Sir Walter Raleigh, contends, with ſome plauſible Arguments, for its being Perſia.

† The Force, which Abraham could raiſe, was but ſmall: Three hundred and eighteen trained Servants were his whole Retinue; and therefore we can hardly ſuppoſe, that he attacked the whole Aſſyrian Army, but that rather dividing his Attendants into two Companies, with one he fell upon thoſe, who were appointed to guard the Captives and the Spoil; and with the other made the Appearance of a Force ready to attempt the whole Body of the Enemy: That the Aſſyrians, ſurprized to find a freſh Enemy, fatigued in the late Battle, and not knowing the Strength that was coming upon them, retired, and fled before them. That Abraham purſued them for ſome Time, until he made himſelf Maſter of the Priſoners and the Spoils; but, upon the Approach of Day-light, (which might have diſcovered the Weakneſs of his Forces) he thought fit to return, having reſcued his Nephew Lot, and his Goods, and the Women, and all the People that were taken Captive, Gen. xiv. 16. And this accounts for the ſeeming Impoſſibility of the Action. Shuckford's Connection, Vol. II. Lib. VI.

Deſcription is ſo far from giving us any Light, that it has, in a great Meaſure, been the Occaſion of leading ſome [n] into a Perſuaſion, that what is here called Melchizedeck, was an Angel; [o] others, that it was the Son of God; and [p] others, the Holy Ghoſt, in the Shape and Appearance of a Man; becauſe they cannot conceive, how the Qualities, aſcribed to this excellent Perſonage, can comport with any human Creature. The Phraſe, however, made Uſe of in the Text, ἀγενεαλόγητος, without Deſcent, or without Genealogy, [q] explains what the Apoſtle means by without Father, and without Mother, i. e. [r] without any Father or Mother mentioned in the Genealogies of Moſes, where the Parents of all pious Worthies are generally ſet down with great Exactneſs. So that there being no Genealogy at all of Melchizedeck, recorded in Scripture, he is introduced at once, even like a Man dropped down from Heaven; for ſo the Deſcription goes on, having neither Beginning of Days, nor End of Life, i. e. in the Hiſtory of Moſes, which (contrary to its common Uſage, when it makes Mention of great Men) takes no Notice at all of the Time either of his Birth or Death; and herein he is made like unto the Son of God, i. e. by the Hiſtory of Moſes, which mentions him appearing and acting upon the Stage, without either Entrance or Exit, as if, like the Son of God, he had abode a Prieſt continually. This is the common and beſt approved Interpretation of the Apoſtle's Words; but then the Queſtion returns upon us, to whom does the Character, even with this Comment, belong? The Apoſtle's Character of him explained.

THE Jews are generally of Opinion, (and herein are followed by [s] ſome Chriſtians) that Melchizedeck was the ſame with Shem, one of the Sons of Noah; whom they ſuppoſe alive in the Days of Abraham; the only Perſon upon Earth, ſay they, who could with Juſtneſs be called his Superior, and whom the Deſcription of the Apoſtle could any Way befit: as being a Perſon of many Singularities, born before the Deluge, having no Anceſtors then alive, and whoſe Life had been of an immenſe Duration, in Compariſon of thoſe that came after him. But not to diſpute the Fact, whether Shem was, at this Time, alive or no: [t] It ſeems very incongruous to think, that Moſes who all along mentions him in his proper Name, ſhould, upon this Occaſion, diſguiſe his Senſe with a fictitious one; and very incompatible it is with what we know of Shem, that he ſhould be ſaid to be without Father and without Mother, when his Family is ſo plainly recorded in Scripture, and all his Progenitors may, in a Moment, be traced to their Fountain-head in Adam. Beſides, had Melchizedeck and Shem been the ſame Perſon, the Apoſtle would hardly have made him [u] of a Family different to Abraham, much leſs would he have ſet him, in ſuch an Eminence, above the Patriarch, or made this ſuperlative Exclamation concerning him, * Conſider how great this Man was, unto whom even the Patriarch Abraham gave the Tenth of the Spoils! Different Conjectures concerning him.

THESE Arguments ſeem to evince, that Melchizedeck and Shem were different Perſons; and much more Reaſon have we to ſuppoſe, that he, and Ham, the other Son of Noah, were ſo: For who, upon deliberate Thoughts, can believe, that this curſed Perſon was the Prieſt of the moſt High God, from whom Abraham ſo joyfully received the Sacerdotal Benediction, that he returned it with the Payment of his Tythes? And much leſs can we believe, that one of his ill Character was the Type of the bleſſed Jeſus. Jeſus indeed himſelf, if he be taken for Melchizedeck, appearing to Abraham in human Shape, (as he is often ſuppoſed to do in Scripture) will anſwer all the Character, which the Apoſtle gives of this extraordinary Perſon: [x] But then the Wonder is, that the Hiſtorian ſhould never give us the leaſt Intimation of this; that Abraham ſhould expreſs no Manner of Surprize upon ſuch an Interview; and (what is more) how the Type and the Ante-Type can poſſibly be repreſented the ſame. [y] For this is the Caſe: Here Melchiſedeck was a Repreſentative of our Saviour, according to that of the Apoſtle, [z] Jeſus was a Prieſt, after the Order of Melchizedeck; which he explains in another Place, [a] after the Similitude of Melchizedeck there ariſeth another Prieſt; as much as to ſay, Melchizedeck and Chriſt were like one another in ſeveral Things, and thereupon one was deſigned to be a fit Type of the other: But as it is unreaſonable and abſurd to ſay, that a Perſon is like himſelf, ſo we cannot rationally imagine, that Chriſt, who (as St Paul

The true Account at last.

THUS we have looked into the several Conjectures concerning this great Man, that seem to have any Plausibility in them; and, after all, must be forced to content ourselves with what the Scripture nakedly reports of him, viz. that this Melchizedeck was really a King and a Priest (for these two Offices were anciently united in one Person) in [b] the Land of Canaan; descended, very probably, from wicked and idolatrous Parents, but himself a Person of singular Virtue and Sanctity; the Priest of the most High God, but perhaps the first and the last of his Race that was so; which might give Occasion to the Apostle to describe him under such ambiguous Characters: The whole of which (according to the Judgment [c] of a learned Author) may not improbably be reduced to this single Proposition, that Melchizedeck was the most illustrious of his Family, and had neither Predecessor nor Successor in his Employ.

Abraham's Sacrifice.

BUT to proceed with our Patriarch Abraham: There is one remarkable Instance of his Life, which shewed him to be a greater Man, than any Triumph over an Enemy, and that is, the Victory gained over himself, in his ready Compliance to sacrifice his Son. The Language of the Scripture calls it a Temptation; but we must be careful to leave out of the Expression every Thing odious in the Sense of it, when we apply it to God. To tempt, in the common Acceptation of the Word, signifies to lead into a Crime; in this Sense, [d] God cannot be tempted with Evil, neither tempteth he any Man: But to tempt, signifies likewise to try a Man; and, in this [e] Sense, God tempts Men sometimes in his Wrath, and sometimes in his Love. When, by an Effect of his Justice, he leaves Men to themselves; when he suffers them to fall into such Snares as are laid for them on every Side; when, for the Punishment of their Neglect of good Counsel and Instruction, he gives them up to the Deceitfulness of Sin, and the Deceptions of Error; 'tis then that he tempts them in his Wrath: But when he permits his Children to fall into any Danger, that he may deliver them with Honour; when, in order to display, perfect, and crown their Virtues, he suffers those Virtues to be assaulted; when he exposes them, in short, to Conflicts, in order to gain the Victory; 'tis then that he tempts Men in Love. 'Twas in this Sense that he tempted Abraham; and to shew the Excellency of the Patriarch's Conduct under such Trial and Conflict, we must observe,

1. † THE Firmness and Stedfastness of his Faith, notwithstanding the Objections against it: And,

2. THE Constancy of his Resolution, notwithstanding the Difficulty of effecting it.

[d] Jam. i. 13. [e] Saurin's Dissertations.

† The learned Author of the Divine Legation of Moses, (Vol. II. Lib. vi.) from our Saviour's Words, Abraham rejoiced to see my Day, and he saw it, and was glad, John viii. 56. meaning, by the Word Day, the Work of Man's Redemption, has made God's ordering of Abraham to sacrifice his Son, not so much a Command, as a Revelation of that great Mystery, which, as Abraham most ardently desired to know, so God was graciously pleased to make manifest to him, not by Words, but by the significant Action of his Offering up his own Son, even as God, in his good appointed Time, had decreed to make his a Sacrifice for Sin, and to deliver him up for us all. So that God's primary Intent (according to him) was, by this Sign to convey to Abraham the Knowledge of Man's Redemption, his secondary only, to make Trial of the Patriarch's Faith and Obedience. —— But to have a more perfect Knowledge of this Author's Sentiments, and Method of arguing, the Reader should consult him with some Care and Attention. Other Writers affirm, that, in Case Abraham had really sacrificed his Son, there was no great Matter in it, no great Merit in his Obedience, since it was a customary Thing in those Times, for private Persons, Kings and Heads of Nations, to offer such Sacrifices, (Lord Shaftesbury's Charact. Vol. III. Misc. 2. Sir John Marsham's Can. Chron. p. 76. and Philo Judæus, Lib. de Abrahamo.) But after all their Researches, they have been able to produce but a single Instance, and that is of one Chronus, King of Phœnicia, who, as Philo Biblius, from Sanconiathon, tells us, upon the raging of a of a Famine and Pestilence, offered his only Son for a Burnt-Offering to his Father Ouranus. But, upon Examination, it will appear, that this Story is only an Imitation of Abraham's intended Sacrifice of Isaac, with some few Additions and Mistakes, such as Heathen Writers frequently incurred; and that Abraham and Chronus, in short, were one and the same Person: For, 1. Chronus was the Son of a Father who had three Children, (Euseb. Præp. Evang. Lib. i. c. 10.) and so was Abraham: 2. Chronus had one only Son by his Wife, and so had Abraham: 3. Chronus had another Son by another Person, and so had Abraham: 4. Chronus circumcised himself and Family, and so did Abraham: 5. Chronus sacrificed his only Son, and so is Abraham by some Heathen Historians reported to have done: 6. Chronus's Son was named Jehud, and so is Isaac called by Moses; for God said to Abraham, take now thy Son, Jehud-ka, i. e. thine only Son, Gen. xxii. 2. From these, and many more Particulars, that might be mentioned, it seems evident, that this Account of Sanconiathon's Chronus is only the History of Moses's Abraham, with some small Alterations revived. Shuckford's Connection, Vol. II. Lib. vi.

1. [f] TAKE now thy Son, thine only Son, Iſaac, whom thou loveſt, (what a dreadful Gradation is this) and get thee into the Land of Moriah, and offer him there for a Burnt-Offering, upon one of the Mountains, which I will tell thee of. The very Manner, wherein the Command is delivered, is enough, even at firſt Hearing, to ſhock human Nature. For, as God has implanted in us no Affection more natural and ſtrong, than what we bear to our Children; ſo no Act ſeems ſo horrid and barbarous, as for a Father to kill his own Son. And, as the Fact was ſhocking enough of itſelf, ſo there were theſe two Circumſtances, which mightily increaſed the Horror of it, viz. that the Son was innocent, and that the Father was to ſlay him with his own Hand. The Firmneſs of his Faith.

THOSE, that have felt the Pangs, and tender Relentings of Nature, muſt confeſs, that to give up a Son to Death, even tho' he were never ſo undutiful and diſobedient, muſt be a great Grief to a Parent's Heart; and the Caſe of David, who wiſhed himſelf to have died for his Son Abſalom, tho' he died in the Act of Rebellion, tho' the Preſervation of his Life had been inconſiſtent with the Peace of his Government, is the common Caſe of moſt good-natured Parents, who ſee, or (if abſent) who paint in their Imaginations, the Diſtreſs of their expiring Children, and feel the Strugglings of Nature within them. How deep then muſt it ſink into the Heart of any Parent, not only to give up his innocent Son to Death, but to ſlay him with his own Hand; not only to be the Spectator, but the Actor in this bloody Tragedy? What Father would not ſhrink and ſtart back at ſuch a Command? What good Man (eſpecially in ſuch a Caſe, and where Nature was ſo hard preſſed) would not have been apt to have looked on ſuch a Revelation as this, rather as the Suggeſtion and Illuſion of an evil Spirit, than any Command of God? Eſpecially when it ſeemed to claſh with former Revelations, and to make void the Promiſe, which God had made to Abraham, [g] that in his Seed all the Nations of the Earth ſhould be bleſſed; which Promiſe was expreſsly limited to Iſaac and his Poſterity, who had then no Son.

HOW then can we ſufficiently admire the ſtedfaſt Faith of Abraham, who, againſt Hope, believed in Hope, and with-held not his Son, the neareſt and deareſt Pledge of his Love and Obedience, that he had to give; that Son, whom he had received from God, after many Promiſes and long Expectances, in the Wain of Life; that Son, who was the only one, he was ever to look for, ſince the Strength of Nature was decayed, and the Power of Generation departed from him; that Son, whoſe Company had endeared him ſo long, and from whoſe Life he had promiſed himſelf the Support and Comfort of his old Age; and, what is more than all, that Son, in whom all the Promiſes of God were centered; from whom he expected a numerous Offſpring, Kings and Princes to be born, and the Joy of all Nations, the Saviour of Mankind, to proceed.

HE might have argued otherwiſe; and, from the ſeeming Contradiction between the Promiſe and Command, have ſtarted Objections, and furniſhed himſelf with this Excuſe; [h] "How can this Command be taken in a literal Senſe? How can I recon-"cile the Horror of the Fact with the Attributes of God? How can I perſuade my-"ſelf, that his Promiſes are faithful, when I my ſelf am ordered to cancel them? "How can I believe that my Iſaac will be the Comfort of my grey Hairs, when I "am going to make him the Subject of my perpetual Grief; or that his Seed will "ſpring up, and be as numerous as the Stars, when I am commanded to ſtifle that "Seed, and, with him, to ſacrifice, as it were, on the ſame Altar, all thoſe Na-"tions, that are in his Loins?" This might have been the Reaſoning of a carnal Mind; but the Patriarch had other Sentiments of the Matter: [i] He believed that God, who gave him Iſaac at firſt, in ſo miraculous a Manner, was able, by another Miracle, to reſtore him to Life again after he was dead, and to make him the Father of many Nations. In ſhort, rather than diſobey the Command, or ſuppoſe the Promiſe of God could be fruſtrated, he would believe any Thing that was credible and poſſible, how improbable ſoever it might ſeem; and, for this Reaſon, the Apoſtle tells us, [k] that our Father Abraham was juſtified by Faith, and that it was counted unto him for Righteouſneſs.

2. BUT to raiſe the Merit of Abraham's Obedience, let us conſider farther, the Conſtancy of his Reſolution, notwithſtanding the Harſhneſs and Difficulty of the Thing. Had Abraham been firmly perſuaded, that this Command to kill his Son The Conſtancy of his Reſolution.

[f] Gen. xxii. 2. [g] Gen. xviii. 18. [h] Saurin's Diſſertations. [i] Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. I. [k] Rom. iv. 3.

was really from God, yet it is no eaſy Matter for a Man to bring himſelf to Compliance in ſo difficult a Caſe, and, out of mere Reverence to the Divine Authority, to diveſt himſelf of his Nature, and, thwart the ſtrongeſt Propenſions of it. Let any Man, who knows what it is to be a Father, lay his Hand upon his Heart, and conſider his own Bowels, and he muſt needs be aſtoniſhed at Abraham's Obedience, as well as Faith.

HAD Abraham indeed, upon his firſt receiving the Command, taken his Knife and ſlain his Son immediately, his Compliance might have been imputed to ſome ſudden Tranſport of Zeal, more than any deliberate Purpoſe. But, that his Obedience might be more glorious, and have all the Circumſtances of Advantage attending it, God would have it done upon full Conſideration, and therefore appointed him to go to a Mountain, (three-Days Journey from the Place where he was) and there to offer up his Son. It is in Acts of Virtue and Obedience, as it is in Acts of Sin and Vice: The more deliberate the Sin is, and the more calm and ſedate Temper the Man is in, when he commits it, the greater is his Fault; and ſo it is in the Acts of Virtue and Obedience, (eſpecially if they be attended with conſiderable Difficulty) the more deliberately they are done the more virtuous they are, and the more Praiſe they merit.

The Land of Moriah.

[l] MORIAH, to which Abraham was ordered to go, was not any particular Mountain, but that Tract of Land, whereon Jeruſalem was built in following Ages, and the adjacent Country, where, among many other Hills was the Mount of Olives, and Mount Cavalry, on which our Saviour did, afterwards, offer himſelf to God for the Redemption of Mankind; it ſeeming good to the Divine Wiſdom, to aſſign the ſame Place for the Typical Sacrifice of Iſaac, where, in the Fulneſs of Time, the great Anti-type was to be offered. [m] This Country is not much above One-Day's Journey from Beerſheba, the Place where Abraham, at this Time, dwelt; but he, and his Company, travelling on Foot, and the Aſs being laden with Wood, and not able to go far in a Day, they made it three: So that, [n] by putting this Space between the Command and the Performance of it, God gave him time to cool upon it, to weigh the Injunction, and to look on every Side of this difficult Duty: He gave him Scope, I ſay, for his Reaſon to argue and debate the Caſe, and an Opportunity for natural Affection to play its Part, and for Fleſh and Blood to raiſe all its Batteries againſt the Reſolution, which he had taken up. And now we may eaſily imagine, what Conflict this good Man had within himſelf, during thoſe three Days, that he was travelling to the appointed Place, and how his Heart was ready to be rent in Pieces, betwixt his Duty to God, and his Affection to his Child; ſo that, in every Step of this unwelcome and weariſome Journey, he did, as it were, lay violent Hands upon himſelf.

THE Jews have a Tradition, [o] that the Devil followed Abraham, and uſed his utmoſt Endeavours to diſſuade him from the Purpoſe of ſacrificing his Son: But if any Thing could have induced the Patriarch to break his Reſolution, it muſt have been thoſe innocent and indearing Words that proceeded from Iſaac in his Journey. [p] Joſephus, upon this Occaſion, has uſed all the Softneſs of Thought and Delicacy of Stile, that he was Maſter of, to repreſent this Circumſtance of Diſtreſs; and yet, after all, he is a Bungler, in Compariſon of this great Author of the Book of Geneſis. Abraham was juſt going to ſacrifice his Son; the Altar, the Wood, the Fire, the Knife, and all were ready, when he finds himſelf called upon by him in ſo tender a Manner, as was enough to pierce his Heart, and to arreſt his Arm, already lift up to wound the innocent Victim; Iſaac ſpake unto Abraham his Father, and ſaid, My Father, and he ſaid, here am I, my Son. Nature, which was confined and limited by the Divine Command, here makes a Bound, and paſſes to the utmoſt Verge of what was allowed her. Iſaac ſpake to Abraham his Father, and ſaid, my Father; Abraham anſwered, here am I, my Son: And what ſaid this innocent Child to his melting Father? Behold the Fire and the Wood, but where is the Lamb for the Burnt-Offering? And Abraham ſaid, My Son, God will provide himſelf a Lamb for a Burnt-Offering. [q] Nothing but the Heart can be a Comment upon theſe Words: A Man muſt be a Father, he muſt be a tender Father, he muſt have an only Son. he muſt ſuppoſe himſelf juſt going to ſlay that Son, in order to be truly ſenſible of the Energy of this Queſtion, and of the Effect, which it had upon Abraham.

IF all this be not enough to ſhew the Stedfaſtneſs of his Reſolution, there is one Circumſtance more, which, though but conjectural, has no ſmall Probability of being true, and, if ſo, a great Tendency to advance the Patriarch's Praiſe. The greateſt Part of [t] the Jewiſh Doctors are of Opinion, that Iſaac, at this Time, was arrived at Man's Eſtate; and upon this Suppoſition, the Words will fairly enough, and without ſtraining, admit of this Senſe, that Abraham did not bind his Son, but perſuaded him to lay himſelf upon the Altar. Without all Doubt, as the Patriarch drew near to the Mount, (which [u] was probably diſtinguiſhed by ſome bright and glorious Appearance) he began to prepare Iſaac to ſubmit to be ſacrificed; he diſpoſed him to obey the Commandments of Heaven; he explained the Commiſſion he had received from thence; he repreſented to him the Sovereignty of God over his Creatures; he made him ſenſible, that nothing ſhould ſet Bounds to our Obedience, when God ſignifies his Will; he convinced him, that he, who had wrought one Miracle for his Birth, might likewiſe redeem him from the Jaws of Death by another; he took a moſt tender and affectionate Leave of him, for the Command he had received to ſacrifice him, did not forbid him to vent his Grief in Lamentations for his Loſs: And having thus ſatisfied the Laws of Nature, * he ſet himſelf now to execute the fatal Order, and that very Moment had done it, had not the Lord from on high (who ſaw to what Length his Obedience would go, and was ſatisfied) ſtopped his Hand, juſt as it was going to his Son's Throat: Lay not thine Hand upon the Lad, neither do thou any Thing unto him; for now I know that thou feareſt God, ſeeing that thou haſt not with-held thy Son, thine only Son from him.

Inferences from the Whole.

TO come to a Concluſion with this great Example of Faith and Obedience. This Story of Abraham (as [x] a very judicious Expounder of the Law tells us) eſtabliſhes two fundamental Points; the one is, to ſhew us how far the Love and Fear of God ſhould extend itſelf, and the other, to convince us of the Certainty of divine Revelation. Here then we ſee a Command to do that, whereunto the Loſs of Money, or the Loſs of Life itſelf, is not comparable; nay that, which Nature abhorred, viz. that a Man, very rich, and in good Authority, who earneſtly deſired an Heir, who was born to him when he had no Hopes of one, in his old Age, ſhould ſo overcome his natural Affection to him, (which doubtleſs was very great) as to forego all the Expectations he had from him, and, after a Journey of three Days, conſent to ſlay him with his own Hands. How then ſhould this Example of the Father of the Faithful encourage us all in a chearful Submiſſion to the ſeverer Duties of our holy Profeſſion; to deſpiſe the Shame, to endure the Croſs, to face the ſevereſt Puniſhments, to reſiſt the ſofteſt Inclinations, to deny ourſelves, and to [u] mortify our Members, which are upon the Earth, which, how painful ſoever they be in the Operation, offer not half that Violence to Nature, as to kill an only Son; beſides, the Conſideration of the extraordinary Comfort and Support, and of a glorious Reward promiſed to our Obedience in ſuch Particulars; Encouragement enough to make a very difficult Duty eaſy.

The Extent of our Obedience.

The Certainty of Revelations.

THE other Thing we are taught by this Hiſtory is, that the Prophets were fully aſſured of the Truth of thoſe Things, which God ſpake to them, either in Dreams, or in Viſions, or any other Way. For if Abraham had, in the leaſt, doubted whether this Sacrifice of his Son were the Will of God or no, he would never have ſo readily conſented

[t] Joſephus ſays, he was but five and twenty Years old; David Ganis, in his Chronology, makes him twenty-ſix; and Eliezer thirty-ſeven. [u] This Conjecture is confirmed by R. Eliezer, who ſays, that when God bad Abraham go to the Place he would tell him of, Ver. 2. and there offer his Son, he aſked, how he ſhould know it? And the Anſwer was, Whereſoever thou ſeeſt my Glory, there will I ſtay, and wait for thee, &c. and accordingly he beheld a Pillar of Fire, reaching from Heaven to the Earth, and thereby knew, that this was the Place. Patrick's Commentary.

* It may not, in this Place, be amiſs to obſerve, that the Heathen World was not altogether ignorant of this Sacrifice of Abraham. The Story of Iphigenia very much reſembles it; for there all Things were ready for her Immolation; the Prieſt was come, and his Arm lift up to give the fatal Stroke; when, on a ſudden, a ſtrange and preternatural Voice iſſues out from the Woods, telling them, that Diana, for whom ſhe was to bleed, did not approve of the Sacrifice; and, while the People were deliberating how to find a more acceptable one, a very beautiful Fawn comes voluntarily up to the Altar, and there was ſacrificed in the ſtead of Agamemnon's Daughter. Datis Cret. de Bell. Troj. Lib. I. There is another Story, much of the ſame Nature, related by Plutarch, (Tom. II. Parall.) when the Plague reigned in Lacedemonia, the Oracle told them, that it would not ceaſe, until they conſented annually to ſacrifice a Virgin of noble Birth. The Lot fell upon Helena, who was led to the Temple, dreſſed for a Sacrifice, and juſt going to be offered up; when an Eagle came ſuddenly down, and ſnatching away the Sword that was to pierce her Breaſt, carried it into the Field, where ſome Herds were feeding, and there dropped it upon an Heifer. Theſe, and many more Stories of the like Nature, are manifeſtly founded on the Sacrifice of Iſaac. Iſaac was certainly the firſt intended Sacrifice of this Kind; and though both ſacred and prophane Hiſtory abound with Examples of Men's ſacrificing their Children to Idols, yet nothing of this Nature could be a Motive to Abraham, ſince this Cuſtom was neither in Babylon, nor Meſopotamia, nor Chaldea, where he had lived a long Time; no, nor in Beerſheba, where he abode at that Time; but he (as Philo tells us) was, by God's Order, to be the Beginner of a perfectly new and unuſual Example, Patrick's Commentary. [x] Maimonides More Nevoch. Part. III. cap. 24. [u] Col. iii. 5.

conſented to a Thing, which Nature ſo ſtrongly abhorred. Nothing indeed is more reaſonable than to believe, that thoſe Perſons, to whom God is pleaſed to make immediate Revelations of his Will, are ſome Way or other aſſured, that they are divine; otherwiſe, they would be in vain and to no Purpoſe: But how Men are aſſured of this, is not ſo eaſy to determine, becauſe the Scripture has no where informed us.

Iſaac, a Type of Chriſt.

THIS farther Improvement however we may be allowed to make of the Hiſtory that is now before us, viz. that, as Iſaac is acknowledged to be a Type of the Meſſiah, we ought, in all Juſtice, to ſanctify the Notions of the Jews, and to apply that to the ſpiritual Iſaac, which they affirm of the carnal. They tell us, "That "Iſaac was a perfect Sacrifice; that God took Pleaſure in him; that they were all "offered up in his Perſon; that, whenever they are afflicted, God remembers that "Iſaac was bound; that, by this Sacrifice, his Anger is appeaſed, and the Works of "Satan are defeated." Theſe are their own Words; and this is their Prayer to the ſame Purpoſe, O God, our Lord, let this be thy Will, as often as the Poſterity of Iſaac ſhall ſin, as often as it ſhall rebel againſt thee, remember the Sacrifice of Iſaac; for his Sake be merciful to us; look upon this only Son, and vouchſafe to be favourable to us, for his Sake, who was bound as a Lamb. All this is literally applicable to Jeſus Chriſt only. "He was preſented as a perfect Sacrifice; in him we are all offered up; in "our Afflictions God remembers this Oblation, and, by this Atonement, is appeaſed; "the Merits of our Saviour procure us the Mercy of God; he looks upon this only "Son, and is favourable to us, for the Sake of him, who was bound like a Lamb." And we may ſay to him, but in a Senſe different to theſe deluded People, O God, our Lord, let this be thy Will, as oft as the Poſterity of Iſaac ſhall ſin againſt thee, to remember Iſaac's Sacrifice; ſhew Mercy to us for his Merits; look upon thine only Son, and vouchſafe thy Favour to us for the Sake of him, who was bound like a Lamb, [x] and gave himſelf for us, an Offering and a Sacrifice to thee, for a ſweet-ſmelling Savour. Amen.

SECT. I.

Of the Deſtruction of SODOM, and Metamorphoſis of LOT'S Wife.

Of the World, 2107, &c. Before Chriſt, 1897, &c.

DURING the Life of the Patriarch Abraham, there happened an Inſtance of divine Vengeance upon a wicked People, the ſevereſt we read of, ſince the general Deluge, in the ſudden Deſtruction of ſome Cities in the Plain of Jordan. Moſes indeed, in the Account he gives us of it, makes Mention but of two, Sodom and Gomorrah: But, in another Place, he enumerates four, and gives this Deſcription of their dreadful Puniſhment; [y] When the Generations to come ſhall ſee the Plagues of that Land, and the Sickneſſes, which the Lord hath laid upon it, and that the whole Land thereof is Brimſtone, and Salt, and Burning, (like the Overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboim, which the Lord overthrew in his Anger, and in his Wrath) even all the Nations ſhall ſay, Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this Land? Nay, if we will believe [z] Strabo, a Man of great Reading and Sagacity, and who, perhaps, might have an Account of the Thing from ſome Writer of the Phœnician Hiſtory; the Number of the Cities, that were deſtroyed at this Time, were thirteen; and to this there is a Paſſage in the Prophet, that ſeems to give ſome Countenance, tho' not as to the preciſe Number of them; [a] As I live, ſaith the Lord God, to Jeruſalem, Sodom thy Siſter has not done, ſhe nor her Daughters (i. e. the Cities, which were built round it, and were tributary to it) have not done, as thou and thy Daughters have done. But whatever the Number of the Cities might be, it will be proper for us, before we come to conſider in what Manner they were deſtroyed, to give ſome Account of their Situation.

How many Cities deſtroyed.

into the Aſphaltite Lake, or Salt-ſea. But we are not to imagine, that this Plain was one continued Level, without any Riſings and Deſcents; the greateſt Part of it, indeed, was an open Champain Country, (and for this Reaſon it was commonly called μεγαπέδιον, or the great Field) but therein we read of the [c] Valley of Jericho, and [d] of the Vale of Siddim, [e] in the latter of which were the Cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, &c. ſituate, once a pleaſant and moſt fruitful Country, but now a noiſome, poiſonous, and dead Sea.

THE Deſcription, which the holy Scripture gives us of this Country, deſerves our Obſervation, the rather, becauſe it may be of Uſe to teach us, in what Manner this Lake or Dead-Sea came to be formed: [f] And Lot lifted up his Eyes, and beheld all the Plain of Jordan, that it was well watered, every where, before the Lord deſtroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, even as the Garden of the Lord, like the Land of Egypt, as thou comeſt unto Zoar. The only Difficulty in theſe Words lies in the laſt Clauſe, as thou comeſt unto Zoar, which ſome Commentators have referred to the Words immediately preceding, like the Land of Egypt; [g] whereas if what is ſaid in Compariſon of the Plain of Jordan to the Garden of the Lord, (i. e. the Garden of Eden) and to the Land of Egypt, be underſtood by Way of Parentheſis, (as it ſeems moſt natural and obvious ſo to do) the Difficulty will be removed, and the Import of the laſt Clauſe (leaving out the Parentheſis) will become plain and eaſy, viz. that, before the Lord deſtroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, the Plain of Jordan was well watered every where, as thou comeſt unto Zoar, i. e. in the Vale of Siddim, where Sodom and Gomorrah, and the other Cities, that were conſumed with them, once ſtood. This, I think, is a very eaſy and proper Explanation of the laſt Clauſe of the Verſe, if we read it Zoar, as it is in the preſent Hebrew, and moſt of the Tranſlations: But then if, inſtead of Zoar, we read it Zoan, (as we may eaſily do, conſidering that the Variation is but in one Letter, and that the Syriac Tranſlation actually reads it ſo) [h] nothing can agree better with what goes before, in relation to Egypt; for Zoan was a famous, and (at this Time, very probably) the capital City of Egypt, lying on the lower Part of the Nile, not far from the Sea-Coaſts, and where that River is divided into ſeveral Branches: So that the Senſe of the Paſſage, according to this Reading, will be, That the Plain of Jordan, about Sodom and Gomorrah, was ſo well watered every where, that it reſembled the Garden of Eden, or the Land of Egypt, and particularly, as thou comeſt unto Zoan, i. e. in the Parts about Zoan, where the Nile is divided into ſeveral Branches, and where the Country is more watered, than in other Parts.

Well watered.

[i] BUT 'tis wholly indifferent to our Purpoſe, whether Lection, viz. that of the common Bibles, or that of the Syriac Interpreter, the Reader will be pleaſed to follow, provided he does but remember, that the Part of the Plain of Jordan, where theſe Cities ſtood, is compared to the Garden of Paradiſe, and the Land of Egypt, upon the Account of its being well watered: And well it might, ſeeing it had (as the Lacus Aſphaltites has to this Day) not only the Streams of the River Jordan, running quite through it, but the [k] River Arnon from the Eaſt, [l] the Brook Zared, and the famous [m] Fountain Callirrhoë, from the South, falling into it. Now, ſince all this Water had no direct Paſſage into the Sea, it muſt neceſſarily follow, [n] either that it was conveyed away by ſome ſubterraneous Paſſage, or ſwallowed up in the Sands, which every Way encompaſſed it; and this might the more eaſily be done, becauſe the Inhabitants of thoſe hot Countries uſed to divide their Rivers into ſeveral ſmall Branches, for the Benefit of watering their Fields.

AND as this Plenty of Water gave great Richneſs to the Soil, and Fertility to the Country; [o] ſo the Wealth and Abundance of all Things (as Mankind is too apt to abuſe God's Gifts) made Sodom, and the neighbouring Cities, very infamous for their Wickedneſs and Impiety. The Prophet Ezekiel gives us this Deſcription of them: [p] Behold, this was the Iniquity of thy Siſter Sodom, Pride, Fulneſs of Bread, and Abundance of Idleneſs was in her, and in her Daughters, neither did ſhe ſtrengthen the Hand of the Poor and Needy, but was haughty, and committed Abomination before me; which [q] Joſephus might have in his Eye, when he gave us this Account of them. "The "Sodomites, ſays he, waxing proud, by reaſon of their Riches and Wealth, grew "contumelious

" contumelious towards Men, and impious towards God; ſo that they were wholly " unmindful of the Favours they received from him: They hated Strangers, and " burnt in mutual Luſt with one another." And certainly the Debauchery of the Place could admit of no new Acceſſion, but was arrived at its utmoſt Height, when they could think of abuſing Strangers, after ſo abominable a Manner; to which the Prophet, with all Modeſty, ſeems to allude, when (to reprove the Profligate of his Age) he tells them, [r] That they declare their Sin, as Sodom, and hide it not.

How deſtroyed.

THESE horrid and execrable Enormities provoked the Divine Juſtice to deſtroy thoſe Cities, [s] whoſe Cry was grown great for Vengeance; and the Manner, wherein it was effected, Moſes has recorded in theſe Words: [t] Then the Lord rained upon Sodom, and upon Gomorrah, Brimſtone and Fire from the Lord out of Heaven, and he overthrew thoſe Cities, and all the Plain, and all the Inhabitants of the Cities, and that which grew upon the Ground. For the better underſtanding of which Words, Moſes's Words explained.

we muſt obſerve, that, in the Vale of Siddim, the Tract of Ground which was now deſtroyed, there were a great many Pits of Bitumen, which our Tranſlation calls [u] Slime-Pits, into which the Kings of Sodom and Gomorrah, when purſued by their Enemy, fell, and that [x] this Bitumen, which is a very combuſtible Matter, is in ſome Places liquid, in others firm; and not only found near the Surface of the Earth, but lies ſometimes very deep, and is dug from the Bowels of it. 2. We muſt obſerve, that Brimſtone and Fire, which the Lord is ſaid to rain upon Sodom and Gomorrah, [y] means Brimſtone inflamed; that, in the Hebrew Stile, Brimſtone inflamed ſignifies Lightning, and the Reaſon why Lightning is thus deſcribed, no one can be ignorant of, that has either ſmelt the Places, which have been ſtruck with Thunder, or read what learned Men have wrote upon the Subject. 3. We muſt obſerve farther, that God is not only ſaid to have rained down Brimſtone and Fire, but Brimſtone and Fire FROM THE LORD; where the Addition of, from the Lord, which, at firſt Sight, may appear to be ſuperfluous, or to denote a Plurality of Perſons in the Deity (as ſeveral Chriſtian Interpreters will have it) does more particularly deſcribe the Thunderbolt, which, by the [z] Hebrews, and other Nations, is frequently called the Fire of God, or Fire from God, &c. and the Reaſon is, becauſe Men having no Power over theſe Kind of Meteors, and it being impoſſible for them, by any Kind of Contrivance, to aſcend up to the Clouds, God is therefore ſuppoſed to dwell there, and to caſt down his Bolts from thence.

[a] NOW, theſe Obſervations being put together, we may, in ſome Meaſure, form a Notion to ourſelves, how this Deſtruction came to be effected. For, though Moſes does not inform us, after what Manner the Lightning and Thunderbolts, from above, ſubverted theſe unhappy Cities, and the adjoining Territory; yet, ſince he plainly makes Mention of them, we cannot comprehend how it could happen any otherwiſe, than that, the Lightning and Thunderbolts falling in great Abundance upon ſome Pits of Bitumen, the Veins of that combuſtible Matter took Fire immediately, and, as the Fire penetrated into the lowermoſt Bowels of the bituminous Soil, thoſe wicked Cities were ſubverted (as the Tradition of the Heathen was) by a dreadful Earthquake, and the Subſiding of the Ground; and that as ſoon as the Ground was ſunk it would unavoidably fall out, that the Waters running to this Place in ſo great an Abundance, and mixing with the Bitumen, which they found in ſuch Plenty, would make a Lake of what was a Valley before, and a Lake of the ſame Quality, with what the Scripture calls the Salt-Sea, not only becauſe its Waters are ſalt to a very great Degree, but to diſtinguiſh it likewiſe from [b] two other Lakes, through which the River Jordan runs, which are freſh Water; and what, in ſucceeding Times, came to be called the Dead-Sea, [c] not only becauſe its Waters are immoveable, and more like a Sea of liquid Pitch, than of Water, but becauſe no living Creature can abide in it, nor any Plant or Tree grow near it, by Reaſon of thoſe bituminous Steams which it ſends forth; and, from the Abundance of which Matter, it moſt frequently occurs in Heathen Authors, under the Name of Lacus Aſphaltites.

THIS Lake, [d] according to the Accounts we read of it, is incloſed on the Eaſt and Weſt with exceeding high Mountains; on the North it is bounded with the Plain of Jericho, on which Side it receives the Waters of Jordan; on the South, it is open, and extends beyond the Reach of the Eye, being twenty-four Leagues long, and ſix or ſeven broad. Its Water is extremely deep and heavy, of a nauſeous Taſte, and a very noiſome Smell; it is never agitated with the Wind, nor does it harbour either Fiſh or Fowl unaccuſtomed to the Water. It is full of Bitumen, which, at uncertain Seaſons, boils up from the Bottom in Bubbles, like hot Water; at which Time, the Superficies of the Lake ſwells, and reſembles the Riſing of an Hill. Adjoining to the Lake, are Fields, which, they report, were extremely fruitful in former Times, and inhabited by populous Cities, but are now ſo parched and burnt up, that they have loſt their Fertility, inſomuch, that every Thing, whether it grows ſpontaneouſly, or is planted by Man, whether it be Herb, Fruit, or Flower, as ſoon as it is compreſſed, [e] moulders away immediately into Aſhes: And to this the Author of the Book of Wiſdom certainly alludes, when he tells us, that [f] of the Wickedneſs of thoſe Cities, the waſte Land, that ſmoaketh to this Day, is a Teſtimony, and the Plants bearing Fruit, that never come to Ripeneſs.

It's Situation, Qualities, and adjacent Countries.

[g] THE Cinders, Brimſtone, and Smoke, ſays Philo, and a certain obſcure Flame, as it were, of a Fire burning, ſtill appearing about Syria, are Memorials of the perpetual Evil which happened to them; and, as Joſephus [h] adds, the Things that are ſaid of Sodom, are confirmed by ocular Inſpection, there being ſome Relics of the Fire which came down from Heaven, and ſome Reſemblance of the five Cities, ſtill to be ſeen. [i] And 'tis the Duration of theſe Monuments of Divine Wrath perhaps, which gave occaſion to St Jude to ſay, that the wicked Inhabitants of theſe Cities [k] were ſet forth for an Example, ſuffering the Vengeance of eternal Fire, i. e. of a Fire whoſe Marks were to be perpetuated unto the End of the World; [l] for it is no uncommon Thing in Scripture, to repreſent a great and irreparable Vaſtation, whoſe Effects and Signs ſhall be permanent to the lateſt Ages, by the Word αἰώνιος, which we here render eternal.

The Remains of their Deſtruction.

THUS, in all Probability, were the Cities in the Plain of Jordan overthrown: But if it ſhould be demanded, whether this was done by a Miracle, or by the common Methods of Nature, our Anſwer [m] is that in a Soil, impregnated with Bitumen, the Cities, which are built thereon, may be ſhaken by an Earthquake and ſwallowed by a ſudden Hiatus; that Thunder-Bolts too may fall, and ſet the Veins of Sulphur and Bitumen on Fire, which afterwards breaking out, and mingling with the Water, may, in a low Valley, eaſily cauſe a Lake full of Aſphaltus; all this is no more than what might be expected, as not exceeding the ordinary Power of Nature. But if theſe Things were done, before the natural Cauſes were in a Diſpoſition to produce them; if they had not come to paſs that Inſtant, unleſs it had been for ſome extraordinary Interpoſition of God, or his bleſſed Angels; it ought to be reputed no leſs a Miracle, than if every Particular in the Tranſaction plainly ſurpaſſed the uſual Operations of Nature. And, that the Judgment now before us happened in this Manner, [n] the two Angels diſpatched by Almighty God, upon this important Occaſion, [o] God's foretelling Abraham his Deſign, [p] the Angels acquainting Lot with the Errand, upon which they came, and their urging and inſtigating him to be gone, [q] to make haſte and eſcape to Zoar, becauſe they could do nothing, until he was come thither, are Arguments ſufficiently convincing, that the Thunder and Lightning, I ſay, or (as [r] others will have it) the Showers of liquid Fire; [s] or, rather Storms of Nitre, Sulphur or Bitumen, mingled with Fire, which fell upon theſe wicked Places, were immediately ſent down by the Appointment of God, and by the Miniſtry of his

[e] Whether there be any Truth in this Part of the Account of Tacitus, 'tis hard to tell; as for the Apples of Sodom, (to which he ſeems to allude) Mr Maundrell tells us, that he neither ſaw nor heard of any thereabouts; nor was there any Tree to be ſeen, near the Lake, from which one might expect ſuch Kind of Fruit: And therefore he ſuppoſes the Being as well as the Beauty of that Fruit is a mere Fiction, and only kept up, becauſe it ſerves for a good Alluſion, and help'd Poets to a pat Similitude. Journey from Aleppo to Jeruſalem. his Angels, who knowing all the Meteors of the Air, and their repugnant Qualities, can collect, commix, and employ them, as they please, in the Execution of God's just Judgments, upon a People devoted to Destruction.

The ready Obedience of the Angels.

WITH what Expedition and Alacrity these Ministers of Heaven do the Will of God, in the Punishment of the Wicked, as well as the Preservation of the Just, is apparent from this Instance of their forcing, as it were, Lot and his Family, while they lingered, out of the House; their laying hold upon his Hand, and hurrying him out of the Town; and then giving him this hasty Order; Escape for thy Life, look not behind thee, stay not in all the Plain, escape to the Mountain, lest thou be consumed; as if they had been impatient to have their Charge safely disposed of, that they might the sooner set about the Work, which God had appointed them to do.

THE Destruction of one's Native Place, and of all one's Kindred and Acquaintance together, is certainly a very affecting Consideration, even to those that escape the Calamity themselves: But our Concern, in such a Case, is to be proportioned, not according to the Ties of Affinity, but according to the Quality of the People, that undergo the Punishment; and this was the Thing which made the Disobedience of Lot's Wife so great a Provocation to God. She, [u] in all Likelihood, was a Native of Sodom; and having heard what the Angels were ordered to do, and seeing the Heavens grow angry, and all their Bolts pointed towards it, she turned about, and stood still, to see the Fate of her Father's House, or to bewail the Loss of those she had left behind: For which Contempt of the Divine Command, in expressing a Concern for a People, that deserved no Consideration at all, the sacred Historian tells us, that [x] she became a Pillar of Salt; but whether in a literal or figurative Sense, is a matter of Debate among learned Commentators.

Lot's Wife, who.

The different Senses of the Word.

1. THE Word, which we render Pillar, [y] does properly signify two Things; 1. An Heap of any mighty Bulk, raised in Memory of some remarkable Event, such [z] as Laban and Jacob erected, in Remembrance of the Covenant made between them on Mount Gilead; and from this Signification of the Word, [a] some have imagined, that Lot's Wife was turned into a Heap of Stones: Or, 2. It signifies either a Statue, or Pillar, from which Ambiguity of the Word, some would have Lot's Wife turned [b] into a Pillar, without any Resemblance of a Feminine Shape; while others understand it to be [c] the Statue of a Woman, wherein all the Lineaments of her Sex are plainly to be seen. But, besides these proper Significations, the Word may, in a Metaphorical Sense, be applied to denote any Thing that is immoveable and hard, like a Pillar or Stone, and, according to this Acceptation, they suppose, that Moses might intend no more, than that Lot's Wife was struck dead with Fear, or Surprize, or any other Cause, and so remained motionless, like a Stone.

2. THE Word which we render Salt, besides its obvious Signification, sometimes denotes [d] a dry and barren Soil, (such as is found about the Asphaltite Lake) and in this Sense the Word, applied to Lot's Wife, intimates, that the Place of her Death was a barren Country, or the Land of Salt. At other Times, it signifies a long Space and Continuance of Time; hence we find an everlasting Covenant called [e] a Covenant of Salt, (Salt being therefore an Emblem of Eternity, because the Things that are seasoned therewith continue uncorrupt for many Years) and, in this Sense, Lot's Wife may be said to become an Everlasting Monument of the Divine Displeasure, without any Consideration of the Matter, whereinto she was changed.

THESE are the Interpretations, which arise from the various Significations of the Words; and, in order to know which Sense we are to embrace, our Business must be to consider, whose Arguments and Testimony, in this Case, are of greatest Weight.

Arguments for the figurative.

THOSE, [f] that prefer the figurative Sense of the Words, do it, they say, for this Reason, because they are loth to multiply Miracles, where they see no Occasion. "It was enough for the Justice of God, and all indeed that the Angel seems to intimate, that this indiscreet Woman should suffer Death for her Dilatoriness; but "there needed no Miracle to accomplish this. Instead of being turned into a Pillar "of Salt, she might as well have been stupified with Fear, or suffocated by some "bituminous

" bituminous and ſulphureous Vapour. When ſhe ſaw her Native Country deſtroyed " by Fire from Heaven, heard the Clouds roar, and felt the Ground tremble under " her Feet; and, at the ſame Time, recollected in her Mind the ſad Deſtiny, that " befel all her Friends and Relations, except her Huſband and two Daughters; what " Wonder is it, if Grief and Fear ſo poſſeſſed her Spirits, that ſhe immediately ex- " pired, or at leaſt fainted away, and, having none to aſſiſt her in that Deliquium, " died upon the Spot. Or if we ſuppoſe, that the Woman did not only ſtop, and " turn her Eyes to her Native Country, but (as ſoon as the Angels were gone) went " back to behold the burning of it nearer, and ſo was ſuffocated by ſome poiſonous " Vapour, (as Pliny the Elder was, when his Curioſity led him too near the Mountain " Veſuvius) this is a Conjecture, that the Words of our bleſſed Saviour ſeem not to " diſcountenance; who, in the Deſcription of the Suddenneſs of the Deſtruction of " Jeruſalem, giving his Diſciples this Advice, [h] be that is in the Field let him not " return back, immediately ſubjoins, by Way of Example, Remember Lot's Wife; " whereby he ſeems to intimate, that ſhe returned back, and approaching too near " the deſecrated Place, periſhed in the common Conflagration. Thus, whether we " ſuppoſe that the Woman was ſtupified by Fear, or ſuffocated by Vapours, her " Death ſeems more natural, and anſwers the Divine Purpoſe of puniſhing her as " well, as if we ſhould deviſe the prodigious Event of her being turned into a Pillar " of Salt, which hardly any Reaſon can be given for; which we cannot ſay with " Certainty ever yet was ſeen; and which could not, without a Miracle, have been " preſerved ſo long," and for the literal Senſe.

THOSE, that adhere to the literal Senſe of the Words, argue in this Manner: That the Vale of Siddim, [i] where Sodom and the other Cities ſtood, was originally a very fruitful Soil, (as moſt bituminous Countries are) which induced Lot to make Choice of it for the Paſturage of his Cattle, but is at preſent the very Reverſe, a poor barren Land, full of Sulphur [k] and Salt-Pits; and hence they infer, that all the ſulphureous and ſaline Matter, which is found in this Tract of Ground now, was the Effect of Divine Vengeance, and ſhowered down upon it, in that Day, when God deſtroyed Sodom and the neighbouring Cities. They ſuppoſe therefore, [l] that this Woman, ſtanding ſtill too long to behold the Deſtruction of her Country, [m] ſome of that dreadful Shower, in the Manner of great Fleaks of Snow, fell upon her, and, clinging to her Body, wrapped it all over, as it were, in a Sheet of Nitro-ſulphureous Matter, which congealed into a Cruſt, as hard as a Stone, and made her appear like a Statue, or Pillar of [n] Metallick Salt, having her Body incloſed, and, as it were, candied all over with it.

IN this Manner they ſuppoſe this miraculous Event might have come to paſs; and, for the Truth and Reality of the Thing, they produce the Teſtimony of the Author of the Book of Wiſdom, who makes Mention [o] of a ſtanding Pillar of Salt, as a Monument of an unbelieving Soul, and the Authority of the Seventy Interpreters, who expreſsly render it ſo. Among Jewiſh Authors, they produce the Words of [p] Joſephus, who tells us, that Lot's Wife, in her Flight, caſting her Eyes perpetually back upon the City, and being too much concerned about it, tho' God had forbid her ſo to do, was turned into a Pillar of Salt: I have beheld it myſelf, and it continues to this Day: And, among Chriſtian, thoſe of Clemens, in his Epiſtle to the Corinthians, where he tells us, that his Wife went out along with him, but being of a different Opinion, and not perſiſting in Concord with him, ſhe was therefore placed for a Sign, and continues a Statue of Salt to this very Day.

THE Accounts which modern Hiſtorians and Travellers give us of this Matter are ſo very different and uncertain, that we cannot ſo well tell where to fix our Belief. Brocardus, in his Deſcription of the Holy Land, tells us, that he gave himſelf the Fatigue of a very troubleſome Journey, to behold this Statue, but was not ſo happy as to ſatisfy his Curioſity; for the Inhabitants aſſured him, that the Place was inacceſſible, or could not be viſited without apparent Danger of Death, Grotius*, from Deut. xxix. 23. [n] Interpreters have obſerved to us, that we muſt not take the Salt, here mentioned, for common Salt, which Water ſoon diſſolves, and could not poſſibly continue ſo long, being expoſed to the Wind and Rain; but for Metallick Salt, which was hewn out of the Rock, like Marble, and made Uſe of in building Houſes, according to the Teſtimony of ſeveral Authors. Watſii Miſcell. Tom. But, besides these proper Significations, the Word may, in a Metaphorical Sense, be applied to denote any Thing that is immoveable and hard, like a Pillar or Stone, and, according to this Acceptation, they suppose, that Moses might intend no more, than that Lot's Wife was struck dead with Fear, or Surprize, or any other Cause, and so remained motionless, like a Stone.

2. THE Word which we render Salt, besides its obvious Signification, sometimes denotes [d] a dry and barren Soil, (such as is found about the Asphaltite Lake) and in this Sense the Word, applied to Lot's Wife, intimates, that the Place of her Death was a barren Country, or the Land of Salt. At other Times, it signifies a long Space and Continuance of Time; hence we find an everlasting Covenant called [e] a Covenant of Salt, (Salt being therefore an Emblem of Eternity, because the Things that are seasoned therewith continue uncorrupt for many Years) and, in this Sense, Lot's Wife may be said to become an Everlasting Monument of the Divine Displeasure, without any Consideration of the Matter, whereinto she was changed.

THESE are the Interpretations, which arise from the various Significations of the Words; and, in order to know which Sense we are to embrace, our Business must be to consider, whose Arguments and Testimony, in this Case, are of greatest Weight.

Arguments for the figurative.

THOSE, [f] that prefer the figurative Sense of the Words, do it, they say, for this Reason, because they are loth to multiply Miracles, where they see no Occasion. "It was enough for the Justice of God, and all indeed that the Angel seems to in-"timate, that this indiscreet Woman should suffer Death for her Dilatoriness; but "there needed no Miracle to accomplish this. Instead of being turned into a Pillar "of Salt, she might as well have been stupified with Fear, or suffocated by some "bituminous

" bituminous and ſulphureous Vapour. When ſhe ſaw her Native Country deſtroyed " by Fire from Heaven, heard the Clouds roar, and felt the Ground tremble under " her Feet; and, at the ſame Time, recollected in her Mind the ſad Deſtiny, that " befel all her Friends and Relations, except her Huſband and two Daughters; what " Wonder is it, if Grief and Fear ſo poſſeſſed her Spirits, that ſhe immediately ex- " pired, or at leaſt fainted away, and, having none to aſſiſt her in that Deliquium, " died upon the Spot. Or if we ſuppoſe, that the Woman did not only ſtop, and " turn her Eyes to her Native Country, but (as ſoon as the Angels were gone) went " back to behold the burning of it nearer, and ſo was ſuffocated by ſome poiſonous " Vapour, (as Pliny the Elder was, when his Curioſity led him too near the Mountain " Veſuvius) this is a Conjecture, that the Words of our bleſſed Saviour ſeem not to " diſcountenance; who, in the Deſcription of the Suddenneſs of the Deſtruction of " Jeruſalem, giving his Diſciples this Advice, [h] he that is in the Field let him not " return back, immediately ſubjoins, by Way of Example, Remember Lot's Wife; " whereby he ſeems to intimate, that ſhe returned back, and approaching too near " the deſecrated Place, periſhed in the common Conflagration. Thus, whether we " ſuppoſe that the Woman was ſtupified by Fear, or ſuffocated by Vapours, her " Death ſeems more natural, and anſwers the Divine Purpoſe of puniſhing her as " well, as if we ſhould deviſe the prodigious Event of her being turned into a Pillar " of Salt, which hardly any Reaſon can be given for; which we cannot ſay with " Certainty ever yet was ſeen; and which could not, without a Miracle, have been " preſerved ſo long,"

THOSE, that adhere to the literal Senſe of the Words, argue in this Manner: That the Vale of Siddim, [i] where Sodom and the other Cities ſtood, was originally a very fruitful Soil, (as moſt bituminous Countries are) which induced Lot to make Choice of it for the Paſturage of his Cattle, but is at preſent the very Reverſe, a poor barren Land, full of Sulphur [k] and Salt-Pits; and hence they infer, that all the ſulphureous and ſaline Matter, which is found in this Tract of Ground now, was the Effect of Divine Vengeance, and ſhowered down upon it, in that Day, when God deſtroyed Sodom and the neighbouring Cities. They ſuppoſe therefore, [l] that this Woman, ſtanding ſtill too long to behold the Deſtruction of her Country, [m] ſome of that dreadful Shower, in the Manner of great Fleaks of Snow, fell upon her, and, clinging to her Body, wrapped it all over, as it were, in a Sheet of Nitro-ſulphureous Matter, which congealed into a Cruſt, as hard as a Stone, and made her appear like a Statue, or Pillar of [n] Metallick Salt, having her Body incloſed, and, as it were, candied all over with it. and for the literal Senſe.

IN this Manner they ſuppoſe this miraculous Event might have come to paſs; and, for the Truth and Reality of the Thing, they produce the Teſtimony of the Author of the Book of Wiſdom, who makes Mention [o] of a ſtanding Pillar of Salt, as a Monument of an unbelieving Soul, and the Authority of the Seventy Interpreters, who expreſsly render it ſo. Among Jewiſh Authors, they produce the Words of [p] Joſephus, who tells us, that Lot's Wife, in her Flight, caſting her Eyes perpetually back upon the City, and being too much concerned about it, tho' God had forbid her ſo to do, was turned into a Pillar of Salt: I have beheld it myſelf, and it continues to this Day: And, among Chriſtian, thoſe of Clemens, in his Epiſtle to the Corinthians, where he tells us, that his Wife went out along with him, but being of a different Opinion, and not perſiſting in Concord with him, ſhe was therefore placed for a Sign, and continues a Statue of Salt to this very Day.

THE Accounts which modern Hiſtorians and Travellers give us of this Matter are ſo very different and uncertain, that we cannot ſo well tell where to fix our Belief. Brocardus, in his Deſcription of the Holy Land, tells us, that he gave himſelf the Fatigue of a very troubleſome Journey, to behold this Statue, but was not ſo happy as to ſatisfy his Curioſity; for the Inhabitants aſſured him, that the Place was inacceſſible, or could not be viſited without apparent Danger of Death, [h] Luke xvii. 31, 32. [i] Wells's Geography. [k] The whole Land of Jewry is furniſhed with Salt from hence. Heylin's Coſmography. [l] Patrick's Commentary. [m] Aben Ezra is of Opinion, that Lot's Wife was burnt with Fire, which had ſome Salt mixed with it; ſo that ſhe was, as it were, ſeaſoned by that Salt: For he endeavours to prove, that Salt fell down from Heaven with the Fire; which was likewiſe the Sentiment of H. Grotius, from Deut. xxix. 23. [n] Interpreters have obſerved to us, that we muſt not take the Salt, here mentioned, for common Salt, which Water ſoon diſſolves, and could not poſſibly continue ſo long, being expoſed to the Wind and Rain; but for Metallick Salt, which was hewn out of the Rock, like Marble, and made Uſe of in building Houſes, according to the Teſtimony of ſeveral Authors. Watſii Miſcell. Tom. II. and Howell's Hiſtory of the Bible. [o] Wiſd. x. 7. [p] Antiq. Lib. I. c. 12.

because of the prodigious Beasts and Serpents that abounded there; but, more especially, because of the Biduini, who dwell near the Place, and were a very savage and inhumane Sort of People: And yet, if we will believe [q] other Writers of this Kind, they tell us expresly, that there is still some Part of it extant and plain to be seen, between Mount Engaddi and the Dead-Sea. We will suppose however for once, (among [r] many other fabulous Things) that the long Duration of this Monument is an Imposition of the Inhabitants upon the Credulity of Strangers, yet it will not therefore follow, that there was never any such Thing in Being, unless we can think it inconsistent with the Nature of God to work a Miracle for the Punishment of that Woman. Miracles indeed are not to be multiplied, unless there be Occasion for it: But where the plain Sense of the Words leads us to such a Construction, 'tis a Niceness, I think, no Way commendable, to endeavour to find out another, merely for the Sake of avoiding the Miraculousness of the Fact; as if the Scripture were more valuable for containing nothing but obvious Things, or the Majesty of God any Way magnified, by seeming to exert as little of its omnipotent Power as possible. The short of the Matter is this, we have a clear Account in a Book, full of Wonders, [s] of a Woman, confusedly guilty of Disobedience and Ingratitude, struck dead by the Hand of God, and turned into a Statue of Salt, for a Monument of Terror to future Generations: And is there any Thing in this so repugnant to Reason, or incongruous for God to do, that we must immediately flee to another Interpretation, and, to make the Matter easy, resolutely maintain that the whole Purport of the Thing is only this, that the poor Woman either suddenly died in a Fright, or indiscreetly fell into the Fire? May not God alter the Course of Nature, and work a Miracle when he pleases? May not he punish those, that have offended him, in what Manner he thinks fit? Is there any more Wonderfulness in metamorphosing of Lot's Wife, than there was in changing the Rod of Moses into a Serpent? The same Power might do both; and since the same History has recorded both, there is the same Reason for the Credibility of both. Nay, of the two, the Transformation of Lot's Wife seems more familiar to our Conceptions, since we want not Instances, in History, of Persons struck with Lightning, or killed with cold Vapours, that have immediately been hardened, like a Piece of Marble. Instead of disputing the Fact therefore, our best Way will be, to make a wise Improvement of it, and so to remember Lot's Wife, as to withdraw ourselves, as speedily as we can, from the Danger and Infection of evil Company; and, when we have made our Escape, never to return again, so much as in our Heart and Affections, lest we be involved in the Punishment of their Crimes.

Its Reality allowed.

[q] On the West Side of the Sea is a small Promontory, near which (as our Guide told us) stood the Monument of Lot's metamorphosed Wife; Part of which (if they may be credited) is visible at this Day. Mr Maundrell's Journey from Aleppo to Jerusalem.

[r] Whether it was Tertullian, or St Cyprian, that was the Author of these Verses, but the Poet has run together several portentous Things:

In fragilem mutata salem stetit illa, Sepulchrum
Ipsaque Imago sui, formam sine Corpore servans.
Durant adhuc etenim nudâ statione sub Æthram,
Nec Pluviis dilapsa situ, nec diruta ventis.
Quin etiam siquis mutilaverit advena Formam,
Protinus ex sese suggestu vulnera complet.

Munificos solito dispungere sanguine Menses.——— Watsii Miscell. Sacra, Tom. II.

[s] Watsius, ibid. Bisselius, in his Argonaut. Americ. Lib. XIV. c. 2. has a very remarkable Story to this Purpose; he tells us, that Badicrus Almagrus, who was the first Man that ever march'd an Army over the Mountains between Peru and Chili, by the Extremity of the Cold, and Unwholsomeness of the Air, lost, in that Expedition, a great many Men: Being obliged however, some five Months after, to return the same Way, what the Historian tells us, upon this Occasion, is almost incredible: Stabant adhuc Equites peditesque, qui quinto ante mense obriguerant; immoti, inconsumpti, situ, formâ, habitu, quo repentina pestis quemque alligaverat. Alius pronus, humi stratus; alius rectus; non nemo videbatur inserta manibus frena quassare. Ad summam, invenit eos tales, quales reliquerat: Odore nullo tetro, colore non solito Funeribus; ac, nisi quod Anima dudum intercidisset, cætera spirantibus quàm extinctis similiores. Which is enough to convince us, that there is nothing so extraordinary in what the History tells us of Lot's Wife, as to make us have Recourse to a forc'd Interpretation.

SECT.

SECT. II.

Of ISAAC and JACOB.

Of the World, 2192, &c. Before Christ, 1812, &c.

AFTER the Death of Abraham, which happened in the 175th Year of his Age, Moſes proceeds to the Hiſtory of Iſaac; but of him the moſt material Thing that he has to ſay, is, that he married a Wife [t] out of his Father's Kindred and Country, by whom he had two Sons, that were Twins; Eſau, whoſe Poſterity, called Edomites, dwelt in the South Border of Canaan, viz. Idumea; and Jacob, who, though younger, was deſigned by God to inherit the Promiſe; and was therefore permitted to get the Birth-right from his elder Brother, and the Bleſſing from his Father; and the Manner in which he accompliſhed both, is thus related by the holy Penman: [u] Eſau and Jacob being now grown to Man's Eſtate, it happened, one Day, that Eſau, having fatigued himſelf extremely in the Field, came fainting to Jacob, who, at that very Time, had juſt made ſome Pottage of Lentils, [x] which happened to be of a reddiſh Colour. Eſau ſeeing the Pottage, and being very hungry, deſired his Brother to let him eat with him, and, in order to move his Compaſſion, told him, he was ready to faint: But Jacob knew how to take Advantage of his Brother's Neceſſity; and therefore, to inflame his Deſire, and make him more fond of the Bargain by Delays, he propoſed to him to ſell his Birth-right. Eſau, through Eagerneſs of Appetite, not conſidering the Advantage of the Thing, but only conſulting his preſent Neceſſity, careleſſly anſwered, [y] Behold I am ready to die, and what Profit ſhall this Birth-right do me? Whereupon Jacob, finding him ſo diſpoſed, was not content with his Word, but, to make the Bargain ſure, would not part with his Pottage, till he had obliged his Brother to confirm it with an Oath; which Eſau never ſcrupled, and ſo parted with his Birth-right, together with all the excellent Privileges belonging to it, for a Meſs of Pottage; for which he is accounted, [z] by the Apoſtle, a profane Perſon; as well he might, if the Advantages he parted with, were ſuch as theſe, viz. that the Firſt-born of the Family [a] was called to the Prieſthood, and conſecrated to God; during his Parents Life, [b] was next in Honour and Dignity to them; and, at their Deceaſe, [c] had a double Proportion of the Inheritance; [d] ſucceeded to the Government of the Family or Kingdom; and was [e] intitled to the Promiſe of the Meſſiah, to be born of his Race.

Jacob purchaſes the Birth-right of his Brother.

IF theſe were the Rights of Primogeniture, Eſau was certainly culpable, for parting with them upon any Conſideration whatever; but then neither is Jacob to be excuſed, who, taking the Advantage of his Brother's Hunger, over-reached him in the Bargain, and got that for a Trifle, which he knew to be of inеſtimable Value. There is ſomething ſo inhumane in denying an hungry Perſon a little Victuals; ſomething ſo ſelfiſh in expecting a Price, and an exorbitant Price too, from one's own Brother, for a Meſs of Pottage, that (to give you the Senſe [f] of a great Commentator upon the Text) the one's covetous Method of attaining is not much better, than the other's ſupine Negligence in relinquiſhing this Benefit. The only Thing that can be ſaid in Favour of Jacob, (tho' it be ſaid without any poſitive or direct Proof) is, [g] that he acted by ſpecial Direction from God, who, as ſole Lord and Proprietor of all Things, can transfer human Rights as he pleaſes; and that Eſau, who had no ſuch Direction, acted, in this Particular, without Authority, and againſt the Order of Nature, which had inveſted him with the Birth-right. The Whole therefore is to be reſolved into the ſole Will and Appointment of God; but neither could that be ſo well pleaded, [h] but that we have Reaſon to ſuppoſe, that Moſes, who is ſo very conciſe in his Account of Things, has left out many Circumſtances, which might be of Uſe to clear up the Patriarch's Conduct, and to give us a different Notion of this, as well as of another Action of the like Nature.

Both cenſured for it.

Supplants him in his Father's Bleſſing.

HIS Father Iſaac, [i] being now grown old, and, by the Decay of Nature, deprived of his Eye-ſight, was deſirous to beſtow his Paternal Bleſſing upon his Family, before he died; and, to this Purpoſe, [k] ordered his Son Eſau to go out into the Field, and kill him ſome Veniſon, and thereof to make him a ſavoury Diſh, ſuch as might raiſe his feeble Spirits, and enable him to deliver his laſt and ſolemn Benediction with a ſuitable Pathos. The laſt Benedictions of theſe extraordinary Men of Old (beſides [l] being Forms of conveying their Eſtates, and making thoſe their Heirs, upon whom they beſtow'd ſuch Bleſſings) were likewiſe prophetical Oracles, ſuch as denoted infallible Events, and extended to the moſt remote Periods of Time: And therefore we need leſs wonder, that we find Rebekah, who always loved Jacob beſt, endeavouring to divert this important Boon to the Profit and Intereſt of her favourite Son, though we cannot ſo much admire the Method, ſhe made uſe of, to attain her End. The moſt candid Conſtruction is, [m] that Iſaac had forgot, though Rebekah remembered, the Prophecies, which were made concerning their two Sons, (that [n] the Elder ſhould ſerve the Younger) even before they were born; and therefore ſhe only endeavoured to bring her Huſband to do that unwittingly, which God had pre-ordained was to be done, but what ſhe knew her Huſband would not do knowingly, without much Uneaſineſs: And to this Purpoſe ſhe adviſed Jacob, by all Means, to get the Start of his Brother, and to preſent his Father with ſuch ſavoury Meat, as ſhe could make out of the tendereſt Part of a Kid, and prepare it in ſuch a Manner, as would paſs upon the good old Man for Veniſon. The only Impediment to this her Contrivance was, the different Complexion of theſe two Brothers, [o] the one being very hairy, the other a ſmooth Man; and therefore, to obviate this Inconvenience, ſhe covered Jacob's Hands with the Skins of Kids (which [p] in Eaſtern Countries have Hair, not unlike what grows on human Bodies) and ſo ſent him in, to deceive his Father, and intercept the Bleſſing from his Brother.

Jacob and Rebekah cenſured.

THE Plot ſucceeded; but we muſt own ingenuouſly, that Rebekah was guilty of a Crime, in ſuggeſting ſuch wicked Advice to her Son; and that Jacob committed another, in permitting himſelf to be ſeduced by ſo bad a Monitor; that both of them preſumed to limit the Power of God, by thinking that a Complication of Frauds was neceſſary for the fulfilling a Divine Prophecy; and that tho' he was pleaſed to ratify a Bleſſing, which, by being extorted after ſuch a Manner, made him, who received it, unworthy of it; yet this he did for his own Name's ſake, (as he ſays upon ſundry like Occaſions) and to confirm his Purpoſe and Decree, that in the Line of Jacob all the Families of the Earth ſhould be bleſſed. In ſhort, [q] how excuſable ſoever Jacob may be ſuppoſed upon the Right of Primogeniture, which was fairly tranſferred to him by Bargain; yet, when he tells a poſitive Lye, in averring himſelf to be the Man he really was not, there is no Apology to be made for him; and tho' he obtained the Bleſſing by ſuch Ways and Means, as if they may be excuſed in him, or he in uſing them, on Account that God had appointed the Bleſſing to him; yet are they not to be imitated, or drawn into Example by any other. Which they would do well to conſider, who propoſe the whole Scripture, and every Part thereof, without Diſtinction, for a ſtanding Rule both of Faith and Manners to all Believers, in all Ages.

Iſaac's Bleſſing to Jacob.

BUT to continue our Story. Deceived by theſe Stratagems, and perſuaded by the many falſe Aſſurances, that Jacob had given him, the Patriarch proceeds to pronounce over his younger Son the Bleſſing, which he had reſerved for the Elder. He wiſhes, or rather prophetically promiſes Jacob, 1. Abundance of Wealth; [r] God give thee of the Dew of Heaven, and the Fatneſs of the Earth, and Plenty of Corn and Wine. 2. Dominion and Empire; Let People ſerve thee, and Nations bow down before thee. 3. A Superiority over the reſt of his Family; Let thy Mother's Son bow down to thee. And, 4. Proſperity to his Friends, and Confuſion to his Foes; Curſed be every one, that curſeth thee, and bleſſed be every one, that bleſſeth thee.

SCARCE had the good Patriarch made an End of his good Wiſhes, when Eſau, returning from Hunting, brought him ſome Veniſon, and aſking his Father to riſe and eat thereof, put him in a great Diſorder and Surprize, when he found that his younger Brother had been there, and deceived him. It might reaſonably be expected, that the Patriarch, under ſuch Provocation, might have recalled his Bleſſing, and beſtowed it upon Eſau, where he firſt intended it: But the [s] Jews have a Tradition, that Hell

[i] An hundred thirty and ſeven Years old, as many have demonſtrated. [k] Gen. xvii. [l] Patrick's Commentary. [m] Saurin's Diſſertations, and Howell's Hiſtory of the Bible. [n] Gen. xxv. 23. Hell opened its Mouth before his Eyes, and, by the Dreadfulneſs of the Proſpect, hindered him from pronouncing Predictions, contrary to the Will of Heaven. The more rational Conjecture is, that ſome ſupernatural Inſpiration over-ruled the Intentions of Iſaac, and therefore ſome Interpreters have thought, that by [t] Iſaac's trembling very exceedingly, we are to underſtand, [u] that he fell into a Trance, and therein received Inſtructions what to do.

To make Eſau however ſome Amends for what his Brother had beguiled him of, and to Eſau. he likewiſe gives him a Bleſſing; but, [x] according to the Vulgar Tranſlation) the firſt Clauſe of it eſpecially ſeems to have too great an Affinity with what he had given Jacob before, and therefore, (conſidering Iſaac's Apology, [y] What ſhall I do for thee, my Son? Thy Brother I have made thy Lord, and with Corn and Wine have I ſuſtained him) it may more conſiſtently be rendered, I think, [z] thy Dwelling ſhall be WITHOUT the Fatneſs of the Earth, and the Dew of Heaven; for this certainly connects better with what follows, by the Sword thou ſhalt live, and ſerve thy Brother; but, in Time, ſhalt thyſelf obtain Dominion, and ſhake his Yoke from off thy Neck. The whole indeed is a Prediction, rather than a Bleſſing; and was exactly verified in the Poſterity of Eſau. Idumea, [a] the Place where they dwelt, was a barren and mountainous Country; the Inhabitants, a bold and warlike People; [b] in the Reign of King David, they were ſubjected to the Jews; [c] but, in Jehoram's Time, they began to ſhake off the Yoke: For the Space of eight hundred Years they lived in a Kind of Independency, [d] till Hircanus again ſubdued them; but, in the Reign of [e] King Herod, (who himſelf was an Edomite, and whoſe Poſterity poſſeſſed the Throne for a Century and an half) they regained their Liberty, if not a Superiority over the Jews.

ESAU had conceived ſuch Hatred againſt his Brother for ſupplanting him theſe two Times, both in the Birth-right and in the Benediction, that he reſolved to be revenged; and, ſuppoſing that his Father would not live long, intended, as ſoon as he was dead, to murther him. But his Mother Rebekah, being apprized of his Deſign, acquainted Jacob with it, adviſing him to make the beſt of his Way to his Uncle Laban at Haran; and (to cover the Thing) ſhe pretended to her Huſband a mighty Uneaſineſs, for Fear leſt Jacob ſhould marry into an unbelieving Family, as Eſau had done already. The Contrivance, in ſhort, was ſo managed, that the Patriarch willingly parted with his Son, after he had renewed and confirmed the Bleſſing, he had given him before; and his Mother took Care to ſend him away privately for Fear of ſome Miſchief from his Brother's Malice.

Jacob's Ladder, and the Reaſon of the Viſion.

To form a right Notion of Jacob's Condition at this Time, and the Protection of Heaven extended to him, we muſt imagine, that we ſaw the Heir of a powerful Family, taking his Leave of his aged Parents, and, for Fear of his angry Brother, departing from his Father's Houſe; beginning a Journey of four hundred and fifty Miles, into a ſtrange Country, all alone, on Foot, and without any Servant to attend him; walking all the Day with a penſive Heart, and forced, at Night, to take up his Lodging in the open Air, with the Sky for his Canopy, and nothing better than an hard Stone for his Pillow. To ſuppoſe Jacob in this Caſe, I ſay, we ſhall ſoon perceive the Reaſon why he had the Repreſentation made to him in a Dream, [f] of a Ladder, reaching from Earth to Heaven, and the Angels of God aſcending and deſcending on it.

THE Ladder (according to the Senſe of the beſt [g] Interpreters) is an Emblem of Divine Providence, which governs all Things; its being ſet upon the Earth, denotes the Stedfaſtneſs of Providence, which nothing is able to unſettle; its reaching up to Heaven, ſignifies its Univerſality, or that it extends to all Things; the ſeveral Steps of the Ladder, are the Motions and Actions of Providence; the Angels going up and down, ſhew, that they are the great Miniſters of Providence, never idle, but always employed in the Preſervation of the Juſt; their aſcending, means their going up to receive the Divine Orders and Commands; and their deſcending, their coming down upon Earth, to put them in Execution. So that, in this Hieroglyphick, God ſignified to Jacob, now full of Cares and uneaſy Apprehenſions, that the Man, who was under the Care and Protection of Divine Providence, wanted not Company, in a Wilderneſs; wanted not Security, in the Midſt of Dangers; wanted not Direction, in his moſt difficult and momentous Undertakings, ſince there were ſo many miniſtring Spirits, holding Why God reveals himſelf in Dreams.

DREAMS and nocturnal Viſions were common Ways of God's revealing himſelf to the Patriarchs of old; [i] whether it was to convince them of his Omnipreſence, that he was about their Beds, and about their Paths, and ſpied out all their Ways; or to inform them of his conſtant Care, and that he was not unmindful of them, even when they little thought of him, and were moſt abſent from themſelves; to convince them of his unlimited Power over their Souls, when even Sleep itſelf could not hinder his Acceſs to them; or that the Mind, in the Dead and Silence of the Night, was fitter to receive Divine Impreſſions, when Nature was huſh, and the Paſſions aſleep, and no Variety of Thoughts to diſtract its Attention. However this be, the Repreſentation of the Ladder, [k] and the comfortable Words, which God ſpake from the Top of it, made ſuch a lively Impreſſion upon Jacob, that he proceeded on his Journey with Chearfulneſs, after he had performed his Devotions, and made this ſolemn Vow and Proteſtation; [l] If God will be with me, and keep me in this Way that I go, and give me Bread to eat, and Raiment to put on, ſo that I come again to my Father's Houſe in Peace, then ſhall the Lord be my God. He went; he married; he proſpered; [m] the Man increaſed exceedingly, and had much Cattle, and Maid-Servants, and Men-Servants, and Camels, and Aſſes. But, as he returned Home, hearing that his Brother Eſau, with four hundred Men, was coming out againſt him, his Heart began to fail him. To fight, his Forces were too weak; to flee, his Retinue was too cumberſome, and therefore he took the Method, which Prudence ſuggeſted; firſt to implore the Divine Aſſiſtance, and then to endeavour to pacify his Brother with a Preſent. His Prayer was offered up, his Preſent was ſent, when [n] Jacob, being left alone (as Moſes has given us the Account) there wreſtled a Man with him, until the breaking of the Day. But who this Man was, or what the Intent of this myſtical Action might be, has been a Matter of ſome Perplexity to Interpreters.

Jacob's Wreſtling.

Who it was with.

• ORIGEN, I think, is a little ſingular, and no Way to be juſtified in his Conceit, when he tells us, that the Perſon, with whom Jacob wreſtled, was an evil Angel; in Alluſion to which he thinks that the Apoſtle grounds his Exhortation; [p] Finally, my Brethren, be ſtrong in the Lord, and in the Power of his Might, for we wreſtle not againſt Fleſh and Blood, but againſt Principalities, againſt Powers, againſt the Rulers of Darkneſs in this World, and againſt ſpiritual Wickedneſs in high Places. But that Jacob, [q] who, at this Time, was under the more immediate Protection of Heaven, ſhould be ſubmitted to the Aſſaults of a wicked Angel, much more, that ſo good a Man, as Jacob, ſhould aſk a Bleſſing of an evil Spirit; ſhould merit the Name of Iſrael, i. e. a Conqueror of the Mighty God, for overcoming ſuch an one, or call the Place of Combat, Peniel, i. e. the Face of God, in Commemoration of his Conflict with ſuch an one, is a very abſurd, if not impious Suggeſtion.

'TIS the general Opinion of the Jewiſh Doctors, that the Perſon, with whom Jacob contended, was a good Angel; and as their ſettled Notion is, that theſe heavenly Spirits ſing every Morning the Praiſes of God, at the Approach of Day; [r] ſo the Requeſt, which this Antagoniſt makes, [s] let me go, for the Day breaketh, denotes him to be one of the Angelick Hoſt, who had ſtayed his prefixed Time, and was now in haſte to be gone, in order to join the heavenly Choir. The Prophet [t] Hoſea, I think, has determined the Matter very plainly, when, ſpeaking of Jacob, he tells us, that he took his Brother by the Heel in the Womb, and by his Strength he had Power with God, yea he had Power over the Angel, and prevailed; but then the Queſtion is, whether it was a Created Angel, as moſt of the Jewiſh Doctors maintain, or [u] an Uncreated Angel, i. e. the Son of God in the Appearance of an Angel, as ſeveral both ancient and modern Divines have thought. It was the received Opinion in the firſt Ages of the Church, that where-ever we find Mention of God's appearing to [u] The Son of God, ſays Tertullian, is ſtiled an Angel or Meſſenger, not as a Name deſigning his Nature, but his Office; and they are ſuperficially ſkilled in Philo the Jew, who know not, that he calls the Logos both God's Image and his Angel. Juſtin Martyr alſo ſhews to Trypho the Jew, that the God, who appeared to Abraham, was the Miniſter of the univerſal Creator; and he gives this as a Reaſon, why the WORD is called an Angel, viz. that he may be known to be the Miniſter and Subſtitute of the Father of all Things. Tenniſon, of Idolatry.

to the Patriarchs of old, the Action muſt be aſcribed to the LOGOS, or ſecond Perſon in the ever-bleſſed Trinity. [x] Thus, of the three, which appeared in human Shape to Abraham, the Perſon to whom he perſonally addreſſes himſelf, calling him his Lord, is rightly ſuppoſed to be the Son of God, attended then only with two Angels; and for the ſame Reaſons, that we produced in Confutation of Origen's vain Conceit, the Man, that here ſtrove with, and bleſſed Jacob, was the ſame Divine Perſon, but unattended by any Angel, and cloathed in an human Shape, the better to convince the Patriarch of the Unreaſonableneſs of his Fear and Diſtruſt. For, we muſt remember, [y] that when God made any Promiſe to the ancient Believers, gave them any Command, which they were to impart to others, or was minded to convince them of certain Truths, which they were either ignorant or diffident of before; he generally made Uſe of ſome viſible Sign or Token (as the Manner of the Oriental People was) to the End, that, their Imagination being more ſtrongly affected by ſuch Objects, they might more firmly believe the Truth, or more gladly receive the Promiſe, or more emphatically deliver the Command, which God communicated to them. Now this was the preſent Condition, that Jacob was in: He had offended his Brother Eſau in ſupplanting him, nor had twenty Years Abſence aſſuaged his Rage: His Brother Eſau, he underſtood, was coming out againſt him with four hundred armed Men; and what to do in ſuch Circumſtances he knew not. Under this Perplexity of Mind, a Perſon comes to him, wreſtles with him, and lets him obtain the Victory; and then tells him the Meaning of this Emblematical Action, as the Vulgar Latin (which is the cleareſt Tranſlation) expreſſes it, if thou haſt been ſtrong againſt God, how much more ſhalt thou prevail with Men? And accordingly, Joſephus informs us, [z] that Jacob conſidered the Victory, he now obtained, as an Omen of great Happineſs, and as an Aſſurance to his Poſterity, that no human Force ſhould overcome them.

Why they wreſtled.

THERE is one Paſſage more, wherein this Patriarch is concerned, and a very remarkable Inſtance it is of the Divine Love and Eſteem for him, and that is, the Revelation, which God vouchſafed him, of the particular Time, when the Saviour of Mankind, who was to ſpring from his Loins, was to make his Appearance in the World; which Jacob, in the Benediction he beſtows upon his Son Judah, is ſuppoſed to expreſs in theſe Words: [a] The Scepter ſhall not depart from Judah, nor a Law-giver from between his Feet, until SHILOH come; and unto him ſhall the Gathering of the People be. But becauſe the Prophecy is ſuppoſed to have its Difficulties, it will be proper to explain its Terms, in order to diſcover the true Senſe and Meaning of it.

Of the World, 2315, &c. Before Chriſt, 1689, &c.

Jacob's Prophecy of the Scepter explained.

THE Word (Schebet) which we render Scepter, has both a literal and figurative Signification. [b] In its literal, it denotes a Rod, a Wand, a Scepter, a Shepherd's Crook, &c. and in its figurative, it either implies that Correction and Puniſhment, whereof the Rod, or that Authority and Kingly Power, whereof the Scepter is the Enſign. It cannot be doubted, I think, but that the Words are to be taken in a figurative Senſe here; and yet it cannot be ſuppoſed to ſignify Puniſhment, [c] becauſe the Tribe of Judah was ſo far from being in a State of Affliction, that it always flouriſhed exceedingly, and was honoured with many high Privileges above the reſt of the Tribes: It muſt therefore, in this Place, be put for regal Power and Dominion, whereof the Scepter, [d] in ancient Times, was thought a fitter Repreſentation, than either the Crown or Diadem. 2. The Word (Mechokek) which we render Lawgiver, is not ſynonymous with the former, but has two diſtinct Significations. [e] It ſometimes ſignifies, not a Perſon, that has Power to make Laws himſelf, but only to teach and inſtruct others in thoſe, that are already made; and in this Senſe, it differs very little from the Scribes, and Doctors, and Teachers of the Law, which we find ſo much Mention made of, in our Saviour's Time. At other Times, it denotes a Perſon inveſted with Power and Authority even to make Laws, [f] but then this Authority of his is inferior to that of a King; ſo that properly he may be called an inferior Magiſtrate or Governor, ſet over a People by the Licence of ſome Monarch, and by his Commiſſion appointed to rule. And in this Senſe the Word ſhould the rather be taken here, becauſe there were ſuch Governors and Deputies ſet over the Jews, after their Return from the Babylonian Captivity. 3. The Phraſe which we render render from between the Feet, [g] according to the Modeſty of the Scripture Expreſſion, means nothing elſe, but of his Seed and Poſterity; and whatever the Original of the Word Shiloh may be, (which ſome tranſlate [h] the Sent, the Son, the Seed; others quiet, peaceable, proſperous; and others again, the auguſt, the renowned, and the like) from which Radix ſoever, I ſay, the Word be derived, both Jews and Chriſtians are agreed in this, that by the Perſon, to whom this Title is applied, the Patriarch intended the Great Saviour of the World, who is called the Meſſias, or Chriſt. 4. By [i] Judah, there is not that Neceſſity to underſtand the People of that Tribe only, but all thoſe who were afterwards called Jews, even tho' they belonged to Benjamin or Levi; becauſe, after the Defection of the reſt from the Houſe of David, theſe two Tribes, joining themſelves to the other Tribe of Judah, were incorporated together, and uſually called the Houſe or Kingdom of Judah, in Oppoſition to that of Iſrael. 5. There is but one Expreſſion more, and unto him ſhall the Gathering of the People be; and herein there is no great Difficulty, ſince all are agreed, that it contains a Prophecy of the Converſion, or Obedience of the Gentiles to the Kingdom of Chriſt; [k] only, there is this to be obſerved, that, as the Word (ſhall, or ſhall be) is not in the Hebrew, it ought to be left out of the Tranſlation, and will make the Sentence run thus: The Scepter ſhall not depart from Judah, &c. until Shiloh come, and the Gathering of the People be to him. So that theſe two Events, the Coming of Chriſt, and the Converſion of the Gentiles, according to this Part of the Prophecy, were to precede the Subverſion of the Jewiſh Government.

IF then, by Shiloh, we are to underſtand the Meſſiah; by Judah, the People of the Jews; by the Scepter, the regal Power; and by the Lawgiver, a ſubordinate Magiſtrate or Governor; then may the full Senſe of Jacob's Prophecy be rendered in this ſhort Paraphraſe: "The Royal Power and Authority, which in Time to "come they ſhall enjoy, ſhall not be taken from them; or, at leaſt, they ſhall not "be deſtitute of Rulers and Governors, (tho' of an inferior Degree) even in their "moſt declining Condition, until the Meſſiah, and Saviour of Mankind, come into "the World: But, after he is come, then ſhall the Poſterity of Judah have neither "King nor Ruler of their own; for their whole Commonwealth ſhall be diſſolved, "and never recover itſelf again. The Nations, that were Aliens under former Diſ-"penſations, ſhall then become obedient to the Meſſiah, and be made Members of "his Myſtical Body, the Church, whoſe Boſom ſhall be open to receive all." [l] For the Mountain of the Houſe of the Lord (as it is explained in an after-Prophecy) ſhall be eſtabliſhed upon the Top of the Mountains, and it ſhall be exalted above the Hills, and the People ſhall flow unto it. This ſeems to be a genuine Senſe of the Words, and if we look into the State of the Hiſtory, during that Time, we ſhall find the Expoſition verified by the Event.

The full Senſe of it, and its Accompliſhment ſhewn from Hiſtory.

FROM the Time of David indeed, when the Scepter firſt came into the Tribe of Judah, to the Captivity of Babylon, which was four hundred and ſeventy Years, the Succeſſion of Kings in that Tribe was uninterrupted; but after the ſeventy Years of their Captivity was expired, tho' they lived by their own Laws, and in their own Country, [m] yet they had no abſolute and independent Authority of their own, but were, firſt, under the Perſian Monarchs, afterwards, upon the Conqueſt made by Alexander, under the Greeks, and after that, under the Kings of Aſia and Egypt, until they were at laſt brought under Subjection to the Roman Yoke.

IT muſt not be forgot however, that, all this while, that they were under the Dominion of others, they enjoyed Rulers and Governors, of their own, who adminiſtered their Affairs, by Way of Deputation from the ſeveral Monarchs, that held them in Subjection. The firſt of theſe Governors was Zerobabel, whom [n] the Prophet ſtiles a Captain, or Prince of Judah; and tho' the ſacred Hiſtory gives us no Account of his Succeſſors, yet, according to the [o] Jewiſh Tradition, there were two, viz. Meſhullum, the Son of Nehemiah, and Hananiah his Grandſon. Nehemiah came afterwards and executed the ſame Office; but, upon his Deceaſe, the Government came into the Hands of the High-Prieſts. The Sacerdotal Government, being always ſubordinate to ſome foreign Power or other, [p] ſubſiſted for above 400 Years; and in Simon's Time, who was called the Prince and Governor of the Jews, was raiſed to a very great Splendor, ſo that his Grandſon Ariſtobulus took Occaſion from thence to to aſſert the Title of a King, tho' he had but a Shadow of that Power. His Succeſſors, however, continued the Title, until Herod, obtaining the Kingdom of Judea from the Senate of Rome, ſtripped them of their Power, and deſtroyed their Family. After the Death of Herod [q] the Kingdom was divided by Auguſtus into Tetrarchies, giving Judea to Archelaus, and dividing the reſt of the Country between Philip and Antipas. But Archelaus, miſbehaving himſelf, was deprived of his Government; whereupon Judea was reduced into the Form of a Province, was ruled by Roman Prefects, and never after that enjoyed the Privilege of having either King or Governor of its own. The Jews at laſt were utterly deſtroyed by Titus; their City and Temple were burnt to the Ground; their Form of Government, both Civil and Eccleſiaſtical, quite extinct; and above ſeventeen hundred Years are now paſt and gone, ſince all this happened to them, and yet there is not the leaſt Sign of their Reſtoration.

The Whole ſummed up.

To determine then the particular Period of Time, when this Prediction came to be fulfilled, we may ſay, with great Juſtice, that tho' the Scepter, or regal Power, never properly returned, after the firſt Captivity; yet the Law-giver, or Government by Perſons of their own Nation, did not depart from the Jews, until their utter Exciſion by Titus. [r] The Gathering of the Gentiles, as well as the Coming of Shiloh, was to precede their Deprivation; but, at the Time of their firſt Subjection to the Roman Power by Pompey the Great, Shiloh was not come; at the Time of their being reduced to a Province under Archelaus, the Nations were not gathered unto him; but, at the final Subverſion of their State by Titus, when both theſe Things were come to paſs, (Chriſt come, and the Gentiles converted) then did the Law-giver (as the Scepter had done before) depart from Judah, and never ſince that Time has there either been any Form of Government, or Perſon inveſted with regal Authority among them. May the Senſe of this their Calamity and Diſperſion be a Means, in God's Hands, to open their Eyes, and turn their Hearts!

SECT. III.

Of JOSEPH and JOB.

Of the World, 2276, &c. Before Chriſt, 1728, &c.

OF all the Children, which Jacob had, [s] Joſeph was the deareſt to him, and that not only becauſe he was the eldeſt Son of his beloved Wife Rachel, but becauſe he was a Youth of a ſuperior Spirit and Capacity. The Love and Partiality of the Father, however, occaſioned ſuch Envy and Indignation in the reſt of the Brethren, that they once agreed in a Deſign to have murthered him; but, upon better Conſideration, thought it more adviſeable, [t] to ſell him, for a Slave, to a Company of Iſhmaelites, who were going with their Merchandize down into Egypt. The Preſervation and Protection of Joſeph in Egypt, in order to the ſuccouring his Father and Brethren, in a Time of Famine, is a rich Diſplay of the Goodneſs and Providence of God. [u] That Joſeph ſhould be hated and ſold by his Brethren to the Merchants, who were travelling into Egypt; that theſe Merchants ſhould diſpoſe of him, not to a private Perſon, but to a great Officer of the King's Court, which gave Occaſion to his future Promotion; that he ſhould be preferred and eſteemed by his Maſter, yet, after that, caſt into Priſon, and ſo (to all outward Appearance) rendered incapable of making any farther Figure in the World; that, during his Confinement, he ſhould interpret his Fellow-priſoners, the chief Baker's and Butler's Dreams, juſt as they came to paſs; and, in ſome conſiderable Time, be recommended to Pharaoh to interpret his Dream likewiſe, and by him advanced, and made Ruler over all the Kingdom: Here is ſuch a Variety of Scenes of Life, in the Compaſs of a few Years, as manifeſt the Divine Contrivance; and the Skill of his inſpired Penman, in painting ſome of theſe Scenes and their Incidents, is not unworthy of our Obſervation.

THE Lamentation, [x] which Jacob makes upon the ſuppoſed Loſs of his Son Joſeph; the Refuſal, [y] which Joſeph gives to the Requeſt and Enticement of his enamoured Miſtreſs; the Severity, [z] wherewith he ſeems to treat his timorous Brethren, and the Fear, Sorrow, and Self-Condemnation, [a] which all the while ariſes, and ſtruggles in their their Breasts; [b] Jacob's Denial to let Benjamin go, [c] and the Grief and Reluctancy, wherewith he is brought at last to consent; [d] Joseph's Enquiry concerning his Father's Health, and [e] the ready Notice he takes of his Brother Benjamin; [f] Judah's Confession of an unknown Crime, [g] his humble Representation of his sorrowful Case, and [h] generous Offer to become a Bond-slave in the room of his Brother, that his Father's grey Hairs might not go with Sorrow to the Grave, are all Master-strokes in their Kind, and related by Moses in a most inimitable Manner. What can be more affecting, than the Words of Joseph, upon the Discovery? [i] I am Joseph: Does my Father yet live? Come near to me, I pray you; I am Joseph, whom ye sold into Egypt. Now therefore be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves, that ye sold me hither; for God did send me before you to preserve Life. What can express more triumphant Joy, than those Words of Jacob, upon hearing the unexpected News? [k] It is enough, Joseph my Son is yet alive, I will go and see him before I die; or more Satisfaction than those upon the Interview? [l] Now let me die, since I have seen thy Face, because thou art yet alive. Never did any Author exceed Moses, in the easy and lively Way (as we call it) of painting and delineating Nature.

BUT our Business is not to pursue the sacred Writer thro' all the pathetick Passages of this Narration, nor can we consider Joseph in all the various Transactions of his Life: What this Patriarch was more especially remarkable for, was Dreams, and the Interpretation thereof; the one the Occasion of his Sufferings, and the other of his Exaltation; and therefore it may not be improper, in the first Place, to take some Notice of them.

Dreams natural, how occasioned.

DREAMS, [m] according to their common Distribution, are either Natural or Supernatural. Dreams that are Natural, arise from several Causes; the Temper and Constitution of our Bodies, the Crisis and Disposition of our Blood and Spirits, the Nature of the Meat we eat, and the Drink we drink, [n] nay, the Want, sometimes, of Meat to eat, and Drink to drink, contribute severally to produce them; but, above all, the Accidents and Occurrences of the Day, the Passions and Affections of the Mind, and [o] the Business and Employment of the Man's Life, are the Things that occasion nocturnal Images and Representations. And as they proceed from such a Variety of Causes, there can be no Dependence on them, nor any Foreknowledge of future Occurrences to be acquired from them; for which Reason the wise Son of Syrach gives us this Admonition concerning them, [p] Dreams lift up Fools ἀναπτερεῦσιν, says the Septuagint, add Wings to them, (as sometimes Men dream they fly) and make them vainly expect great Matters; whoso regardeth them is like him that catcheth at a Shadow, and followeth after the Wind; and thereupon he adds, if they be not sent from the Most High in thy Visitation, set not thine Heart upon them; for Dreams have deceived many, and have failed those who put their Trust in them.

Supernatural.

THE wise Man, however, acknowledges that Dreams are sometimes Supernatural, and sent from the Most High: And this, indeed, was so common a Means of Revelation among the Patriarchs of Old, and among the Jewish People afterwards, that there is no gainsaying it. [q] God speaketh once, yea twice, says Elihu in the Book of Job, in a Dream, in a Vision of the Night, when deep Sleep falleth upon Men, in Slumberings upon the Bed; for not only the peculiar People of God, [r] but even Pagans, and such as were Aliens to the Covenant, have been sometimes vouchsafed Divine Admonitions in their Dreams: To which Purpose Joseph observes to Pharaoh, that [s] God, by his Dreams, had shewn him what he was about to do; in like Manner, as Daniel does to Nebuchadnezzar, that [t] the Great God had made known to the King what was to come to pass hereafter.

[p] Eccl̃us. xxxiv. 1, &c. [q] Job xxxiii. 14, 15. [r] Empedocles, Pythagoras, and Plato, were of Opinion, that Dreams were sometimes sent by good Dæmons: They talk much of Θεῖοι Ὄνειροι: They fancied there was some one particular God, who was employed in sending them to Men, whom they therefore call Ὀνειροπομπός; though Homer ascribes them immediately to the Supreme Jupiter—Καὶ γὰρ τ' ὄναρ ἐκ Διός ἐστι, Iliad. I. [s] Gen. xli. 25. [t] Dan. ii. 29.

HOW Dreams, which were ſo common a Method of God's communicating himſelf to Mankind, come now to be ſuperſeded, can be no great Difficulty to us, who have it recorded in the Rule of Faith, that [u] God, who at ſundry Times, and in divers Manners, ſpake, in Times paſt, unto the Fathers, hath, in theſe laſt Days, ſpoken unto us by his Son. The full and compleat Manifeſtation of his Will, which he hath made to Mankind under the Goſpel, has taken away the Neceſſity of inferior Means; though it may not perhaps be amiſs to ſuppoſe, (as [x] a great Divine of our Church has done) that the Increaſe of Wickedneſs in the World, Multiplicity of Buſineſs, Sollicitude of Mind about Worldly Affairs, and Mens too much depending upon politick Devices to accompliſh their Ends, are in a great Meaſure the Cauſes of the Ceſſation of Divine Admonitions by true Dreams. It is not to be queſtioned however, but that, even in theſe Days and under this Diſpenſation, in great Exigencies, or very momentous Occurrences, under ſore Grievances, or very difficult Undertakings, God may ſtill comfort and encourage, direct and admoniſh, either by Words or viſible Repreſentations, good Men, in their Dreams. Why intermitted.

AND as Dreams very often proceed from God, and are ſometimes very Myſterious and Enigmatical; ſo the true Senſe and Interpretation of them can only be derived from the ſame Spirit, that produced them. To which Purpoſe we may obſerve, that Joſeph reminds Pharaoh of a Maxim, not unknown to the Egyptians before, viz. that the Art of Divination does not proceed from Men, but from God; or as Moſes makes him ſpeak, [y] It is not for me, God ſhall give Pharaoh an Anſwer of Peace: And having thus made Acknowledgment to Heaven for the Light and Underſtanding, which he received from thence, he gave the King the Explanation of two of his Dreams. He told him, that both of them prognoſticated the ſame Event, that the [z] Seven Fat Kine, and the Seven full Ears of Corn, implied ſeven Years of Plenty, which would begin preſently; and that the Seven Lean Kine, and the Seven withered Ears, denoted Seven Years of Famine, which would immediately ſucceed the former. The Emblems, 'tis owned, were natural enough: The full Ears did not improperly repreſent Plenty, as the withered did Famine: The Cow or Ox was a common Hieroglyphick, which the Egyptians made uſe of to ſignify Food and Agriculture; and the Nile, upon the Banks of which Pharaoh imagined he ſaw theſe Objects, was the general Cauſe, either of their Want or Plenty. But how reſemblant ſoever theſe Images might be, yet it certainly had been above the Power of any Man's Conjecture, to have applied them to ſo many Years of Plenty and Famine, had not the Spirit of God ſuggeſted it to him. Interpretation of Dreams, whence.

DANIEL makes the ſame Acknowledgement of Divine Inſpiration, when he comes to explain Nebuchadnezzar's Dream; [a] Art thou able, ſays the King, to make known unto me the Dream, which I have ſeen, and the Interpretation thereof? To which Daniel anſwers, The Secret, which the King hath demanded, cannot the Wiſe Men, the Aſtrologers, the Magicians, the Soothſayers ſhew unto the King, but there is a God in Heaven, that revealeth Secrets: And if we are minded to know by what Method he obtained that Revelation from Heaven, the inſpired Hiſtory has acquainted us farther, that it was by Prayer and Interceſſion; [b] Then Daniel went to his Houſe, and made the Thing known to Hananiah, Miſhael, and Azariah, his Companions, that they would deſire Mercies of the God of Heaven, concerning this Secret; and the Secret was revealed unto him in a Night-Viſion, for which he bleſſed the God of Heaven. From which Paſſage it ſeems reaſonable to imagine, that the Way of finding out the Meaning and Interpretation of a Dream, was not by deviſing any Rules of Art, or conſulting with Evil Spirits, (as it afterwards became a Practice among the Pagan Oneirocriticks) but by immediately addreſſing to God, who either, for that Time, made to them (in their Sleep) a freſh Repreſentation of the Thing wherein they were conſulted, together with its Explanation, as it was in the Caſe of Daniel; or gave them a permanent and inherent Power and Faculty of expounding Dreams, whenever they were propoſed to them, as it ſeems to have been in the Patriarch Joſeph; whoſe Renown for Divination was ſo great, even in the Heathen World, that the Abridger of Trogus Pompeius has given him a Character, (wherewith we conclude this Patriarch's Story) very much reſembling what we read of him in Scripture: [c] Joſeph, the Youngeſt of his Brethren, ſays he, had a Superiority of Genius, which made them fear him, and ſell him to foreign Merchants, who carried him into Egypt, where he practiſed the Magick Art with ſuch Succeſs, as rendered him very dear to the Joſeph's Character from Juſtin.

the King; he had a great Sagacity in the Explanation of Prodigies and Dreams; nor was there any Thing ſo abſtruſe, either in divine or human Knowledge, that he did not readily attain. He foretold a great Dearth, ſeveral Years before it happened, and prevented a Famine's falling upon Egypt, by adviſing the King to publiſh a Decree, requiring the People to make Proviſion for divers Years. His Knowledge, in ſhort, was ſo great, that the Egyptians liſtened to the Prophecies coming from his Mouth, as if they had proceeded not from Man, but God himſelf.

Job's Country, and when he lived.

NOT long after the Days of Joſeph, when the Children of Iſrael ſojourned in Egypt, there lived a Perſon of great Renown in the Land of Uz, [d] (which ſome place in Arabia Deſerta, and ſome elſewhere) whoſe Patience and Conſtancy under Affliction is largely recorded in Scripture, and recommended as a Pattern to all ſucceeding Generations. That Job lived in the Days of the Patriarchs, is very probable, from the long Duration of his Life, which, [e] continuing an hundred and forty Years after his Reſtoration, could hardly be leſs, in all, than two hundred. That he lived before the Law, may be gathered, from his Burnt-offerings, in the Land where he lived, both commanded and accepted by God, though ſuch Offerings were by the Law forbidden in any other Place, but that, which the [f] Lord had choſe in ſome one of the Tribes of Iſrael: And that he lived after Jacob, may be inferred from the Character given of him by God, [g] that there was none like him upon the Earth for Uprightneſs, and the Fear of God; which large Commendation could not have been allowed to any, while Jacob lived, who was God's favourite Servant, and deſcended from the Father of the Faithful in a direct Line; nor can it be ſuppoſed, that it was proper to be given, after Jacob, to any, while Joſeph lived, who, in moral Virtues, and other Excellencies, made as bright a Figure, as any in his Time.

[h] AFTER theſe Conjectures, though the preciſe Time of Job's Birth cannot, with ſufficient Ground, be aſcertained; yet there is a general Concurrence in Opinion, that he lived in the Time of the Children of Iſrael's Bondage, ſince his Birth is placed in the very ſame Year wherein Jacob went down into Egypt, and the Beginning of his Trial, in the Year when Joſeph died; though it might probably be leſs liable to Exception, if his Birth were ſet a little lower, much about the Time of Jacob's Death; and then Joſeph, who ſurvived his Father about four and fifty Years, will be dead about ſixteen Years; at which Time Job might juſtly deſerve the great Character, that is given of him, and have no Man then living, in Virtue and Integrity, his Equal or Competitor.

Job a real Perſon, and of what Family.

THAT Job was a real Perſon, * and not a fictitious Character, and his Story Matter of Fact, and not a parabolical Repreſentation, is manifeſt from [i] all thoſe Places in Scripture, where we find Mention made of him. His Name, his Quality, his Country, the Number of his Children, and Pedigree of his Friends, do all denote the Reality of his Hiſtory; though it muſt not be denied, that whoever compoſed it, has dilated and adorned his Narrative, to make it a more ſenſible and moving Inſtance of perfect Patience, and to give us more lively and particular Inſtructions of the Notions we are to entertain of Proſperity and Adverſity. His Family, however, is not ſo well agreed on, ſince ſome will have him to be deſcended from Terah, the Brother of Abraham; others from Eſau, the Brother of Jacob; and others (with more Probability)

* Though the learned Author of the Divine Legation of Moſes has taken a great deal of Pains to ſhew, that the Book of Job is certainly a Dramatick Compoſition; that, from ſeveral Alluſions and ſimilar Paſſages, it was written under the Diſpenſation of the Law; within a ſhort Time after the Return of the Jews from their Captivity, and not improbably by Ezra himſelf; yet nevertheleſs, he plainly acknowledges the real Exiſtence of this holy Patriarch, and the Truth of this exemplary Story; for, "It is a general Practice of Dramatick Writers, of the ſerious Kind, "to chuſe an illuſtrious Character, and well-known Story, in order to give the Piece its due Dignity and Efficacy; "and therefore, it by no Means follows, ſays he, that though we allow the Book of Job to be dramatical, the "Perſon and Hiſtory of Job ſhould be fictitious." Probability) from Abraham by Keturah his ſecond Wife; ſince he is ſaid [k] to have been the greateſt of all the Men in the Eaſt, into which Country Abraham ſent the Children, [l] which he had by that Woman.

His Wealth, Virtue, and Afflictions.

How conſiderable a Figure Job made in the World, both in temporal and ſpiritual Bleſſings, the Vaſtneſs of his Stock, [m] conſiſting of 7000 Sheep, 3000 Camels, 500 Yokes of Oxen, and 500 She-Aſſes; the Largeneſs of his Family, conſiſting of ſeven Sons and three Daughters; and the Excellency of the [n] Character, which God has been pleaſed to give him, is a ſufficient Demonſtration: And yet we ſee, that, as ſoon as God was pleaſed to ſubmit him to the Devil's Aſſaults, what a ſad Cataſtrophe befel him. The Sabeans ran away with his Aſſes; the Chaldeans plundered him of his Camels; a Fire from Heaven conſumed his Sheep and Servants; a Wind overwhelmed all his Children; and, while the Senſe of theſe Loſſes lay heavy upon his Spirits, his Body was ſmitten with a ſore Diſeaſe; inſomuch that he, who, but a few Hours before, was the greateſt Man in the Country, in whoſe Preſence [o] the young Men were afraid to appear, and before whom the aged ſtood up; to whom Princes paid the moſt awful Reverence, and whom Nobles, in humble Silence, admired; diveſted of all Honour, ſits mourning on a Bed of Aſhes, and, inſtead of royal Apparel, is overſpread with Sores and Ulcers. Nay, and to add, if poſſible, to the Weight of his Calamity, the Wife of his Boſom, from whom, more than all the World, he might expect ſome comfortable Aſſiſtance, inſtead of pitying him in his deplorable Condition, treats him with the utmoſt Scorn, and reproaches him with his Virtue, [p] doſt thou ſtill retain thine Integrity, curſe God and die.

His Conferences with his Friends.

The Misfortunes and Afflictions that befel Job were ſo remarkable, that they ſpread about the neighbouring Countries, and from thence, to more diſtant Regions, till at laſt they reached the Ears of his old Friends, Eliphaz the [q] Temanite, Bildad the [r] Shuhite, and Zophar the [s] Naamathite, who no ſooner heard of his ſad Condition, but they made an Appointment to go together, and pay him a Viſit, and comfort him. The unaccountable Greatneſs of his Calamities led them into a Miſconception of him, and made them ſuppoſe, that it muſt be the vindictive Hand of God, either for ſome deep Hypocriſy, or ſome ſecret Enormity, that fell ſo heavy upon him: And therefore Eliphaz, in three Orations, Bildad in as many, and Zophar in two, argue from common Topicks, that ſuch Afflictions as his could come from no Hands but God's, and that it was inconſiſtent with the Juſtice of God, to afflict without a Cauſe, or puniſh without Guilt; and thereupon charging Job with being a grievous Sinner, and a great Hypocrite, they endeavour, by all Means, to extort a Confeſſion from him. But Job, immoveable in his Sincerity to God, and Innocence to Man, confidently maintains his Virtue, in reſponſory Speeches to every one of theirs; refutes their unkind Suggeſtions, and reproves their Injuſtice and Want of Charity, but always obſerves a ſubmiſſive Stile and Reverence, when he comes to ſpeak of God, of whoſe ſecret End, in permitting this Trial to come upon him, being ignorant, he often importunately begs a Releaſe from Life, leſt the Continuance of his Pains ſhould drive him to Impatience.

During theſe Arguments between Job and his Friends, there was preſent a young Man named Elihu, [t] who having heard the Debates on both Sides, and diſliking both their Cenſoriouſneſs, and Job's Juſtification of himſelf, undertook to convince him, by Arguments drawn from God's unlimited Sovereignty, and unſearchable Wiſdom, that it was not inconſiſtent with his Juſtice, to lay his afflicting Hand upon the beſt and moſt righteous of Men; and that therefore, when any ſuch Thing came upon them, it was the Duty of all Men to bear it without murmuring, and to

The Ambiguity of the equivocal Word in the Hebrew, which ſignifies to bleſs, as well as curſe, has occaſioned great Diſagreement among Interpreters, who have thereupon given a quite different Conſtruction to the Words. They that make Job's Wife bid him curſe God and die, ſuppoſe, that Job lived after the Law was given, which made it [Lev. xxiv. 15, 16.] Death to curſe God; and that his Wife (an Arabian and Heathen) knowing the Law, and the Puniſhment for Blaſphemy, ſpake thus to him, not to reproach, but in Pity to him, that he might be delivered from his Pains. But all this Suppoſition is overthrown, if, according to the general Conſent, Job lived before the Delivery of the Law. Others therefore ſuppoſe, that ſince it was the Devil's Deſign to make Job curſe God, he inſtigated his Wife to perſuade her Huſband to it, not with Reſpect to any penal Law, (for that is ridiculous to imagine) but in Expectation, that ſo open and bold a Blaſphemy would provoke the Divine Juſtice immediately to ſtrike him dead, and thereby deliver him from his intolerable Miſeries. But however it was, 'tis certain, by Job's Anſwer, that ſhe gave him no good Advice, otherwiſe, ſo meek and good a Man would not have given her ſo ſharp a Reproof. Howell's Hiſtory of the Bible. acknowledge the Divine Goodneſs in every Diſpenſation. When every one had ſpoken what he thought proper, and there was now a general Silence in the Company, the Lord himſelf took up the Matter, [u] and, out of the Whirlwind directed his Speech to Job; wherein, with the higheſt Amplifications, deſcribing his Omnipotence, in the Formation and Diſpoſition of the Works of the Creation, he ſo effectually convinced him of his Inability to underſtand the Ways and Deſigns of God, that, with the profoundeſt Humility he breaks out into this Confeſſion and Acknowledgment, [x] Behold I am vile, what ſhall I anſwer thee? I will lay my Hand upon my Mouth: Once have I ſpoken, but I will not anſwer; yea twice, but I will proceed no farther; which Acknowledgment pleaſed God ſo very well, that he declared himſelf in Favour of Job againſt his injurious Friends; and thereupon put an End to his Sufferings, and rewarded his Faith and Piety with a larger Portion of Earthly Felicity, than he had before, and with the Prolongation of his Life, beyond the common Extent of thoſe Times.

SECT. IV.

Of MOSES, and his Miracles in EGYPT.

Of the World, 2433, &c. Before Chriſt, 1571, &c.

The King of Egypt who oppreſſed Iſrael.

AFTER the Death of Joſeph, the ſacred Hiſtory informs us, that [y] there aroſe up a new King over Egypt, which knew not Joſeph, who was either unacquainted with the Benefits, the Crown had received from his Service, or willing, upon Political Accounts, to overlook them, and to treat his Kindred with Severity. Who this King was, the Silence of Moſes, and the Defect of profane Hiſtory, has made it almoſt impoſſible for us to know; unleſs the Paſſage, which [z] Joſephus relates out of Manethon, the Egyptian Hiſtorian, may be ſuppoſed to give us any Intelligence. It tells us, that, under the Reign of Timaus, a great Army, compoſed of a People without any Name, came from the Eaſt, and made themſelves Maſters of Egypt; ſlew the Princes, burnt the Cities, deſtroyed the Temples, carried the Women and Children into Captivity, and made a Man of their own Nation, named Salatis, King. If this Piece of Hiſtory has any Foundation of Truth, then might the New King here mentioned poſſibly be this Salatis; and a Fear, leſt the Iſraelites might join with the Natives of Egypt, to drive out thoſe new Conquerors, might perhaps have occaſioned a great many Cruelties, both to them, and Iſrael.

The Manner of their Oppreſſion.

[a] A LEARNED Hiſtorian of our own Nation is of the Opinion, that the firſt King of Egypt, who oppreſſed the Iſraelites, was Buſiris, both in the Time of his Regency under Seſoſtris the Younger, and when he came into the Poſſeſſion of the Throne himſelf. The vaſt Increaſe of the People gave him an uneaſy Umbrage, leſt, as they had already grown too numerous for one Province to contain, they might, in Proceſs of Time, elbow him out of his Kingdom; and [b] a Report (which was current in thoſe Days) that, in a ſhort Space, a Child would be born among the Hebrews, whoſe Virtue would be admired by all the World; who would raiſe the Honour of his own Nation; depreſs that of Egypt; and make his Name and Renown immortal, might be another Inducement to uſe them cruelly, and make their Lives bitter with hard Bondage. Making of Mortar and Brick, and other rural Labours, [c] making Dikes and Banks to ſtop the Waters of the Nile, digging of Canals and Aqueducts to water the Land, [d] building of Forts, and [e] erecting of Pyramids; theſe, and

[e] The Pyramids are vaſt Piles of Building, raiſed by the Kings of Egypt, in Teſtimony of their Grandeur and Magnificence, and to be the Repoſitories of their Bodies, when dead. There are three now ſtanding, not far from the Place, where Memphis formerly was ſituate, the largeſt of which is deſervedly reckoned one of the ſeven Wonders of the World. It is an exact Square at the Bottom; every Square 704 Feet in Length; aſcended by 210 (ſome ſay more) great Stone Steps, moſt of them above three Feet high, and of a Breadth proportionable. Its Height is 616 Feet, by Degrees growing narrower and narrower, till you come to the Top, where there is a fine Platform, (conſiſting of ten or twelve great Stones, each of ſixteen or ſeventeen Feet ſquare) from whence you have a pleaſant Proſpect of old Cairo, and the adjacent Country. This Pyramid (as the Inhabitants of the Country ſay) was built for the Sepulchre of a King, that was never buried in it, and the common Opinion is, that the ſaid King was that Pharoah, who, by the juſt Judgment of God, was drowned with all his Army, in the Red-Sea. The Curious, that are deſirous to know the Inſide of this vaſt Structure, the Chamber of the Tombs, and the ſurprizing Aſcent to it, &c. had beſt conſult Thevenot's Voyage de Levant, or Le Bruyn, upon the Subject. I ſhall only add from Pliny, that this Pyramid was twenty Years a building, tho' 370,000 Men were every Day employed in the Work, and 1800 Talents expended upon them, merely in Radiſhes and Onions.

and many more principal Taſks were perpetually impoſed upon them, in order to impoveriſh their Spirits, and infeeble their Bodies. But when, thro' the Bleſſing of God, the People rather grew, than were diminiſhed under theſe Oppreſſions, effectual Meaſures were taken at laſt, to bring about their utter Extirpation; and, in Purſuance of theſe, an Edict was put forth, that [f] every Son that was born unto them, ſhould be caſt into the River. Under theſe unhappy Circumſtances Moſes was born; by the Cruelty of his Prince deſtined to immediate Death, but by the Decrees of God reſerved to be the glorious Inſtrument, who was to execute his all-wiſe Purpoſes. All the Care, that could be taken by a tender Mother of a lovely Child, was taken by the Mother of Moſes for his Preſervation; [g] when ſhe ſaw him, that he was a goodly Child, ſhe hid him three Months: But it ſeems the Enemy was as vigilant for his Ruin, as his Parents could be for his Safety, and therefore, the Concealment of him was now no longer practicable. To God's Providence therefore they commit him; [h] and putting him into an Ark, laid him in the Flags by the River's Brink. By an happy Train of Events, [i] Pharaoh's Daughter comes at that very Time to that very Place: She ſpies the Ark; ſends one of her Retinue to fetch it; [k] opens it; ſees the Child weeping; has Compaſſion on it; diſcovers it to be one of the Hebrew Children; ſends for a Nurſe of the Hebrew Women to nurſe it, who happens to be its own Mother, and to whom ſhe delivers it, with a Charge to take Care of it, and to bring it up at her Expence.

Moſes at that Time born.

THE ſacred Hiſtory leaves a great Gap in the Life of Moſes; only it acquaints us, that when [l] the Child grew, his Mother brought him to Pharaoh's Daughter, who made him her own Son, and called his Name Moſes [m]; whereupon Joſephus tells us this Story, that when Moſes was three Years old, Thermutis bringing him to her Father one Day, who took him in his Arms, and put his Diadem upon his Head, the Child pulled it off, threw it on the Ground, and trampled it under his Feet: And 'tis not improbable, that the Apoſtle might have ſome Regard to this very Action, when he ſays, that [n] Moſes, when he came to Years, (intimating that he did not only trample upon the Diadem of Pharaoh, when he was a Child, but when he was come to Years, and was capable of judging better of thoſe Things) refuſed to be called the Son of Pharaoh's Daughter, chuſing rather to ſuffer Affliction with the People of God, than to enjoy the Pleaſures of Sin for a Seaſon.

His Childhood.

THERE is no doubt to be made, but that in his Minority, all Care was taken of his Education; but whether he made all the Advancement in Learning [o] as is pretended; whether he was that compleat Poet, and excellent Orator, as ſome would have him; 'tis certain, that he was an incomparable Hiſtorian, and not unlikely, that he was very well verſed in Aſtronomy, at that Time one of the moſt cultivated Sciences in Egypt. His Command of Pharaoh's Army, in his more advanced Years, his Exploits againſt the Ethiopians, [p] retaking the Cities, which Egypt had loſt, penetrating into the Enemies Country, and even reducing their very Capital; [q] together with his Marriage to Tharbis, the King of Ethiopia's Daughter, ſavour a little of the Romantick, tho' they give us ſome Reaſon to infer, [r] that his Name, and ſeveral Paſſages of his Life (mixed as they are with ſome Fables) were not only known to other Nations, but by them highly admired and magnified.

[s] WHEN

[f] Exod. i. 22. [g] Ibid. ii. 2. [h] Ibid. ver. 3. [i] Joſephus, and from him Philo, calls this Royal Princeſs Thermutis; and adds, that ſhe was the King's only Daughter and Heir; and that having been ſome Time married without any Child, ſhe pretended to be delivered of Moſes, and owned him for her Son, but it looks much more likely, that he came to be called her Son, by Way of Adoption, as we ſaid elſewhere, p. 24. [k] Exod. ii. 5, 6. [l] Ibid. ver. 10. [m] This Name ſeems to be derived from the Hebrew Word Maſhal, which is never uſed in the Bible but for drawing out of the Water; but ſome will have it compounded of Μῶ, which in the Egyptian Tongue ſignifies Water, and ὕσης, which ſignifies ſaved, becauſe they think it not ſo very likely, that this Princeſs ſhould give her adopted Son a Name, that was derived from any other Language, but her own. The Word Maſhal however, (from whence the Name moſt naturally flows, and to which ſhe herſelf ſaid ſhe had Reſpect) might have the ſame Signification in her Language, that it had in Hebrew; there being a great Affinity between the two Tongues. Clem. Alexandrinus tells us, that the Name he had given him by his Parents, at his Circumciſion, was Joachim. Patrick's Commentary. [n] Heb. xi. 24, 25. [o] See the Teſtimonies of Eupolemus, and others, related by Clem. Alex. Strom. Lib. I. [p] Joſeph. Antiq. Lib. II. c. 5. and Philo, de Vitâ Moſis, Lib. I.

[q] This Story is dreſſed up in a very gallant Manner: Tharbis, Daughter of this Ethiopian King, ſees from the Walls of the City, where ſhe was beſieged, this brave Warrior doing Actions more than human: She finds herſelf wounded with a Dart, different from thoſe, which flew from his Arm; and being unable any longer to conceal her Paſſion, ſhe declares it to him, who was the Author of it: He, like a generous Lover, makes a ſuitable Return, and at laſt marries this Ethiopian Princeſs; but becauſe ſhe oppoſed his Return into Egypt, he, who was well ſkilled in Aſtronomy, cauſes two Images to be engraven upon two precious Stones, the one of which increaſed Memory, and the other cauſed Forgetfulneſs. Theſe he ſet in two Rings, giving that of Oblivion to his Wife; which, after ſhe had wore for ſome Time, ſhe began to neglect the Love ſhe had to her Huſband, and ſo he, without Danger, returned into Egypt. Joſephus and Euſebius tell this Story out of Artapanus.

[r] Patrick's Commentary.

Moſes kills the Egyptian, how juſtified.

[s] WHEN he was full forty Years old, it came into his Heart to viſit his Brethren, the Children of Iſrael; and ſeeing one of them ſuffer Wrong, he defended him, and avenged him that was oppreſſed, and ſmote the Egyptian. The Egyptian, [t] whom Moſes ſlew, was, we will ſuppoſe, one of thoſe Taſk-Maſters, whom Pharaoh had ſet over the Children of Iſrael, and he falling upon the poor Hebrew in a moſt violent Manner, beat him, till he had almoſt killed him, for not doing his Work ſo faſt, as he would have had him: Nay, ſuppoſing it true, that Moſes (according to the Jewiſh Tradition) did not kill him with a Sword, or any other Weapon, but merely by the Word of his Mouth, pronouncing him dead, in the Name of God; yet even thus he could not have juſtified the Fact, had he not been moved, and animated thereunto by a Divine Impulſe, or inveſted before it happened (as [u] St Stephen's Comment upon the Place gives us Occaſion to think he was ſo inveſted) with the Title and Office of Deliverer of the People of God.

His Manner of Life in Midian.

BUT the Time for their Deliverance was not yet come: And therefore Moſes having Reaſon to apprehend, that it would not be long, before his killing the Egyptian would reach Pharaoh's Ear, [x] thought it the ſafeſt Way to withdraw into Arabia Petræa, and there wait, until he had a farther Commiſſion from God. In this Place he [y] providentially fell into the Acquaintance of Jethro, a Prince or Governor of a Province in Midian, with whom he contracted an Intimacy, married his Daughter, and ſerved him, in the Capacity of a Shepherd, for forty Years. 'Twas here, very probably, [z] that in the leiſure Hours, (whereof that Kind of Life afforded him Plenty) he gave himſelf up to Contemplation, and to perfect that Knowledge, which he had laid the Foundation of in his Youth. 'Twas here, very probably, [a] that he compoſed ſome of thoſe admirable Books, which he has tranſmitted to the Church, † the Book of Geneſis, and that of Job, as ſome imagine, that, by the Example of a patient Man, he might ſtrengthen the oppreſſed Hebrews, and by the Promiſes of God to Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, give them Aſſurance of their Deliverance from Egyptian Slavery: And 'twas moſt certainly here, [b] that God appeared to him in the burning Buſh; gave him full Power and Authority to go, and releaſe the Children of Iſrael from their Slavery in Egypt; joined his Brother Aaron with him in the Commiſſion; and preſcribed them Inſtructions, how they were to proceed in that important Affair. And with this Epocha the Theocracy of the Jews, [c] or God's viſible Government of that People, in like Manner, as other Kings govern their Subjects, and his Appointment of Moſes, to be his Deputy and Viceroy over them, moſt properly did commence.

The Sufferings of the Iſraelites, why permitted.

GOD had hitherto ſuffered his People to be oppreſſed with hard Labour and cruel Bondage, [d] in order to keep up a Diſtinction between them and the Egyptians, which a friendly Uſage might have poſſibly deſtroyed; to cure them of their Proneneſs to Idolatry, by making Oppreſſion an Incitement to their Hatred of the Gods, as much as the Taſk-Maſters of the Country; and by the Hardſhips they ſuffered, to make them more willing to leave it, whenever he ſhould ſend them an Order to depart. But now he thought it fit Time to declare in Favour of them, and accordingly ſent his two Embaſſadors, Moſes and Aaron, to demand of the King of Egypt the Releaſe of [s] Acts vii. 23, 34. [t] Philo, de Vitâ Moſis, Lib. I. Some of the Jewiſh Doctors tell us, that this Egyptian, whom Moſes killed, had broken into the Hebrew's Houſe, bound him, and raviſhed his Wife, and was now going to murther him; but this looks too like a Tale: Nor is there much more Probability in his ſlaying him with a Word of his Mouth; for then there would have been no Need for his cautious looking about him, before he gave him his Death's Blow, or hiding him in the Sand, after he was dead. Whether the Egyptian had almoſt killed the Jew, and that Moſes could, no other Way, than by Force, keep him off: Or whether he might not attack even Moſes himſelf, and force him to kill him in his own Defence, are Conſiderations, that make a mighty Alteration in the Caſe. Patrick's Commentary, and Howell's Hiſtory of the Bible. [u] Acts vii. 25.

[x] Notwithſtanding the Flight of Moſes is plainly affirmed, yet ſo fond are the Jews of their own Conceits, and ſo bold in their Inventions, that they ſay, that he was not only condemned to have his Head cut off, but actually brought to ſuffer; but that, when the Executioner came to do his Office, Moſes's Neck was, by a Miracle, turned into a Pilaſter of Marble, ſo that the Sword would not enter, as the Story is told by the Author of Moſes's Life. Patrick's Commentary. [y] Exod. ii. [z] Saurin's Diſſertations. [a] Sir Walter Raleigh, p. 211. from Pererius.

† Whether Moſes wrote theſe Books or no, 'tis certain, that the Matters, treated in both, were very proper to be laid before the Iſraelites at this Juncture. For, in one of them, they might have a full and clear View of the Hiſtory of the World, ſo far as they were concerned in it; of the Creation of Mankind, of their own Origin; and of the Promiſes, which God made to their Fathers; ſo that it would give them the beſt Account of their Condition and Expectations: And in the other, they might ſee a very inſtructive Pattern of Patience and Reſignation to the Will of God, in the Life of a virtuous Perſon, led, from a great Share of worldly Proſperity, into the moſt afflicting Circumſtances, and, after a due Courſe of Trial, brought back again to a greater Proſperity than ever. A Subject, very proper to be ſet before them in this Time of their Diſtreſs, that thereby they might be inſtructed to poſſeſs their Souls in Patience, until God, in his great Wiſdom, ſhould think proper to put a Period to their Troubles. Shuckford's Connection, Vol. II. Lib. IX.

of his People Iſrael, and, in Caſe of his Refuſal, gave them Power and Authority to inflict upon the Land many terrible Plagues, until they compelled him to comply.

Moſes and Aaron's Speech to Pharaoh.

[f] The Embaſſadors, at firſt, took all the Meaſures, that Prudence ſuggeſted, not to provoke, but mollify the Prince. They told him, that the God of their Fathers had appeared unto them, and required them to hold a ſolemn Faſt, and perform a Courſe of religious Worſhip, in a certain Place, he had appointed them: They therefore aſked Leave for the Iſraelites to go three Days Journey into the Wilderneſs, to offer unto God ſuch Sacrifices, as would be an Offence to the Egyptians, in Caſe they were offered there; and they pretended to fear, that if they ſhould neglect giving God this Proof of their Obedience, he would chaſtiſe them with ſuch Plagues, as might poſſibly be fatal to Egypt itſelf. With theſe, and ſuch-like Arguments, they endeavoured to work upon Pharaoh; but when nothing of this Nature would avail, they betook themſelves to the other Method, that they were directed to, in order to force his Conſent. Ten Judgments ſucceſſively they brought upon the Land: The firſt was a [g] Change of the Water into Blood; the ſecond, [h] a prodigious Number of Frogs; the third, [i] of Lice; the fourth, [k] of Flies; the fifth, a Murrain, which deſtroyed all the Cattle; the ſixth, Ulcers, both in Man and Beaſt; the ſeventh, Hail, which ſpoiled the Fruits of the Ground; the eighth, [l] Locuſts, which devoured what the Hail had left; the ninth, Darkneſs, which covered all the Land; and the tenth, the Slaughter, and general Deſtruction of their Firſt-born. How Pharaoh's Obſtinacy and Perverſeneſs could be Proof againſt theſe Scourges, (which affected the Egyptians only, but did the Iſraelites no Harm) we have the leſs Reaſon to admire, in that the holy Scripture has told us, that ſome of theſe Miracles his Magicians imitated, and, in others, God hardened him againſt Conviction: But how either of theſe could be done, with the Preſervation of God's Honour and Goodneſs, is a Matter of ſome Enquiry among Divines.

The Plagues enumerated.

The Egyptian Magicians, who.

1. WHO the Magicians were, that oppoſed Moſes and Aaron, in working their Miracles, our ſacred Hiſtorian makes no Mention; but ſeveral, both [m] Jewiſh and [n] Heathen Authors (from whom [o] St Paul, without doubt, borrowed their Names) have informed us, that, among the Egyptians, they were called Jannes and Jambres, which, to give them a Latin Termination, would be Johannes and Ambroſius, of whom Numenius (as he is quoted [p] by Euſebius) has given us this remarkable Account, viz. That they were the Scribes of religious Matters among the Egyptians; that they flouriſhed in Egypt, at the Time when the Jews were driven from thence, and did not give Place to any Body in the Science of Magical Secrets. They were choſen unanimouſly by all Egypt, to oppoſe Muſeus, a Leader of the Jews, and whoſe Prayers were very prevalent with his God.

Different Kinds of Magick.

NOW, in order to form a right Notion, both of the Profeſſion and Abilities of theſe Men, we muſt be careful to obſerve, that Magick is properly of three Kinds, Natural, Artificial, and Diabolical. [q] The firſt of theſe is no other than Natural Philoſophy, but highly improved and advanced; whereby the Perſon, that is well ſkilled in the Power and Operation of natural Bodies, is able to produce many wonderful [f] Exod. v. [g] This Plague was the more remarkable, becauſe, as Theodoret obſerves upon it, as they had drowned the Hebrew Children in the River, God now puniſhed them for it, by giving them bloody Water to drink; according to the Obſervation of the Wiſe Man, Inſtead of a Fountain of running Water, their Enemies were troubled with corrupt Blood, which was to rebuke the Commandment of killing the Children, Wiſd. xi. 6. [h] The River Nile naturally produces Frogs, but ſo great an Abundance, appearing on a ſudden, filling the Country, and leaving the Rivers and Fields, to go into the Cities and Houſes, made the Thing miraculous. [i] Some would have the Word [Cinnim] which we render Lice, to ſignify Gnats. The Septuagint call it Κνίπες, but what Kind of Creature it was, is not certainly known. It ſeems more probable, that it was ſome new Sort of Animal, called analogically by an old known Name; and this might be ſome Reaſon, why the Magicians could not counterfeit this Miracle, becauſe ſuch Creatures were not to be got; at leaſt it is as good, as the Fancy of the Jews, that Dæmons have no Power over Creatures ſo ſmall as Lice. Patrick's Commentary, and Howell's Hiſtory of the Bible. [k] The Word [Arob] which we render Fly, in general, is, by the Septuagint, called κυνομυια, i. e. Dog-Fly, from its biting; for it faſtens its Teeth ſo deep in the Fleſh, and ſticks ſo very cloſe, that it oftentimes makes Cattle run mad. Patrick's Commentary. [l] This is the Creature, which we properly call a Graſhopper: And wonderful is the Account, which Authors have given us of the Armies of thoſe Creatures, and the Order and Regularity of their March; viz. That in the Year of our Lord, 853, an infinite Number of theſe Creatures were ſeen to fly over twenty Miles in Germany in one Day, in Manner of a formed Army, divided into ſeveral Squadrons, and having their Quarters apart, when they reſted; that the Captains marched a Day's Journey from the reſt, to chuſe the moſt opportune Places for their Camp; that they never removed till Sun-riſing, at which Time they went away in as much Order, as an Army of Men could do; that, at laſt, having done great Miſchief, whereſoever they paſſed, (after Prayers were made to God) they were driven by a violent Wind into the Belgick Ocean, and there drowned; but, being caſt again, by the Sea, upon the Shore, they covered 140 Acres of Land at a Time, and cauſed a great Peſtilence in the Country. Howell's Hiſtory of the Bible. derful Effects, miſtaken, by the Illiterate, for Diabolical Performances, but ſuch as lie perfectly within the Verge of Nature. Artificial Magick is what we call Leger-demain, or Sleight of Hand, and whoſe Effects are far from being what they ſeem: They are Deceptions and Impoſtures, the merry Tricks of Jugglers, (as we corrupt the Word Joculatores) far from exceeding the Power of Art, and yet what many Times paſs, with the Vulgar, for Diabolical too. Diabolical Magick is that which is done by the Help of the Devil, who, having great Skill in natural Cauſes, and a large Command over the Air, and other Elements, may aſſiſt thoſe, that are in League and Covenant with him, (in Scripture called Wizards, Sorcerers, Diviners, Enchanters, Chaldeans, and ſuch as had familiar Spirits) to do many ſtrange and aſtoniſhing Things. To deny that there ever were ſuch Men as theſe, is to ſlight the Authority of all Hiſtory; and to gueſs at the [t] probable Riſe and Original of them, we may ſuppoſe it to be this,—That God, being pleaſed to admit the holy Patriarchs into familiar Conferences with him, the Devil endeavoured to do the ſame; and, to retain Men in their Obedience to him, pretended to make Diſcoveries of ſecret Things, and that when God was pleaſed to work Miracles for the Confirmation of the Truth, he, in like Manner, directed thoſe, that were familiar with him, how to invoke his Help, for the Performance of ſuch ſtrange Things, as might confirm the World in their Error.

The Original of them.

UNDER which of the Denominations, Natural, Artificial, or Diabolical, the Magicians, who ſet themſelves in Oppoſition to the Servants of the Moſt High God, are to be ranked, we have no Inſtructions from Scripture; but it ſeems highly probable, that neither would Pharaoh have called together thoſe of the leaſt Capacity and Repute, neither would the Devil (as far as his Power extended) have been backward to aſſiſt his Votaries, upon ſuch a ſolemn and momentous Occaſion, as this. [u] Now there are two Ways wherein the Devil (as is agreed on all Hands) may be ſuppoſed aſſiſtant to thoſe, that pretend to work Miracles. The firſt is, by raiſing falſe Images and Appearances of Things, which he may do, either by affecting the Brain, or confuſing the Optick Nerves, or altering the Medium, which is between us and the Object. [x] That he did ſome ſuch Thing as this to our bleſſed Saviour, when, from the Top of an high Mountain, he pretended to ſhew him all the Kingdoms of the World, and the Glory of them, in a Moment of Time, is very plain, from the Convexity of the Earth, which bounds the Horizon, and admits of no ſuch unlimited Proſpect; ſo that all he could be preſumed capable of doing in this Caſe, (and our Saviour was not inſenſible what he did do) was to make fictitious Repreſentations of gay and magnificent Things in the Air. Secondly, The other Way, wherein the Devil may be ſuppoſed to be aſſiſtant to theſe Sorcerers, is [y] by making Uſe of the Laws of Nature, in producing Effects, that are not above the natural Power of Things, tho' they certainly exceed what Man can do. Thus to tranſport a Body, with inconceivable Rapidity, from one Place to another; to bring together different Productions of Nature, which ſeparately have no viſible Effect, but, when united, work Wonders; to make Images move, walk, ſpeak, and the like; theſe may come within the Compaſs of the Devil's Power, becauſe not tranſcending the Laws of Nature, though we cannot diſcern by what Means they are effected. Nay, thirdly, if we go a Step farther, and, [z] with ſome learned Men, ſuppoſe, that, under the Almighty's Permiſſion, wicked Spirits have Power to work real Miracles; (and for this we have ſome Intimations [a] in Scripture, and in the Nature of Things no Reaſon to the contrary) which of theſe Suppoſitions ſoever we take, it will be no hard Matter to account for the Things, which the Magicians did, and, at the ſame Time, diſtinguiſh them from the Miracles which Moſes wrought. For, if we ſuppoſe a real Power in the Devil, the Thing is done at once, without any Sham or Impoſture; but if we deny him this Power, our Solution will then be this,—That a falſe Medium might, thro' the whole Scene, impoſe upon the Spectators; the Rods might be nimbly moved off, Serpents and Frogs introduced in a Trice, and, by a ſmall Injection of ſome other Liquid, Water converted into the Colour and Conſiſtence of Blood. Innumerable evil Spirits might attend on this Occaſion, and every one have his appointed Office; eſpecially

The Devil's Power.

How the Magicians might do what they did.

eſpecially if the Wizards made uſe of the common Rites and Incantations, which might be of excellent Service to give them an Opportunity for Trick and Colluſion.

[a] A LEARNED Author has given us another Solution of this Difficulty.——He lays it down as a Poſition, that, though no Knowledge of the Powers of Nature, or Study of occult Sciences, can enable a Man to work ſuch Wonders, as were performed before Pharaoh; yet from what appears in the ſacred Hiſtory, the Miracles which the Magicians did, in producing Serpents, and Frogs, and in turning Water into Blood, were as true and real Performances, as thoſe, which Moſes did; but then the Queſtion is, by what Power or Aſſiſtance did they do them? They themſelves could never think, that, by all their Arts and Incantations, they ſhould be able to perform ſuch Works, as Moſes and Aaron had done; but as the King's Command was urgent, they were obliged to make the Experiment, and God was pleaſed, in ſome Inſtances, to give an unexpected Succeſs to their Endeavours, in order to ſerve and carry on his own Deſigns: Juſt as he permitted, the Pythoneſs of Endor, [b] contrary to her own Intention, to raiſe up the Ghoſt of Samuel, not by any Power of her Inchantments, but by his own Direction and Appointment, to upbraid and rebuke Saul.

And why God permitted them.

HOWEVER this be, and whether divine or diabolical Power interpoſed in this Affair, the Wiſdom of God is not a little manifeſt in permitting theſe Sorcerers to proceed ſome Time in their Conflict with his Servants, which added Diſgrace to the one's Defeat, as it did no ſmall Glory to the other's Conqueſt. [c] They turned their Rods indeed into Serpents, but theſe Serpents were devoured by that, which Moſes and Aaron produced: Some Things they did, either in Fact or Appearance, ſuch as Moſes and Aaron did, but then theſe were Things, wherein Art and Fallacy might have ſome Share. The Storm and Hail, Thunder and Lightning, and thick Darkneſs, they never pretended to imitate; nay, they themſelves were involved in the ſame Diſeaſes, which Moſes and Aaron ſent among the Egyptians: They were forced to acknowledge [d] the Finger of God, and do Homage to that ſupreme Power by which Moſes and Aaron acted; and therefore the Obſervation, which the Author of the Book of Wiſdom makes, is both true, and ſevere upon them at once; [e] As for the Illuſions of Art Magick, they were put down, and their Vaunting in Wiſdom was reproved with Diſgrace; for they, that promiſed to drive away Terrors and Troubles from a ſick Soul, were ſick themſelves of Fear, worthy to be laughed at.

How Pharaoh's Hardneſs might be occaſioned.

2. THE other Hindrance to Pharaoh's Conviction, upon the Sight of theſe ſuperior Miracles of Moſes, we may preſume was the Hardneſs of his Heart; but whether this Hardneſs was of God's Infliction, or his own Contraction, is the Queſtion. And here, beſides the ordinary Solutions given in this Caſe, viz. that whatever God does, in Regard to the Obduration of a Sinner, he cannot but act after ſuch a Manner, as is always wiſe, always juſt, always agreeable to the Greatneſs of his Perfections, and the Rules of that Order, which he never departs from; that in the Heart of Man, there are Springs of Wickedneſs enough to produce ſuch an Obduration, without any Need of ſuppoſing an immediate Action from God; and that perhaps the bare withdrawing the neceſſary Aſſiſtances for the Practice of Virtue, may be enough to plunge any Man into the greateſt Crimes: Beſides theſe Solutions, I ſay, we may obſerve, [f] that not only in the Hebrew, but in moſt other Languages, the Occaſion of an Action, and what in itſelf has no Power to produce it, is very often put for the efficient Cauſe thereof. Thus, in the Caſe before us, God ſends Moſes to Pharaoh, and Moſes, in his Preſence, does ſuch miraculous Works, as would have had an Effect upon any other: But, becauſe the Iſraelites were numerous, and ſerviceable Slaves, and a terrible Shock and Diminution of his Wealth and Grandeur it would be, to think of parting with them; becauſe ſome of the Miracles which Moſes did, he ſaw imitated by his own Magicians; and becauſe the Plagues which God ſent, came gradually upon him, and, by the Interceſſion of Moſes, were conſtantly removed; he thence took Occaſion, inſtead of being ſoftened by this Alternative of Mercy and Judgment, to become more ſullen and unrelenting. When Pharaoh (as the Text tells us) ſaw that the Rain, and the Hail, and the Thunder were ceaſed, he ſinned yet more, and hardened his Heart: The Mercy of God, which ſhould have led him to Repentance, had a contrary Influence upon him, and made him more obſtinate; but all this while God had no farther Hand in his Obduration, than as he was too kind kind and indulgent to him. God's Clemency was, in ſome Meaſure, the Occaſion of Pharaoh's Hardneſs, but the true Cauſe of it was in himſelf, and proceeded from his Abuſe of that Clemency.

BUT, to go a Step farther, I cannot ſee why we may not adventure to affirm, [g] that God might, conſiſtently with his ſacred Attributes, ſuffer this Obdurateneſs to come upon Pharaoh, as a Conſequence, or even inflict it, as a Puniſhment of the many Crimes, which he voluntarily incurred, and obſtinately perſiſted in before. To exemplify this by ſome parallel Inſtances, in the xxiid Chapter of the firſt Book of Kings, the Prophet relates a very ſtrange Viſion: [h] I ſaw the Lord ſitting upon his Throne, and all the Hoſt of Heaven ſtanding by him, on his Right-Hand, and on his Left; and the Lord ſaid, Who ſhall perſuade Ahab, that he may go and fall at Ramoth-Gilead? And one ſaid on this Manner, and another ſaid on that Manner. And there came forth a Spirit, and ſtood before the Lord, and ſaid, I will perſuade him. And the Lord ſaid unto him, Wherewith? And he ſaid, I will go forth, and be a lying Spirit in the Mouth of his Prophets: And he ſaid, Thou ſhalt perſuade him, and prevail alſo; go forth and do ſo. This is ſomewhat odd and ſingular: From the Throne of the Lord, founded upon Truth and Righteouſneſs, and from whence proceeded Laws of Juſtice and Equity, deſigned to eſtabliſh good Order in the World, come forth Commands, to lead a Man into an Error, that thereby he may fall into a Snare; and from among the heavenly Hoſts of Courtiers belonging to the Lord of the Univerſe, all of them ready to fly at his Word, all of them burning with the Love, all of them animated with a Spirit of imitating his Perfections; out of this heavenly Hoſt, I ſay, comes forth a Spirit, who undertakes (if with Reverence we may uſe the Expreſſion) to inſpire all the Prophets of the King of Iſrael with a Lye. But who was this Ahab, this King of Iſrael? Was he a Man, who for the Main of his Life, ſet the Fear of God before his Eyes? No, on the contrary, he was one of the moſt wicked Kings that ever poſſeſſed the Throne of Iſrael. A baſe and treacherous Man, who abandoned himſelf to the Counſels and Inſtigations of a proud and barbarous Woman; an Idolater, who was the firſt that in Samaria built Altars unto Baal; an Hypocrite, who humbled himſelf before God, when he apprehended his approaching Wrath, and inſolently raiſed his Head, when the Storm was over-paſt; an inſatiable Lover of Blood, who had ſlain a great Number of the Lord's Prophets, and was then ſeeking after Elijah's Life to deſtroy it; and an inſatiable Lover of unjuſt Wealth, who could not be eaſy until he had added a poor Man's Vineyard to his immenſe Poſſeſſions, and, to compaſs this End, ſlew the innocent Owner of it by a falſe Accuſation. This was a Man, whom God ordered a Spirit to deceive: And, if it be demanded who this Spirit was, the Jews have a Notion very ſingular upon this Occaſion. They tell us, that it was the Soul of Naboth the Jezreelite; but we ſhould do them Injury, to take that in a literal Senſe, which is capable of a very good Meaning. The Soul of Naboth, the innocent Blood which Ahab ſhed, the Altars of Baal, the Murther of the Prophets, his real Wickedneſs, and counterfeit Devotions, theſe were the Spirits ſent from God to miſlead him; theſe were the fatal Cauſes of his Blindneſs, and of that impenitent and hardened State, into which God permitted him to fall.

Ahab's Caſe.

Pharaoh's ſelf only blameable.

TO apply this now to the Caſe of Pharaoh. Whoever this King of Egypt might be, 'tis certain, that his intolerable Tyranny over the poor Iſraelites, and devoting himſelf to wicked and abominable Arts, were far from being Indications of a good Man. Before ever God is ſaid to harden his Heart, five Times did he inflict, and as oft remove his Chaſtiſements, and [i] twice it is ſaid expreſsly, that he ſent for Moſes and relented; but ſtill, upon the Removal of every Plague, relapſed. His Covetouſneſs, and great Advantage he made of the Iſraelites Slavery, would not ſuffer him to think of releaſing them in earneſt. The Magicians, perhaps, at firſt, were acceſſary to his Obſtinacy: They might perſuade him, that Moſes, for the preſent, had found out a Secret, yet it would come to their Turn at laſt to vie Miracles, if not get the better of him; or very likely himſelf might fondly imagine, that God might in Time grow weary, or his Store-houſe of Plagues become exhauſted. Whatever might contribute to his Obduration, 'tis plain, that, even when [k] the Magicians owned a Divine Power in what they ſaw done, and were quite confounded; when they perceived themſelves ſmitten, and not able to [l] ſtand before Moſes becauſe of the Boils, and and might thereupon very likely perſuade him to a Surrender, he is ſo far from relenting, that he does not ſo much as aſk a Removal of the Plague. And therefore it was entirely agreeable to the Rules of divine Juſtice, when nothing would reclaim this wicked King, when even that, which wrought upon the Miniſters of Satan, made no Impreſſion upon him, to let his Crime become his Puniſhment, and to leave him to eat the bitter Fruit of his own Ways, and to be filled with his own Devices.

SECT. V.

Of the PASSOVER, and the Iſraelites leaving Egypt.

BEFORE God thought fit to give the great deciſive Blow to Egypt, which was to bring about the Deliverance of his People, he eſtabliſhed a Memorial thereof, which was to continue until the Coming of the Meſſiah ſhould put an End to the old Oeconomy, and call off Mens Attention to a greater and more remarkable Deliverance. This Memorial, from the Hebrew Word Peſach, is called the [m] Paſſover; becauſe the Angel, which ſlew the Firſt-born of the Egyptians, paſſed over the Houſes of the Iſraelites, when he ſaw the Blood of the Lamb, which was that Day ſlain: And the Manner of its Inſtitution was this:——On the tenth Day of the Month [n] Niſan, (which anſwers our March) every Family of Iſrael (or if the Family was too little, two neighbouring Families joined together) was to take a Male Lamb, or Kid (for the original Words ſignify either) under a Year old, and without Blemiſh, and ſhut it up till the fourteenth, when it was to be killed [o] in the Evening. They were then to take a Bunch of Hyſſop, and dipping it in the Blood, were [p] to ſtrike it upon the two Side-Poſts, and the upper Door Poſts of every Houſe, where they did eat it, and ſo not ſtir out until next Morning. This Lamb was to be dreſſed whole, not a Bone of it was to be broken; it was to be roaſted with Fire; eat all at once, with Bread and bitter Herbs; and if any Part of it was left, it was to be burnt with Fire: The Habit, laſtly, and Poſture, in which it was to be eat, was with their Loins girded, their Shoes on their Feet, and their Staves in their Hands, in the Manner of Travellers.

Of the World, 2513, &c. Before Chriſt, 1491, &c.

The Paſſover, what.

SOME are of Opinion, that a good many of theſe Particulars were inſtituted purely in Oppoſition to thoſe impious Rites, which then prevailed, or, in a ſhort Time, were to prevail among the Egyptians, and other Nations, where the Iſraelites were to dwell. Thus they tell us, [q] "That God appointed a Lamb to be ſlain and eaten, and the "Month Niſan, or March, to be the particular Time of eating it, in Contempt of "the Egyptians, who, at that Time, when the Sun firſt entered into Aries, began "their ſolemn Worſhip and Adoration of this Creature, and that Celeſtial Sign: "That he forbad the People to eat the Fleſh of the Paſchal Lamb raw or ſodden, to "break its Bones, or leave any Fragments of it; becauſe, in the profane Feaſts of "Bacchus, it was a Cuſtom to eat the raw Fleſh of the Victims, they offered to that "God, and to break all their Bones; and in the Adoration of the ὥραι, whom the "Egyptians (and from them the Athenians) reputed Goddeſſes, they boiled all their Sacrifices, and carried conſtantly ſome Part of them Home, as a good Preſervative "againſt Misfortunes." Thus they oppoſe all the Rites and Ordinances of the Paſſover to the Superſtition of heathen Idolatry. But there is not that Need, I think, for ſuch elaborate Explications; when, conſidering the Situation the Iſraelites were then in, ſorely oppreſſed by the Egyptians, but ſhortly to be releaſed, and ſent away with all Speed and Precipitation, the Nature and Quality of the Paſchal Sacrifice, as well as the

Its Rites not in Oppoſition to Heathen Idolatry.

[m] The Word Paſſover was likewiſe applied to the Lamb, which was offered in Remembrance of this Deliverance; to the other Sacrifices, which accompanied this Lamb, and were offered, with it, at the Feaſt of unleavened Bread; as it was likewiſe made to ſignify the whole Term of that Feaſt, but more eſpecially the ſecond Day thereof, which was the fifteenth of the Month. Lewis's Antiquities, and De Beauſobre's Introduction. [n] The Names of the Jewiſh Months are, 1. Niſan or Abib, which in ſome Meaſure anſwers our March; 2. Jyar, our April; 3. Sivan, our May; 4. Samus, our June; 5. Ab, our July; 6. Elul, our Auguſt; 7. Tiſri, our September; 8. Marcheſvan, our October; 9. Ciſleu, our November; 10. Tebeth, our December; 11. Shevet, our January; and 12. Adar, our February. But it muſt be obſerved, that the Jewiſh Months being Lunar, cannot exactly anſwer ours. Lamy's Introduction. [o] The Hebrew Words are between the two Evenings, the firſt of which began upon the Sun's Decline from its Noon-day Point, and laſted till Sun-ſet, and then began the ſecond, and laſted till Night: Accordingly, Joſephus tells us, that the Paſchal Lamb was ſlain between the ninth Hour, i. e. our three in the Afternoon, and the eleventh, our five. Patrick's Commentary, and De Beauſobre's Introduction. [p] This ſtriking, or ſprinkling of the Blood upon the Poſts, ſeems to have been peculiar to the firſt Paſſover, at their going out of Egypt, and not to have been uſed in After-ages, when there was not the ſame Occaſion for it. [q] Vid. Spencer de Ritib. Heb. Tom. I. L. 2. c. 4.

Manner of dreſſing, and Manner of eating it, may, with other appendent Circumſtances, very pertinently be accounted for. Its literal, [r] It was to be a Male, becauſe a more excellent Species than the Female; without Blemiſh, to render it acceptable to God; under a Year old, otherwiſe it could not properly be called a Lamb; and ſet apart from the reſt of the Flock, that it might be in Readineſs, when the People came in Haſte to offer it. Roaſted it was to be, and not boiled, becauſe roaſting was the ſpeedier Way of dreſſing it; but roaſted thoroughly, becauſe the whole was to be eaten; and the whole was to be eaten, that none might be left for the Egyptians to profane. It was to be eaten ſtanding and in Haſte, and with other Circumſtances of Men every Moment expecting to begin their Journey; with bitter Herbs, to put them in Mind of their cruel Servitude; and unleavened Bread, in Memory of their Deliverance from it ſo ſuddenly, that they had not even Time to leaven the Bread for their Journey. This is all that the Iſraelites underſtood, and perhaps all that God, at that Time, intended they ſhould underſtand, by the Direction he gave them concerning this remarkable Ordinance: But the Chriſtian Doctrine does more than intimate, that God himſelf had all along a myſtical Meaning in each Particular, not ſo much in Oppoſition to Heathen Superſtition, as in Conformity to the Death of his Son; for which Reaſon, we find the Apoſtles, in their Writings, running the Parallel between the Jewiſh and Chriſtian Paſſover, in ſuch Terms as theſe: [s] Chriſt our Paſſover, [t] a Lamb without Blemiſh, and without Spot, is ſacrificed for us; the very ſame Day that the Jews eat the Paſchal Lamb, made he his Life an Offering for the World, [u] by the ſprinkling of whoſe Blood, [x] we have Redemption, even the Forgiveneſs of our Sins; [y] therefore let us keep the Feaſt, not with old Leaven, neither with the Leaven of Malice and Wickedneſs, but with the unleavened Bread of Sincerity and Truth. and myſtical Meaning.

Its modern Way of Celebration.

THIS was the Paſſover, which the Children of Iſrael celebrated, the Night before they left Egypt; and this was the Intent both Literal and Typical of the Rites and Ceremonies, which God then appointed to go along with it. But the Jews afterwards made conſiderable Alterations: They omitted ſome Things, and added others, and carried the Obſervation of it to ſuch a Degree of Superſtition, as was inconſiſtent with its firſt Inſtitution. [z] Two or three Days before the Feaſt began, they cleaned all the Veſſels, and other Furniture of their Houſes. Such as were too big to be dipped in Water, they ſprinkled and waſhed all over; and ſuch as were able to bear the Fire, they purified that Way. [a] When the Evening of the fourteenth Day was come, they lighted Wax-Tapers, and, before they went to ſearch whether there was any Leaven in the Houſe, the Maſter of the Family made this ſhort Ejaculation: Bleſſed be thou, O Lord our God, the everlaſting King, who has ſanctified us by thy Commands, and enjoined us to put away Leaven from among us. All the Domeſticks, except the Women, joined in the Search: They ranſacked every Hole and Corner, not only in the Dwelling-Houſe, but even in the Barns and Stables; and after the Search was ended, the Maſter made this Denunciation: All the Leaven, that is in mine Houſe, what I have ſeen, and what I have not ſeen, be it null, and like the Duſt of the Earth. Nay, ſo very ſcrupulous were they in this Reſpect, that, for the whole ſeven Days, that the Feaſt laſted, [b] they would not ſo much as name the Word Leaven, for fear of polluting their Minds with the Idea of Bread.

BEFORE the Paſſover was ſlain, [c] they firſt agreed and concluded upon the Company, that was to eat it, which was ſometimes more, and ſometimes leſs, in Proportion to their eating; for at this Time there was no Diſtinction; for Men, Women, and Children, Maſters and Servants (if circumciſed) were all entertained at the ſame Table. The Manner of eating the Egyptian Paſſover was in a travelling Poſture, leaning on their Staves, and ſtanding all the while; but, in Proceſs of Time, this came to be altered into what we call Diſcumbency, when all the Gueſts lean, on their left Arms, upon Beds round the Table; [d] a fit Emblem (as they pretend) of that Reſt and Freedom, which God had vouchſafed the Children of Iſrael. When the Gueſts were thus placed round the Table, the Maſter of the Family, or ſome other Perſon of Note, took a Cup of Wine and Water; and, after he had given Thanks, Bleſſed be thou, O Lord, who haſt created the Fruit of the Vine, he drank it, and gave one round to the Company, who were all obliged to drink of it. After this, they eat of the bitter Herbs, and unleavened Bread, which they dipped in [e] a thick Sauce, made of ſweet and ſour Things, pounded and mingled together, in Memory of the Clay, wherein wherein their Forefathers laboured, in the Land of Egypt. Hereupon, the Maſter of the Family drank another Cup, which was accompanied with ſeveral Thankſgivings; and then they began to eat of the Fleſh of the Paſchal Lamb, and drank a third Cup, which was called the Cup of Bleſſing, becauſe the Bleſſing, or Grace after Meat, was ſaid over it; and ſo the whole Ceremony concluded with the fourth Cup, commonly called the Cup of Hallel, becauſe [f] ſome ſelect Pſalms were ſung over it; and then the Maſter of the Family, or whoever rehearſed the Office of the Paſſover, diſmiſſed the Company with a Bleſſing. Thus was this Solemnity celebrated, in the latter Times of the Jewiſh Republick, when Innovations had crept in, and ſeveral Rites, foreign to the primitive Inſtitution, were introduced.

BUT to return to the Iſraelites. While they were employed in eating the Paſſover, and in Expectation of the Event; [g] The Lord, at Midnight, ſmote all the Firſt-born in the Land of Egypt, from the Firſt-born of Pharaoh, that ſat on the Throne, to the Firſt-born of the Captive, that was in the Dungeon; and all the Firſt-born of Cattle, ſo that there was [h] a great Cry in all Egypt; for there was not a Houſe, where there was not one dead.

NOTHING ſurely can be more amazing to the Imagination, than ſuch a dreadful Spectacle as this; and therefore we need not wonder, that the Egyptians ſhould be ſo importunate with the Iſraelites, even before the Morning Dawn appeared, to depart out of their Country. The Fate of thoſe, that had periſhed, made every one tremble for himſelf; but why the Iſraelites ſhould take the Advantage of their Fears and Conſternation, to ſpoil and plunder them, is a Queſtion that admits of ſome Diſpute. The Word which our Tranſlators have rendered borrow, is Shaal, which does not ſignify to borrow, but to aſk one to give; by Virtue of which Interpretation, the Iſraelites are cleared from the Cenſure of all Injuſtice and Wrong, becauſe what was freely given them, they had doubtleſs a Right to retain. And accordingly we find [i] Joſephus repreſenting this Fact agreeably to the true Senſe of the ſacred Text, when he tells us, "that the Egyptians made the Hebrews conſiderable Preſents; ſome to "induce them to be gone the ſooner, and others, in Token of the Acquaintance they "had had with them." But, even if the Word ſignifies to borrow only, 'tis a Truth allowed on all Hands, that God, who is the Supreme Lord of all Things, may, when he pleaſes, and in what Manner he pleaſes, transfer the Right of Men from one to another. Conſidering then, that God was now become the King of the Iſraelites in a proper and peculiar Manner, and [k] conſidering withal, what inſufferable Wrongs the King and People of Egypt had done to this People of God, who were now become his peculiar Subjects, or Proprietary Lieges: [l] This Fact of ſpoiling the Egyptians, even in the harſheſt Senſe of the Word, was, according to the Laws of Nations, more juſtifiable, than Royal Grants of Letters of Mart, or other ſuch like Remedies, as Kings are accuſtomed to make uſe of againſt other Powers, that have wronged their Subjects, or ſuffered them to be wronged by thoſe under their Command, without making a proper Reſtitution. In ſhort, whatever the Hebrews took from the Egyptians, they took and poſſeſſed it by the Law of Repriſals, i. e. by Virtue of

Why the Iſraelites ſpoiled the Egyptians.

[f] The Pſalms that were ſung upon this Occaſion, were CXIII. and CXIV, which began to be ſung over the ſecond Cup; and the CXVI, CXVII, or CXXXVI, which were ſung over the fourth; which laſt Singing was called Hallel, or Praiſe. The Reader that is deſirous to know more upon this Subject, may conſult, at his Leiſure, Lamy's Treatiſe of the Paſſover, or Mr. Lewis's Antiquities of the Jewiſh Republick. [g] Exod. xii. 29, 30. [h] It is no improbable Conjecture, that the ſolemn Feaſt among the Egyptians, wherein they went about with Candles in the Night in Search of Oſiris with Tears and great Lamentations, took its Original from Pharaoh's riſing up out of his Bed at Midnight, and all the Egyptians with him; who lighted Candles, and finding their Children dead, bewailed them with loud Cries; nor is it unreaſonable to think, that Pharaoh's eldeſt Son, who was now ſlain, had the Name of Oſiris, whoſe ſudden Death by this Stroke was, every Year, in one Night, univerſally lamented. Patrick's Commentary. [i] Antiq. Jud. Lib. II. Cap. XIV. [k] In the Gemara of the Sanhedrim, there is told a memorable Story concerning this Tranſaction. In the Time of Alexander the Great, the Egyptians, brought an Action againſt the Iſraelites, deſiring they might have the Land of Canaan, in Satisfaction for all they had borrowed of them, when they went out of Egypt. To which Gibeah Ben Koſam, who was Advocate for the Jews, reply'd, that, before they made this Demand, they muſt prove what they alledged, viz. that the Iſraelites borrowed any Thing of their Anceſtors. To this the Egyptians thought it ſufficient to ſay, that they found it recorded in their own Books. Well then, ſaid the Advocate, look into the ſame Books, and you will find the Children of Iſrael lived four hundred and thirty Years in Egypt, Exod. xii. 40. Pay us then, ſaid he, for all the Labour and Toil of ſo many thouſand People, as you employed all that Time, and we will reſtore what we borrowed; to which they had not a Word to anſwer. Patrick's Commentary. It muſt be obſerved, however, that Moſes does not affirm, that the Iſraelites ſtayed 430 Years in Egypt (for it is certain they were but half that Time) but his Meaning is, that in all they ſojourned ſo long, viz. that, from the Time of Abraham's ſetting out from Meſopotamia, to his Poſterity's now leaving Egypt, included ſuch a Number of Years. From Abraham's leaving Charran, to Jacob's going down into Egypt, was 215; and the Time that he and his Poſterity abode there, was the like Number of Years: So that it is plain, that Moſes, in the Place where he tells us, that the ſojourning of the Children of Iſrael, who dwelt in Egypt, (the Samaritan Copy has it, in the Land of Canaan and Egypt) was four hundred and thirty Years, had Reſpect to all the Pilgrimages of Abraham, and his Poſterity. Patrick, ibid. [l] Jackſon, upon the Creed.

of a ſpecial Warrant from the Lord himſelf, who was now become not their God only, but their peculiar King.

The Action vindicated.

BUT, becauſe the Exceptions to this Action lie not againſt the Doing, but againſt the fraudulent Manner of doing it; it may therefore be obſerved, [m] that the Providence of God deſigned by this Means to make the Iſraelites ſome Reparation for the tyrannical Uſage, which they had received from the Egyptians, as is manifeſt from his giving them Favour with the Egyptians, who indeed, for their own Ends, and to get rid of ſuch troubleſome Gueſts, were diſpoſed to lend them any Thing they had. Thus far all is right; here is nothing but fair Borrowing and Lending; and if the Iſraelites acquired a Right to theſe Things afterwards, there was then no Obligation to Reſtitution. Now that they acquired ſuch a Right is manifeſt, from the Egyptians purſuing them in an hoſtile Manner, and with a Purpoſe to deſtroy them, after they had given them free Liberty to depart; by which Hoſtility and Perfidiouſneſs, they plainly forfeited their Right to what they had only lent before: For this hoſtile Attempt (which would have warranted the Iſraelites to have fallen upon the Egyptians, and ſpoiled them of their Goods) did certainly warrant them to keep them, when they had them; ſo that now they became the rightful Poſſeſſors of what they had only upon Loan, and could not have detained, without Fraud and Oppreſſion, before.

The Pillar of the Cloud, what.

THUS the Iſraelites having got their Deſire of their Enemies, marched triumphantly out of the Land of Egypt, ſix hundred thouſand Men, beſides Women and Children, and a mixt Multitude, which are ſuppoſed to be Proſelytes to the Jewiſh Religion, conducted [n] by the Lord, as the Text tells us, in a Pillar of a Cloud by Day, and in a Pillar of Fire by Night. This wonderful Phænomenon, all dark on one Side, and all ſhining on the other, in the Shape of a Pillar, is ſuppoſed by moſt Interpreters [o] to be the SHECHINAH, or Divine Majeſty, exhibiting [p] its Preſence by a Train and Retinue of Angels: And therefore he, who in the xiiith Chapter of Exodus, is ſtiled [q] the Lord, in the very next Chapter, is called [r] the Angel of God; and they ſuppoſe farther, [s] that as the Majeſty of God appeared to Moſes in the Buſh, when he gave him Commiſſion to bring his People out of Egypt, and directed him all along in his Embaſſy to Pharaoh; ſo it appeared now in a glorious Cloud, [t] to conduct the Iſraelites, and aſſure them of his ſpecial Providence and Superintendency for their Safety and Protection: But in Oppoſition to all this, we are told, "That there was no Manner

An Objection againſt it.

"of Miracle in this whole Affair; that, as in waſte and deſolate Countries, where "there were no remarkable Places for Armies to form their Rout by, it was a cu-"ſtomary Thing, to carry a blazing Fire, fixed upon a Pole, before the firſt Line, "thereby to give Signals to all the reſt of the Army; ſo this Pillar of a Cloud, "which attended the Iſraelites, was nothing elſe, but one of theſe ambulatory Beacons, "carried by Men, appointed for that Purpoſe, when they were under March; and, "when they were to halt, fixed over the General's Tent; and, that to ſuch a portable "Fire as this, whoſe Flame, but not its Smoak, is very far ſeen by Night, as its Smoak, "but not its Flame, is perceived at a great Diſtance by Day, all the ſtrange Things, "which are ſaid of the different Phaſes of this pretended miraculous Pillar, may, with "great Facility, be referred."

Anſwered.

THAT in the Deſerts of Arabia, and ſuch extended Plains, where there were no Cities, Rivers, or Mountains for Signals and Land-Marks, it was a general Cuſtom (before the Invention of the Compaſs) to carry Fire before Armies, in order to direct their March; and that (notwithſtanding the preſent Uſe of the Compaſs) ſuch Guidance of Fire is ſtill practiſed among the Caravans of the Eaſt; and the great Number of Pilgrims, who go every Year from Grand Cairo in Egypt, to Mecca in Arabia, cannot, by any one, that is acquainted either with ancient or modern Hiſtory, be denied; and had the ſole Intent of the Cloudy Pillar been, to guide and conduct the Iſraelites in their Journies, there might have been more Grounds for aſſerting, that it was a mere Machine of human Contrivance, and had nothing miraculous or ſupernatural in it: But, when it ſhall appear, that this Pillar of a Cloud was of much greater Uſe to the Children of Iſrael, than barely to conduct them; that in it reſided a ſuperior Power upon whom the Name and Attributes of God are conferred; that from it proceeded Oracles and Directions every Day what the People were to do, and Plagues and Puniſhments,

[m] Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. I. [n] Patrick's Commentary. [o] Mede's Works, p. 343. [p] Exod. xiv. 24. [q] Ibid. ver. 19. [r] Patrick, ibid. [s] The Jews are of Opinion, that this Conductor of the Hebrews was either the Angel Michael or Gabriel; but whichſoever of them it was, he was the only Commander of that Hoſt, which went before the Iſraelites. They call him by the proper Name of Metraton, becauſe he marked out their Camp, where they were to ſtay, and directed their Way, in their Journey, to their ſeveral Stations. Patrick, ibid. [t] Toland's Hodegus.

Puniſhments, when they had done amiſs; and that to it are aſcribed ſuch Motions and Actions, as cannot, with any Propriety of Speech, be applied to any material Fire; it will from hence, I hope, be concluded, that this Guidance of the Cloud was a real Miracle, its Subſtance quite different from that of portable Fires preceding Armies, and its Conductor ſomething more than a mortal Man.

THE firſt Mention that is made of this Phænomenon is in the 13th Chapter of Exodus [u], where Moſes, deſcribing the Rout which the Iſraelites purſued, firſt to Rameſes, and thence to Succoth, tells us, that they took their Journey from Succoth, and encamped at Etham, at the Edge of the Wilderneſs; and the Lord went before them by Day in a Pillar of a Cloud, and by Night in a Pillar of Fire: And what we are to underſtand by the Lord, that went before them, we are advertiſed in another Place: [w] Behold I ſend my Angel before thee, to keep thee in the Way, and to bring thee into the Place which I have prepared; beware of him, and obey his Voice, provoke him not; for he will not pardon your Tranſgreſſions, for my Name is in him, i. e. my Name JEHOVAH, which is the proper and incommunicable Title of God. The next Place wherein we find this Pillar of a Cloud mentioned, is in the 14th Chapter, [x] And the Angel of God, which went before the Camp of Iſrael, removed, and went behind them; and the Pillar of the Cloud went from before their Face, and ſtood behind them, and it came between the Camp of the Egyptians and the Camp of Iſrael, and it was a Cloud and Darkneſs to them, but it gave Light to theſe. There is, in the ſame Book, another Place where this Pillar is taken Notice of, and that is in the 33d Chapter, where God, being highly offended at the People's Impiety in making the Golden Calf, refuſes to conduct them any longer himſelf, and propoſes to depute an Angel to ſupply his Place: [y] Depart, and go up hence, ſays he to Moſes, thou, and the People, which thou haſt brought up out of the Land of Egypt, and I will ſend an Angel before thee, for I myſelf will not go up in the midſt of thee; for thou art a ſtiff-necked People, leſt I conſume thee in the Way. When the People heard theſe evil Tidings, they mourned, and no Man did put on him his Ornaments. And when Moſes went into the Tabernacle, they all roſe up, and ſtood every Man at his Tent-Door, and looked after Moſes, until he was gone into the Tabernacle, and it came to paſs, as Moſes entered into the Tabernacle, the Cloudy Pillar deſcended, and ſtood at the Door of the Tabernacle, and the Lord talked with Moſes; all the People ſaw the Cloudy Pillar at the Tabernacle-Door, and they roſe up and worſhipped, every Man at his Tent-Door. We have Occaſion to take Notice but of one Place more; and that is in the 16th Chapter of Numbers; where the People murmured for the Loſs of Korah and his Company. [z] And it came to paſs, that when the Congregation was gathered againſt Moſes and againſt Aaron, that they looked toward the Tabernacle of the Congregation, and behold the Cloud covered it, and the Glory of the Lord appeared; and Moſes and Aaron came before the Tabernacle of the Congregation, and the Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying, Get you up from among this Congregation, that I may conſume them, as in a Moment; and they fell upon their Faces; and Moſes ſaid unto Aaron, take a Cenſer, and put Fire therein, from off the Altar, and put on Incenſe, and go quickly unto the Congregation, and make an Atonement for them; for there is Wrath gone out from the Lord, the Plague is begun.

NOW, from a bare Recital of theſe Paſſages, we cannot but obſerve, that the Iſraelites Pillar made quite another Appearance, than any combuſtible Matter, when ſet on Fire, and hoiſted upon a Pole, can be ſuppoſed to do; that, in this Pillar, reſided a Perſon of Divine Character and Perfections, and therefore called the Lord, the Angel, the Angel of the Lord, and the Angel of his Preſence, &c. that this Perſon was inveſted with a Power of demanding Obſervance, of both puniſhing and pardoning Tranſgreſſions, and to whom even Moſes and Aaron, as well as the reſt of the Congregation, might fall down on their Faces, and pay Obeyſance, without the Imputation of Idolatry. The whole Tenour of the Narration, in ſhort, ſeems to denote, that every one in the Congregation ſhould look upon the Pillar, as ſomething awful and tremendous, and the Perſon reſiding therein, above the Rank and Dignity of any created Eſſence: And therefore the moſt general Opinion is, that he, to whom the Divine Appellations, Divine Powers, and Divine Honours, are, in ſo many Places, aſcribed, was the Eternal Son of God, with a Troop of bleſſed Angels attending him, in bright and luminous Forms, and who, either by the Diſplay or Contraction of their Forms, could make the Cloud, they inhabited, either condenſe or expand itſelf, either put on a dark or radiant Appearance, according as the great Captain of their Hoſt ſignified his Pleaſure: For to ſuppoſe mere Fire, without any ſupernatural Direction, appearing in different Forms, Darkneſs to one Sort of People, and Light to another, at the ſame Time, is a Thing incongruous to its Nature.

FOR how many Purpoſes this Pillar of a Cloud might ſerve the Hebrews, 'twould be Preſumption to determine: But this we may ſafely ſay, that, beſides its guiding them in their Journies, [a] it was of Uſe to defend them from their Enemies, that they might not aſſault them; of Uſe to cover them from the Heat of the Sun in the Wilderneſs, where there were but few Trees, and no Houſes to ſhelter them; and of ſingular Uſe to convey the Divine Will, and to be, as it were, a ſtanding Oracle, whereunto they might reſort upon all Occaſions.

IN this Cloud, we are told expreſſly, [b] that the Lord appeared in the Tabernacle; from this Cloud, [c] that he called Aaron and Miriam to come before him; and out of this Cloud, again, that he ſent forth the Expreſſes of his Wrath, as well as Tokens of his Love, among the whole Congregation: And therefore this Cloud could be nothing elſe but the Vehicle of God, or the Place of Majeſtick Appearance, at that Time; nor is that Conjecture very improbable, that, from this very Inſtance, the Poets firſt took the Hint of making their Gods deſcend on a [d] Cloud, and arrayed with a bright Effulgence.

HOWEVER this be, 'tis certain, that the Jews were perſuaded of the Divinity of their Guide, otherwiſe [e] they would not have expreſſed ſuch undiſſembled Sorrow and Concern, upon hearing the News of his Intention to relinquiſh them; nor would they ever have ſubmitted to wander ſo long in the Wilderneſs, expoſed to ſo many Dangers and Hardſhips, had it been a Man only, with ſome Fire elevated [f] upon a Pole, that was their Conducter. From Horeb to Kadeſh-Barnea (which was upon the Borders of the Land of Canaan) the Way was not far, much about eleven Days Journey, and in a Manner a beaten Road, and almoſt impoſſible for them to miſs; and therefore we cannot but ſuppoſe, that had they not been convinced of the Miraculouſneſs of their Direction, even Moſes himſelf, with all his Authority, would not have been able to perſuade them to take the Compaſs, we find they did, through an Enemy's Country, where they were to fight their Way, inſtead of purſuing their direct Road to the Land of Promiſe; but therefore they willingly followed the Cloud, becauſe they were ſenſible a Divinity reſided in it; and therefore that Divinity led them in the Wilderneſs ſo long, to inure them to Hardſhips, and to prolong their Stay, until that Generation was dead, [g] of whom he had ſworn in his Wrath, that they ſhould not enter into his Reſt.

SECT. VI.

Of the ISRAELITES Paſſage over the Red-Sea.

Why the Egyptians purſued the Iſraelites.

WHILE the Iſraelites continued their March, the Impreſſion, which the late Plagues had upon Pharaoh and his Miniſters, began to abate. They knew, from the Accounts they received, that the People intended ſomething more, than the Celebration of a Feaſt, for the Space of three Days in the Wilderneſs: They began to conſider, what Egypt was like to loſe by the Revolt of ſo many uſeful Slaves, and perhaps they likewiſe flattered themſelves, that the Power of the God of Iſrael, as great as it appeared to be, might nevertheleſs have its Bounds, as well as that of other Gods: [h] For the Pagan Theology allotted certain Diſtricts and Provinces to their Deities, making one Supreme in the Mountains, and another in the Plains; one preſide over the Waters, and another over the dry Land; and therefore, deluded with theſe Notions, or rather judicially blinded by God, Pharaoh reſolved to purſue the Children of Iſrael; and, having got together what Forces he could, came up with them, as they were encompaſſed by the Sea.

NEVER was poor People in a more diſmal Situation, hemmed in, on the Weſt, by a Ridge of Mountains, preſſed from the South by Pharaoh's Army, and on the Eaſt and North, ſhut up by the Sea: The Sea not to be paſſed, without a good Number of Ships to contain ſuch a Multitude; the Mountains not to be attempted, with ſuch a Train of Women and Children; and the Enemy not to be encountered, for Want of Arms as well as Courage. In theſe diſtreſſed Circumſtances what were they do? [h] They had but one Recourſe, and that was to lift up their Eyes and Hearts to that Cloud, where their great Captain ſat, and to call to their Aſſiſtance that Arm, that invincible Arm, which had already wrought ſuch wonderful Things for them. But inſtead of imploring the Help of God, [i] they murmur againſt his Servant Moſes, ſo that Moſes pours out his Complaint before the Lord, and the Lord, to deliver an undeſerving People, at the Signal of his Servant's Rod, [k] cauſed the Sea to go back by a ſtrong Eaſt Wind all that Night, and made the Sea dry Land, and the Waters were divided, ſo that the Children of Iſrael went into the Midſt of the Sea upon dry Ground, and the Waters were a Wall unto them on their right Hand and on their left: And, at another Signal given, [l] the Sea returned to its Strength, the roaring Waves broke looſe from their inviſible Chain, and ſwallowed up Pharaoh and all his Hoſt, ſo that there remained not ſo much as one of them.

The Diſtreſs the Iſraelites were in.

[m] THUS the Lord ſaved Iſrael, ſays the ſacred Hiſtorian, but other People will tell us, that he did it quite another Way; "That the [n] Red-Sea, eſpecially, in the extreme Part of it, where the Iſraelites paſſed over, [o] was not above two Miles broad, "and very often quite dry, by Reaſon of the great Reflux of the Tide; [p] that Moſes, "who perfectly underſtood the Country, and had obſerved the ebbing and flowing of "the Sea, led down his Men at the Time of Ebb, and, being favoured by a ſtrong "Wind, blowing from the Shore, and retarding the Return of the Tide, had the "good Luck to get ſafe to the other Side; while Pharaoh and his Army hoping to "do the ſame, but miſtaken in their Computation, had the Misfortune to be loſt: "But in all this Event what is there more, [q] than in Alexander's paſſing the Sea of "Pamphylia? To be ſure, had there been any Appearance of Miracle in the Thing; "had the Water divided itſelf in two Parts, and reared up on each Side like Walls, "for the Reception of the Iſraelites, the Egyptians, mad as they were with Rage, "would never have been ſo deſperate, as to purſue them."

An Objection againſt the Miraculouſneſs of their Paſſage.

OF what Breadth the Red-Sea may be, at the Place of Paſſage, is not ſo eaſy a Matter to determine, [r] becauſe both Geographers and Travellers mightily differ in their Computation: But if (according to ſome of the loweſt Accounts) we ſuppoſe it to be much about two Leagues, moſt Writers agree, that the Sea, in this Place, is very boiſterous and tempeſtuous, which is hardly conſiſtent with a Shallowneſs, much leſs a total Deſertion of Water, upon any haſty Reflux. The Wind, it muſt be owned, if it blew from a right Quarter, might both forward the Ebb, and retard the Flow; but the Wind, which blew at this Time, we are told was an Eaſt Wind, whereas it muſt have been a Weſt, or North-Weſt Wind, to have driven the Water away from the extreme Parts into the main Body of the Sea; as any one that looks into a Map, may perceive. The Eaſt Wind blew athwart the Sea, and cut it aſunder, ſo that one Part fell back towards the South, and up the main Channel, and the other Part retired towards the North, where Sues is ſituated, and where the Sea terminates in a Point: And this very likely is the Meaning (if there be an Hyperbole in the Expreſſion) of the Waters being a Wall to the Iſraelites on their right Hand and on their left; becauſe they ſo defended them on both Sides, that the Egyptians Anſwered.

The Country, which his Poſterity poſſeſſed, was called after that Name, and ſo was the Sea, which adjoined to it; but the Greeks, not underſtanding the Reaſon of the Appellation, tranſlated it into their own Tongue, and called it ἐρυθρὰ θαλάσση, thence the Latins, Mare Rubrum; and we, the Red-Sea. The Hebrews call it the Sea of Suph, or Flags, there being ſuch Abundance of this Kind of Weed in that Sea, that the Inhabitants of the Coaſt pluck it up out of the Water, and, after they have dried it, make themſelves Huts of it. tians could no Way come at them, but by purſuing them in the ſame Path, which they took.

IT is not to be queſtioned, but that Moſes was a Perſon of an excellent Judgment: * By his being ſo long in the Army, he could not but know the proper Advantages to be made in Marches and Retreats; and yet he ſeems to give us no great Specimen of his Skill, by declining the Mountains, which poſſibly were inacceſſible to the Chariots and Horſemen, and betaking himſelf to the Strand, where Pharaoh's Army might make after him, (as we find they did) and ſo truſting to the uncertain Return of a Tide, had not God both commanded him to take that Way, and foretold him the Event. He might not perhaps be ignorant of the Courſe of the Tide, and could eaſily diſcern the favourable Diſpoſition of the Wind; but was there never a Man, in all the great Army which Pharaoh brought with him, of equal Obſervation and Skill? 'Tis a Thing incongruous to Reaſon, [t] that the Egyptians, who excelled, at that Time, all other Nations in their Knowledge and Obſervation of Celeſtial Bodies, ſhould be ignorant of the Fluxes and Refluxes of the Sea, in their own Country, in their own Coaſt, and in their own moſt traded and frequented Ports and Havens: But if they were not ignorant of the Time of the Reflux, it is hardly to be imagined, that the Eagerneſs of Purſuit would have made them venture into the Bay, when they could not but be ſenſible, that, in Caſe they miſcomputed, the returning Waves would devour and ſwallow them up. Why they ventured to purſue the Iſraelites, the ſacred Hiſtorian ſeems plainly to intimate, when he tells us, [u] that the Angel of the Lord, which went before the Camp, removed, and went behind them: It came between the Camp of the Egyptians, and the Camp of Iſrael, and was a Cloud and Darkneſs to the one, but gave Light in the Night to the other. So that the true Reaſon, why the Egyptians went in after the Iſraelites into the Midſt of the Sea, was, that they knew not where they were. They imagined perhaps, that they were ſtill upon the Land, or at leaſt upon the Shore, where the Sea had retired: The Darkneſs of the Night, and the preternatural Darkneſs of the Cloud, not ſuffering them to ſee the Mountains of Waters on each Side: But, [x] when the Lord looked unto the Hoſt of the Egyptians through the Pillar of Fire; when he turned the bright Side of the Cloud upon them, to let them ſee the Danger they were in, and, at the ſame Time, (as Joſephus adds) poured out a Storm upon them, with Thunder, and Lightning, and Hail-Stones from the Cloud, their common Cry was then, [y] let us flee from the Face of Iſrael; for the Lord fighteth for them againſt the Egyptians.

That they went directly croſs.

THAT the Iſraelites went not quite croſs the Red-Sea, but only fetched a Compaſs as they found the Waters caſt up for them, and ſo came out upon the ſame Shore, from which they went in, there is not that Reaſon, I think, to infer, either from the Length of the Paſſage, or the Place where they came out. For, taking the Channel in its utmoſt Breadth, and allowing the Iſraelites the loweſt Computation of Time, yet we have ſtill this to ſay, that, in a Relation, abounding with Miracles, there can be no Abſurdity to ſuppoſe one more. [z] Now, if God interpoſed his Power to diſable the Chariots of Pharaoh, leſt the Return of the Waters ſhould excite their Fears, and their Fears, by improving their Diligence, ſave them from Deſtruction; why might not God interpoſe the ſame Power (if there was Occaſion) to quicken the Iſraelites, and enable them to perform their Paſſage in the Time appointed? Nay, if we will allow his own Words to be a good Comment upon his Actions, we cannot but ſuppoſe that he did ſo, when we find him, after all was over, recounting his Kindneſs to them in this wiſe; [a] Ye have ſeen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bare you on Eagles Wings, (where the Expreſſion certainly denotes ſome extraordinary Aſſiſtance, given them in their Paſſage) and brought you unto myſelf. Tho' therefore ſome Ambiguity may ariſe as to the Place, where the Iſraelites came on Shore, (ſince they were [b] at Etham but two Days before, and now landed in a Wilderneſs of the ſame Name) yet, [c] if we will but ſuppoſe, that there were two Ethams, the one a Town, where they encamped, on the Egyptian Side, and the other, on the Arabian Side, a Wilderneſs; or (if we will needs have the Wilderneſs of Etham denominated from the Town) ſuppoſing [d] the Town was ſituated near the upper Part of the Red-Sea, and gave Denomination to a great Deſert, which ſurrounded the Head of the Bay, and reached down a conſiderable Way on both Sides, we may eaſily perceive, that tho' the Iſraelites marched from the Wilderneſs of Etham croſs the Bay, they would only only be in another Part of the Wilderneſs of Etham ſtill. [e] Now, if the Iſraelites croſſed the Sea in a direct Line, (upon the Suppoſition that it was no more than an ordinary Return of the Tide, which overwhelmed the Egyptians, before they could recover their own Coaſt) the Egyptians could not have been caſt aſhore (as the Scripture teſtifies they were) on that Coaſt of Arabia, where Moſes landed; but muſt neceſſarily be carried away with the Flood, which runneth up to Sues, and the utmoſt Point of the Bay.

THESE are ſome Arguments for the real Paſſage of the Red-Sea, in the Manner that Moſes has repreſented it: And tho' we have not Time at preſent to examine † the ſeveral Facts, that are commonly alledged in Contrapoſition to this, and ſhall therefore, for Brevity's Sake, allow them all to be true; [f] yet, if we reflect as we ought, on the Prediction of Moſes concerning the Event, the Virtue of his Rod, the Facility of the Iſraelites Paſſage, the Raſhneſs of the Enemies following, and their [g] univerſal Overthrow and tragical End, we ſhall find every Thing concurring to render this an unparallelled Inſtance; and that nothing, but an immoderate Deſire of depreciating the Miracles of the ſacred Hiſtory, can diminiſh the Wonder of this famous Paſſage, into a Compariſon with what other Men have done. I call it a famous Paſſage, and that, not only becauſe [h] both ſacred and profane Hiſtory make Mention of it; not only becauſe [i] the Name of the Sea records, and [k] the Inhabitants of the Coaſt tranſmit, the Remembrance of the Fact; but becauſe we find two renowned Men in Scripture, a mighty Law-giver, and a mighty Monarch, Moſes and David, both exerciſing their Poetick Genius, to celebrate the Miracle in ſuch lofty Strains, as theſe, [l] with the Blaſt of thy Noſtrils the Waters were gathered together, the Floods ſtood upright as an Heap, and the Depths were congealed in the Heart of the Sea. The Enemy ſaid, I will purſue, I will overtake, I will divide the Spoil, my Luſt ſhall be ſatisfied, and my Hand ſhall deſtroy them. Thou didſt blow with thy Wind, the Sea covered them, they ſunk as Lead in the mighty Waters. [m] For the Waters ſaw thee, O God, the Waters ſaw thee, and were afraid, the Depths alſo were troubled, the Clouds poured out Water, the Air thundered, and thine Arrows went abroad; thy Way is in the Sea, and thy Paths in great Waters, and thy Footſteps are not known.

[e] Sir Walter Raleigh's Hiſtory.

† Joſephus has compared this Paſſage of the Iſraelites over the Red-Sea, with what Alexander the Great did, when he marched Part of his Army over the Sea of Pamphylia; but there is little or no Reſemblance between them. Alexander was to march from Phaſelis, a Sea-Port, to Perga, an inland City of Pamphylia. The Country near Phaſelis, upon the Shore of the Pamphylian Sea, was mountainous and rocky, ſo that he could not find a Paſſage for his Army, without either taking a large Compaſs, or attempting to go over the Strand between the Rocks and the Sea. Arrian hath obſerved, that when the Wind blows North, (eſpecially to any great Degree) the Strand is dry, and paſſable; and therefore Alexander, taking the Advantage of the Wind thus blowing, ſent ſome of his Army over the Mountains, and went himſelf, with the reſt of his Forces along the Shore. But in this we can find no Miracle, unleſs the Wind's blowing opportunely for Alexander's Purpoſe may be reputed one. Shuckford's Connection, Vol. II. Lib. IX.

[g] Apollonius, in the Lives of the Fathers, affirms, that thoſe Egyptians, who ſtayed in the Country, and did not follow Pharaoh in the Purſuit of Iſrael, did, ever after that, honour thoſe Beaſts, Birds, Plants, and other Creatures, about which they were occupied, at the Time of this general Deſtruction. He, for Inſtance, that was working in the Garden, made a God of that Plant or Root, he was then buſied about, and ſo of the reſt. CHAP. IV.

Of the Jewiſh LAWS, Moral, Eccleſiaſtical, and Civil.

Of the World, 2513, &c. Before Chriſt, 1491, &c.

AFTER the Lord had thus mightily delivered the Children of Iſrael, and every Day given them freſh Inſtances of his miraculous Care and Providence; at Marah, [a] ſweetened the Water by the Injection of a Wood of a certain Tree; in the Wilderneſs of Sin, ſent [b] Quails for their Meat, and [c] Manna for their Bread; and at Rephidim, given them [d] Water out of the Rock, and a perfect Victory over their Enemies; he intended now to reduce them to a regular Society, and to give them a Syſtem of Laws, both Moral, Civil, and Eccleſiaſtical, ſuch as might direct their Conduct in all Capacities; and to this Purpoſe, in the Space of ſeven and forty Days, after their Departure out of the Land of Egypt, he brought them into the Wilderneſs of Sinai, to the Mount of God.

The Laws the Jews had, before thoſe given at Mount Sinai.

THE People indeed hitherto were but poorly provided with Laws: All they had were traditional, and conſiſted in ſome particular Precepts, that were not at all Times ſo clearly conveyed; and therefore it was neceſſary (now, that he had taken them under his immediate Care) to appoint them a Compleat Syſtem. "He gave ſix "Commandments to Adam," ſays [e] Maimonides, (ſo that, according to him, Noah was not the firſt that received theſe famous Precepts from God) "of which, the "five firſt forbid Idolatry, Blaſphemy, Homicide, unlawful Conjunction, and "Theft; the ſixth, commands the Eſtabliſhment of Magiſtrates; and the ſeventh, "(which Noah received) inhibits the eating any Animal, until the Blood be taken "out of it. Theſe, in all, I ſay, are ſeven, and were obſerved by the whole World. "After this, God gave Abraham the Commandment of Circumciſion, and 'twas "by this Patriarch, that Morning-Prayer was inſtituted. Iſaac eſtabliſhed After-"noon-Prayer, and taught, that the Tenth of every Thing muſt be ſet a-part for "an Offering to God. Jacob forbad the eating the Sinew which ſhrank, and com-"poſed the Evening-Prayer, and Amram added ſeveral other Precepts to theſe; till "at length, came Moſes, and he gave the utmoſt Perfection to the Law, by digeſting "the Commandments, Statutes, and Judgments, which God delivered to him, into "a Code, and leaving it in the Hands of the Church, for the Inſtruction of all ſuc-"ceeding Ages."

BUT before we come to an immediate Diſcuſſion of theſe Laws, it will not be improper to ſay ſomething concerning the Difference of Laws in general, the better to perceive the particular Nature of ſuch, as are to come preſently under our Conſideration.

Of Laws in general.

Now all Laws, in their primary View, are either Divine or Human, i. e. either from God or Men. [f] Divine Laws are either eternal, ſuch as we ſuppoſe are in the Nature of God, and the unvariable Rule of his Actions; or natural, ſuch as are inwardly implanted by God in Men; or revealed, ſuch as he has preſcribed them in the Declaration

[a] We are not told what Tree this was, whoſe Wood, being thrown into the Waters, took off their Brackiſhneſs. But, to increaſe the Miracle, the Jews will have it, that the Wood of this Tree (which they call Ardophne) was itſelf of a bitter Taſte, and would naturally have made the Waters bitter, had they been ſweet before. Patrick's Commentary. Which ſeems to be quite contrary to the Words of the Wiſe Man, [Eccluſ xxxviii. 5.] Was not the Water made ſweet wi h Wood, that the Virtue thereof might be known? [b] The Hebrew Word [Selau] which we, after the Example of Joſephus, render Quails, is by different Interpreters thought to ſignify Thruſhes, Pheaſants, Sea-Fowl; and by Job Ludolphus, in his learned Commentary upon his Æthiopick Hiſtory, Locuſts; which he tells us were not only uſed for Food, but in ſeveral Countries were very delicious Meat. See Patrick's Commentary, on Numb. xi. who ſeems to be entirely of his Opinion. [c] Le Clerc, in his Commentary on Exod. xvi, tells us, that the Word Man, ſignifies a Gift, and that, when the Iſraelites ſaid Man how, it imported, is this the Gift? For he makes it a Queſtion of Scorn and Contempt, as much as to ſay, is this little Grain, which covers the Dew, the Gift which God promiſed us? And he entirely agrees with Cl. Salmaſius, that it was the ſame with common Manna, tho' differing from it in ſome Properties. [d] Thevenot, in his Voyage de Levant, tells us, that he was ſhewn the Rock, (as they called it) out of which Moſes brought Water; but that it was only a Stone of a prodigious Height and Thickneſs, riſing out of the Ground. He ſaw on each Side of it ſeveral Holes, out of which, it was plain, the Water had iſſued, by the Marks and Impreſſions that it had made; but at preſent, ſays he, no Water comes out of them. [e] In his Treatiſe of a Proſelyte, c. 4. [f] Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. I.

Declaration of his Will. As for human Laws, they are either ſuch as relate to Mankind in general, and are agreed upon by People of all Nations; or ſuch, as concern the Government of the Church, being Canons and Conſtitutions made at ſeveral Times, either in General Councils, or in National or Provincial Synods; or ſuch as concern the Government of Civil Communities, being the Secular and Political Conſtitutions of particular Kingdoms and Commonwealths, for the Eſtabliſhment of Peace, Order, and Religion.

The Law of Nature.

ALL People and Nations claim the Right and Privilege of making ſuch Laws for themſelves, as they think fit; and for this Reaſon there muſt be as great a Variety of Laws, as there are different Forms of Government in the World, or indeed different Humours in the Legiſlators. [g] But now, amidſt this Diverſity of Laws, depending either upon the Conſtitution of Governments, or the arbitrary Choice of thoſe that govern, there is an univerſal Law, which is the Foundation of all others, and that from whence they derive their Authority. This we call natural, becauſe it flows immediately from Nature, which, being in all Men the ſame, univerſally preſcribes the ſame Rules. 'Tis indeed nothing elſe but Reaſon itſelf; and Reaſon, though in ſome Countries more improved than in others, every where ſpeaks the ſame Thing. She ſpeaks diſtinctly to ſome People, who ſtudy and obſerve her carefully; to others ſhe but liſps, (as we may call it) nor can they well underſtand what ſhe ſays, for Want of being accuſtomed to hear her; but to others ſhe is quite ſtruck dumb, as it were, nor can they hear her Language at all, by Reaſon of thoſe Obſtructions, which Stupidity and a Proſtitution to the moſt infamous Vices has placed betwixt them, and her gentle Whiſpers. But notwithſtanding this, Reaſon has always a Right to rule, and is appointed and authorized by God, to give Laws to all the Nations in the World. God at firſt placed it in the Soul of Man: For divers Ages it ſupplied the Place of every other Law; and when he thought fit to add unto it the Laws, which he pronounced from his own Mouth, and wrote with his own Finger upon the Tables in Mount Sinai, 'twas only to lay before the Eyes of the Jews the ſame Law, he had originally engraved in the Heart of all Men; according to theſe remarkable Words to the Romans, that [h] the Gentiles, who had not the Law, (as the Jews had) written by God upon Tables of Stone, did by Nature, or the ſole Impreſſion of the Law of Nature, the Things contained in the Law, i. e. the very Things commanded by the written Law; becauſe, ſays he, theſe, having not the Law, were a Law to themſelves, and ſhewed by their Sentiments, which their Philoſophers, their Poets and Orators, clearly explained, and by the Eſteem they teſtified for Virtue, that there was a Law written in their Hearts, from which they formed all their great Notions and laudable Maxims. Thus [i] when the Roman Orator comes to ſpeak, in one of his moſt beautiful Philoſophick Works, of the wicked Action of the Son of Tarquin againſt the Chaſtity of Lucretia, he ſays, " That indeed there was no written Law among the " Romans againſt ſuch Outrages, but that the Action of the young Tarquin was " nevertheleſs flagitious on his Score, becauſe there was an eternal and immutable " Law againſt theſe Enormities, and this eternal Law, or Law in Force from all " Times, (ſays he) is Reaſon itſelf, which we have from Nature; a Law, which does " not begin to have the Force and Authority of a Law, when it comes to be written, " but has it originally." Whereupon he concludes, " That the true Law, which " is our Sovereign, and has a proper Power of commanding and forbidding, is right " Reaſon, which is derived to us from the moſt High God."

Its univerſal Extent and Obligation.

'TIS to this original Law, deſcending from God, and naturally engraved in every Man's Breaſt, that all particular Laws both of God and Men ſhould conform, and are to be referred. [k] God himſelf, Sovereign as he is, without Reſtriction, and without Controul, and having, conſequently, an inconteſtable Right of commanding or forbidding whatever he pleaſes, never yet made any Ordinances, contrary to the Law of Nature, which would be acting contrary to himſelf, ſince himſelf is the great and immediate Author of that Law. Oppoſite indeed, we allow, they are to the Corruption of human Nature, becauſe they were deſign'd to rectify the Diſorder, which Sin had brought upon it; but this we account a Matter of their Commendation, and a ſure Argument, that whenever they come to be weighed in the Ballance of the Sanctuary, (as we are now going to examine into them) they will ever be found to be true and righteous altogether.

The ſeveral Kinds of Laws given to the Jews.

THE Laws, which God was pleaſed to give the Children of Iſrael, were, as we ſaid before, of three Kinds, Moral, Civil, and Eccleſiaſtical. By the Moral Law, we underſtand thoſe Precepts and Commands, whoſe Obſervance have a Tendency to make Men good and virtuous. The Civil Law contained the Conſtitutions and Orders, which reſpect publick Juſtice, and the Adminiſtration thereof; and the Eccleſiaſtical, directed the Jews in their external Behaviour in religious Worſhip, and appointed what Rites and Uſages they were to obſerve. The firſt of theſe are ſuch Precepts and Prohibitions, as are good in themſelves; the ſecond are of a mixt Nature, being partly in their own Nature good, and partly indifferent; and the third are in their own Nature indifferent, but ſo far good, as they are commanded by a poſitive Law of God.

The Number of them.

THE whole Number of theſe Commands, (according to the Computation of the Jews) amounts [m] to ſix hundred and thirteen in all; and theſe they divide into two Claſſes, Affirmatives, of which they reckon two hundred and forty-eight; and Negatives, whereof they make three hundred and ſixty-five; and their Rabbins (according to their Cuſtom of finding Wonders in every Thing) pretend to affirm, that the Number of the Affirmative Commandments anſwers to that of the Parts of an human Body, and that of the Negatives to the Number of the Days of the ſolar Year, or, as others will have it, to that of the Veins. Whether they are exact in their Anatomy or no, is not ſo eaſy a Matter to determine; but this is obvious to our firſt Conceptions, that ſuch a Multitude of Precepts could not but be a very heavy Yoke, which neither they, nor their Fathers were able to bear; and yet it was in ſome Sort neceſſary for that ſtupid and carnal People, in Order to ſhew them their Obligations in every minute Particular, becauſe the Groſſneſs of their Underſtandings diſabled them from ſupplying any Thing, which was not expreſsly commanded in the Law.

Their Oral Law.

BESIDES this written Law, the Jews do likewiſe acknowledge another, which they call the Oral Law; and the Account that they give of it is this,——[n] That as ſoon as Moſes returned from converſing with God, and retired into his Tent, he called Aaron, and firſt delivered to him the Text, which was to be the written Law, and after that, the Interpretation of it, which was to be the Oral, in the ſame Order as he had received both from God on the Mount; after which Aaron roſe up, and placed himſelf on his right Hand. After Aaron, came in Eleazar and Ithamar his Sons, and Moſes repeated to them the ſame Things, which he had done to Aaron; whereupon they aroſe and ſeated themſelves, one on the left Hand of Moſes, and the other on the right Hand of Aaron; and then the ſeventy Elders, who conſtituted the Sanhedrim, or great Senate of the Nation, came in, and being taught by Moſes both theſe Laws in the ſame Manner, they alſo ſeated themſelves in the Tent; and then entered all the People, or ſuch of them as were deſirous to know the Law of the Lord, and its Interpretation. So that Moſes repeated both theſe Laws four Times to Aaron, three Times to his Sons, twice to the Elders, and once to the People. After this he withdrew, and Aaron having repeated the ſame to the Congregation, he likewiſe withdrew; after him his Sons ſtood up, and repeated the ſame; and, upon their withdrawing, the ſeventy Elders did the ſame; ſo that each of them heard both the Law and its Interpretation four Times. The Law was written, but the Interpretation of it was preſerved by Tradition, and from hence it is, that their Doctors have generally divided the Law into two Kinds, the one Written, and the other Oral.

Whence it aroſe.

So great is the Honour, which the Jewiſh Doctors give to their Traditions, that they attribute them, we ſee, as well as the Law, to God himſelf; and the only Difference they make is, that the Law was written, and the Traditions conveyed down by Word of Mouth, from one Generation to another; but whether this be Matter of Fact, or not rather a Fiction, ſpun out of the fertile Invention of the Talmudiſts, is very much a Queſtion. What is certain and indiſputable is this,——[o] That the Reſpect, which the Jews had for the Majeſty of God, from whom they received the Law, and the Puniſhments, which were annexed to the Breach of it, inſpired them with a fervent Deſire of being acquainted with it, and obſerving it. Above all Things, they were afraid of breaking it through Ignorance; and Moſes, having commanded that, in all Things, the Prieſts, i. e. the Sanhedrim, ſhould be conſulted, it is highly probable, that the oral Law is nothing but the Deciſions of this Aſſembly, which, in Proceſs Proceſs of Time, were reverenced, and, by a perpetual Addition of new Obſervations, became a Sort of Barrier againſt the Violation of the Law of the Lord.

General Obſervations upon the ten Commandments.

AMONG the many Commandments, that God gave Moſes to deliver unto the People of Iſrael, there are Ten, that excel the reſt, as containing the moſt eſſential Duties of Morality, and were therefore not only pronounced by God himſelf, but by him engraven likewiſe on two Tables of Stone, in order to ſet before their Eyes what Sin had blotted out of their Hearts. And of theſe we have ſome Obſervations to make in general, before we come to a particular Explication of them.

Mount Sinai deſcribed.

SINAI [p] which is the ſame with Horeb, (only two different Heads or Riſings of one and the ſame Mountain) is [q] an Hill ſituated in Arabia Petræa, ſo very high and lofty, that both Shores of the Red-Sea may be ſeen from thence. It is at preſent called the Mount of Moſes; and, beſides the Top of Horeb, has another Head or Riſing, called, [r] the Mountain of St. Catherine; on the Top of which, there is a Dome, and under it, the Body of that Saint (which, as they tell us, was brought thither by Angels, immediately after ſhe was beheaded at Alexandria) lies interred. As ſoon as the Iſraelites were arrived at this Place, Moſes was called into Conference with God, and had Directions given him in what Manner he was to prepare the People, that they might ſee, without Profanation, the viſible Tokens of his Preſence upon the Mount. Two Days were ſpent in Conferences between God and Moſes, and between Moſes and the People; [s] and on the third Day God came down in the Sight of all the People upon the Mount. The Royal Prophet has given a very lofty Deſcription of God's Deſcent; [t] He bowed the Heavens, and came down, and it was dark under his Feet; he rode upon the Cherubims, and did fly, he came flying upon the Wings of the Wind; he made Darkneſs his ſecret Place, his Pavilion round about him, with dark Water, and thick Clouds, to cover him. At the Brightneſs of his Preſence the Clouds removed, Hail-Stones, and Coals of Fire. There went a Smoke out of his Preſence, and a conſuming Fire out of his Mouth, ſo that the Earth trembled and quaked, and the very Foundations of the Hills ſhook and were removed. And ſo analogous is all this to what Moſes ſays of the Deſcent upon Mount Sinai, [u] That the Mountain was altogether on a Smoke, becauſe the Lord deſcended upon it in Fire; that the Smoke thereof aſcended, as the Smoke of a Furnace, and the whole Mount quaked greatly; that no room would be left to doubt, whether it was God himſelf who deſcended and pronounced the Decalogue, had not the New Teſtament told us expreſsly, that [x] the Law was ordained by Angels, that it was [y] an Angel, who ſpake to Moſes on Mount Sinai, and comparing the Law and Goſpel together, that the [z] one was ſpoken by Angels, but the other by Jeſus Chriſt.

God's Deſcent.

Himſelf proclaimed the Law.

THE Pomp however of this Appearance ſeems to be too great for Angels only: The Holy Mount covered with Smoke, Thunder ready to break out, and Lightnings darted forth with a diſmal Brightneſs; formidable Barriers not to be paſſed, without expiating the raſh Attempt with immediate Death; the Earth trembling, and, as it were, ſhrinking into its Foundations; ſix hundred thouſand Men ſhaking for fear, and begging, that [a] God would not ſpeak to them, leſt they die; and Moſes himſelf, though habituated to the Divine Majeſty, terrified at this Spectacle, and crying out, I exceedingly fear and quake: Theſe, and ſome more Inſtances, that might be collected from the Narration, together with the incommunicable Title of JEHOVAH affixed to the very Preface, ſeem to portend a great deal more, than the Preſence of Angels; and are not therefore badly explained by another Paſſage or two, wherein the ſame Fact is recounted; [b] The Lord came from Sinai, and roſe up from Seir unto them;

[p] Thus the Covenant, which God made with the Iſraelites on Mount Sinai, is alſo ſaid to be made with them at Horeb; and the Decalogue, or ten Commandments, which are ſet down in Exod. xx. as delivered from Mount Sinai, are repeated Deut. v. as delivered from Mount Horeb. [q] Heylin's Coſmography, and Wells's Geography. At the Bottom of the Mount Sinai ſtands, at preſent, the Monaſtery of St Catherine, a very large and beautiful Building, from which there were formerly Steps up to the very Top of it, and computed to be 14,000 in Number. There are two Churches on it, the one for the Greeks, and the other for the Latins; near that for the Latins, there is a little Moſque, and by the Side of it a little Cave, where Moſes (as they tell you) faſted forty Days; and not far from it a ſmall Grot, where he is ſaid to have hid himſelf, when he deſired to have a View of God's Face, and was permitted only to ſee his Back Parts. Near Mount Horeb ſtands the Monaſtery of the forty Martyrs, a neat Building, with a large Garden, and a fair Church, dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin. Here is the Stone, or Rock, out of which Moſes brought Water; and not far from hence, is the Place where they tell us the Golden Calf was moulten. There is to be ſeen indeed a great Head of a Calf, cut to the Life in Stone; but this (as Thevenot obſerves) looks liker a Contrivance of the Greeks, to impoſe upon Travellers. Voyage de Levant. [r] The St Catherine, from whom this Mount is denominated, is ſaid to be the Daughter of one Coſta, a King of Cyprus, who, in the Time of Maxentius, converted many unto Chriſt. Before ſhe was beheaded, ſhe was, for ſome Time, tortured on a Wheel, whence comes the Catherine-Wheel to be uſed for a Sign in this very Kingdom, to this very Day. Wells's Geography. them; he ſhined forth from Mount Paran, and he came with ten thouſand of Saints; from his Right-Hand went a fiery Law for them; for [b] the Chariots of God are twenty Thouſand, even Thouſands of Angels, and the Lord is among them, as in Sinai: And therefore to make the whole Senſe conſiſtent, when St Paul oppoſes the Law and the Goſpel, upon Account of their different Manner of Promulgation, what we render given by Angels, muſt be underſtood, in the Midſt of Angels; and ſo the Meaning will be——That, when God gave the Law, he was ſurrounded with a moſt dreadful Equipage; proclaimed it in Thunder and Lightning, in Flames of Fire, and Clouds of Smoke, raiſed by the Angelical Hoſt, attending his Throne: [c] But that, when he promulged the Goſpel, all Things were tranſacted in the moſt eaſy and familiar Method, and with all poſſible Marks of Kindneſs and Condeſcenſion; he aſſumed our Nature, and adapted himſelf to our Infirmities; not diſdaining the Converſation of the vileſt, provided they were vile in their own Eyes, and applied to him for Inſtruction and Amendment.

Not a compleat Syſtem.

BE it allowed then, that the Commandments were given by God himſelf, attended with all theſe Enſigns of Terror; yet it will not therefore follow, that they were ever deſigned [d] for a perfect Compendium, much leſs a compleat Syſtem, of the whole Moral Law. They contain indeed ſome of the moſt momentous Precepts, but (without taking a vaſt Scope in our Expoſition) they omit many material Duties, both towards God and Man. That we ſhould not worſhip other Gods, is an expreſs Injunction, and an obvious Inference it is, that we ſhould worſhip that God, who is the Maker of us, and of all the World; but then, in what Manner we are to worſhip him, either as to the ritual Service, or moral Affection of the Heart, is no where told us in the Decalogue. No Mention is made of Praiſe and Thankſgiving, of Confeſſion and Prayer, of Faith and Hope, of Reliance and Reſignation, and other ſpiritual Graces, which alone can make our Homage acceptable. Our Duty to ourſelves is almoſt totally omitted: Sobriety, Abſtinence, and Modeſty, &c. are not once taken Notice of, nor can they, without drawing the moſt diſtant Conſequences, be inferred: And though great Care is taken of our Neighbour's Life and Property, yet what Benevolence and Kindneſs, what Forbearance and Forgiveneſs of Injuries we are to extend to him, we have no certain Direction given us. To ſupply this Defect therefore, there are other Precepts, included in the Body of the Law, which properly relate to the Commandments; and are, as it were, the Sequel and Explanation of them. Of this Kind, with Relation to the firſt Table, are the Commands given to the Jews, [e] not to offer Sacrifice to ſtrange Gods, [f] not to offer up their Children in Sacrifice to the Idol Moloch; [g] to break down the Statues of falſe Gods; [h] to deſtroy Diviners; and [i] not to ſwear by ſtrange Gods. And in Relation to the ſecond Table, they are ſuch as follow; [k] All thoſe, which regulate the Puniſhments of Murther and Uncleanneſs; [l] all thoſe, which relate to the Reſpect due to the Sovereign, and the Aged; [m] that of not ſuffering a Daughter of Iſrael to proſtitute herſelf; [n] that of not requiring Uſury of their Brethren; that of relieving their Neighbour; [o] that of bringing back a wandering Ox into the Way; [p] that of helping up the Aſs, that lies under his Burthen; [q] that of not giving falſe Witneſs with the Wicked; [r] that of not following a Multitude to do Evil; [s] that of not retaining the Hire of a Stranger; [t] that of leaving Gleanings in their Eſtates and Vineyards, when they gathered in the Harveſt and the Vintage, for the Widows, the Orphans, and the Strangers, &c. Theſe, and ſuch like Precepts, being of Moral Intendment, are a Kind of Appendix to the ten Commandments, and a very good Comment to explain and illuſtrate them.

Additional moral Precepts.

The Method of explaining them.

THERE is a farther Expedient, for enlarging the Senſe of the Ten Commandments, and that is, the Method and Rules, which are generally preſcribed us, in the Expoſition of them: viz. [u] That where any Duty is enjoined, there the contrary Practice is forbid, and where any Vice is forbid, there the contrary Virtue is commanded; that where a Virtue is required, there all the Ways that lead to it, all the Means, and Helps, and Inſtruments, that may be ſerviceable to attain and advance it, are likewiſe commanded; and where a Sin is forbidden, there all the Cauſes, and Occaſions, and Invitations to it are, at the ſame Time, prohibited; that whatever is implied implied in the Commandment, or follows by natural Conſequence, is to be reckoned as a Part of it, i. e. ſomething enjoined or forbidden in it, though it be not expreſsly mentioned; that, under one Kind of Duty or Vice, all others of the like Nature, yea all the Species and Sorts of it, are comprehended; that where one relative Duty is preſcribed, there the other is always to be underſtood; that whatever we are to do ourſelves, that we are to take Care that others, under our Charge, perform in their Places and Stations; and laſtly, that the Intent of theſe Commandments is, not only to forbid the outward Act of Vice, but the inward Deſire of it; and, on the contrary, not only require the external Performance of religious Duties, but that internal and vital Principle likewiſe from whence they proceed, and are animated. Theſe are ſome of the received Rules for the Expoſition of the Ten Commandments, by Virtue of which they are made to comprehend, not only all the Duties of Moral Religion, but ſome of the great Precepts of Evangelical Righteouſneſs; as indeed our bleſſed Saviour, [x] in his excellent Comment upon them, has ſufficiently informed us, that they are larger and more extenſive in their Signification, than what they were ſuppoſed to be, at their firſt Promulgation.

Their Order,

[y] THE Decalogue (as theſe Ten Commandments are called) were, [z] by God himſelf, [a] divided into two Tables; the firſt Table contains four Commandments. 1. That of worſhipping one God only. 2. That of abſtaining from Idolatry. 3. That of not taking the Name of God in vain. And, 4. That of hallowing the Sabbath-Day. But the ſecond Table has ſix. 1. That of honouring Father and Mother. 2. That of not committing Murther. 3. That of not committing Adultery. 4. That of not Stealing. 5. That of not bearing falſe Witneſs. And, 6. That of not coveting any Thing, that is our Neighbour's: And 'tis worthy our Obſervation, [b] that as the Commandments have their Place according to the Dignity of the Duties commanded, i. e. thoſe which have Regard unto God, have the Pre-eminence of thoſe that relate to Men; ſo are they ranked and diſpoſed, according to the Heinouſneſs of the Sins that are forbidden. Thus the Offences againſt God, being more grievous than thoſe againſt Men; the Neglect of divine Worſhip, Proſtration to Images, Profanation of God's Name, and Violation of his Sabbath, are mentioned, before the Tranſgreſſions of the other Table: And then as to the Commandments, which it contains, becauſe it is more heinous to offend our Parents, (whether natural or civil) than any other Perſons, the Prohibition of doing that, is therefore put in the firſt Place, and the others follow according to their Order. For ſince there are three Degrees of ſinning, in Deeds, in Words, and in Deſires; and theſe differ as to their Guilt, (it being more criminal to offend in Actions, than in Words, and in Words, than in bare Deſires) according to the gradual Defilement of theſe Sins, we are forbid, firſt, to hurt our Neighbour by any Act, whether it be Killing, or Adultery, or Theft; next by our Words, in bearing falſe Witneſs; and then by our Thoughts and Deſires in coveting any Thing that is his. Nor is the ſame Order neglected as to the Sins of the firſt Claſs; for though Stealing is a very great Crime, yet Adultery is more heinous than that, and Killing more flagitious than this, and therefore, firſt Killing, then Adultery, and after that Stealing, are made Mention of and forbidden.

and Univerſality.

I HAVE but one Obſervation more to make, and that is——That [c] though theſe Commandments were primarily intended for the Uſe of the Jews, (for which Cauſe the Deliverance commemorated in the Preface, the Reaſon alledged in the fourth, and the Promiſe annexed to the fifth Commandment, are apparently peculiar to that People) yet, conſidering that the Children of Iſrael were at this Time the only Church of God, and that, in ſpeaking to them, God addreſſes himſelf to the Houſhold of Faith

[x] Matth. v. [y] Lamy's Introduction. [z] Deut. v. 22. [a] The Diviſion of the Ten Commandments, as it is with us, is what the moſt learned of the Jews and Chriſtians always received, and is certainly very right, not only from the different Matter of them, but becauſe our Saviour ſeems to confirm this Diſtribution of them, when he mentions the firſt and the ſecond Commandments, (Matth. xxii. 38, 39.) by which he means the firſt and the ſecond Table, and reduces the Duties, we owe to God, to the one, and thoſe that are due to Man, to the other. Some of the Rabbins indeed (to make the Tables even) put five Commandments in one, and five in the other; but we never heard that they were for expunging any. St Jerome (in his Comment upon Hoſea x.) makes four Commandments have Reſpect unto God, and ſix to our Neighbours; but his Diviſion of the former is very ſtrange; for the firſt Commandment, he ſays, is, I am the Lord thy God; the ſecond, Thou ſhalt have no other Gods but me; the third, Thou ſhalt not make to thyſelf any graven Image; and the fourth, Thou ſhalt not take the Name of the Lord thy God in vain: So that he leaves out the Precept of obſerving the Sabbath, and makes the firſt Commandment out of the Preface to it. But in this he is ſingular, and not a little culpable. The Church of Rome has ſtruck the ſecond Commandment quite out of the Decalogue, and, to make up the Number, ſplit the tenth into two: But the Reaſon for their doing ſo, is plainly this, that they are willing to conceal a Commandment, which ſo expreſsly forbids the Uſe of Images in the Worſhip of God. They muſt not let the People ſee, and take Notice, that theſe are poſitively forbidden by a divine Law. Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. II. [b] Edwards, ibid. [c] Le Clerc's Commentary.

Faith in all ſucceeding Generations, there is no one Precept, which may not, in a larger and ſpiritual Senſe (at leaſt by good Analogy, and Parity of Reaſon) concern us; and though the Motives of our Obedience may vary from theirs, yet the Matter of the Injunction is to all of us the ſame.

The Preface to the Decalogue.

" I am the Lord, JEHOVAH, [d] the only true God, eternal, independent, and " unchangeable in Eſſence; true and infallible in Word; conſtant and immutable " in Purpoſe; and firm and faithful in the Performance of whatever I promiſe, or " threat: That ſame God, who, under this Appellation, diſcovered myſelf to thy " Fore-fathers, enacted a ſpecial Covenant with them, received their Homage and " Engagements, and promiſed eſpecial Favour and Protection to them and their Seed: " For I am thy God, and, though the univerſal Lord and Father of the World, yet " to thee I bear a peculiar Relation, as having choſen and avouched thee to be a " ſpecial People to myſelf, above all the People that are upon the Face of the Earth; " promiſed to make thee high above all Nations in Praiſe, and in Name, and in " Honour; and, by many ſignal Demonſtrations of Favour and Mercy, confirmed " to thee the Performance of my Covenant and Promiſe. For I brought thee out of " the Land of Egypt, in a Manner ſo full of Wonder in itſelf, ſo full of Grace to- " wards thee, delivering thee from the ſaddeſt Oppreſſion, and Slavery, in the Houſe " of Bondage, and tranſlating thee into a deſirable State of preſent Liberty, and of ſure " Tendency towards the Enjoyment of Reſt, of Plenty, and of all Joy and Com- " fort, in the Promiſed Land. And therefore I, who am the only true God, doing " what I pleaſe in Heaven and Earth, and thy God, by a particular Engagement and " Endearment, do, [e] upon the Score of former Favours, and future Expectancies, " the Senſe of my Love, and the Dread of my Power, call upon, and require you " to liſten to my Words, and let theſe my Commandments ſink down into your " Minds."

Its Relation to us.

Now what God, in a direct and literal Senſe, thus ſpeaks to the Jewiſh People, may, by Parity of Reaſon, (eſpecially in a myſtical and ſpiritual Senſe) be applied to us; [f] for to us he is the ſame Jehovah, whoſe Nature is eternal, and Power infinite, and to whom the higheſt Reſpect and Obſervance is due, as being the eſſential Author, Lord, and Governor of all Things. He likewiſe, in a nearer Relation, is our God, having choſen us, and conſecrated us to himſelf; received us into a cloſer Alliance, a new and better Covenant, eſtabliſhed upon better Promiſes, and obliged us, by the Grant of nobler Privileges, and the Diſpenſation of more excellent Benefits. Nor muſt it be forgotten, that he has brought us up out of a ſpiritual Egypt, reſcued us from the Tyrannical Dominion of Satan, freed us from ſerving Sin in our Souls and Bodies, and is now conducting us in the Way, and has conferred on us an aſſured Hope (if we be not wanting to ourſelves and our Duty) of entering into the heavenly Canaan, a Place of perfect Reſt, and inconceivable Bliſs; for [g] he hath delivered us (as the Apoſtle expreſſes it) from the Power of Darkneſs, and tranſlated us into the Kingdom of his moſt beloved Son; and therefore, according to a ſpiritual Intent, he may well be ſuppoſed here to ſpeak in an higher Strain to us, and to exact a more punctual and accurate Obſervance of his Commandments.

SECT. I.

TABLE I. Firſt Commandment.

Thou ſhalt have no other Gods but me.

THESE Words are delivered in the Form of a Prohibition (as moſt of the other Commandments are) * and yet in the Natural Senſe and Deſign of them, they (as well as the reſt) ſuppoſe and require [h] ſomething poſitive, and may therefore be reſolved into theſe two Propoſitions.

I. THAT

[d] Barrow's Expoſition of the Decalogue. [e] Le Clerc's Commentary. [f] Barrow, ibid. [g] Col. i. 13. * Fiddes's Body of Divinity, Vol. II. [h] This was accounted ſo much the Senſe of the Command, that we find Joſephus making mention of no other, διδάσκει ὁ πρῶτος λόγος, ὅτι Θεὸς ἐστιν εἷς, καὶ δεῖ τοῦτον σέβεσθαι μόνον. The firſt Commandment teaches us, that there is but one God, and him only we ought to worſhip. Ant. l. 2. c. 5.

I. THAT we ſhould not worſhip any [l] falſe or foreign Gods. And,

II. THAT we ſhould worſhip the True God only.

The Unity of God, proved from Reaſon and Scripture.

I. THAT there is a God, i. e. an Eternal, Infinite, and Almighty Being, the Creator and Governor of the Univerſe, all perfect himſelf, and the Author of all Perfection in others, is what we have ſufficiently ſhewn already from Reaſon, from Scripture, and (what is the plaineſt Proof of all) [k] from the viſible Works of the Creation: And that there is but one ſuch Being, † the Voice of Reaſon, as well as the Teſtimony of Scripture, the eſſential Perfections of the Divine Nature, as well as the frequent Declarations of God himſelf, [l] I am the Lord, and there is none elſe, there is no God beſides me; I am the Lord, and there is none elſe, is an abundant Conviction.

¶ THE Unity of the Divine Nature indeed is a Notion, wherein the greateſt and wiſeſt Part of Mankind did always agree, and is ſo very congruous to the Frame and Government of the World, wherein we ſee all Things conſpiring to one End, and continuing in one uniform Order and Courſe, (which cannot reaſonably be aſcribed to any other, but a conſtant and uniform Cauſe) that it ſeems a Principle, if not innate, yet ariſing from the Contemplation of the Works of the Creation, to believe, that there is no other God, but one; * and had not Perſons of vain and conceited Imaginations, profeſſing themſelves wiſe, become Fools; had not Men of corrupt Manners, diſliking to retain God in their Knowledge, and having their fooliſh Hearts darkened, filled the Minds of the Ignorant, and deluded the Vulgar with a ſuperſtitious Belief of many Gods, having Rule over particular Places and Countries; the true Notion of God, ſo agreeable to the plain and natural Dictates of Reaſon, might have been preſerved amongſt all Nations. For the plain Connection and Dependence of one Thing upon another, through the whole material Univerſe, through all Parts of the Earth, and in the viſible Heavens; the Diſpoſition of the Air, the Sea, and Winds; the Motion of the Sun, and Moon, and Stars, and the uſeful Viciſſitudes of Seaſons, for the regular Production of the various Fruits of the Earth, have always been ſufficient to make it evidently appear, even to mean Capacities, that all Things are under the Direction of one Power, under the Dominion of one God, as the wiſeſt and beſt Men, in all Heathen Nations, upon mature Deliberation, have always declared.

† ORPHEUS, indeed, was the firſt who attempted the Genealogy of the Gods, and reduced their Number to 360: But he was afterwards ſo ſenſible of his impious Folly, that, in a particular Diſcourſe to his Son Muſæus, and his other Friends, he retracts theſe wild and abſurd Fables, and having admoniſhed them, in the firſt Place, that there is but one God, by whom all other Things were made, and on whom they depend, he then goes on to ſhew, that tho' this God is inviſible, yet he ſees and knows all Things, and that as he is merciful, ſo is he likewiſe juſt, and the Author of all thoſe Judgments which befal wicked Men, &c. Homer, tho' he follows Orpheus too cloſely in his Fictions concerning a Multitude of Deities; yet, when he is moſt ſerious, he ſuppoſes but one, εἷς Κοίρανος ἔστω; and therefore we find Pythagoras, and ſeveral others after him, ſtiling God by the Name of Monas or Unity: For "tho' Men differ much in their Opinions about other Matters," "ſays an ancient Author ‖, yet in this they all agree, that there is one God, the "King and Father of all, under whom there are ſubordinate Deities, his Offſpring, "who are admitted to ſome Share of Government with him. In this the Grecian "conſents with the Barbarian, the Inhabitants of the Continent with the Iſlanders, "the Wiſe with the Unwiſe."

BUT tho' the Belief of one Supreme God ſeems to be fixed upon the Foundations of right Reaſon, and confirmed by Names of great Authority; yet the groſs Idolatry of [l] It is obſervable, that the Word Achadim, which we tranſlate other, is ſometimes, by the Septuagint, rendered ἄλλοι, alii, and ſometimes ἀλλότριοι, alieni, and ſo, in this latter Acceptation, it denotes thoſe ſtrange Gods, ſo often mentioned in Scripture, accounted and called Gods by the Heathens, but ſuch as, in Reality, were not ſo.

† The moſt obvious Notion we have of God, is, that he is a Being of all poſſible Perfections; now, upon the Suppoſition of two Gods, either they muſt have ſeveral Perfections, or the ſame; but to ſuppoſe two Gods with ſeveral Perfections, ſome belonging to one, and ſome to another, will plainly prove, that neither of them can be God, becauſe neither of them have all poſſible Perfections. To ſuppoſe two Gods of the ſame and equal Perfections, would likewiſe prove, that neither of them can be God, i. e. not abſolutely perfect, becauſe it is not ſo great a Privilege, to have the ſame equal Perfections with another, and in a Kind of Partnerſhip, as to be alone, and ſuperior above all others; and yet to ſuppoſe one of them inferior, in any Reſpect, is to evince, that he cannot be God, becauſe not Supreme. The Truth is, God, in the Conception we have of him, is an infinite Being: But now nothing is more evident, than that one infinite Being is ſufficient to all Purpoſes whatever; and therefore to ſuppoſe more Gods than are neceſſary, whether of the ſame, or ſeparate Perfections, whether agreeing, or diſagreeing with each other, is the Height of Abſurdity, Wilkins's Principles of Natural Religion, Lib. I.

the Heathen World plainly ſhews, that, in Proceſs of Time, it came to be greatly corrupted.

The primary Meaning of the Commandment.

THE Chaldeans, from whom the Iſraelites originally deſcended, worſhipped [n] the Sun, Moon, Stars, and all the Hoſt of Heaven: The Egyptians, from whom they were now departed, made them Gods, not of Animals only, but of any Inanimate Creature, they either accounted hurtful or beneficial to them: The Canaanites, and other Nations, among whom they were now going, made their Adorations to Devils, and even ſometimes offered their very Children in Sacrifice to them: Nay, the Iſraelites themſelves were too prone to Idolatry: Soon after the Delivery of the Law, they gave a lamentable Inſtance of this, in the Matter of the Golden Calf, and in Length of Time became ſo infected with the Cuſtoms of the Nations, among whom they lived, that, according to the Number of their Cities were their Gods, ([o] as the Prophet tells them) and according to the Number of the Streets of Jeruſalem, did they ſet up Altars to that ſhameful Thing, even Altars to burn Incenſe unto Baal: So that the chief and primary Intent of this Law was to prohibit the Jews from paying any religious Worſhip [p] to Aſhtoreth the Goddeſs of the Zidonians, to Milcom the Abomination of the Children of Ammon, or to any of the Gods of the Nations, among whom they either had, or were to ſojourn; and 'twas highly agreeable to the Wiſdom of God, in order to retain the People in his Service, that he ſhould caution them againſt this idolatrous Worſhip, which they were ſo much addicted to; a Crime uſually expreſſed in Scripture by the Metaphor of Adultery, as denoting not only a Deſertion of the true God, but a Deſertion in direct Breach of Faith, and the ſolemn Covenant, wherein they were engaged with God.

Its ſecondary Meaning.

BUT, becauſe all People naturally conceive of God, as a Being of ſupreme Excellency, Juſtice, Goodneſs, and Power over them; and ſo, whatever it is, that they imagine to be God, that they honour and fear, and love, and truſt on, as if it were really ſo; therefore the Prohibition may be extended to ſuch Senſe as this: "[*] Thou ſhalt not think, believe, or own any Thing to be God, but Me: Thou "ſhalt not aſcribe ſupreme Authority, Power, or Goodneſs, or any other Divine "Perfection, to any, but Me: Thou ſhalt not regard them, [q] that have familiar "Spirits, nor ſeek after Witches, nor Wizards, nor uſe Divinations or Enchant-"ments, or any ſuch-like Abominations: Thou ſhalt not put any Truſt or Confi-"dence in any Creature that is in Heaven or Earth: Thou ſhalt not love, nor re-"ſpect, nor value, nor deſire any Thing, in Compariſon of Me: If thou doeſt "any of theſe Things, thou haſt other Gods before Me, or in my Sight, who am the "Searcher of all Hearts, and to whom all thy ſecret Sins and Imaginations lie open "and detected."

The Reaſonableneſs of this Part of the Command.

II. THE poſitive Propoſition, contained in the Commandment, is, that we ſhould worſhip the true God only. 'Tis a Piece of Juſtice generally acknowledged, [r] that all Beings ſhould have a Regard paid them, in Proportion to the Dignity of their Nature, the Advantages we receive from them, and the Juriſdiction they have over us: Neither ought we only to have a true Apprehenſion of theſe Diſtinctions in our Minds, but declare it viſibly in our Actions, that others may perceive our Notions are right, and our Diſpoſitions virtuous: That we are willing to pay an Eſteem to abſtracted Excellency, a Submiſſion to Authority, and a Recognition of the Benefits we receive. Now the Perfections of God are tranſcendent, and peculiar to himſelf: The moſt glorious Creature falls infinitely ſhort of him; he is the original Cauſe of all Being and Bleſſing, the Creator and ſupreme Lord of Heaven and Earth. And ſince the Excellencies of God are of a peculiar and ſuper-eminent Nature, our Acknowledgments of them ought to be ſo too. The Deſign of publick Worſhip is to make a viſible Confeſſion of our Dependence upon God; to own him, as the Maker of the World, and praiſe him for all the Advantages we enjoy; and to make our Acknowledgments of God rational, they ought to be proportioned to his Nature, and ſuch as we give to no other Being. Since no Perſon helped him to create the World, nor joins with him in the Preſervation of it, but all Things are made by him, and ſupported by his ſole Power, we cannot be ſaid to worſhip him aright, unleſs there be ſomething proper and diſtinguiſhing in our Adorations of him; unleſs our Service has ſome Circumſtances of Advantages, and extraordinary Veneration, which we never ſhew upon any other Occaſion.

[s] IF the Vulgar ſhould ſee their Prince no better attended and obſerved than themſelves, they would be apt to overlook his Quality, and ſuſpect he never had any Commiſſion from Heaven; and therefore the Splendor of the Court is deſigned to keep up the Reputation of the Government, and to put Subjects in Mind of their Inferiority. The greateſt Part of Mankind muſt have remote Truths, eſpecially thoſe, which relate to the Perfections of ſpiritual Beings, conveyed by ſenſible Objects; their Organs muſt be ſtruck, as well as their Underſtandings; for if theſe inviſible Things are only repreſented in their naked Eſſences, the Impreſſion will not be diſtinct and durable enough, to affect their Minds, and govern their Practice.

THIS is a good Reaſon for the Inſtitution of the publick Worſhip of God; and as it is a Rule in Princes Courts, and that rationally ſettled, that Subjects, tho' of the firſt Quality, ſhould not be taken Notice of in the Preſence; ſo, if our Worſhip be not appropriated to God Almighty; if our religious Solemnities (which are done in his Preſence) are not entirely reſerved to his Honour; if we communicate the Adoration we offer him to any of his Servants; this weakens the Notion of a ſupreme Being, confounds the Difference between Finite and Infinite, and ſets the Creature and Creator almoſt upon Terms of Equality. Upon this Account, we find in the next Commandment (which ſome have thought only an Appendix to this) God declaring himſelf to be a Jealous God, that will allow of no Rivals in Adoration, that expects our Affections ſhould not be divided between him and his Creatures, but that our Religious Services ſhould be wholly devoted to him: And therefore, in reſpect to our Inward Homage and Adoration, our Worſhip of God imports the higheſt Eſteem, Honour, and Awe of him; an entire Dependence on his Wiſdom, and Submiſſion to his Will, whether in the Active or Paſſive Inſtances of Obedience: It requires, that we ſhould conſider him as the moſt excellent and perfect of Beings in himſelf, the moſt amiable and beneficial in Relation to us, and that every Thought of our Minds, and every Motion and Affection of our Hearts ſhould be perfectly, and at all Times, conformable to theſe Sentiments: And in Reſpect to our outward Homage, our Worſhip of him is expreſſed by acknowledging and invocating him; by offering up our Praiſes, our Prayers, and Thankſgivings to him; and by expreſſing a due Reverence to every Kind of Matter, which bears any ſpecial Relation to him, whether Things, or Perſons, or Places of Worſhip; in a Word, by ſhewing ourſelves ready on all Occaſions, both in the eaſy and difficult Inſtances of our Duty, to obey him, and to do all thoſe Things, without Reſerve or Reluctance, which he has in general commanded us; Submitting ourſelves wholly to his Will and Pleaſure, and ſtudying to ſerve him, in true Holineſs and Righteouſneſs, all the Days of our Life.

In what Manner it is to be performed.

THIS is the full Extent of the Command, both in its negative and poſitive Signification; and from hence we may obſerve, that [t] all thoſe, who deny the Being of a God, whether in Speculation or Practice, whether they really believe that there is no God, or live as if they did, without any Regard to his Honour or Worſhip; all thoſe, who believe and worſhip a Multiplicity of Deities, [u] or aſcribe the eſſential Properties of God to any created Being, as the Heathen World in many Places do; all thoſe, who, together with the Worſhip of the true God, admit other Beings into a Partnerſhip with him, paying religious Adoration to Saints and Angels, as the Church of Rome is known to do; [x] all thoſe, who frame in their Fancy an Idea unworthy of that moſt excellent Being, and to ſuch a Phantom of their own Creation yield their beſt Affections and higheſt Eſteem; and laſtly, all thoſe, who ſet their Hearts upon any Creature (whether themſelves or any other Thing) truſting in it, and relying on it, making it the chief Delight of their Eyes, and Concern of their Life, are guilty of a Violation of this Command. In ſhort, if we regard or eſteem, if we ſeek and purſue, if we confide and delight in Wealth, or Honour, or Pleaſure, Wit, Wiſdom, Strength, or Beauty, Ourſelves, our Relations, or any other Creature, we have another God, which is againſt the negative Meaning; and if we do not, with all our Hearts, reverence and love the moſt wiſe and powerful, the moſt juſt and holy, the moſt good and gracious God; if we do not truſt and hope in him, as the Foundation of all Good; if we do not diligently worſhip and praiſe him; if we do not humbly ſubmit to his Will, and obey his Laws, we have not him for our God, which is againſt the poſitive Intent of this moſt holy Law.

Second Commandment.

Thou ſhalt not make to thyſelf any graven Image, &c.

THIS Commandment, which ſtates the Manner (as the former did the Object) of Religious Worſhip, conſiſts of two Parts, viz. a Precept, and its Sanction. 1. The Precept is expreſſed in Negative Terms, that we ſhould not make, or worſhip any carved Image; but it includes in it likewiſe a poſitive Duty, that we ſhould worſhip and ſerve the Lord, in a Manner ſuitable to his Divine Excellencies, and according to what himſelf has appointed. 2. The Sanction is of two Sorts; 1. By Way of Commination, denouncing a ſevere Puniſhment againſt the Trangreſſors of the Command, viſiting the Iniquity of the Fathers upon the Children unto the third Generation of them that hate me. And, 2. By Way of Encouragement, making a gracious Promiſe to the careful and conſcientious Obſervers of it, ſhewing Mercy unto Thouſands of them that love me, and keep my Commandments.

The primary Meaning of this Command.

WHENCE the Humour aroſe, and afterwards prevailed, in the heathen World, of repreſenting their Deities in Corporeal Shapes, and in yielding ſuch Expreſſions of Reſpect to their Images, as they conceived were agreeable to the Deities themſelves; and how far the Devil's Malice, [a] and ſome Men's Fraud, conſpiring with other Men's Ignorance, concurred in the Production of this Kind of Idolatry, we ſhall have occaſion to conſider at large in a proper Place: This only we need remark at preſent, that as the Egyptians, among whom the Iſraelites had lived a long while, were notoriouſly addicted to all Sorts of Idolatry, worſhipping the Sun and Moon, and [b] ſeveral Kinds of Birds, which were in Heaven above; the Images of Men and of brute Beaſts, which were in the Earth beneath; of Fiſhes, and Snakes, and Crocodiles, which were in the Waters under the Earth; ſo the Deſign of this Commandment was to reſtrain the Iſraelites from ſuch Practices, as they had beheld among the Egyptians, but whether it was intended to inhibit them the Uſe of all Images in general, is not ſo well agreed among the Learned.

[c] TERTULLIAN was of Opinion, that this Commandment forbad all Images whatever, more particularly all protuberant ones; and [d] Origen ſeems to denote the ſame Thing, when he tells us, that a Painter or Statuary was not permitted to live in the Jewiſh Republic, that no Occaſion might be given of drawing away Men's Minds from the Worſhip of God. [e] From the Time of the Maccabees to the Deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the Jews indeed thought themſelves forbidden by this Law to make the Image or Figure of any living Creature, eſpecially of a Man; but that this was not its original Intent, is manifeſt from God's appointing the Cherubims over the Mercy-Seat, and the Serpent in the Wilderneſs to be made; which queſtionleſs he would not have done, could we ſuppoſe, that this Command previouſly prohibited the making the Likeneſs of any ſuch Thing. 'Tis allowed indeed, that God might diſpenſe with his own Command; but as we have no Intimation of any ſuch Diſpenſation, and can hardly believe that he would have diſpenſed with it ſo ſoon; [f] ſo it ſeems more reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the Cherubims, the Brazen-Serpent, the Bulls, and other Images in Solomon's Temple, were no Breaches of the ſecond Commandment, but that himſelf waved the Obſervation of his own Precept, in theſe Particulars; and conſequently, that the ſecond Commandment was never intended to forbid the making of Images in general, but only the making of ſuch Images, as were deſigned to repreſent the Divine Majeſty; for ſo the Reaſon, which Moſes gives for the Obſervation of the Precept, ſeems to imply: [g] Take heed unto yourſelves; for ye ſaw no Manner of Similitude, in the Day that the Lord ſpake unto you in Horeb,

The Folly, Sin, and Stupidity, of Image-making.

THE [h] Prophet Iſaiah, having ſet off the incomparable Power and Majeſty of God in great and lofty Strains, as meaſuring the Waters in the Hollow of his Hand, and meting out Heaven with a Span; as comprehending the Duſt of the Earth in a Meaſure, and weighing the Mountains in Scales, and the Hills in a Ballance; before whom all Nations are nothing, and are counted to him leſs than nothing, and Vanity: Having, I ſay, in this, and more ſuch Language as this, endeavoured to deſcribe the Might and Majeſty of God, he then aſks the Queſtion, To whom will ye liken God? Or what Likeneſs will ye compare unto him? And thereupon proceeding to diſcourſe of the Folly and mad Preſumption of making Images for religious Uſes, he concludes at laſt, [i] Have ye not known? Have ye not heard? Hath it not been told you from the Beginning? Have ye not underſtood from the Foundations of the Earth? It is he that ſitteth upon upon the Circle of the Earth, and the Inhabitants thereof are as Graſhoppers; that ſtretcheth out the Heavens as a Curtain, and ſpreadeth them out as a Tent to dwell in; that bringeth the Princes to nothing, and maketh the Judges of the Earth as Vanity; to whom then will ye liken me, or ſhall I be equal, ſaith the Holy One? Nothing certainly can be more ſenſeleſs in itſelf, or more diſparaging to God, than to pretend to reſemble him by any corporeal Thing. [k] For, as it muſt be confeſſed, that there is a great Diſproportion between God, who is not only a Spirit, but an infinite and incorruptible Spirit, and an Image, which is both corporeal and corruptible; ſo that Diſproportion cannot but be thought to make it both impious and incongruous to form any ſuch Repreſentation of him; becauſe, in Effect, it is deſtroying the [l] Spirituality and Incorruptibility of his Nature, which we ſo take upon us to repreſent.

THE Man, who ſhould form the Image of a Serpent, a Toad, or any other deteſtable Creature, and exhibit it as the Similitude of a King, would certainly derogate much from his Eſteem and Majeſty; but infinitely more muſt he detract from the Dignity, and impair the Reverence due to that immenſe, almighty, all-wiſe, and all-perfect Being, who ſhall preſume to preſent any ſenſible, any finite, any corruptible Thing, as a Reſemblance of him, changing (as St Paul expreſſes it) the Glory of the incorruptible God into an Image, made like to corruptible Man, and to Birds, and four-footed Beaſts, and creeping Things: And therefore we need leſs wonder, that they, who uſed ſuch Expreſſions of their Religion, ſhould have ſuch contemptible Opinions of the Deities they adored, as to ſuppoſe them liable to ſuch unruly Paſſions, and guilty of ſuch abominable Actions, as even human Nature deteſts; making them as vile in their Diſpoſitions and Doings, as they repreſented them in their outward Figures and Shapes. The wiſeſt of the Heathens, however, were of another Sentiment; they conceived, [m] that their Gods were not viſible to the Eye, but only to be ſeen by the Thought; and therefore they adviſe againſt making Gods of Silver or Gold; [n] for of ſuch Materials, ſay they, cannot be made an Image like unto God, and give us this Account of the Inſtitution of Image-Worſhip, "That the ancient Romans "did, more than an hundred and ſeventy Years, worſhip their Gods without Images, "and that thoſe, who firſt ſet them up for the People's Uſe, did it with a bad Intent, "viz. to diminiſh the Awe and Reverence due to the Gods, and poſſeſs them with "falſe and erroneous Conceits about the divine Nature; rightly judging, [o] as they "expreſs it, that, in the Fooliſhneſs of Images, the Gods might eaſily come to be "deſpiſed."

TOGETHER with the Folly of making ſuch Images, the Prophet Iſaiah has, in another Place, handſomely expoſed the Stupidity, as well as great Wickedneſs, of falling down before them, and worſhipping them. The Idolater, ſaith he, [p] planteth an Aſh, and the Rain doth nouriſh it: Then ſhall it be for a Man to burn; for he will take thereof and warm himſelf; yea, he kindleth it, and baketh Bread; yea, he maketh a God, and worſhippeth it; he maketh a graven Image, and falleth down thereto: He burneth Part thereof in the Fire; with Part thereof he eateth Fleſh; he roaſteth roaſteth Roaſt, and is ſatisfied; yea he warmeth himſelf, and ſaith, aha! I am warm, I have ſeen the Fire; and the Reſidue thereof he maketh a God, even a graven Image; he falleth down unto it, and worſhippeth it, and prayeth unto it, and ſaith, deliver me, for thou art my God; all this while, never conſidering in his Heart, nor having Knowledge or Underſtanding to ſay, I have burnt Part of it in the Fire, yea alſo I have baked Bread upon the Coals thereof, I have roaſted Fleſh, and eaten it, and ſhall I make the Reſidue thereof an Abomination? Shall I fall down to the Stock of a Tree?

In what Senſe Men did it.

'Tis not to be conceived, however, (according [q] to Maimonides) that any of theſe Men worſhipped an Idol with this Perſuaſion, that there was no other God but it: There never was, nor ever will be, any ſo footiſh, as to fancy, that the Figure, which, he knows, he made of Metals, or Wood, or Stone, either created the Heaven and the Earth, or, at preſent, governs them; but they therefore worſhipped theſe Images, becauſe they looked upon them as Things intermediate between God and them. In them they paid their Adorations to God; and the very Formality of their Idolatry conſiſted in having ſuch Devices to remind them of God, and in uſing ſuch Poſtures and religious Deportment before them, as he had made peculiar, and appropriated to his own Worſhip. An Idol, [r] as the Apoſtle tells us, is nothing in the World; of what Materials ſoever it be compoſed, it availeth nothing: But when it comes to be made an Inſtrument of Devotion, and employed in the Service of God; when before it Men bow, or proſtrate themſelves, or do any other Acts of religious Homage, it then becomes an Abomination, or (according to the Expreſſion, that God is pleaſed to uſe) the Object of his Jealouſy. And, [s] as it would be no very grateful Excuſe to tell a jealous Perſon, that the Woman he is jealous of, did not go ſo far as to commit Adultery with her Paramour, or, that if ſhe did, it was only becauſe ſhe fancied a Similitude between them; ſo all the Apology, that can be made for the Worſhip of Images, from their being good Expedients to raiſe our Imagination, and, by ſenſible Repreſentations, to invigorate our Devotion, will be but ſorry Evaſions, when they come to be compared with the Denunciations of him, who hath told us expreſsly, [t] that he will not give his Glory to another, nor his Praiſe to graven Images, but will viſit the Iniquity of the Fathers upon the Children, unto the third and fourth Generation of them, that, in this Manner, hate him.

The Meaning of the Sanction and its Equity.

2. BUT here it may be aſked, "How can God viſit the Sins of the Fathers upon "the Children, when, [u] in ſo many Places, he aſſures us, that the Soul which ſinneth "it ſhall die; that the Son ſhall not bear the Iniquity of the Father, neither ſhall the "Father bear the Iniquity of the Son, but that each Man ſhall have the Reward of his "Righteouſneſs, or bear the Puniſhment of his own Iniquity: For this the very "Heathens could infer, [x] that to puniſh one Man for the Sin of another, could not "be conſiſtent with the Juſtice of God." Now, in Anſwer to this, the common Reply is, [y] that God may ſo puniſh a Man for his Sins, that the Temporal Evil of it ſhall reach, not to himſelf alone, but to his Poſterity alſo; that, as in the Caſe of High-Treaſon, the Father, by forfeiting his Honour and Eſtate, and the Prince, by exacting the Penalty of the Law, bring the ill Conſequence of the Crime upon the whole Family, (nor is this thought unjuſt in the Courts of human Judicature) ſo in the Caſe of Idolatry (which is no leſs Treaſon againſt the Divine Majeſty) there is no Reaſon to complain, if the Judge of all the Earth deals after the ſame Manner with the Poſterity of wicked Men, though they be not guilty of their Anceſtors Crimes. "In our Gothic Conſtitutions, (ſays [z] a learned Author) the Throne being "the Fountain of Honour, and Source of Property, Lands, like Titles, come from "it, and are held as Fiefs of it, i. e. under perpetual Condition of Service: Which "Condition being violated by High-Treaſon, thoſe Privileges and Poſſeſſions, with "perfect Equity, become forfeit, and revert to the Crown, how much ſoever the "Forfeiture may affect an innocent Poſterity in thoſe their Fortunes, which aroſe "not from any natural Right, but from free Grace, and arbitrary Compact." Juſt ſo was the Caſe with the Iſraelites. They lived under a Theocracy; and God, who was their King, by an extraordinary Adminiſtration of his Providence ſupported them, and gave them great temporal Bleſſings, (to which they had no natural Claim) upon upon Condition of their Obedience: And therefore their violating this Condition by falling into Idolatry, (which was declared Rebellion, and High-Treaſon againſt their King) under this Oeconomy at leaſt, is enough to juſtify him, in withdrawing thoſe extraordinary Favours, and, by that Means, in viſiting the Sin of a wicked Father upon his innocent Children, in like Manner, as is done by modern States, in the Taint of Blood, and Confiſcation. But there is a farther Solution of this Difficulty: For [a] others have imagined, that, as no Man is abſolutely innocent, but has Faults of his own, and Tranſgreſſions enough to anſwer for, if God will be extreme to mark what he has done amiſs; ſo (to teſtify his Indignation againſt Idolatry) God takes occaſion to exact a Puniſhment on the Children of Idolaters, for their own perſonal Offences, which otherwiſe perhaps he would have either overlooked, or not ſo rigidly conſidered. In this Senſe the Children are ſuppoſed to bear the Puniſhment, not of their Parents Sins, but of their own; and the Cauſe of their ſuffering is their perſonal Guilt, though the Occaſion of their ſuffering, at ſuch a Time, in ſuch a Manner, in ſuch Meaſure, and with ſuch Circumſtances, ariſes from their Forefathers Impieties. It is, in this Reſpect (as [b] one happily compares it) as it is with a Man, who, being full of malignant Humours, happens to ride abroad in wet Weather, and ſo taking cold, falls firſt into a ſhaking Fit, and then into a dangerous Fever: For, as in this Caſe, the peccant Humours, which the Perſon had contracted, were the true Cauſe and Root of his Diſtemper, and his taking Cold the Occaſion only of its breaking out; ſo the perſonal Sins of the Son are the Cauſe of his Puniſhment, the Father, the Occaſion only of the inflicting of it: [c] Which is ſo far from inferring God's puniſhing one Man for another's Tranſgreſſion, that it plainly denotes no more, than that, by the Occaſion of the Father's Sin, the Son may ſometimes be puniſhed, according to the Demerit of his own; which [d] ſufficiently vindicates our Church, in uſing the Petition, in her common Liturgy, conformable to the Doctrine of this Commandment, Remember not, Lord, the Offences of our Fore-fathers: For, though theſe Offences ſhall never be charged upon us, yet they may move God to enquire into what we ourſelves have done amiſs, and to puniſh us for our own Tranſgreſſions.

THIS is the full Scope of the Doctrine contained in this negative Precept, which includes (as we ſaid) a poſitive Duty likewiſe. And, from a Survey of the whole, we may eaſily perceive, who are the Tranſgreſſors, and conſequently liable to the Penalty, and who the Obſervers, and thereby intituled to the Promiſes, of this great Command. [e] Thoſe, who make, or aſſiſt in the making or maintaining of any Idol, in building any Temple or Altar to it, in offering any Sacrifice or Incenſe, any Prayers or Oblations of any Kind, or in contributing any Thing towards its having any Signs of religious Honour and Worſhip performed to it, as the Heathens did formerly, and in many Places do ſtill: Thoſe, who make Uſe of any corporeal Similitude of God, or the Likeneſs of any other Creature, to repreſent him by in their religious Offices; that, in publick Places of divine Worſhip, ſet up the Images of Saints and Angels, and with great Semblance of Devotion [f] ſalute them, caſting themſelves before them, carrying them in Proceſſion, and making long Pilgrimages to them, as [g] thoſe of the Roman Communion are known to do: Or laſtly, thoſe, who, in their Thoughts, entertain any corporeal Conceptions of God; who think, that he, like Bodies, is confined to a certain Place, and can know or act nothing beyond his own Heaven; that his Arm (like theirs) is ſhortened that it cannot ſave, his Ears (like theirs) cannot hear the ſofteſt Whiſpers, and his Eyes (like theirs) are to be blinded by the Darkneſs of the Night, or impoſed upon by any ſpecious Appearances, as too many inconſiderate People of all Denominations ſeem to do: Thoſe, I ſay, who are guilty of theſe Notions or Practices, live in the Violation of this Command: As, on the contrary, thoſe, that, in the Preſence and Worſhip of God, ſtudy to glorify him with their Bodies, and with their Spirits, which are his; [h] that uſe ſuch Geſtures and Adoration before him, as a due Senſe and holy Fear of his Divine Majeſty and ſupreme Authority over them require; that make the Solemnity of their Worſhip chiefly conſiſt in the Sincerity of their Deſires, the Purity of their Affections, and Contriteneſs of their Hearts; that make it their Endeavour to ſerve him, and promote his Glory and Honour in the World, by defending and enlarging his Church, where only he is known and worſhipped upon Earth; by making all their Prayers and ſolemn ſolemn Addreſſes to him, as the Giver of all good Gifts; by praiſing and magnifying his Name in the great Congregation; by building and adorning Places, where to do it; by obſerving the Times, which he hath ſet apart for his Worſhip and Service; by celebrating the Sacraments, that he has ordained; by keeping his Laws themſelves, and perſuading others to do the like: Thoſe, that do theſe Things, I ſay, perform the poſitive Part of the Commandment; and, for ſo doing, ſhall receive of God a Recompence of ſpiritual and temporal Bleſſings, both to themſelves, and their Poſterity, for a thouſand Generations; ſo infinitely does God's Juſtice fall ſhort of his Mercy, to thoſe that love him, and keep his Commandments!

Third Commandment.

Thou ſhalt not take the Name of the Lord thy God in vain, &c.

WE have here again, 1. A negative Precept, (which includes in it a poſitive Duty) and, 2. A Commination added to enforce it. [i] The Precept relates to the Act of Swearing; but becauſe ſome have taken it in ſo ſtrict a Senſe, as to exclude all Kind of Oaths whatever, it will be neceſſary, before we proceed to the Conſideration of the Sins forbidden in it, to premiſe ſomething concerning the Lawfulneſs of Oaths in general, and the Conditions requiſite to make them ſo.

The Lawfulneſs of Oaths.

[k] AN Oath is an Appeal to God, either upon a Teſtimony that is given, or a Promiſe that is made, confirming the Truth of the one, and the Fidelity of the other. It is an Appeal to God, who knows all Things, and will judge all Men; and is conſequently, a religious Act, wherein we give Praiſe and Honour to his infinite Knowledge and Wiſdom, by owning that he is privy to what we ſay; to his Holineſs and Veracity, that he loves Truth, and abhors Falſhood; and to his Power and Juſtice, that he both can, and will avenge the latter. [l] Thus, if we conſider the Matter upon the Principles of Natural Religion, Swearing is not only an Act of Worſhip and Homage done to God; but a powerful Means likewiſe for the Preſervation of Juſtice, and, upon this Score, has poſſibly been in Uſe from the Foundation of the World, as it certainly was practiſed in the Days of the Patriarchs, and long before the Delivery of the Law. At the Delivery of the Law, the Commandment only prohibited falſe and profane Swearing, without determining any Thing concerning the Lawfulneſs of an Oath; but the very Prohibition, in the natural Reaſon and Propriety of it, did imply, that the taking of an Oath, in a due and ſolemn Manner, was, all along, an allowed Action, as, we find afterwards, God expreſsly commanded it, as a Part of religious Worſhip; [m] Thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy God, and ſerve him, and ſhalt ſwear by his Name; and the Form and Import of this Oath is more particularly deſcribed in another Place, [n] Thou ſhalt ſwear, The Lord liveth in Truth, in Judgment, and in Righteouſneſs, and the Nations ſhall bleſs themſelves in him, and in him ſhall they glory; which laſt Words ſeem very ſtrongly to imply, that this Precept refers to the State of the Goſpel; [o] ſo that an Oath, religiouſly taken, is repreſented as a Part of that Worſhip, which all Nations were to offer up to God, under the new, as well as the old Diſpenſation. The Goſpel indeed affords us no expreſs Command of this Duty. [p] Our bleſſed Saviour did not ſuppoſe, that any reaſonable Man would make a Scruple of taking an Oath, upon lawful Occaſions: He therefore only ſet himſelf to reprove and reſtrain that intolerable Cuſtom, which the Jews were then addicted to, of ſwearing by the Name of God, and ſeveral other Things in their ordinary Converſation; but the Author to the Hebrews ſhews us plainly the Lawfulneſs of Oaths, as well as their Expediency, when he tells us, [q] that an Oath for Confirmation puts an End to all Strife, which he is ſo far from taxing as a Fault, that he makes uſe of it, to prove the Immutability of God's Counſel, and the ſure Dependence we have upon his Promiſes, ſince he has condeſcended to confirm them to us by an Oath, and [r] becauſe he could ſwear by no greater, he ſwore by himſelf.

From Scripture.

AFTER

[i] By the Name of the Lord, in Scripture, is meant the Lord himſelf; and to take, or lift up his Name, is to ſwear by it, becauſe he, who did ſo, was wont, while he did it, to lift up his Hand to Heaven. Patrick's Commentary. [k] Burnet, on the Articles, and Edwards's Body of Divinity, Vol. II. [l] Burnet, ibid. [m] Deut. vi. 13. [n] Jer. iv. 2. [o] Burnet, ibid. [p] Nourſe's Practical Diſcourſe on the Church Homilies. [q] Heb. vi. 16. [r] Ibid. ver. 13.

AFTER the Example of God himſelf, were it not needleſs to produce any other, we find that Oaths, upon fit and important Occaſions, were in frequent Uſe among the beſt of Men; [s] that Abraham ſwore to Abimelech, and required an Oath of his Servant, concerning the Marriage of his Son Iſaac; that [t] a Covenant of the Lord, which was nothing elſe but an Oath, in Confirmation of their mutual Friendſhip, paſſed between David and Jonathan; that, in Atteſtation of his Veracity, St Paul makes Uſe of the common Forms of Swearing, [u] I call God for a Record upon my Soul; and again, [x] the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus, which is bleſſed for evermore, knoweth that I lye not; that, in the Viſion of St John, an Angel is repreſented, as [y] lifting up his Hand, and ſwearing by him, that liveth for ever and ever; and, what is a more Home-Example than any) that our bleſſed Saviour, [z] when he was put upon his Oath by the High-Prieſt, [a] and adjured to tell whether he was the Meſſias or not, immediately ſpake out, and owned himſelf to be what he truly was, though he had been all along ſilent, and made no Reply to any Thing before. From Examples.

THESE are ſome of the Precedents, and Precepts we have in Scripture; but if even we were deſtitute of theſe, yet conſidering how inſtrumental to the Benefit of Mankind Oaths may be made; [b] how neceſſary for the Support of Juſtice, and the Preſervation of Peace and good Order in Societies; how neceſſary for the Deciſion of Controverſies, not only in ordinary Judicatories, but even among States and Sovereign Princes, for the Confirmation of their Treaties and Alliances, as well as the Contracts and Covenants among private Men; how neceſſary for the Defence of the Fatherleſs and Widows in their juſt Rights, againſt thoſe, that would otherwiſe defraud and oppreſs them; for the Reſtraint of Violence, for the Detection of Villainies, and bringing thoſe, that are guilty of any Flagitiouſneſs, to condign Puniſhments; Conſidering, I ſay, the great Serviceableneſs of Oaths, to the Ends of Juſtice and good Order, we cannot but ſuppoſe, (even though we had not all this Evidence from Scripture) that their firſt Inſtitution was from God; nor can they fail of being acceptable to him, when they are converſant about momentous Affairs, about what is right and lawful, what is poſſible and within our Power; and if they be but taken with Caution and Deliberation, in Simplicity and Sincerity, in Juſtice and Impartiality, and at the Call and Command of ſuch as have Authority; for theſe are the Scripture Conditions, Thou ſhalt ſwear, the Lord liveth, in Truth, in Judgment, and in Righteouſneſs. From Reaſon. Under what Conditions.

" BUT how ſhall we reconcile all this with the Words of our bleſſed Saviour, " [c] Swear not at all, neither by Heaven, nor by the Earth, nor by Jeruſalem, nor by " the Head; but let your Communication be Yea, Yea, and Nay, Nay; for whatſoever " is more than theſe cometh of Evil. If Swearing were a Thing allowable, why does " the Apoſtle repeat the Prohibition, [d] but above all Things, my Brethren, ſwear not, " neither by the Heaven, neither by the Earth, neither by any other Oath; but let your " Yea be Yea, and your Nay Nay, leſt ye fall into Condemnation: If it be allowable, I " ſay, why did the Primitive Chriſtians, by the Force of theſe Prohibitions, and " even ſome honeſt Heathens, by the mere Dictates of the Law of Nature, ſo totally " abſtain from it?" Now, in Order to diſcern the Senſe of our Saviour's Prohibition, we muſt conſider, that it is no unuſual Thing in Scripture to expreſs that in abſolute Terms, which is yet to be underſtood in a limited Senſe. [e] Thus, when our Saviour tells us, [f] that all who came before him, were Thieves and Robbers, the general Expreſſion muſt be reſtrained to thoſe that gave out they were the Meſſiah, otherwiſe St John Baptiſt, and all the Prophets of old, muſt be comprehended under the Notion of Thieves and Robbers: Thus when St Paul ſays, [g] all Things are lawful unto me, it muſt neceſſarily be reſtrained to Things not forbidden, otherwiſe an Inference might be drawn from the Words, that St Paul thought Lying, and Stealing, and Fornication, &c. was lawful to him: And, in like Manner, the Words of our bleſſed Lord, ſwear not at all, muſt not be extended to the utmoſt Latitude they will bear, but reſtrained to the Scope and Deſign of his Diſcourſe, and the Sins he primarily intended An Objection. Anſwered.

[s] Gen. xxiv. [t] 1 Sam. xx. 8. [u] 2 Cor. i. 23. [x] Ibid. xi. 31. [y] Rev. x. 5.
[z] Among the Jews, the Form of giving an Oath to Witneſſes and others, was not by tendering a formal Oath to them, as the Cuſtom is among us, but by adjuring them, i. e. requiring them to ſwear upon Oath; as it is plain from Lev. v. 1. If a Man hear the Voice of Swearing, and is a Witneſs whether he hath ſeen or known of ſuch a Thing, if he do not utter it, then he ſhall bear his Iniquity. If he have heard the Voice of Swearing, i. e. if being adjured, or demanded to anſwer upon Oath concerning what he hath ſeen or heard, he do not utter the Truth, he is perjured. Now to this Adjuration of the High-Prieſt, our Saviour anſwered thou haſt ſaid; which Words were not an Evaſion (as ſome have thought) but a direct Anſwer, as if he had ſaid, it is as thou ſayeſt, it is even ſo, I am the Son of God. Tillotſon's Sermons, Vol. I.
